A Second Royal Betrothal is Reported from England. On July 2 the Queen notified the House of Commons of the approaching marriage of Prince Albert Victor, the eldest son of the Prince of Wales, and, after his father, the next heir to the throne, to the Princess Victoria of Prussia, and commending to the House the granting of a provision for them. The proposed marriage is not favorably regarded in England. The princess is the daughter of the Prince of Wales's sister, and therefore a first cousin of her intended husband. As the young prince is not remarkable for intellectual power, it is deemed unwise to marry him to a first cousin. The Queen's predilection for German matrimonial alliances is credited with having led to the project. It cannot be contended that it is a love match, as it is only a short time since the princess was said to be anxious to marry Prince Alexander of Battenberg. It is understood that the grant asked for is $50,000 down, and an annual income of $125,000. The Radical members of Parliament have given notice of their intention to oppose the grant, on the ground that the burden of supporting the Queen's numerous descendants in so lavish a manner is pressing too heavily on the people.

Any Subscriber Interested in this Journal, and desiring to promote its circulation, may have sample copies sent them postage-paid and free of charge, for distribution at camp-meetings or other places where such distribution will introduce the paper, and lead to increased sales. Send postal card stating number required to The Manager, 71 Bible House.

Contributions to the Fund for Supplying colored ministers in the South with this journal have been received since our last acknowledgment to the amount of $12.80. They are from: Fairmount, Minn., $4; Woodhaven, N. Y., $3; East Shelburn, Mass., $1.50; Norwich, Conn., $1.30; New York, N. Y., $1; Wilmington, Del., $1; Orwigsburg, Pa., $1. The minister of a church of six hundred members in South Carolina writes, asking us to thank the contributors to this fund in his name. He has been receiving the paper for some months, and has found in it so much help that he is anxious that all the colored ministers in the country should be similarly aided. He says: "God alone can fully reward you, dear friends, for your thoughtfulness in sending us just the journal that we need. It has helped me, and my people have benefited by it." Our friends who are supporting this fund will be glad to have this testimony. It is a matter for thankfulness that the opportunity exists for helping so large a number at so small a cost, and we wish, with our brother, we could similarly aid every colored congregation.

A Protest Against Worldliness in the church was made in New York on Sunday, June 30, by the Rev. Charles Spurgeon, a son of Pastor C. H. Spurgeon, whose sermons are published every week in this journal. Mr. Spurgeon preached in the Baptist Church of the Epiphany, and in the course of his sermon he said: "We too often find a taste for the world and its pleasures in our homes that ought not to exist there. I would rather have the severity of the days of the Puritans than the looseness of the nineteenth century. We must keep our churches pure like our homes. Too many of our churches have come to be nothing better than a den of thieves. If Christ was on earth to-day He would have use for a scourge, as he did when he turned the money-changers out of the temple. The house of God is now frequently turned into something like a playhouse for the professed object of helping in religious work. Many ministers yield to the temptation of cutting and trimming the truth to suit the fashion of people. What we must do is, keep the Church pure."

The Ravages of Wolves in Southern Missouri have prompted the authorities to offer a bounty of three dollars for every wolf's head brought in. Before the war the settlers had the wolves in pretty good control, but during the six years of fighting all the men in the southern counties were in one army or the other, and during these years the wolves multiplied to such numbers that the sheep-raising industry of that section has never been restored. A million and a half of dollars has been paid out for wolf-heads since the war, and persons familiar with the section say that it will take more than another million and a half to exterminate the wolves. A similar result is chronicled in the history of the Church. While the denominations have been fighting each other, the forces of Satan have grown in power, and the sheep have been carried off. (Rom. 16: 17, 20.)

A Fatal Search for a Gold Mine is Reported by the Globe-Democrat of St. Louis, Mo. It states that the bodies of two men who set out in 1886 to find the Lost Cabin Mine in Idaho were found and identified two weeks ago. It appears that a colored man appeared in St. Louis in 1886 seeking the help of some wealthy man. He said that he had been among the Indians and had been shown a gold mine of enormous value. It had originally been discovered many years ago by a prospector, who built a cabin and began to work it. The Indians admitted that they killed him. They could not work the mine themselves, but they found enough of gold-dust there to purchase their groceries and supplies. The colored man offered, for a sum down and an interest in the mine, to guide any one to the spot, where wealth beyond the dreams of avarice was waiting development. A man named Burnes accepted the offer, and the two set out. Nothing more was heard of them until two weeks ago, when their skeletons were found in a dense forest, with their guns and baggage beside them. It is supposed that they lost their way and died of starvation, or that they were poisoned by eating deadly berries which grow in profusion about the place where the skeletons were found. In a similar way many men have lost their souls. Rejecting the offer of eternal riches which Christ makes to those who take Him as their guide, they put their faith in the promise of wealth and worldly pleasure which the tempter makes, and following him where there is poison on every hand, perish eternally. (Prov. 1: 13-15.)

The Renewed Activity of a Volcano in California, supposed to be extinct, is causing some alarm. A press dispatch from San Francisco states that a series of earthquake shocks have been felt at Susanville, a town in the Sierra Nevada mountain district. No damage has been done, but old settlers say that similar shocks about forty years ago were followed by a volcanic eruption. Susanville lies on a high mountain-walled valley directly east of Lassen Butte, a volcano 10,500 feet high. From its summit no less than forty craters can be seen. Two prospectors in 1850 visited Lake Salfatara, eight miles south of Cinder Cone, and found it a mass of boiling water and mud, from which vast columns of flame shot up at intervals. Within two years there has been a renewed activity in the internal fires, and the present shocks point to the possibility of another great volcanic outburst, which will find vent through some of the old craters. None of the Susanville people have moved away, and the majority are said to have become so used to the vibration of the earth that they pay no attention to it. That is the case with the signs of the times. Prophetic students point to them as a warning of the near approach of the great tribulation, but comparatively few heed the warning. (II Pet. 3: 4.)

A Venerable Bride and Bridegroom were united in marriage on June 29 at Port Jervis, N. Y. The former was seventy-four years of age, and the latter eighty-four. Their wooing had been done more than half a century ago. About the year 1833 the lady was the belle of Batavia, N. Y. Among the suitors for her hand, the most favored was a young man of many attractive qualities, but of very limited fortune. Though she gave him her affection, she was prevented marrying him by her parents, who believed he would never be able to support her in comfort. They were separated, and not long afterward the lady married a more eligible suitor. Her marriage put an end to the hopes of her former lover, and he too married. They saw no more of each other until, after the lapse of so many years, they met a few weeks ago at Port Jervis. The lady was then a widow and her former lover a widower. The old love revived, and they immediately went to a Methodist minister and were married. Two causes combine to render such a ceremony more than ordinarily interesting. It is seldom that persons so aged are the principals at a wedding, and still more seldom that pledges of affection are redeemed after the lapse of so many years. Unhappily it is so with union with Christ. Young people who pledge themselves to Him and are afterward drawn away by desire for wealth or worldly honor rarely give themselves to Him in after life. (Heb. 6: 4-6.)

Murder was Characterized as a Little Indiscretion by a physician in Charleston, S. C., last week. A reporter who called on Dr. McDow on June 29, after the jury had acquitted him of the murder of Captain Dawson, says that he found the doctor in excellent spirits, and confident that his practice as a physician would not suffer by what had occurred, as his patients would excuse his "little indiscretion." The nature of the crime was fully disclosed at the trial. The physician had endeavored to accomplish the ruin of a girl in the employ of Captain Dawson, the editor of the News and Courier. The captain, hearing of his dastardly conduct, went to the physician's office to expostulate with him. Dr. McDow, testifying on his own behalf at his trial, said that he shot the captain and tried to conceal his body, but failing in that, he gave himself up to the police. The jury, having heard his story, pronounced him not guilty, and the verdict was received with cheers by the crowd in court. Local reports say that the doctor was overwhelmed with congratulations. Baskets of flowers were sent to his house, and when he went to the Lutheran Church the next Sunday, members of the congregation clustered around him and congratulated him. He is certainly fortunate in living in a community where such a foul crime could be committed with impunity; but it is strange that in a Christian church there could have been persons who thought him a fit subject for congratulation. Knowing what God has said concerning the inevitable doom of such creatures as he, they might well have pitied him if they could overcome the loathing which right-minded men have to struggle against when they think of the crime and the circumstances that led to it. (Rev. 21: 8.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Forty-five converts from heathenism were received in the Episcopal church at Cape Palmas recently.

The Elizabeth Gamble Deaconess Home of Cincinnati has had a house of ten rooms placed at its disposal for hospital purposes.

One hundred colleges are represented at Mr. Moody's summer school. Princeton, Cornell, and Yale have the largest delegations.

The timekeepers of the Cambria Iron-Works agree with the physicians and officials in believing that fully ten thousand persons perished in the Johnstown disaster.

The Rev. Jacob Freshman is now in London on his way back from Jerusalem. He is delivering lectures there in aid of his work among the Jews of New York.

A memorial tablet to the late Rev. E. P. Roe is to be placed on the wall of the Presbyterian Church at Highland Falls, N. Y., of which he was ordained pastor twenty-four years ago.

A united effort is to be made by the evangelical denominations to induce Congress to provide more chapels and chaplains for the army. At present there are only 34 chaplains for 134 posts.

Dr. Justin D. Fulton, writing from Rome, Italy, complains of the large number of Protestant visitors to the city who go to Romish churches instead of encouraging the Protestant missionaries by their presence.

There are now Young Men's Christian Associations in thirty-nine countries. Among the latest founded is one at Tarsus, the birth-place of the apostle Paul. There is also one in Jerusalem, and another at Nazareth.

The Rev. E. A. Stafford, D. D., LL. B., of Toronto, Canada, will lecture before the Thirteenth School of Christian Philosophy, at Key East, N. J., on July 22, on "The Service of Free Thought to Christianity."

Miss Josephine R. Nicholls, of Indiana, has charge of the Women's Christian Temperance Union exhibit at the Paris Exposition. Many temperance leaflets, translated into French, are being distributed. Visitors of all nationalities accept them, and show interest in the work.

At the Convention of the Christian Endeavor Societies, now in session in Philadelphia, it was stated that the number of societies now organized is 7,671, with a membership of over 470,000. They are attached to evangelical churches in twenty-two different denominations.

Dr. George F. Pentecost has been holding most interesting meetings in Edinburgh during the last six weeks. He has also given Bible-readings during the week in the afternoons, which have been attended by from 400 to 600 persons, mostly residing in the West End of Edinburgh.

President Harrison has issued an order prohibiting the sale of liquor on the camp-grounds of the District National Guards at their coming annual encampment at Fort Washington, on the Potomac River. It was intended to have a canteen, but at the request of the Women's Christian Temperance Union the President prohibited it.

Dr. L. W. Munhall's Bible Conference meets at Ocean Grove, N. J., July 25, and continues six days. Among the pastors expected to help in the meetings are Drs. A. J. Gordon, James H. Brookes, W. J. Erdman, Arthur T. Pierson, Nathaniel West, and W. J. Moorehead. Three sessions will be held each day. The meetings last year resulted in a great blessing to many.

The Rev. William Henry Beecher, the eldest brother of the late Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, died in Chicago on June 23. He was in his eighty-seventh year. He was ordained in 1830, and his first charge was at Newport, R. I. His best work was done in the west under the auspices of the American Home Mission Society. During the past nineteen years he had been afflicted with deafness, which involved his giving up regular preaching.

PROFITABLE MIXTURE.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"For unto us was the gospel preached as well as unto them; but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it." Heb. 4:2.

A Lofty Destiny Missed—A Grave Instead of a Throne—I. Israel's Hearing of the Gospel—A Gospel of Rest for Slaves—Of Redemption—Of Separation—Of a Prepared Heritage—Of a Divine Calling—Of Help Assured—II. Israel's Failure to Profit by it—Clinging to Egypt—Setting up Idols—Despising the Promised Land—III. The Fatal Cause of the Calamity—Not in the Gospel—Not in the Preacher—In Lack of Faith—Therefore Could Learn Nothing—Appropriate Nothing—Could Not Enter the Land.

THE people that came out of Egypt were an interesting company, if we think of what God had done on their behalf, and of what He proposed to do for them. They had been lifted up from a state of slavery into one of freedom, and they were on their way to a country where they were to be settled each one upon his own portion of land, therein to become priests and kings unto God. What an unhappy circumstance that set before them was never realized by any of them save two lone men—Joshua and Caleb! You hear them singing at the Red Sea, in exultant joy, and they are on their way to Canaan, the land that floweth with milk and honey; loud are their songs, and high are their hopes. But mark those lines of graves—those innumerable hillocks which were formed wherever the camp was pitched in the desert! That is the end of the generation which came out of Egypt: "Their carcases fell in the wilderness." Instead of reaching Canaan and settling, every man under his own vine and fig-tree, they lie in dishonored graves outside of the land of promise.

The High Ideal

Let us not follow in their track. We are far too much inclined to do so. They were men, and we are no better than they by nature. Oh for grace to walk after a higher rule! Let a holy dread seize upon us at this time, such as that which Paul expresses in the words: "Let us therefore fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it." Let us not find a tomb when we might gain a throne. Let us not go down into the pit when before us lies the way to heaven, and multitudes are beckoning us thither. May great grace be given that we may win where a whole nation failed!

I. First, then, let us consider the way of Israel's Hearing of the Gospel. Whether you take it as our translators have put it in the Authorized Version, "Unto us was the gospel preached as well as unto them," or accept the Revised rendering, "Indeed, we have had good tidings preached unto us, even as also they," it comes to much the same meaning; for the message of Moses and the reports of the faithful spies were both typical of the gospel which was brought to us by our Lord and His apostles. Our gospel is more clear than theirs; yet they had the gospel also, in all the essential truths of it, and had they fully believed it, it would have been a saving gospel to them.

We shall notice, first, that the good news brought to Israel was a gospel of rest for slaves, a promise of deliverance for men who cried by reason of sore bondage. This was a fit emblem of that news which comes to us in the gospel of Jesus Christ. These men were made to labor to exhaustion. They had no rest from toil by day or night; and if they did not supply the full number of bricks, they were cruelly beaten by their taskmasters. Truly the tribes of Israel were in a very evil case. They groaned by reason of their bondage, and that promise was to them—"I will bring you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians." This is the kind of gospel which is preached to us to-day. Does not Jesus say, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, and ye shall find rest unto your souls"? Spiritual rest is even more precious than bodily rest. The great promise of the gospel is rest from the burden of guilt, the pressure of fear, the bondage of habit, the slavery of sin, the scourging of conscience, and the dread of wrath to come.

A Wonderful Gospel

A Gospel of Redemption.

Note, next, that the good tidings to Israel was a gospel of redemption in order to their entering into the promised rest. They were slaves to Pharaoh; how could they become dwellers in Canaan? They might truthfully say, "We cannot break our bonds." The power of Egypt would hold Israel as with an iron hand. But with a high hand and an outstretched arm Jehovah their God determined to bring them out; and bring them out He did. Connected with that power of arm there was the price of sacrifice; for they were redeemed typically by the blood of the Passover Lamb. That blood sprinkled on the lintel and on the two side posts, preserved their houses when the destroying angel passed through the land of Egypt with his death-sword. This day I also preach to you rest through the divine omnipotence of the Holy Spirit, and through the sprinkling of the precious blood of the Lamb of God.

Furthermore, it was a gospel of separation. When you read the words of the Lord to His chosen ones, you are compelled to see that He means them to be a people set apart for His own purposes. He no sooner began with them than the first summons was to Pharaoh, "Let my people go, that they may serve me." Israel was in Egypt; but Israel was not a part of Egypt. No Israelite could become an Egyptian. As a distinct people they came into the land of Ham, and as a distinct people they went out of the land. Too much was Israel defiled by the customs of that heathen nation; but it was not absorbed in Egypt, nor did it cease to be a peculiar race. We are the Lord's portion, the lot of His inheritance. It is by means of this separation that we find rest. Our rest lies where God hath prepared it, and He cries, "Arise ye, and depart; for this is not your rest." Here we have no abiding city. Here we are "strangers and foreigners, as all our fathers were." Yet even here the Church is and cannot be made one with it. This is the gospel of separation which leads on to rest. Until separated, there is no rest for us. Thus is it written, "Come ye out from among them, and be ye separate; and I will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." Thus you see that ours is a gospel of rest, a gospel of sacrifice, and a gospel of separation from the rest of mankind. Hear it with more earnest heed than Israel gave to it: "For unto us is the gospel preached, as well as unto them."

Distinct From the World

Still further, the gospel preached to the Israelites told them of a glorious heritage which was provided for them. It was the fairest of all countries, an epitome of the whole world; and it was to be theirs as a freehold for ever. Each tribe was to have its portion, each family its lot. This was good news to them; and all the more so because within the outward and temporal good news there was a spiritual gospel. Even so are you told that there is a heritage, even a heavenly one, to which God bringeth His believing people, and of which He gives them an earnest even now, in the possession of His Holy Spirit. This heritage is, in a measure, ours even in this life; but into the fullness of its delight we shall enter when the Lord shall come and receive us unto Himself. O my hearers, you have all heard this gospel of glory; have you all accepted it?

Once more: they had a gospel which promised them help to obtain all this. It is a poor gospel which sets heaven before us, but does not help us to enter it. To these Israelites journeying mercies and conquering aids were promised. The Lord said to them, "I will send my fear before thee, and will destroy all the people to whom thou shalt come, and I will make all thine enemies turn their backs unto thee. And I will send hornets before thee, which shall drive out the Hivite, the Canaanite, and the Hittite from before thee." The like help for the attainment of heavenly blessedness is provided in the Gospel which we preach. All helps for the winning of the fadeless crown are waiting for them that believe. We are encouraged to go forward and take possession of the promises, for the Lord hath said, "Certainly I will be with thee." My dear hearer, do you embrace this Gospel? Do you find in it strength for the journey of life? See to it that you miss not the blessing.

II. But now, secondly, I have the painful business of setting briefly before you

Israel's Failure

to profit by the Gospel which they heard. Though they heard it from many, they clung to Egypt. One would think they would have abhorred the land of the iron furnace, and the brick-kiln; but no; at the first they said, "Let us alone, that we may serve the Egyptians." The signs and wonders that God wrought in the field of Zoan were almost as much needed to separate Israel from Egypt, as to loosen the cruel grasp of Pharaoh. The nation had not long been quit of the land before they cried out, "Wherefore hast thou dealt thus with us, to carry us forth out of Egypt? It had been better for us to serve the Egyptians than that we should die in the wilderness." Again and again they sighed for the leeks and the garlic and the onions of Egypt, whining for despising the bread from heaven. They talked as if the Lord had done them a great injury by setting them free from their taskmasters. Ah me! The gospel which they heard did not profit them; for in their hearts they still tarried in the house of bondage.

The Coarse Food of Bondage,

Worse still, they provoked the Lord. By their murmurings, but chiefly by their idolatry, they vexed His Holy Spirit. Could you have believed it? after all the gods of Egypt had been smitten in detail by the plagues of Jehovah, yet the people remembered the idol god, the ox of Egypt, and they set up for their own worship what the Lord derisively called a "calf." They said, "These be thy gods, O Israel!" Truly the word preached had not profited them.

They went so far as to despise the promised land: they said, "It is a land that eateth up the inhabitants thereof." They would fain go back to Egypt rather than advance upon a scene of such great danger. They dared to speak as if death in Egypt had been preferable to the wilderness, for they would never be able to conquer the land. The spies whom they sent to spy out the land, ten of them flattered their humor and defamed the country. They could not deny that it flowed with milk and honey, for the fruits were before them, and the clusters of Eshcol were convincing evidence of its fertility; but they said it ate up its inhabitants, implying that it was a deadly place to dwell in.

The End of It

was, they died in the wilderness. Ah me! The whole generation died in the wilderness—these very men that stood by the Red Sea, and said, "I will sing unto the Lord, for He hath triumphed gloriously. Thou shalt bring them in, and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance." They sang, "Sorrow shall take hold on the inhabitants of Palestine. All the inhabitants of Canaan shall melt away;" but, on the borders of the land they trembled, turned back into the wilderness, and died. To them the inspiring gospel of the promised rest was altogether unprofitable.

O my hearers, fear and tremble lest it be the same with you! Let me go over this story once more, with a personal application. Do you still cling to sin? Do you still love it? Would you be willing to go to heaven, but are you unwilling to part with sin? Is the flavor of the onion of sinful pleasure still pleasant to your palate? Do you despise the goodly land? Do you say in your heart, "Heaven and heavenly things are too visionary for me; I have too much to do to earn my daily bread?" Are you sighing after flesh, after worldly wealth, and honor and pleasure? Do you loathe the manna of holy joy, and fellowship, and bliss, and life in Christ? Is it so? And are you fearing to-day that you never can do what you should do, and that you can never conquer your evil propensities? Do you sit down supinely, judging your passions to be too strong to be subdued, your habits too firmly fixed to be changed? Are the giants too strong for you to slay them? Have you no trust in God, and in His boundless grace? If so, O sirs, I fear me your carcasses will fall in the wilderness; your dying hour will come, and you will have no hope. A whole nation missed the rest of God; it will not be a wonder if you and I miss it, who are but one or two, unless we take earnest heed, and are filled with fear "lest, a promise being left us of entering into His rest, any of us should seem to come short of it."

III. So now, thirdly, I am going to put my finger upon

The Fatal Cause

of this direful calamity. Why was it the gospel that they heard did not profit them? Assuredly, it was not the fault of the gospel which they heard. In itself it is calculated to profit all who receive it. It promised liberty, and this should have made them gratefully obedient. It promised an inheritance, and added to it a high and holy calling, and this should have aroused their loftiest aspiration. It promised every help to the getting of the promised blessings; and what could they have more? Concerning the gospel which I have preached to you, I can truly say that if you miss blessedness, it is not because you are straitened in the gospel, or are discouraged by the narrowness of the Lord's grace. Pardon of sin, justification of your persons, the salvation of your souls, and everlasting bliss; what more can be set before you? If this does not touch you, what will?

In their case it was not the fault of the preacher; for Moses spoke God's Word with great meekness and gentleness. He set before them the truth with all fidelity. With all my imperfection, I hope I can say, also, that if you die in the wilderness, I am clear of your blood; for I have warned you to escape, and I have bidden you seek, first, the kingdom of God and His righteousness.

Well, then, what was the cause? We put our finger on it at once: "Not being mixed with faith in them that heard it." Where there is no faith in the gospel, no good consequence can possibly come of it. If it were preached to you by angels, yea, if one arose from the dead and proclaimed it to you, if you believed it not what could be the beneficial effect of hearing it? Men, why do you hear it if you do not mean to believe it? If you will be damned, why do you throng this place to hear about salvation? If you are resolved that you will not have the promise of God, why come and listen to His servant, who has nothing else to tell you? Are we set up to be as marionettes, or dancing dolls, for you to stare at? God forbid that we should ever accept the calling of actors in a play! If we do not win your hearts for Christ, and so save you, we have labored in vain, and spent our strength for nought. See the effect of absence of faith, and lament it.

Where there is no faith, men remain

Slaves to the Present.

If they did not believe in the milk and honey of Canaan, you see why they hankered for the cucumbers of Egypt. An onion is nothing comparable to an estate beyond Jordan; yet, as they think they cannot get the estate, they pine for the onions. When men do not believe in eternal life they naturally enough cry, "Give me bread and cheese! Let me have a fortune here!" They keep their nose to the grindstone, always thinking about this passing life, because they do not heartily believe in heaven and its glories. They are as "dumb-driven cattle," that see not into another state; this life seems real to them, but the next life they suspect to be a dream. As long as there is no faith, this world is all, and the world to come is nothing at all.

If a man hears and has no faith, he learns nothing. What would be the use of your listening to lectures upon science if you disbelieved what the professor set forth? You are no pupil—you are a critic, and

You Cannot Learn.

Many professors have no faith, and, consequently, whoever may teach them, they will never come to a knowledge of the truth. Israel never saw through the almost transparent veil of the types because they did not believe. Want of faith means want of eye and want of perception.

A man that has no faith in what he hears does not appropriate it. There is gold! Eagerly one crieth, "Let me go and get it!" Unbelief restrains him, as it whispers, "There is no gold, or it is beyond reach." He does not go to get it, for he does not believe. Unbelief palsies the hand, and it appropriates nothing. That which is not appropriated can be of no use to you. Look at your food. How is it that it builds up your body? Because you take it into the mouth, and it descends into the stomach, and there it is mixed with certain fluids, and is digested, and ultimately is taken up into the system and becomes a life-sustaining force. Being properly mixed, it is taken up and assimilated. And so it is with heavenly truth: if it is taken into the heart, and then mixed with faith, it is digested, and becomes food to every part of the spiritual nature.

Lastly, these people could not enter in because they had no faith. They could go to the border of the land, but they must die even there. They could send their spies into the country, but they could not see the fertile valleys themselves. Without faith they could not enter Canaan. Shall it be so with us, that, for want of faith, we shall hear the gospel, know something about its power, and yet miss its glories, and never enter into possession of the life eternal which it reveals? Here is the point: "They could not enter in because of unbelief."

Still, the great necessity is faith. Instead of speaking upon that subject, let me beg you to Do a Little Mixing at Once.

Don't mix philosophy with the gospel, but by the help of God's Spirit mix faith with it. Before us is the glorious Word made flesh, in the eternal Son of God in our nature! He lives for men; He dies to make atonement for sin. Even He cannot save you unless you now mix faith with all those truths about Him which the Scriptures teach you. Now mix faith with what you know concerning the Saviour, and say, "Lord, I believe that Thou Art the Son of God. I believe that Thou didst live a perfect life, which is our righteousness. I believe that Thou didst die a painful death, which brings us pardon. I believe that Thou ever livest to intercede. I trust my soul in Thy hands." That is mixing faith with the gospel, and you will in this fashion richly profit by the gospel. You will go your way a saved man.

Try what you can do with eternal life itself. Say, "Lord, I believe that there is a spiritual life which Thou dost breathe into believers. I believe that this grows from grace to glory. Thou givest to believers eternal life even here; death cannot kill it, and so they live on, and on, and on, throughout eternity, for ever blessed in Christ. I believe in the new creation. I appropriate it. I trust in Jesus for it. This heritage is mine! By faith I take it to myself." God will never take away what you can grasp by faith. Mix faith with every promise. Henceforth continue to practice the holy art of mixing faith with the revelations of Scripture. Compound them as the dispensers do. Here is a choice drug, but it wants mixing with its proper affinity; the promise must be mixed with faith if it is to be life-giving to the soul. Mix it, then, with faith, and be profited immediately and eternally. Be united to the truth, and it will save you. Let it come into union with you, and you will never perish. The Lord help you to be joined unto His truth by faith, for Christ's sake. Amen.

[The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Dr. Talmage and Mr. Spurgeon especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

A PRAYER FOR RAIN.*

A BRIGHT testimony to the power of prayer was witnessed here (Shoshong). Some time after Kama became chief there was a terrible year of drought, threatening the loss of all the crops. The enemies of Christ sneered at the helplessness of the Christians, and wondered what they would do without rain-doctors—important persons in Africa. As the knowledge of the true God had increased, they had been discarded. Kama now appointed a day of prayer to God, and all his people were invited to be present. The Christians at Shoshong sent messengers to the village of the Makalaka close by, inviting them to come to this all-day prayer-meeting. The Makalaka heathen, however, sneeringly retorted that they were not going to turn away their own rain-doctors, and refused to come. The Christians spent the day in humiliation and prayer, and toward evening heavy clouds arose, and a prolonged drenching shower of rain passed over the town. The gardens of the Shoshong Christians lay alongside those of the Makalaka in a plain in front of the town, and in the morning it was found that all the fields belonging to the people of Shoshong were well soaked with water, but those of the Makalaka were as dry and parched as on the day before. The news of this wonderful answer to the prayers of Kama and his people spread widely, and traders and others came to see for themselves.

A Night on a Mountain.

On reaching the river I bargained with the old ferry-man to take my men and bundles across, leaving them to walk up to Mbova, and come back and take me up the river to that town in his boat. The man landed me on the north bank, that he might go to his hut to refresh himself with a smoke of tobacco. I lay on the bank of the river for some hours, and as he never returned, and was not likely to do so, I determined to start off on foot after my men and blankets. In my weak state and being quite alone, I wandered repeatedly from the path. At last night came on. The path lay over a sharp hill covered with large boulders, in the midst of which I completely lost my way, wandered about from right to left, then lay down between two boulders, where I found myself fairly comfortable, as the stones were still radiating heat. I had not lain long when I heard a footstep in the distance. On looking up and watching in the direction from which the sound came, I saw the figure of a man, with a gun over his shoulder, walking along slowly in the direction I had come from. I called, and he at once replied and came over to me, when I found that he was one of the Bushmen I hired at Leshuma, and that he was out in search of me. With his help I was able to reach Mbova shortly before midnight. The natives there provided me with a hut to sleep in, and brought food; but it was fully ten days ere I recovered the use of my limbs.

* From Garenganze, or Seven Years' Pioneer Mission Work in Central Africa. By Fred. S. Arnot. With twenty illustrations and an original map. The portrait and biography of this devoted and intrepid missionary, recently published in this journal, will have prepared our readers to deeply enjoy the letters and diary which compose this book. His own story of his dangers, his hairbreadth escapes, and the faithfulness of God, in whom, when face to face with death, his confidence never wavered, is more fascinating than any work of fiction or travel that we know of. Mr. Arnot is a writer of fine dramatic power, and none can read his record of these seven years without being pleased and edified. 276 pages; price $1.25; published by Fleming H. Revell, 12 Bible House, New York.

Rev. Benjamin Senior.

Mr. Senior's Church in Blackfriars Road, London.

Class Prejudice.

When I tried to explain to King Liwanika, of the Barotse, that a man's position in this world had nothing whatever to do with his place in the next; that God dealt with the hearts of men and not with their skins; that a poor matlanka (slave) might be seated in the palace of God, and a king or a chief shut out, he got very excited, forbade me ever to say such a thing again, or ever teach such things to his people. The native's pride of position is consummate, and for a chief or free man to come down to the level of a poor matlanka sinner is humanly impossible. "Unto the poor the gospel is preached," and most gladly would I give all my time among the many poor slaves of this country; but meanwhile I am not allowed. "Those are not people," they say; "they are our dogs." So it is only by stealth that I get among them.

REV. B. SENIOR, Pastor of New Surrey Chapel.

THE arrival here of the Rev. Benjamin Senior, of London, was mentioned in this journal last week. As many of our Methodist friends will probably listen to him during his visit, they will doubtless be glad to have his portrait, and to know something about him and his work on the other side the Atlantic.

Mr. Senior is forty-two years of age, having been born near Leeds on March 4, 1847. He was converted when he was seventeen years old, and eight years later he decided to enter the ministry of the Primitive Methodist Church. He went to the college of that church at Sunderland, and at the end of his course was received by the Conference. He was sent to Ramsgate, then to Kingston-on-Thames, and thence to Dartford. In each place he was successful in building up the cause; the membership and the congregation increased, and new spheres of Christian activity were occupied. While at Dartford he was called to London under peculiar circumstances.

In Blackfriars Road is a building hallowed by many blessed associations. It was built in 1782 for the famous Rowland Hill. There crowds gathered to hear the wonderful preacher whose wit and eloquence were the talk of the town. Many marvellous conversions took place. "His words," as one who listened to him said, "came red-hot from the heart," and they were blessed to many on whom the more dignified and scholarly discourses of his brethren of the Established Church had produced no effect. Mr. Hill died in 1833, but his work went on. A few years ago, however, an unexpected obstacle was encountered. The church stood on ground held on lease, and the lease was near its expiration. The value of the land, which is in one of the busiest parts of the city, was more than quadruple what it was when the church was built a hundred years before. The owner wanted all it was worth, and the members of the church found that they could get the lease renewed only on terms that would cripple their resources. Dr. Newman Hall, the author of the famous little book, "Come to Jesus," was pastor of the church at the time, and it was not difficult for a man so eminent as he to secure funds for the erection of a new home for his people. Accordingly the new "Christ Church" was built, and was in every way a better and more convenient meeting-place for the society.

Surrey Chapel, the time-honored structure which had been the birth-place of so many souls, was unoccupied. The lease had still about two years to run, and the Primitive Methodists gained permission to turn those two years to account by holding services in the old building. Mr. Senior was selected as the best man for the work. He went, and commenced services. Soon out of the laboring classes of the neighborhood a large congregation was gathered, and by the end of the two years, so grand and beneficent a work was in progress that its discontinuance would have been felt a calamity by the district.

Wealthy and influential persons concerned for the spiritual welfare of the district in which their business offices were situated, and where their forefathers had lived, offered liberal sums toward a fund for the erection of a new church. In a short time Mr. Senior had $40,000 in hand. A site was secured within forty yards of the old building, and the work of building was begun. On September 26, 1888, the new Surrey Chapel (a picture of which is here given) was opened, Rev. C. H. Spurgeon preaching the dedication sermon. It has cost $60,000, and is a commodious and well-built edifice, said to be the largest and most handsome in the Primitive Methodist denomination. It holds about a thousand persons, and is well filled at every service. The congregation is composed chiefly of the poor and uneducated dwellers in the back streets and alleys of the city. To these Mr. Senior loves best to preach, and they are the class which most highly appreciates his labors.

A SPECIAL MESSAGE OVERLOOKED.

(See illustration on page 445.)

It was after midnight, and Maud Bathurst, having composed her mind after a distressing day by prayer and reading favorite passages of the Bible, was about retiring to rest when she heard a gentle tap on the door of her room. Her visitor was evidently afraid of being heard by any one but Maud; for the tap was so light that she was not sure that it was not her fancy. But she crossed the room and opened it. Her younger sister Ethel entered, closed the door, and flung herself into the nearest chair. A look of fixed determination sat on her fine features, and her eyes flashed.

"Maud," she said, "I am going away in the morning as soon as it is light. I wanted to kiss you, and tell you about it to-night, so that there may be no agitating scene in the morning."

"Going away! Where are you going? What do you mean, Ethel?"

"I mean just that," said Ethel; "I am going away. I don't know where. Anywhere—to New York first. After that I don't know. It is of no use trying to dissuade me; I have fully made up my mind."

"But I do not understand, Ethel. Are you crazy, or am I?"

"No, of course you do not understand. That is why I have come to you. I could not bear the thought of your putting a wrong construction on my going. When I am gone, there will be plenty of people to say uncharitable things about me. I don't care what they say, but I did not want that you should have any suspicions of evil. I wanted to put myself right with you first."

"But you don't, Ethel. You are terribly wrong; there can be no sufficient reason for your leaving home suddenly and secretly as you propose. Nothing you can say would make that right in my judgment."

"Oh, don't oppose me, Maud, or I shall wish I had not told you. I have thought it all out, and I have made up my mind. I cannot bear to live at home any longer. It is best for you and the girls, and mother, and me too, that I should go. I want to do right, and I have tried to do right, but I cannot here. I have resolved over and over again that I will do as you do, and when mother gives her contradictory orders, and blames me without cause, and scolds and storms about trifles, and imputes evil motives to me that never entered my mind, I would bear it quietly. But I have not your mild temper. I must answer back and tell her she is unjust, and then I go farther and say that what she says is not true, and that always exasperates her. Ever since I came home from school I have been making good resolutions and breaking them. You know nearly all the disturbances we have come from something I have said or done. There will be more hope of peace if I am away. It will be better for all of you. And as for myself, I would rather live on dry bread and be free from the scolding. And it is not altogether because I am miserable, either. I am afraid of myself. I am becoming wicked. I have such dreadful thoughts sometimes. After mother has been scolding me and charging me with carelessness and perversity when all the time I have been trying my best to please her, there seems no good in life, and once—lowering her voice to a whisper—"I was tempted to drown myself."

"And what do you mean to do?" Maud asked, quietly.

"I mean to go to New York and try to get a position. I will apply for work either as a teacher, or in a store, or as a lady's maid, or anything. I don't care what I do. Anything will be better than this."

"My poor child!" said Maud, throwing an arm around her sister, "you will do nothing of the kind. You must not think of it. I know all you feel. I know how hard it is for you to bear, and I can understand your being anxious to get out of the trouble; but it is not right, Ethel, and God's blessing would not be with you."

"God does not care, Maud; do not speak of Him; I have asked Him to protect me, and He does not; He lets me be blamed unjustly, and He does not vindicate me."

"But I must speak of Him, my child. He is your only hope, here or elsewhere. It is He who has laid this cross on your shoulders, and He is looking down on you, and wishing that you would bear it patiently. You think that He has failed you because you have not been kept from injustice; because you have not been vindicated. That is your mistake. It was something very different that He promised you."

"Promised me, Maud! what do you mean? There is no promise for me, personally."

"Oh yes, there is, and direction, too. It is for you very clearly, and your circumstances are described as plainly as if they were foreseen when the words were written. See here," and Maud went to her desk and opened her New Testament. "Listen, 'For what glory is it if, when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? but if when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God.' Think of that, Ethel; think of the grandeur of it, the opportunity you have, 'acceptable with God!'" and Maud put her finger on the words as upon a title-deed to a crown, and looked triumphantly at her sister. Then she went on: "'For even hereunto were ye called, because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example that ye should follow His steps; who, when He was reviled, reviled not again; when He suffered, He threatened not, but committed Himself to Him that judgeth righteously.' There is the direction and the reward."

Maud Points to the Message.

"Where is that, Maud? I never noticed it." "It is in the second chapter of Peter's first Epistle. Read it for yourself."

Ethel read the words that have been an impenetrable armor for many a tried child of God. She looked at them long and earnestly. Then she said, "Thank you, Maud; that is enough; I can bear anything now. 'Acceptable with God.' Yes, it does not matter about anyone else."

ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS.

A Life Story: By Mrs. Stenhouse.

For More than Twenty-five Years the Wife of a Mormon Missionary and Elder.

(Continued from page 430.)

The Endowments Received.

CERTAINLY we must have looked anything but handsome in our white garments, and with the oil trickling down our faces and into our eyes, making them smart and look red. There was nothing, however, for us to do but to submit quietly and make the best of it we could. Ashamed as I was, I thought I might venture to look at my husband; there could be no harm in that; but when I saw his demure-looking countenance and his efforts to keep his clothing in order, I thought I should be compelled to laugh outright, for I could see that his thoughts were more occupied about his personal appearance than with the solemnity of the occasion.

Clad after this interesting fashion, we sat opposite to each other for several minutes, and then my husband and myself were instructed to come forward and kneel at the altar, while all the rest remained standing. It is the custom thus to select two persons, and we were either picked out by chance, or it might be, as my husband was thought a great deal of by the authorities, that they considered he would feel honored by the preference.

Suddenly a voice was heard speaking to some one, who also replied. This voice from the unseen was supposed to be the voice of Elohim in conversation with Jehovah, and the words that were used were much the same as those contained in the first chapter of the book of Genesis describing the creation of the world. Finally, Jehovah and Elohim declare their intention to come down and visit the earth. This they do, and pronounce all that they behold very good; but they declare that it is necessary that one of a higher order of intelligence than the brute creation should be placed in the world to govern and control all else.

Michael the Archangel is now called, and he is placed upon the earth under the name of Adam, and power is given him over all the beasts of the field, the fowls of the air, and the fishes of the sea. Moreover, the fruits of the earth are all given to him for his sustenance and pleasure; but he is strictly charged, as in Bible story, not to eat of one particular tree which stands in the midst of the garden. This tree is represented by a small real evergreen, and a few bunches of dried raisins are hung upon it as fruit.

It is now discovered that it is not good for man to be alone; the supposed voices of Elohim and Jehovah are then heard speaking and determining to give a companion to Adam. They, therefore, cause a deep sleep to fall upon Michael—or Adam, as he is now called—and they prepare to operate upon him. Here we were all instructed to assume the attitude of deep sleep by dropping our heads upon our breasts. A rib is then supposed to be removed from the side of the sleeper, which said rib appears immediately upon the scene in the person of Eliza R. Snow.

And now the devil makes his appearance in the person of W. W. Phelps. Phelps used always to personate the devil in the Endowments, and the rôle suited him admirably. He is dead now, nor do I know who has succeeded him in his office. The devil wears a very tight-fitting suit of black muslin, with knee-breeches and black stockings and slippers. This dress had all the appearance of a theatrical costume, and the man looked as much like what one might imagine the devil would look as he possibly could.

He began by trying to scrape acquaintance with Eve, whom he meets while taking a walk in the garden. The innocent, unsuspecting woman is fascinated by his attentions. Father Adam—who seems to have had a touch of the Mormon about him—perhaps was not the most attentive of husbands; or he may have made the same mistake as that which so many of his sons have since made—neglecting to pay the same attentions after marriage as he was wont to before—and left his young wife to the mercy of the tempter. However that may be, Satan and Eve are soon discovered in conversation together, and Eve appears to be favorably impressed with Satan. At length he offers her some of the fruit of the forbidden tree, and after some little demur she accepts it and eats thereof.

Then the devil leaves her, Adam makes his appearance, and Eve persuades him also to eat of the fruit of the tree. After this they make a dumb show of perceiving their condition, and an apron of white linen is produced, on which are sewed pieces of green silk, in imitation of fig leaves, and in these they both attire themselves. Then all the brethren and sisters produce similar aprons, which they had brought with them on purpose, and these they put on, as Adam and Eve had already done. The curse was now pronounced upon the serpent—the devil—who reappears upon his hands and knees, making a hissing noise as one might suppose a serpent would do. We were then all driven out of the Garden of Eden into another room which represented the world—and this ended the “first degree.”

We were now supposed to be out in the world, earning our daily bread by the sweat of our brows, and we were informed that although we had been driven out from the presence of the Lord, yet a plan of salvation would be devised for us, by which we should be enabled to return to our first estate. We were to wait patiently until this plan should be disclosed to us. Men representing the ancient prophets then entered, and gave instructions to the people to prepare themselves for the first coming of our Saviour upon earth.

In the Eleusinian mysteries, instead of a rehearsal of this kind the initiated had to undergo an ordeal of such a startling nature that in many instances the persons fainted with fright. Strange and amazing objects presented themselves to them. Sometimes the place they were in seemed to shake round them, sometimes appeared bright and resplendent with light and radiant fire, and then again covered with black darkness and horror; sometimes thunder and lightning; sometimes frightful noises and bellowing; sometimes terrible apparitions astonished the trembling spectators. The being present at these sights was called initiation.

It seems probable that in the early days of Mormonism there was in this particular a closer resemblance between their initiatory rites and these we have mentioned. Van Dusen, who was initiated in the Temple at Nauvoo, but who afterwards apostatized and published some startling revelations in 1847, says of this stage of the proceedings: “All is now silent for a time; the silence is at length broken by a rumbling noise from a distance; the noise terminates in a voice.”

At this stage of our rehearsal we were taught certain passwords and grips; then we were arranged in a circle. The women covered their faces with their veils, and we all knelt down, and, with our right hands uplifted towards heaven, we took the solemn oath of obedience and secrecy.* We vowed that by every means in our power we would seek to avenge the death of Joseph Smith, the prophet, upon the Gentiles who had caused his murder, and that we would teach our children to do so; we vowed that, without murmur or questioning, we would implicitly obey the commands of the priesthood in everything; we vowed that we would not commit adultery—which, with reference to the men, was explained to mean the taking of wives without the permission of the holy priesthood; and we vowed that we would never, under any circumstances, reveal that which transpired in the Endowment House.

The penalty for breaking the oath, which was worded in the most startling and impressive way, was then explained to us. The traitor’s intestines were—while he was yet living—to be torn from him, his throat was to be cut from ear to ear, and his heart and tongue were to be cut out. In the world to come, everlasting damnation would be his portion. Let not the reader think that this was merely an imaginary penalty, or that it was expressed merely for the purpose of frightening the weak-minded; for, as will be shown, punishments quite as horrible as that have been deliberately meted out to the Apostate, the Gentile, and the suspected Saint, by the Mormon priesthood. The innocent blood which cries for vengeance against Brigham Young and some of the leaders of the Church is sufficient to weigh the purest spirit which stands before the throne of God down to the nethermost abysses of hell.

*I myself made a movement with my hand—for I believed that my life was at stake, and I dared not do otherwise. The words of the oath I did not utter.

The vow we took differed from that given in the Nauvoo Temple and given by Van Dusen. We reproduce it here, that it may be seen that although Mormonism may change in some of its details, it is and always has been a system on which treason, revenge, and bloodshed are inculcated as duties, and as such are dangerous to the United States. We are required to kneel at the altar, where we have an oath administered to the effect that we will, henceforth and forever, use all our influence to destroy this nation (the United States), and teach it to our posterity. We are sworn by a solemn oath that we will never reveal to any person what we do and see in the temple. The oath is as follows: “You do solemnly swear, in the presence of Almighty God, His angels, and these witnesses (pointing to individuals in the room that have secret instructions to take life), that you will, from this time henceforth and for ever, begin and carry out hostilities against this nation, and teach it to your children; and to keep the same intent a profound secret now and for ever, so help you God.”

After these fearful oaths had been taken with due solemnity, we were instructed in the various signs representing those dreadful penalties; we were also given a “grip” peculiar to this degree.

We were next entertained by a long address from the Apostle, Heber C. Kimball. Never in my life—except from Brigham Young—have I listened to such offensive language, and I trust I never shall be compelled to listen to anything like it again. Brother Kimball always used to pride himself upon using “plain” language, but that day I think he surpassed himself; he seemed to take quite a pleasure in saying anything which could make us blush. The subject on which he discoursed was the married life in the “Celestial Order;” he also laid great stress upon the necessity of our keeping silence concerning all that we had witnessed in the Endowment House—even husbands to their wives, and wives to their husbands, were not to utter a single word. With the sermon our “Second Degree” ended.

We were now taken to another room for the purpose of passing through the “Third Degree” of the order of the Melchisedec Priesthood. When we were all arranged against the wall, a number of individuals entered who were supposed to represent the ministers of every denomination and religion upon the face of the earth. The devil also makes his appearance again. The ministers set forth the various claims of their respective creeds—each one striving to show that his is the purest and the best—but the devil sows division and hatred among them, and a deal of confusion ensues.

Then came in personages representing Peter, James, and John, the Apostles; and they commanded ministers, devil, and all to depart. They then appeared to organize a new Church, in which the true principles of the Gospel were to be taught; our temple robes were also all changed from the right shoulder to the left, indicating that we were now in the true Church, and that we were to be absolutely and in every way dependent upon the priesthood. Another grip was then given to us, and thus we received the “Third Degree” of the Order of Melchisedec Priesthood.

In that room was a division made of bleached muslin; in the division a door, and in the door a hole, with a lap of muslin over it, through which to pass the hand. Whoever was on the other side could see us, but we could not see them. The men first approached this door. A person representing the Apostle Peter appeared at the opening and demanded who was there. He was told that some one desired to enter. Hands came through the opening in the muslin curtains, and mysterious fingers cut a mark on the left breast of the men’s shirts—one mark also over other parts of the body—which marks the women religiously imitated upon their own garments when they got home. The applicant was then told to put his hand through the opening, and give the last grip belonging to the “Third Degree,” and mention his new name. He was then permitted to enter. This was called “going behind the veil.” When the men were all admitted, the women were suffered to approach, and were passed through by their own husbands. When a woman has no husband she is passed through by one of the brethren, and to those who are not going to be married, or sealed for eternity, here the ceremonies end.

As I before stated, according to Mormon ideas, we had never before been legally married. It was, therefore, necessary that we should now pass through that ceremony. We accordingly were conducted to a desk, where our names were entered, and we were then passed into another room. In that room was a long, low altar covered with red velvet, and an arm-chair placed at one end of it, in which sat Brigham Young. My husband knelt at one side of the altar and I at the other, with our hands clasped above it in the last grip which had been given to us. Then the ordinary formula of marriage was gone through with, and we were informed that we were sealed for time and for eternity.

Thus we passed through the mysteries of the Endowment House, and at 3 o’clock in the afternoon we found ourselves at liberty to return home. The various ceremonies had occupied eight hours. When we reached home, my husband said, “Well, what do you think of the Endowments?” But I did not dare to answer him truthfully at that time. Had I done so, I should have told him that I was disappointed and ashamed. Never in all my life did I suffer such humiliation as I did that day; for the whole time I was under the impression that those who officiated looked upon us as a set of silly dupes, and I felt annoyed to think that I dared not tell them so. So I told my husband that I would rather not speak about it, and we never spoke about it to the day of his death. What his own feelings were about the matter, I do not know, for Mormon wives are taught never to pry into their husband’s feelings or meddle with their actions.

But notwithstanding all my feelings about the Endowment House ceremonies, when I afterwards heard the brethren and sisters talking about the happiness which they had experienced while going through, and saying how privileged we ought to feel at being in Zion (Salt Lake City) among the saints of God, secure in His kingdom, where we could bring up our children in the fear of the Lord, I began again to think that the fault was all in myself, and that it was I who was wrong and not the Endowments. I wondered how, with such a rebellious heart, I should ever get salvation, and I mourned to think that I had not accepted everything with the simplicity of a child.

Some time after our initiation I met the Apostle Heber C. Kimball, and he asked me how I felt upon the occasion. I frankly told him all; but added that I regretted feeling so. He said, “I shall see if you cannot go through again; it is not just the thing, and I shall try and make the opportunity.” Nothing more, however, was said about it. But that which troubled me most was the fact that while the oaths were being administered, I dropped my hand and inwardly vowed that I would never subscribe to such things, and at the same time my heart was filled with bitter opposition. This, although I did it involuntarily—my better nature rising within me, and overcoming my superstition—I thought at the time was sinful; I now, however, rejoice that such was the case; for not having actually vowed to keep secret those monstrous oaths, I can say, without any cavil or equivocation, that I have broken no promise and betrayed no trust by the revelations which I have made.

(To be Continued).

Volume XI., of the Christian Herald, Containing the numbers for 1888, with complete index, bound in cloth, may be had from this office; price, $2.50, including postage. A few volumes of 1884, 1885, and 1887 are also for sale. We can also furnish complete volumes for 1884, 1885, and 1888, unbound, price $1.00, including postage.

SAMUEL THE REFORMER.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for July 21, 1 Samuel 7:1-17;
Golden Text, Isa. 1:16, 17.

The Awe-struck Men of Beth-shemesh—Their Unholy Curiosity—How to Study God's Ways—Israel's Vain Regret—Lamentation Useless Without Reform—Samuel's Preaching—Insists on Separation from Idols—Deeds Required Rather than Words—Consecration to Precede Service—The Effect of Samuel's Appeal—A Convention of the People—The Typical Water—The Invasion by the Philistines—The People's Request to Samuel—The Enemy Discomfited—The Lord's Battle.

THE men of Beth-shemesh had taken advantage of the low estate of the ark of God to satisfy their own curiosity in looking therein. There is every difference between reverence and superstition. Superstition will invest things and persons with the awe and reverence which is due to God alone; reverence is that shrinking into nothingness before the presence of God which made Isaiah cry, "Woe is me, for I am undone," when he saw the Lord upon His throne (Isa. 6:5); which made Ezekiel, Daniel, and the apostle John fall upon their faces before His revealed presence; and which made Paul describe Him as dwelling in light which no man can approach unto. (1 Tim. 6:16.) When men set themselves to master the designs of God and to dissect His ways of working, making a kind of science or system by which they seek to bind Him to work, they are like the men of Beth-shemesh, who looked into the ark. They cannot but bring judgment upon themselves. Let us beware that we never come to our God to institute an investigation of His ways, but as little dependent children, to learn of Him. The men of Beth-shemesh said, "Who is able to stand before the holy Lord God?" They felt more at ease at a distance from Him. But, thank God, "we, who sometimes were far off, are by the blood of Christ" (Eph. 2:13); we have "a better hope, . . . by the which we draw nigh unto God." (Heb. 7:14.) Because we have an High Priest who "ever liveth to make intercession for us" (Heb. 7:25), and because He is ever in the presence of God to plead His own blood, we may "draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water." (Heb. 10:22.)

Made Nigh

The men of Beth-shemesh wanted to get rid of the ark of the covenant, and they sent messengers to the inhabitants of Kirjath-jearim, saying, "The Philistines have brought again the ark of the Lord; come ye down and fetch it up to you." The men of Kirjath-jearim were not afraid; they came forward with true loyalty to God, and brought the ark of the Lord into the house of Abinadab, probably one of the Levites, and sanctified Eleazar, his son, to keep the ark of the Lord.

Twenty years passed by; the presence of the Lord in the ark of the covenant was with His people, yet it was unrecognized; "all Israel Lamented after the Lord."

Vain regrets are most unprofitable. There are thousands of Christians whose experience is marked by remorse for the past, and vain regrets for their coldness, their uselessness, their worldliness, their ignorance of the Word, their little love for prayer, and so forth, while all the time they fail to come to a definite point where they face the evil in the light of God, let Him judge them, and break with it forever. It is awful hypocrisy to express sorrow for sin and yet go on sinning. "This is the will of God, even your sanctification."

God's will is on our side to sanctify us, and we are not separated from sin and made holy, is simply because we are not really joining with the Lord in His will. Lamentations, without coming to a halt in our career, and finally breaking with the evil, only harden in the wrong course, because our deceitful hearts will take comfort that we are sorry we do wrong, and suggest that this lamenting spirit is, at least, something in our favor. In lamentation which brings no reform we have plenty of company, but it is company from among the lost. Cain lamented without turning to God, and so did Pharaoh, Balaam, King Saul, Judas, and others.

But through all His judgments upon Israel in this time, God had been overruling events to bring about a reform. The prophet Samuel was being prepared, and in the twentieth year of the alienation of the ark of God from the tabernacle, the young prophet received a distinct message from the Lord, and became

The Reformer of Israel.

He arose on God's behalf, and the burden of his preaching, as he went from place to place, was that which we hear in true Consecration Conferences in our own day. "If ye do return unto the Lord with all your hearts, then put away the strange gods and the Ashtaroth (a wooden image of a Phœnician goddess) from among you, and prepare your hearts unto the Lord and serve Him only. and He will deliver you from the hand of the Philistines." This is true consecration, deeds not words, a definite giving up of everything which holds the heart captive. Whether it be external, worldly things—the love of money, the love of dress, of amusement, of art, or any other external thing which fills the place of Jesus in our hearts; or whether it be in the region of the affections that we have set up idols in our hearts, whether it be pride of intellect, of birth, of learning, pride of talent, or of wealth, or family, or whether it be that subtle idolatry which makes the Word of God an idol to us, the spirit of God cries, "Return unto the Lord with all your hearts, and put away the strange gods."

It is only as we draw near to God that we see things in the right light. In His holy presence things take their right form and color. Thoughts and words which are so common that nobody would remark them, yet, in the presence of God, are seen to be unclean, unloving or unholy. The true soul invites God to make a tour of inspection through his whole life, and while he dare not trust himself to look into the dark caverns of his own heart, he prays, "Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me, and know my thoughts, and see if there be any way of wickedness in me, and lead me in the way everlasting." (Ps. 139:23, 24.) "God is faithful;" He will always show us when we are out of joint with Him, if we are only willing to be taught. But He does not want us to dwell upon the past, but at once to turn away and "prepare your hearts unto the Lord, and

Serve Him Only."

When our God searches us with prophet's eye, He leads us to our great High Priest, who is entered with His own blood into the holy place to make atonement for us. Like the children of Israel in Egypt on the Passover night, there is no place for us outside the blood-sprinkled door, no safety but when sheltered by the blood. But there is safety, there is food, the very paschal Lamb, Jesus who is meat and drink, the very nourishment Himself of His own life within us, inside the shelter of His blood. And then there is service. The Israelites in Egypt must eat the Passover with their loins girded, their staves in their hand, their shoes on their feet, ready to serve their God. "Serve Him only." This is the end and result of all true consecration. "The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give His life," "Where I am, there shall also my servant be," i. e., in the place of service, turned from idols "to serve the living and true God" (1 Thess. 1:10), and by love serving one another. A truly consecrated soul cannot live for himself; the life of Christ within Him cannot develop in an atmosphere of self; it can only expand where love reigns.

The Appeal of the Young Reformer

was not in vain; a consecration movement began in Israel, and throughout the land, from north to south and east to west, there was a general putting away of idols, and a general turning to the Lord. The people were ripe now for a general gathering. Nothing is more painful than for a number of Christians to gather together where some are walking altogether with the Lord, and others are walking with a divided heart. The very atmosphere is heavy; prayer and praise seem to have lost wings, as though they could not rise. But when a company of God's people are of one heart and one soul, united in one solemn purpose to let God have His way, there God finds room to act, and He manifests Himself as He does not unto the world. The first act of the assembled company was a very significant one; they drew water, and poured it out before the Lord, to signify how all their hearts and wills and opinions and plans, all they were and had, was poured out before the Lord; and they fasted, and confessed, "We have sinned against the Lord." Hearts were tender and broken: no more resentment against God, no more complaint against Him; they saw themselves in the wrong, and Owned Themselves Conquered.

The enemy of souls begins to fear when God's children are at one, and when they begin to let the Lord have His place. The Philistines heard that the children of Israel were gathered together to Mizpeh. So long as they dwelt apart, and sighed and groaned in their vain laments, their enemies did not fear them; but unity is strength, and now the lords of the Philistines went up against Israel. It is not in our worst times, but in our best times, when we are nearest to God, that the enemy of souls rages against us. The children of Israel feared, but they had nothing to fear; God was with them. If the Lord is our Shepherd, we shall not want. They appealed to Samuel, "Cease not to cry unto the Lord our God for us, that He will save us out of the hand of the Philistines." They were in another mind now from the time when they presumptuously carried the ark of God into the camp, as though to force their God to be with them. Samuel did what was more efficacious than continual preaching—he took a sucking lamb, a type of "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." (John 1:29.) The Lamb "without blemish and without spot" by whom we are redeemed. (1 Pet. 1:19.) And Samuel, with the offering of the Lamb, prayed for deliverance,

And the Lord Heard Him.

God was at no loss for means to destroy the enemies of His people. The mute appeal of the offered lamb was going up to heaven on the one side, the enemies of Israel pressed on from the other side, and then the answer of God came loud and strong in mighty thunder upon His enemies and Israel's, and they were discomfited. Now it was Israel's turn to pursue, and they drove them to Beth-car. After consecration, when faith accompanies it, there is always victory. Discouragements, lamentations, murmurs and complaints were hushed. It was another story now. And Samuel set up a stone of memorial which should be a testimony to coming generations, and he named it Ebenezer, saying, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us."

"So the Philistines were subdued"—first, God's people were subdued to Him, then the Philistines were subdued to them, "and they came no more into the coast of Israel, and the hand of the Lord was against the Philistines all the days of Samuel." Oh there is power in the knowledge that the hand of the Lord is against our enemies. If the battle is the Lord's, we may well be without fear—let us never forget that when He and we are one, when He has conquered us, it is no difficulty to Him to subdue our enemies and conquer our difficulties; in the very greatest of them, "we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us." (Rom. 8:37.) Samuel now virtually ruled Israel, making the tour of the country annually, and when he returned home, it was always from the service of God to the worship of God, for he had an altar in his house

Mother's Bible, precious volume,
Doubly dear it seems to me,
God has given it to His children:
It is mother's gift to me.
"Holy Bible," how I love it!
Mother loved it long ago,
And she taught me in her closet,
How to love this Bible too.

Mother's Bible, Holy Bible,
'Twas her guide from day to day;
Here she found a cheering cordial
When her loved ones passed away.
'Twas her comfort when in trouble,
'Twas her joy when sorrows came;
Mother loved this precious Bible
More than worldly wealth and fame.

Mother's Bible, blessed Bible,
All its promises are true;
Mother saw them fully tested
Ere she bade this world adieu.
In the swelling of the river,
They sustained her even there;
"Christ, is with me," mother whispered,
"Soon I shall His glory share."

Holy Bible, precious Bible,
Blessed book so dear to me;
Here I read sweet words of cheering,
From my mother's legacy.
Mothers, teach your little children,
While their tender hearts are pure;
Teach them now to love the Bible—
They will bless you evermore.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher: 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets
assorted (no two alike), will be sent, post-paid, for 10
cts., or 100 for 20 cts. Postage stamps taken.

A Few Words in Regard to "Sweet Home Soap."

It is a pleasure to us to know that a large number of the readers of The Christian Herald have availed themselves of the kind offer of Messrs. J. D. Larkin & Co., Buffalo, N. Y., to send a box of their "Sweet Home Soap" (with all the extras), worth six dollars, on trial. They now extend the same offer to the readers of this paper, whether subscribers or not, as will be seen by their advertisement in our last week's paper. We do not see how any one who gets a box of this soap can be otherwise than satisfied with it. Several have written us asking if there is not some "humbug" or "catch" about it. They have been swindled by some other party, and do not see how any one can do what Messrs. Larkin & Co. offer to do. For our part we think the fact that the offer is so plain and straightforward, to send a box on trial, freight prepaid, and if after trying it, you are not satisfied, take it away and no charge for what has been used, is the best possible proof there is no "catch" about it, and also proof that everything is as represented, otherwise they could not afford to send it out on trial. You need not be afraid to send for it, it is all right. We have used it in our family over a year and will have no other. Send for a box and try it, and you will thank us for calling your attention to it. Those who have used it are already sending us six dollars in advance for second boxes. One (a clergyman) who had a box about a year ago, writes us as follows: "We have used one box of 'Sweet Home Soap,' and know it to be vastly superior to any soap used in our family. Please send us a box. The $6.00 shall be sent you when soap arrives."

All you have to do is to send your name and address on a postal card to J. D. Larkin & Co., Buffalo, N. Y., saying you have seen the notice in The Christian Herald of their offer to send a box of "Sweet Home Soap" on trial (with all the extras) and would like one on those terms, and it will be sent you, freight prepaid, to your nearest station. You run no risk, for if you are not satisfied with what you receive, you are not obliged to pay the six dollars, but they will send and take it away without any trouble to you. What can be fairer?

J. E. JEWETT.

P. S.—They send an extra present in boxes to clergymen and to those who send cash with the order, and ship the box same day order is received.

HENRY WARD BEECHER'S celebrated work "The Life of Jesus the Christ." The publishers are now ready to forward terms of subscription for second volume, or for the complete work.

IN THE PRESS.

AMERICAN CHRISTIAN RULERS; or, Religion and Men of Government: Biographical Sketches of men of Christian faith and experience, who have held prominent positions in the National and State Governments, and in the Judicial Department. Numerous authentic portraits, and a beautiful wood engraving of the great picture "First Prayer in Congress."

BROMFIELD & CO., 633 Broadway,
New York City.

WANTED Christian Men and Women to sell THE CHRISTIAN'S LEGACY. REPORTS: "Yesterday I started out about 8 o'clock and at noon had 8 new names." "Monday I worked 54 hours and took 9 orders." "Tuesday 7 hours and added 12 good names."—Circulars and recommendations free.

W. J. HOLLAND, 150 Nassau St., New York.
E. E. HOLLAND, 49 Dearborn St., Chicago.

For the Sunday-School Lessons.

FROM SAMUEL TO SOLOMON. By Rev. C. S. Robinson, D. D., LL. D., 12mo. 310 pp. Cloth, $1.25. Stout paper with cloth back, 50 cts. Covering week by week the International Lessons from July, 1889, to January, 1890.

A bright, fresh, suggestive book; full of apt illustrations. A timely aid to Sabbath-School Teachers.

The Star Library.

A new and attractive Sunday-School library of ONE HUNDRED 16mo VOLUMES.

Each volume illustrated and strongly bound in red cloth, with gilt back. Over 15,000 pages of reading, in large, legible type. In handsome chestnut case.

Every Sunday-School, before looking elsewhere, should examine this large set, of excellent books, which is offered at an extremely low price.

ONLY TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS. NET.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY,

150 Nassau St. & 304 Fourth Ave., New York.

Boston, 54 Bromfield St.; Rochester, N. Y., 93 State St.; Chicago, 122 Wabash Ave.; Philadelphia, 1512 Chestnut St.; Cincinnati, 176 Elm St.; San Francisco, 735 Market St.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH
43 Bible House, New York.

THE GREAT FLOOD!

ATTENTION, AGENTS!

The first in the field. A complete history of this terrible calamity at Johnstown, has just been issued. 300 pages, 25 full-page illustrations, handsomely bound in cloth, price $1.00. Discount to agents, 50 per cent. Send 25 cents for Prospectus Book and package of circulars, and go to work. Address J. S. OGILVIE, Publisher, 57 Rose Street, New York.

YOUR ADDRESS ON A Postal Card

Mailed to us, brings you promptly 30 samples of cloth, guaranteed self-measuring, neat blanks, whereby you can have your clothing cut to order and sent to you by express or P. O. Pants $3 to $5. Suits, $13.25 to $21.

PLYMOUTH ROCK PANTS CO.

11 to 17 Elliot St., or 18 Summer St., Boston, Mass.
Or call at our nearest BRANCH STORE—
285 Broadway, New York; 943 Pennsylvania Ave., Washington, D. C.; 72 Adams St., Chicago, Ill.; Burnside Building, Worcester, Mass.; Gilmore House, Springfield, Mass.; 914 Main St., Richmond, Va.; 198 Westminster St., Providence, R. I.; Old Register Building, New Haven, Conn.

PIANOS UNIVERSITY ORGANS

$150 to $1500 Guaranteed 6 years. $35 to $500

They Lead the World. We sell direct to families, and send for trial in your own home before you buy. Catalogue Free. Estab. 1859. Incor. 1877.
MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO.,
235 East 21st Street, N. Y.

EAST GREENWICH ACADEMY.

Founded 1802. For both sexes. Charmingly located on Narragansett Bay. Steam heat. Electric light. Well endowed. Prepares for College or Business. Eleven courses of instruction, including normal, with training school. $20 a year. Opens Sept. 3d. For illustrated catalogue address Rev. F. D. BLAKESLEE, A. M., East Greenwich, R. I.

AGENTS: E. B. TREAT'S Catalogue of new books.

Send for Targets, by Talmage $2.50. Quick sales, Big say. Also, Mother, Home & Heaven, 400 best authors. Edited by T. L. Cuyler. $2.75. 192,000 sold. 5000 Curiousities of Bible $2. By Mail, E. B. TREAT, N. Y.

RIDGE'S FOOD Will be found invaluable for Cholera Infantum and all Summer Complaints, children or adults. Its active medicine but will be retained & sustain life when everything else fails. 4 sizes 35 cts. up.

SAMPLE PAGES FROM THE LATEST SUNDAY SCHOOL SONG BOOKS FREE.

THE ECHO MUSIC CO., La Fayette, Indiana.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS send stamp and we will forward Catalogue and Free Sample Pkt. of Gospel Tracts, Booklets and Books.

TRACT DEPOT, ORILLIA, CANADA.

BEECHAM'S PILLS act like magic on a weak stomach. For a DISORDERED LIVER try BEECHAM'S PILLS.

BEECHAM'S PILLS

For Bilious and Nervous Disorders, such as Wind and Pain in the Stomach, Sick Headache, Giddiness, Fulness, and Swelling after Meals, Dizziness and Drowsiness, Cold Chills, Flushings of Heat, Loss of Appetite, Shortness of Breath, Costiveness, Scurvy, Blotches on the Skin, Disturbed Sleep, Frightful Dreams, and all Nerve and Trembling Sensations, &c. THE FIRST DOSE WILL GIVE RELIEF IN TWENTY MINUTES. This is no fiction. Every sufferer is earnestly invited to try one Box of these Pills and they will be acknowledged to be a Wonderful Medicine.—"Worth a guinea a box."

BEECHAM'S PILLS, taken as directed, will quickly restore females to complete health. For WEAK STOMACH; IMPAIRED DIGESTION; DISORDERED LIVER they ACT LIKE MAGIC—a few doses will work wonders upon the Vital Organs, Strengthening the muscular System; restoring long-lost Complexion; bringing back the keen edge of appetite, and arousing with the ROSEBUD OF HEALTH the whole physical energy of the human frame. These are "facts" admitted by thousands, in all classes of society, and one of the best guarantees to the Nervous and Debilitated is that BEECHAM'S PILLS HAVE THE LARGEST SALE OF ANY PATENT MEDICINE IN THE WORLD. Full directions with each Box.

Prepared only by THOS. BEECHAM, St. Helens, Lancashire, England.
Sold by Druggists generally. B. F. ALLEN & CO., 365 and 367 Canal St., New York.
Sole Agents for the United States, who (inquire first), if your druggist does not keep them,
WILL MAIL BEECHAM'S PILLS ON RECEIPT OF PRICE, 25 CENTS A BOX.

WHAT WOULD JESUS DO?

OR,
THE TEXT UPON THE WALL.

COPYRIGHT, 1889, BY J. E. JEWETT.

The beautiful little shield represented above, is made from extra heavy card board in maroon and silver edge 5 3/4 inches; corded and ready to hang on the wall. It is a perfect gem.

Price, 15 cts. each, or 8 for $1.00, post-paid.

WHAT WOULD JESUS DO?

OR,
THE TEXT UPON THE WALL.

A 16-page tract, giving some interesting incidents, showing how many a sorrow would be alleviated, how many a wanderer brought back, how many a friend gained, how many an enemy reconciled, how many a peril avoided, how many a perplexity resolved, how many a Gordian knot untied, by the simple reference of all actions and hesitations to this standard—"WHAT WOULD JESUS DO?"

Price, 3 cts. each, or 30 cts. per dozen, post-paid.

A sample, one each of the above (Shield and Tract), will be mailed post-paid for 15 cts., by

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

3rd Edition Just Published.

Mr. Spurgeon's New Book.

WITH A PAGE OF PRECIOUS PROMISES
FOR EVERY DAY OF THE YEAR.

THE CHEQUE BOOK of the BANK OF FAITH. BEING PRECIOUS PROMISES ARRANGED FOR DAILY USE. With Brief Experimental Comments. Nearly 400 pages. 12mo. Price $1.50.

In Mr. Spurgeon's Preface he says: "I believe all the promises of God, but many of them I have personally tried and proved, I have seen that they are true, for they have been fulfilled to me. I commenced these daily portions when I was wading in the Surf of Controversy. Since then I have been cast into 'waters to swim,' which, but for God's upholding hand, would have proved waters to drown in. I do not mention this to exact sympathy, but simply to let the reader see that I am no dry-land sailor—I know the roll of the billows, and the rush of the winds. Never were the promises of Jehovah so precious to me as at this hour."

N. Y. Christian Intelligencer: "When it is stated that this well-named book contains a SCRIPTURE PROMISE FOR EACH DAY IN THE YEAR, commented on, in his best vein, by the prince of practical and experimental preachers, enough has been said to commend as first in its class. It is most admirably adapted for daily reading either in the family or the closet, and wherever used will be found spiritually stimulative."

N. Y. Independent: "The book is done in the great preacher's inimitable style and speaks home on every page to the heart and need of the believer."

* Sent post paid on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

WORKS OF J. W. KIMBALL.

How to See Jesus with Fulfillment of Joy and Peace.

256 Pages. Cloth. Price 75 Cents.

Those who are familiar with the previous works of this deeply devotional author, will gladly welcome this beautiful book. It is not an impetuous rant of love, like "Augustine's Confessions." It is rather the calm and quiet flow of the "Imitation of Christ." He who reads it can scarcely fail to be spiritually enriched, and in very truth to "see Jesus with fulness of joy and peace."—Interior, Chicago.
Every page is fragrant with the love of Jesus. It is the best book of the kind we have read. Its sole purpose is to guide the believer into that closer communion for which he yearns, and to furnish counsel for a life of holiness. —Lutheran Observer.
It is full of the marrow of the gospel, presented in simple, well illustrated, and experimental form. It is even the youngest disciple can apprehend its spiritual lessons and be led by it into the richest enjoyment the fulfillment of the promises.—Christian Advocate.

Heaven: My Father's House

252 Pages. Cloth. Price 75 Cents.

"Heaven.—I have seen nothing on the subject which pleased me so much. The views are original, and, I think just. Some of them I do not remember to have seen presented at all; and others not so well."—Dr. Mark Hopkins, Williams College, Mass.
"I like his way of approaching the subject. The book develops in a very pleasing manner a line of thought peculiar and untouched by any of the men who have written on it."—Rev. Prof. Samuel Hays, Yale College, Conn.
"Death, as seen from Mr. K.'s point of view, is a natural event in the order of the Christian's life. Instead of recoiling from inevitable destiny, we are led by this more familiar view to look upon the change without fear, with cheerfulness."—Rev. Dr. H. Hackett, Newton Theological Seminary.

NEW ENLARGED EDITION.

Encouragements to Faith.

207 Pages. Cloth. Price 75 Cents.

The Rev. ANDREW MURRAY, in his popular work "Abide in Christ," has mentioned this book as one specially to be recommended for young, weak, doubting Christians.

Here is a warm hand and a loving heart tender to you, in the name of the Lord, from one who harbors no doubts, and would gladly help you to break away from them. This book has greatly helped many Christians to a stronger faith in the blessed Lord Jesus; earnestly hope that many more may be benefited by it.

"This volume by J. W. Kimball, seems to be precisely such a one as a Christian would desire to put into the hands of any young man or woman troubled with doubts concerning the religious life. It has reference to the experience of the soul rather than the mind and is in fact, a tender, confidential exhortation, having its motive in love to cultivate faith in God."—Boston Advertiser.

Either of the above books sent by mail, post-paid, receipt of price, or the three books together for $2.00 by J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

THE GOOD NEWS TO LADIES.

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our elaborate Teas, Coffees, and Baking Powder, and secure a beautiful Gold Band or Moss Rose China Tea Set, Dinner Set, Gold Band Moss Rose Toilet Set, Watch Brass Lamp, Castor, or Webster's Dictionary.
Get Premium No. 27. For particulars address
66 and 68 CHURCH STREET, N. Y. P. O. Box 28.

IF YOU WANT AN "OXFORD" TEACHER'S BIBLE, OR BAGSTER BIBLE,

send for complete Bible Catalogue giving full description of styles, sample of type, and prices, to

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

ONE LADY in each town can easily earn $5 to $15 a week. No Risk. No humbug. A full and full particulars free. N. Y. Health Agency, 285 Broadway, N. Y.

LADIES Write us if you want to make money; every hour will count. H. E. CROSBY & CO., Richmond, Va.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1859, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. XII., No. 27. Office, 71 Bible House, N. Y. WEDNESDAY, JULY 3, 1889. Price, 3 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT OF CAPT. HAMILTON MURRELL, of the Steamship "Missouri," who Rescued the "Danmark's" Passengers.
HOW TO MAKE FRIENDS. Dr. Talmage's Sermon last Sunday Morning.
ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

THE PROPHECY OF UNIVERSAL RIGHTEOUSNESS. By Dr. Graham.
A Widow Strangely Saved—Divine Healing in Spain—A God-Directed Journey—A Drunkard's Treasures—High Castes and Outcasts, etc.
PORTRAIT OF THE LATE MRS. R. B. HAYES.
AN ATTACK ON MISSIONARIES. (Illust'd.)
CIOELY'S CONTUMACY. (With Illustration.)

PROFESSION WITHOUT POWER. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
Gems from New Books: Hazing a Quaker Boy—An Answer from Scripture to a Proposal of Marriage—Lost at Midnight in a Canadian Forest, Etc.
ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS. An Autobiographical Story by Mrs. Stenhouse. (Continued.)
THE DEATH OF ELI. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

APT. HAMILTON MURRELL OF THE S. S. "MISSOURI"—TRANSFERRING THE "DANMARK'S" PASSENGERS—RECEPTION IN LONDON.

CAPTAIN MURRELL OF THE "MISSOURI."

The Peril of the "Danmark"—Twenty-Four Hours of Agonizing Suspense on Board—The "Missouri" Takes Off the 735 Imperilled Passengers and Crew—A Child Born—A Sorely Over-Taxed Larder—Safe Arrival at Philadelphia—Royal and Imperial Congratulations—Presentation to the Heroic Captain on May 25.

In all the annals of shipwreck the story of the Danmark affords the most remarkable example of the rescue of a large number of human beings who seemed almost inevitably doomed to death. The Danmark, a Danish vessel belonging to the Thingvalla line, on March 26 left Copenhagen for New York with 665 passengers, and a crew of 69; in all, including the captain, 735 lives on board. On April 4, when about 800 miles from Newfoundland, she broke her shaft, which thereupon whirled aimlessly round and round, and tore a terrible hole in the ship's bottom, causing such serious leakage that the captain perceived there was no chance of keeping her afloat. It was blowing hard, and a heavy sea running at the time, so that it was extremely doubtful, even if the boats had been lowered, whether they could live in such a sea, and in any case they could not have carried all the persons on board. It was decided, therefore, to wait for the chance of succor, though the vessel was evidently settling down. The poor creatures on board spent four-and-twenty hours of most agonizing suspense.

They Prayed, They Sang Hymns, they whispered together in groups, they scanned the horizon for the sight of a sail which might rescue them from the death which seemed almost inevitable. Their prayers were mercifully answered; on the afternoon of April 5 the British steamer Missouri, Captain Hamilton Murrell, bound from London to Philadelphia, seeing a vessel flying distress signals, bore down upon her. Captain Murrell agreed to tow the Danmark, but said he could take no passengers. A tow-rope was attached, but for some hours they made very slow progress against head wind and sea. Captain Murrell then determined to give up the hope of reaching the American coast, and the captain of the Danmark consenting, squared away for the Azores. Before long, however, it was found that the Danmark was rapidly sinking, and accordingly it was resolved to abandon her. She was fast settling down, and her master begged the captain of the Missouri to endeavor to take off her crew and passengers before she sank. Captain Murrell had room for only about twenty more people on board his own ship, and the weather was such as to make the service solicited of him one of the utmost difficulty and danger. He did not, however, hesitate for a moment, but made instant preparation to transport the whole of those on board the sinking steamer to his own vessel. Half his cargo was promptly thrown overboard to and in a tempestuous sea, which broke over them every minute, his boats were launched. Twelve times did they accomplish the perilous passage between the two vessels, and twelve times did they return laden, first with women and children, afterwards with the male passengers and crew of the Danmark, until at last every inmate of the sinking vessel was landed safe and sound on the deck of the Missouri. Not a soul was missing, not one was injured, but, on the contrary, one tiny life was added to their number in the person of a female infant, to which one of the rescued women gave birth. With these 735 additional mouths thrown upon the resources of his larder, Captain Murrell had enough to do to eke out the rations, and consequently made all haste to St. Michael's, the nearest port, and arriving there just after the consumption of his last biscuit, laid in a fresh stock of provisions, and proceeded on his voyage to Philadelphia.

Make Room for the New-Comers;

His Reception

in Philadelphia was most enthusiastic. Long before noon, which was the hour fixed, the Maritime Exchange, and the still more spacious street in front of it, contained thousands of people of all ages and of both sexes, who had in some instances travelled many miles to pay homage to the young captain.

District-Attorney George S. Graham stepped to the captain's side and presented him with the only gold medal ever given by the Pennsylvania Humane Society. "In all my public life," said the District-Attorney, "nothing has ever given me so much pleasure as to stand by the hero of the sea, a saviour of 700 lives." Then a firm of jewellers presented him with a handsome gold watch, with a suitable inscription.

Visitors To The "Missouri"

to the number of four thousand accepted Captain Murrell's invitation to a reception on board before she sailed from Philadelphia. For three hours a line of men, women, and children passed by the gallant Captain, who heartily grasped the hand of each. Captain Murrell had prepared something in the shape of "Remembrances" for the women and little girls who came to shake him by the hand. These were miniature bouquets, to which were attached cards bearing the words: "Compliments of Captain Hamilton Murrell, Atlantic Transportation Line S. S. Missouri, April 25, 1889." To every woman who shook him by the hand he gave one of those and a few pleasing words. By noon the Captain had shaken hands with nearly four thousand people, and, seizing his opportunity when the line thinned, descended to his cabin for needed rest and refreshment. Soon afterward Mrs. Bellange-Cox arrived with about twenty-five Indian girls from the Lincoln Institute, and Captain Murrell obligingly rose and greeted them. Mrs. Cox presented him with a bloodstone charm, a gift from the girls, and two pairs of moccasins made with their own hands. By this time the vessel had her cargo on board. The bell was rung, and the visitors quitted the ship. They waited on the dock to see her start on her voyage, and sent up a ringing cheer.

So splendid a display of seamanship, of

Nobly Unselfish Humanity,

of daring, of decision and resource, has well earned for its hero the universal applause with which his exploit has been acclaimed all over the world. Prince Bismarck has been moved by it to address the following letter of congratulation to Captain Murrell: "Berlin, May 8, 1889. Dear Sir: The safety of the passengers and crew of the Danmark is due to your noble resolution to rescue a vessel in peril at the sacrifice of your own interests, and to the brave and skillful manner in which it was carried out. Permit me to offer you my congratulations on the general recognition which your gallant conduct has received in the public opinion of all sea-faring nations. May your example spur others on to emulation, thus contributing, in similar circumstances, to mitigate the consequences of disasters at sea as it was in your power to do with regard to the Danish steamer. Accept assurance of my special consideration.—BISMARCK."

On May 25, to the sum of his rewards and honors there was added the presentation to him, in the presence of a large assemblage of leading English merchants and others, of a testimonial from the Chief Magistrate of London.

A Committee of Merchants

resolved to present a testimonial to Capt. Murrell, his officers and crew, and a thousand guineas ($5,250) were soon subscribed. Out of this it was determined to give each of the crew of the Missouri two months' pay, each officer and the steward a gold watch and two months' pay, and that Captain Murrell should receive a silver salver and a purse containing the remainder of the money, about $2,500. The salver has the following inscription: "Presented, with a purse of gold, at the Mansion House, on May 24, 1889, by the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, on behalf of the citizens of London, to Capt. Hamilton Murrell, of the screw-steamer Missouri, in recognition of the British pluck and good seamanship displayed by him on April 6, 1889, when, in mid-Atlantic and in heavy weather, he was the means of saving, without casualty of any kind, the passengers and crew, 735 in all, of the sinking Danish emigrant screw-steamer Danmark." The presentation of these articles by the Lord Mayor was on May 25, which, his lordship said, was the greatest he had seen within the walls of the Mansion House. Among the audience were Captain Murrell's father and mother, and also his grandmother. On the platform in the vestibule were numbers of boys from the Arethusa and Warspite training-ships, whose bands played music at intervals. The captain and his officers, wearing their uniforms, received a great ovation, everybody rising and cheering for several minutes. Speeches laudatory of their heroism were made by Mr. Conolly (the hon. secretary of the committee), Sir Henry Peek, Sir R. N. Fowler, M.P., Mr. Sutherland, M.P., chairman of the P. and O. Shipping Company, M. de Falbe, the Danish Minister, General New, the American Consul-General, after which the Lord Mayor made the presentation in patriotic words, commending the calmness and skill of the captain, the bravery and determination of the crew. Their action, he said, was united, and faithfully carried out the lofty motto of the State after which his vessel was named, "Salus populi suprema lex" (the safety of the people is the supreme law), and had boldly disregarded the commercial law in throwing cargo overboard to save human life.

The Occasion of the Demonstration

Captain Murrell Said in Reply:

"I am sure it is with a very lively sense of gratitude that I stand here to-day to thank you, on behalf of myself and officers, for the cordial manner in which we have been received in the Mansion House of the first city in the world. I am sure the gratitude of the people we were the means of saving was sufficient for us without any further recompense. Reference has been made to the cargo thrown overboard. I can assure you I felt the responsibility I was assuming in doing so, but, then, what were bales of merchandise compared with human lives? I am sure that if it had been necessary to empty the ship of all the cargo, we would have done so rather than have left one single soul on board the Danmark. While we are getting all the honor and glory, I think some meed of credit should be given to the captain and officers of the Danmark, for if it had not been for the gallant conduct and splendid discipline shown by them, little would have been the use of our efforts on board the Missouri. I am sure if you could only have seen the way in which they came across from the one ship to the other, you would join with me in thanking the captain, officers, and men of the Danmark for the grand manner in which they carried out their work.

There Was No Flurry, No Worry.

Everything was done quietly and calmly, and of course we had very little trouble on board the Missouri when they arrived there. I am sorry to say there was more difficulty with the men than with the women and children. Among the women there was only one who fainted, after she had been pulled up the ship's side, and you can imagine it was no small task getting them all up in this way, but up they had to come, whether they liked it or not. I may say that among the passengers there were sixty-five children under eleven years old, and twenty-two babies under eleven months. I wish here publicly to thank my officers and crew for the manner in which they worked. If they had not given me all the assistance they did—it would be unfair to name one more than another, for they all worked well—we could not have performed what we did. I am very pleased indeed to see the recognition to the officers and also to the steward, for I can assure you it was no light responsibility to get nearly 800 people thrown on one's larder without any previous warning. We arrived at St. Michael's at half-past 9, and at 8 o'clock the same morning the last biscuit on board the ship had been given out."

Mr. Brooklyn presented the captain with a silver medal from Lloyd's Insurance Society, and a special resolution passed by the committee of that body. General New handed him 2,500 dollars from the citizens of Philadelphia, to be divided pro rata among captain, officers, and crew, and intimated that medals were being prepared in the "City of Brotherly Love," which would be ready by the time the Missouri next crossed the Atlantic. Captain Holt also presented him with an address from the Shipmaster's Society, and a vote of thanks to the Lord Mayor brought the very interesting proceedings to a termination.

A Gold Medal

was awarded to Captain Murrell by the New York Life Saving Benevolent Society at its first meeting after the rescue. Captain Murrell was on the other side the Atlantic when it was ready for presentation, but on Saturday June 22 he arrived at Baltimore from Swansea. He was met down the river by Mr. B. N. Baker, President of the Baltimore Storage and Lighterage Company, who presented Capt. Murrell with the handsome gold medal. First Officer Gates, Second Officer Forsyth, and Third Officer Lucas were similarly honored by the same association. On Monday, June 24, a party gathered on board the Missouri in her dock at Baltimore to confer more honors on the gallant captain. Mr. Harold Jackson, the Danish Consul at Baltimore, decorated Capt. Murrell with the insignia of and said to him: "His Majesty the King of Denmark commands me to represent him on this occasion and present to you the insignia of knighthood of the Order of Dannebrog. His Majesty also desires me to convey to you his most gracious thanks for your heroic act."

Danish Knighthood,

A number of Danes, residents of Baltimore, Washington, and New York, were present, and as a tribute of their respect and admiration for Captain Murrell's heroism, presented to him an immense oil-painting of the world-famed scene of the transfer of the passengers and crew from the sinking steamer Danmark, which had been executed by Lewis Muller. On the deck of the Missouri, opposite the painting, was an engrossed copy of resolutions passed by the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, and just sent to Captain Murrell. The resolutions honor and commend him for his heroic rescue.

The Picture on Our Front Page

gives a fair idea of what the brave Captain Frederick William Hamilton Murrell is like in outward appearance. The Lord Mayor is seen shaking hands with him after having presented him with the testimonial previously referred to. He is the son of Captain Frederick Murrell, who commanded the telegraph steamers Great Northern and Hooper, and received public recognition from the Great Northern Telegraph Company for his services in laying their cable in China eighteen years ago. The subject of this notice was born in Colchester, June 15, 1862, and is therefore twenty-seven years of age. In his boyhood it is stated he was a diligent member of a Bible-class conducted by Mr. D. Conolly, the hon. secretary of the Presentation Committee. After receiving a suitable general and technical education, he was afterwards apprenticed to Messrs. W. Gray and Co., the world-famed shipping house in West Hartlepool. He honorably passed all his examinations in London, and obtained his master's certificate before he was twenty-two. He commanded the steamers Surrey and Swansea, both of which were owned by Messrs. Hooper, Murrell, and Williams, and traded between London, Swansea, Philadelphia, and Baltimore. In January this year he took command of the s.s. Missouri, built by Messrs. W. Gray and Co., West Hartlepool, and owned by the Baltimore Storage Company, of Baltimore. The vessel was on her second voyage when the crew and passengers of the Danmark were rescued.

Prophetic Studies. A Report of the Address delivered at the Prophetic Conference at Chicago, with portraits of some of the speakers. It contains 216 pages. Fifty cents in paper covers, including postage. Address Manager, 63 Bible House, New York.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Supplications for Showers.—Mr. McKeltrich, of the Congo Mission, says: "In 1884-85 we had reached January, the fourth month of the usually wet season, without having had a drop of rain. The people were crying to their idols, and imploring them to send rain, but there was no response. Then an old chief came to Mr. Richardson and said, 'We want you to pray to your God to send rain. There may be something in your God, and we are going to try Him.' It was arranged there should be a prayer-meeting next day. On the following day, some of us having been called away, there were only three of us. We met, and laying hold of God's promises, we prayed, and pleaded with Him for about an hour and a half, and our God heard us, for at 3 o'clock in the afternoon He sent down an abundant rain. That is how God works for His people; and I think it is in the foreign mission field that He shews most plainly His watchfulness over His people."

Throwing Away His Daughter.—A Christian lady relates: "A friend of mine was shipwrecked on his way home from India. The vessel hung on the rock on which she had struck, but the seas that broke over her were increasing in violence momentarily with the rising gale, and it was evident that she must soon go down. With great difficulty the boats were lowered, and after they were afloat they could not come within ten feet of the wreck. My friend threw his little four-year old daughter over the boiling chasm into a boat. Springing out of the arms of the sailor who had caught her, she stood up and cried out in an agony, 'Oh, papa, could you throw me away? Could you throw me away?' Similarly God's ways of caring for us may sometimes seem inscrutable, yet we have put ourselves into His hand for time and eternity, and we will not dishonor Him by a doubt as to his faithfulness and love, even if we have to say, 'Though he slay me, yet I will trust in Him.'"

Unhappy in a Big House.—Dr. Pentecost relates: "A friend of mine who lived in the city of Boston began life as a poor boy, and by his ability, intelligence, and perseverance rose to the front rank. He told me that his wife and he occupied two little rooms when he made up his mind to build a house of his own. He had waited for forty years, but now he had a house that was all that money could procure, or art and taste supply. One day he took me to his house to dine, see over it, and spend the night with him. I entered his mansion through the broad, hospitable doorway, into rooms covered with carpets soft as moss, into which the feet sunk noiselessly, and everywhere I went spoke of luxury, wealth, and taste. After I had made the tour of the house and was seated again with my friend, I could not but notice that he did not look very cheerful. He was polite, attentive, and evidently pleased at having given me pleasure, but at the back of it all there seemed a kind of weariness. 'Well,' I said to him, 'I should think that at last you are satisfied.' 'Brother Pentecost,' he replied, 'I have been in this house eight months, and I thought I was going to be happy here, but I tell you candidly I am tired of the whole thing. I am not so happy as I was in the little house in which I lived with my wife for twenty years.' That man could not be happy; he was trying to fill himself with what was too small for him, with mere animal and intellectual enjoyment. What he needed was Christ, who satisfies our being."

A Forgiving Husband.—A Gentleman in a good position married a French woman of a high-class family. He thought his wife all that could be desired, and gave to her the whole love of a warm heart and sensitive nature. After several happy years he found out to his great surprise and bitter sorrow, that his wife's name was mixed up with a firm in London in dishonest practices, and, worse still, that she had even gone so far as to forge his name to certain documents. After a prolonged trial, the end of which was that his wife was sentenced to two years' imprisonment, he enlisted in the army and went abroad, unable to lift up his head. For years he continued absent, and his wife having found out from others that he had retired from the army and settled in Egypt, believed that in disgust he had abandoned her, and became reckless, the only redeeming feature in her case being that though she had been many times in gaol she had not yet given way to drink. One morning during one of her short terms of imprisonment, the chaplain received a letter from Egypt, telling how in a foreign land her husband had tried to forget his wife; but the feeling that he must see her again compelled him to sell off his newly acquired possessions and take passage to England. "Tell her," he added, "that I forgive her, and will take her back to my heart and home, and that when she receives this message I shall be on my way to England." When the prisoner heard these noble words from her husband, she was beside herself with joy; she could hardly walk back to her cell, and became a different creature in her manner of living; her chief anxiety was to quit the gaol before he returned and get into suitable apartments where they might meet. The chaplain did his utmost to assist her in her good intentions, and had the happiness of restoring the long separated ones to each other. Together they knelt, and the clergyman prayed for a divine forgiveness and benediction to fall upon them all, and that the heavenly peace, of which this human peace was but a faint type, might rest upon their hearts."

A Russian Countess's Vision of Christ.—Miss Bertha B. Williams says: "Being desirous of visiting Lord Radstock's converts in St. Petersburg, a lady of the Society of Friends started for the northern capital in the summer of 1887. On reaching her destination she found among the Christian workers in St. Petersburg many ladies of the highest social standing. One of them was the Princess L. Her work lay amongst some of the lowest parts of the city, where the dirt and destitution were so great that on her return from her round she used to go into the stable to change her dress, and leave it there, because it had become so covered with loathsomeness during her course of district visiting. The Quaker lady called on one who had been a great friend of the late Czarina, and whose husband was still holding a post in the Russian court. On hearing that she was very desirous to speak to the Emperor on a subject which lay near her heart, this gentleman promised to use his influence with the Czar to procure her an interview. The Czar hesitated and wavered for weeks, but at last said, 'No.' She found the Czarina a gentle, lovable creature. Shortly afterwards the Russian lady just referred to fell ill, and expressed a wish to see her English friend. She spoke English beautifully, as all ladies of the highest rank in St. Petersburg do. One who was present, said, 'I think I learnt more of Christian submission in the hour which I spent at the bedside of that dying Russian countess than in any week of my life before. There was such a look of sweet resignation to the will of God imprinted on her face.' She lay for a long time in a state of unconsciousness, and after twenty-four hours the dying woman slightly raised herself, and said distinctly, 'I see Him; I see Him; oh, I see Him!' and then fell back dead. The Czar was much distressed when he heard of her death, and sent to know particulars. He felt it the more because, as he said, 'She was one of my mother's dearest friends.'"

Holy Ghost Days. By Mrs. M. Baxter.—A volume containing 144 pages. Price, neatly bound in cloth, 35 cents, including postage. Address Manager CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

An Invaluable Work on Prophecy by G. H. Pember, M. A., entitled "The Great Prophecies concerning the Jews the Gentiles, and the Church of God," is for sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York. It is written in a most popular and eloquent style, and describes the impending fulfilment of Revelation and Daniel, and is illustrated by a colored chart. 453 pages. Price, including postage, $1.

HOW TO MAKE FRIENDS.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon, Preached Last Sunday Morning, June 30, 1889.

"A man that hath friends must show himself friendly." Prov. 18: 24.

The Art of Making Friends—A God-given Regulation—The Attacks of Enemies Develop Friends—An Ill-used Man Sure of Sympathy—Friends Not Made by Surface Geniality—Manfred's Treachery—Floating a Stranded Ship—Discounting Detrimental Stories—A Defective Maxim—An Insular Man—Grace Needed for Friendly Disposition—Next Appropriate Salutation—Cultivate Kind Thoughts—The Phonograph of Society—Why a Little Girl was Loved—A Self-Sacrificing Sailor—The Friendship of God—How to Attain It—Its Mighty Influence—The Tenderest of all Friendships.

ABOUT the sacred and divine art of making and keeping friends I speak—a subject on which I never heard of any one preaching—and yet God thought it of enough importance to put it in the middle of the Bible, these writings of Solomon, bounded on one side by the popular Psalms of David, and on the other by the writings of Isaiah, the greatest of the prophets. It seems all a matter of haphazard how many friends we have, or whether we have any friends at all, but there is nothing accidental about it. There is a law which governs the accretion and dispersion of friendships. They did not "just happen so" any more than the tides just happen to rise or fall, or the sun just happens to rise or set. It is a science, an art,

A God-given Regulation.

Tell me how friendly you are to others, and I will tell you how friendly others are to you. I do not say you will not have enemies; indeed, the best way to get ardent friends is to have ardent enemies, if you get their enmity in doing the right thing. Good men and women will always have enemies, because their goodness is a perpetual rebuke to evil; but this antagonism of foes will make more intense the love of your adherents. Your friends will gather closer around you because of the attacks of your assailants. The more your enemies abuse you the better your coadjutors will think of you. The best friends we ever had appeared at some juncture when we were especially bombarded. There have been times in my life when unjust assault multiplied my friends, as near as I could calculate, about fifty a minute. You are bound to some people by many cords that neither time nor eternity can break, and I will warrant that many of those cords were twisted by hands malevolent. Human nature was shipwrecked about fifty-nine centuries ago, the captain of that craft, one Adam, and his first mate, running the famous cargo aground on a snag in the River Hiddekel; but there was at least of human nature that waded safely ashore from that shipwreck, and that is the disposition to take the part of those unfairly dealt with. When it is thoroughly demonstrated that some one is being persecuted, although at the start slanderous tongues were busy enough, defenders finally gather around as thick as honey bees on a trelis of bruised honeysuckle. If, when set upon by the furies, you can have grace enough to keep your mouth shut, and preserve your equipoise, and let others fight your battles, you will find yourself after awhile with a whole cordon of allies. Had not the world given to Christ on His arrival at Palestine a very cold shoulder, there would not have been one-half as many angels chanting glory out of the hymn-books of the sky, bound in black lids of midnight. Had it not been for the heavy and jagged and torturous Cross, Christ would not have been the admired and loved of more people than any being who ever touched foot on either the eastern or western hemisphere. Instead, therefore, of giving up in despair because you have enemies, rejoice in the fact that they rally for you the most helpful and enthusiastic admirers. In other words, there is no virulence that can hinder my text from coming true: "A man that hath friends must show himself friendly."

One Good Trait

It is my ambition to project especially upon the young a thought which may benignly shape their destiny for the here and the hereafter. Before you show yourself friendly, you must be friendly. I do not recommend a Dramatized Geniality.

There is such a thing as pretending to be en rapport with others, when we are their dire destructants, and talk against them, and wish them calamity. Judas covered up his treachery by a resounding kiss, and caresses may be demoniacal. Better the mythological Cerberus, the three-headed dog of hell, barking at us, than the wolf in sheep's clothing, its brindled hide covered up by deceptive wool, and its deathful howl cadenced into an innocent bleating. Disraeli writes of Lord Manfred, who, after committing many outrages upon the people, seemed suddenly to become friendly, and invited them to a banquet. After most of the courses of food had been served he blew a horn, which was in those times a signal for the servants to bring on the dessert, but in this case it was the signal for assassins to enter and slay the guests. His pretended friendliness was a cruel fraud; and there are now people whose smile is a falsehood. Before you begin to show yourself friendly

You Must be Friendly.

Get your heart right with God and man, and this grace will become easy. You may by your own resolution get your nature into a semblance of this virtue, but the grace of God can sublimely lift you into it. Sailing on the River Thames two vessels ran aground. The owners of one got one hundred horses, and pulled on the grounded ship, and pulled it to pieces. The owners of the other grounded vessel waited till the tides came in, and easily floated the ship out of all trouble. So, we may pull and haul at our grounded human nature, and try to get it into better condition; but there is nothing like the oceanic tides of God's uplifting grace to hoist us into this kindness I am eulogizing. If, when under the flash of the Holy Ghost, we see our own foibles and defects and depravities, we will be very lenient, and very easy with others. We will look into their characters for things commendatory, and not damnatory. If you would rub your own eye a little more vigorously you would find a mote in it, the extraction of which would keep you so busy you would not have much time to shoulder your broadaxe, and go forth to split up the beam in your neighbor's eye. In a Christian spirit keep on exploring the characters of those you meet, and I am sure you will find something in them fit for

A Foundation of Friendliness.

You invite me to come to your country-seat, and spend a few days. Thank you! I arrive about noon of a beautiful summer day. What do you do? As soon as I arrive you take me out under the shadow of the great elms. You take me down to the artificial lake, the spotted trout floating in and out among the white pillars of the pond-lilies. You take me to the stalls and kennels where you keep your fine stock, and here are the Durham cattle and the Gordon setters; and the high-stepping steeds, by pawing and neighing, the only language they can speak, asking for harness or saddle, and a short turn down the road. Then we go back to the house, and you get me in the right light, and show me the Kensetts and the Bierstadts on the wall, and take me into the music-room, and show me the bird-cages, the canaries in the bay-window answering the robins in the tree-tops. Thank you! I never enjoyed myself more in the same length of time. Now, why do we not do so with and show the bloom and the music and the bright fountains? No. We say, come along, and let me show you that man's character. Here is a green-scummed frog-pond, and there's a filthy cellar, and I guess under that hedge there must be a black snake. Come, and let us for an hour or two regale ourselves with the nuisances. Oh, my friends, better cover up the faults, and extol the virtues, and this habit once established of universal friendliness will become as easy as it is this morning for a syringa to flood the air with sweetness, as easy as it will be further on in the season for a quail to whistle up from the grass. When we hear something bad about somebody whom we always supposed to be good, take out your lead-pencil, and say, "Let me see! Before I accept that baleful story against that man's character, I will take off from it twenty-five per cent. for the habit of exaggeration which belongs to the man who first told the story; then I will take off twenty-five per cent. for the additions which the spirit of gossip in every community has put upon the original story; then I will take off twenty-five per cent. from the fact that the man may have been put into circumstances of overpowering temptation. So I have taken off seventy-five per cent. But I have not heard his side of the story at all, and for that reason I take off the remaining twenty-five per cent." Excuse me, sir, I don't believe a word of it.

The Characters of Others,

But here comes in

A Defective Maxim,

so often quoted: "Where there is so much smoke there must be some fire." Look at all the smoke for years around Jenner, the introducer of vaccination; and the smoke around Columbus, the discoverer, and the smoke around Martin Luther, and Savonarola, and Galileo, and Paul, and John, and Christ, and tell me where was the fire! That is one of the satanic arts to make smoke without fire. Slander, like the world, may be made out of nothing. If the Christian, fair minded, common-sensical spirit in regard to others predominated in the world we should have the millennium in about six weeks, for would not that be lamb and lion, cow and leopard lying down together? Nothing but the grace of God can ever put us into such a habit of mind and heart as that. The tendency is in the opposite direction. This is

The Way the World Talks:

I put my name on the back of a man's note, and I had to pay it, and I will never again put my name on the back of any man's note. I gave a beggar ten cents, and five minutes after I saw him entering a liquor store to spend it. I will never again give a cent to a beggar. I helped that young man start in business, and lo, after a while, he came and opened a store almost next door to me, and stole my customers. I will never again help a young man start in business. I trusted in what my neighbor promised to do, and he broke his word, and the Psalmist was right before he corrected himself, for "all men are liars." So men become suspicious and saturnine and selfish, and at every additional wrong done them they put another layer on the wall of their exclusiveness, and another bolt to the door that shuts them out from sympathy with the world. They get cheated out of a thousand dollars, or misinterpreted, or disappointed, or betrayed, and higher goes the wall, and faster goes another bolt, not realizing that while they lock others out, they lock themselves in; and some day they wake up to find themselves imprisoned in

A Dastardly Habit.

No friends to others, others are no friends to them. There's an island half-way between England, Scotland, and Ireland called the Isle of Man, and the seas dash against all sides of it, and I am told there is no more lovely place than that Isle of Man; but when a man becomes insular in his disposition, and cuts himself off from the main land of the world's sympathies, he is despicable, and all around him is an Atlantic ocean of selfishness. Behold that Isle of Man!

Now, supposing that you have, by a divine regeneration, got right toward God and humanity, and you start out to practice my text. "A man that hath friends must show himself friendly." Fulfil this by all forms of Appropriate Salutation.

Have you noticed that the head is so poised that the easiest thing on earth is to give a nod of recognition? To swing the head from side to side, as when it is wagged in derision, is unnatural and unpleasant; to throw it back, invites vertigo; but to drop the chin in greeting is accompanied with so little exertion that all day long, and every day, you might practice it without the least semblance of fatigue. So, also, the structure of the hand indicates handshaking; the knuckles not made so that the fingers can turn out, but so made that the fingers can turn in, as in clasping hands; and the thumb divided from and set aloof from the fingers, so that while the fingers take your neighbor's hand on one side, the thumb takes it on the other, and, pressed together, all the faculties of the hand give emphasis to the salutation. Five sermons in every healthy hand urge us to handshaking.

Besides this, every day when you start out, load yourself up with

Kind Thoughts,

kind words, kind expressions, and kind greetings. When a man or woman does well, tell him so, tell her so. If you meet some one who is improved in health, and it is demonstrated in girth and color, say: "How well you look!" But if, on the other hand, under the wear and tear of life he appears pale and exhausted, do not introduce sanitary subjects, or say anything at all about physical condition. In the case of improved health, you have by your words given another impulse towards the robust and the jocund; while in the case of the failing health you have arrested the decline by your silence, by which he concludes: "If I were really so badly off he would have said something about it." We are all, especially those of a nervous temperament, susceptible to kind words and Discouraging Words.

Form a conspiracy against us, and let ten men meet us at certain points on our way over to business, and let each one say "How sick you look!" though we should start out well, after meeting the first and hearing his depressing salute, we would begin to examine our symptoms. After meeting the second gloomy accosting, we would conclude we did not feel quite as well as usual. After meeting the third, our sensations would be dreadful, and after meeting the fourth, unless we suspected a conspiracy, we would go home and go to bed, and the other six pessimists would be a useless surplus of discouragement. My dear sir, my dear madam, what do you mean by going about this world with disheartenments? Is not the supply of gloom and trouble and misfortune enough to meet the demand without your running a factory of pins and spikes? Why should you plant black and blue in the world when God so seldom plants them? Plenty of scarlet colors, plenty of yellow, plenty of green, plenty of pink, but very seldom a plant black or blue. I never saw a black flower, and there's only here and there a blue-bell or a violet; but the blue is for the most part reserved for the sky, and we have to look up to see that, and when we look up, no color can do us harm. Why not plant along the paths of others the brightnesses instead of the glooms?

Do Not Prophesy Misfortune.

If you must be a prophet at all, be an Ezekiel, and not a Jeremiah. In ancient times prophets who foretold evil were doing right, for they were divinely directed; but the prophets of evil in our time are generally false prophets. Some of our weather-wise people are prophesying we shall have a summer of unparalleled scorch. It will not be that at all. I think we are going to have a summer of great harvest and universal health; at any rate I know as much about it as they do. Last fall all the weather prophets agreed in saying we should have a winter of extraordinary severity, blizzard on the heels of blizzard. It was the mildest winter I ever remember to have passed. Indeed, the autumn and the spring almost shoved winter out of the procession. Real troubles have no heralds running ahead of their sombre chariots, and no one has any authority in our time to announce their coming. Load yourself up with helpful words and deeds. The hymn once sung in our churches is unfit to be sung, for it says:

We should suspect some danger near,
Where we possess delight.

In other words, manage to keep miserable all the time. The old song sung at the pianos a quarter of a century ago was right: "Kind words can never die." Such kind words have their nests in kind hearts, and when they are hatched out and take wing, they circle round in flights that never cease, and sportman's gun cannot shoot them, and storms cannot ruffle their wings, and when they cease flight in these lower skies of earth they sweep around amid the higher altitudes of heaven.

At Baltimore a few days ago I talked into A Phonograph.

The cylinder containing the words was sent on to Washington, and the next day that cylinder from another phonographic instrument, when turned, gave back to me the very words I had uttered the day before, and with the same intonations. Scold into a phonograph, and it will scold back. Pour mild words into a phonograph, and it will return the gentleness. Society and the world and the Church are phonographs. Give them acerbity, and rough treatment, and acerbity and rough treatment you will get back. Give them practical friendliness, and they will give back practical friendliness. A father asked his little daughter: "Mary, why is it that everybody loves you?" She answered: "I don't know, unless it is because I love everybody." "A man that hath friends must show himself friendly." We want something like that spirit of which was seen in the English Channel, where in the storm a boat containing three men was upset, and all three were in the water struggling for their lives. A boat came to their relief, and a rope was thrown to one of them, and he refused to take it, saying: "First fling it to Tom; he is just ready to go down. I can last some time longer." A man like that, be he sailor or landsman, be he in upper ranks of society or lower ranks, will always have plenty of friends. What is true manward is true Godward. We must be the friends of God if we want Him to be our friend. We cannot treat Christ badly all our lives and expect Him to treat us lovingly. I was reading of a sea fight, in which Lord Nelson captured a French officer, and when the French officer offered Lord Nelson his hand, Nelson replied, "First give me your sword, and then give me your hand." Surrender of our resistance to God must precede God's proffer of pardon to us. Repentance before forgiveness. You must give up your rebellious sword before you can get a grasp of the divine hand.

Sacrifice for Others

Oh, what a glorious state of things to have

The Friendship of God!

Why, we could afford to have all the world against us and all other worlds against us if we had God for us. He could in a minute blot out this universe, and in another minute make a better universe. I have no idea that God tried hard when He made all things. The most brilliant thing known to us is light, and for the creation of that He only used a word of command. As out of a flint a frontiersman strikes a spark, so out of one word God struck the noonday sun. For the making of the present universe I do not read that God lifted so much as a finger. The Bible frequently speaks of God's hand, and God's arm, and God's shoulder, and God's foot; then suppose He should put hand and arm and shoulder and foot to utmost tension, what could He not make? That God, of such demonstrated and undemonstrated strength, you may have for your present and everlasting friend, not a stately and reticent friend, hard to get at, but as approachable as a country mansion on a summer day when all the doors and windows are wide open. Christ said: "I am the door." And He is a wide door, a high door, a palace door, an always open door.

My four-year-old child got hurt and did not cry until hours after, when her mother came home, and then she burst into weeping, and some of the domestics, not understanding human nature, said to her: "Why did you not cry before?" She answered: "There was no one to cry to." Now I have to tell you that while human sympathy may be absent, divine sympathy is always accessible. Give God your love, and get His love; your service, and secure His help; your repentance, and have His pardon. God a friend? Why, that means all your wounds medicated, all your sorrows soothed, and if some sudden catastrophe should hurl you out of earth it would only hurl you into heaven.

If God is Your Friend,

you cannot go out of the world too quickly or suddenly, so far as your own happiness is concerned. There were two Christians last Tuesday who entered heaven; the one was standing at a window in perfect health watching a shower, and the lightning instantly slew him; but the lightning did not flash down the sky as swiftly as his spirit flashed upward. The Christian man who died on the same day next door had been for a year or two failing in health, and for the last three months had suffered from a disease that made the nights sleepless and the days an anguish. Do you not really think that the case of the one who went instantly was more desirable than the one who entered the shining gate through a long lane of insomnia and congestion? In the one case it was like your standing wearily at a door, knocking and waiting, and wondering if it will ever open, and knocking and waiting again, while in the other case it was a swinging open of the door at the first touch of your knuckle. Give your friendship to God, and have God's friendship for you, and even the worst accident will be a victory.

How refreshing is human friendship; and true friends, what priceless treasures! When sickness comes, and trouble comes, and death comes, we send for our friends first of all, and their appearance in our doorway in any crisis is reinforcement, and when they have entered, we say: "Now it is all right!" Oh, what would we do without personal friends, business friends, family friends? But we want something in the great exigencies. When Jonathan Edwards in his final hour had given the last goodbye to all his earthly friends, he turned on his pillow and closed his eyes, confidently saying: "Now where is Jesus of Nazareth, my true and never-failing friend?" Yes, I admire human friendship as seen in the case of David and Jonathan, of Paul and Onesiphorus, of Herder and Goethe, of Goldsmith and Reynolds, of Beaumont and Fletcher, of Cowley and Harvey, of Erasmus and Thomas More, of Lessing and Mendelssohn, of Lady Churchill and Princess Anne, of Orestes and Pylades, each requesting that himself might take the point of the dagger, so the other might be spared; of Epaminondas and Pelopidas, who locked their shields in battle, determined to die together; but the grandest, the mightiest, in all the universe is the friendship between Jesus Christ and a believing soul. Yet after all I have said I feel I have only done what James Marshall, the miner, did in 1848 in California, before its gold mines were known. He reached in and put upon the table of his employer, Capt. Sutton, a thimbleful of gold dust. "Where did you get that?" said his employer. The reply was: "I got it this morning from a mill race from which the water had been drawn off." But that gold dust, which could have been taken up between the finger and the thumb, was the prophecy and specimen that revealed California's wealth to all nations. And to-day I have only put before you a specimen of the value of divine friendship, only a thimbleful of mines inexhaustible and infinite, though all time and all eternity go on with the exploration.

Mightier than Human Friendship

The Tenderest, Friendship

Volume XL, of the Christian Herald, containing the numbers for 1888, with complete index, bound in cloth, may be had from this office; price, $2.50, including postage. A few volumes of 1884, 1885, and 1887 are also for sale. We can also furnish complete volumes for 1884, 1885, and 1888, unbound, price $1.50, including postage.

A WIDOW STRANGELY SAVED.

THE providential over-ruling of a widow's unnatural treatment of her son is described in a letter to the Church by the Rev. J. M. Goheen, a Presbyterian missionary at Panhala, India. He says: "One of our latest converts is a widow of the Marathi caste, with one son. During the famine, twelve years ago, she was reduced almost to starvation, when she sold this child, who was then about seven or eight years old, to a low-caste (the sweeper caste) woman. The boy soon ran away from his new owner and found his way to our house, a poor starved boy scarcely able to walk. We took him in and fed and clothed him. A few years ago he heard that his mother who had sold him was still alive, and he asked us if he might go and see whether she knew of Christ. He found her living in a village several miles from Kolhapur. He told her he was a Christian, so at first she would not let him come near her, lest she too would become defiled. After having made several visits, and telling her about Christ, she consented to come with him to see me. I had a long talk with her and tried to point her to Christ. This was shortly before we went to America. Soon after our return, Reuben, her son, was married. After his marriage he and his wife found his mother in a sad condition, and she consented to come and live with them even though they were defiled. She was paralyzed, so they carried her on their backs all the way home. This was about five months ago. She is now 'clothed and in her right mind,' sitting at the feet of Jesus, and, with the help of Reuben's wife, she was able to walk to the school-room, a distance of five or six hundred yards, and was baptized and received into the church last Sabbath. Reuben, like Joseph, though sold by his parent, became the humble instrument, in God's hand, of her salvation."

DIVINE HEALING IN SPAIN.

In a letter from Madrid, published in Thy Healer,* Mr. Armstrong relates the following: In Mr. Fenn's successful evangelistic mission in this city is a young married woman, who in the early part of this year accepted the gift of a New Testament. For eight years she had been a great sufferer from a painful female complaint, and had suffered at the hands of medical men, especially in the hospital, most painful operations. After receiving the Testament, her sickness increased on her, compelling her to take to her bed; and to pass away the time, she carried the book with her. Opening it by chance, as the world would say, at Mark 5, her eyes fell on verse 25. This arrested her. "I have been ill for eight years, and this woman was ill for twelve," she said to herself, and read on to the end. A strange feeling came over her as to her sins, and, all alone in her house, she began to weep, and so continued for two hours, when a sense of relief came to her; she believed her prayer to God for pardon had been heard, and that she was pardoned. Taking up the New Testament again, she read how the woman was healed, and began to pray, with many tears, for healing, and ended by praising God for it. "For," she said to herself, "as He healed that woman, He will also heal me." All the above took hours, and when a friend came in to see the once sick one, and saw she had been crying, she asked, "Are you worse?" At the end of three days, the woman got up, pardoned and healed, according to her own account. "Before," she said, "I knew when it was going to rain by the pains in my body; now, I only know it is raining when I see the rain. Before, I could scarcely eat anything; now, I can eat dry bread, and much of it."

But the blessing did not end with her. Her husband was a bad man, according to his own account; he was given to wine and to blasphemy, and was practically an infidel. The wife never rested till she got him to the meetings. Later on, in another after-meeting, John was brought under conviction of sin, confessed his sins, and was pardoned and saved.

A GOD-DIRECTED JOURNEY.

AN incident related by Mr. Moody is thus reported by Mr. H. J. Latham in his excellent little work, "God in Business:" A short while ago I needed $500 for a church purpose. I had no idea where I could get the money, but I felt confident that if the Lord wanted me to have that money He would send it to me. One morning I felt impressed to take a railroad journey. I boarded the train. The conductor came along and asked for my ticket. I told him I had none.

"Where are you going?"

"I don't know."

"Don't know?"

"No." I felt in my pocket, took out all the change I had, and said, "Take me as far as that money will carry me."

In an hour or so the train stopped at a little station, and the conductor told me this was as far as my money would take me. I alighted. It was a place where I had never been before. I stood on the platform wondering what I should do, when a gentleman came up to me and said, "Is this Mr. Moody?"

"Yes."

"Well, sir, I want you to take this money and use it for the Lord's work."

I counted the money. There was just $500.

A DRUNKARD'S TREASURES.

A SADLY pathetic incident is used in Times of Refreshing for a temperance lecture. It appears that a ragged beggar who is a familiar object on the streets of Washington, D. C., succeeded one night recently in getting more money than usual, and, as he always does, took it to a saloon. He became helplessly drunk, and some men thought to play a joke on him by stealing his shirt, and proceeded to strip him. Underneath his shirt, and suspended by a string from his neck, was a small canvas bag, which the men opened, and found it contained his commission as brevet major-general, two congratulatory letters—one from General Grant, and one from President Lincoln; a photograph of a little girl, and a curl of hair—a "chestnut shadow" that doubtless one day crept over the brows of some loved one. When these things were discovered, even the half-drunk men who found them felt a respect for the man's former greatness, and pity for his fallen condition, and quietly returned the bag and contents to where they found them, and placed the sleeper's clothes upon him. When a reporter tried to interview the man, and endeavor to learn something of his life in the past few years, he declined to communicate anything. He cried like a child when told how his right name and former position were ascertained, and, with tears trickling down his cheeks, said: "For pity's sake, sir, don't publish my degradation, or my name at least, if you are determined to say something about it. It is enough that I know how low I have become. Will you promise that much? It will do no good, but will do my friends a great deal of harm, as, unfortunately, they think I died in South America, where I went at the close of the war."

A DOMESTIC QUARREL.

In the course of an article on the prayer of Jabez (1 Chron. 4:9, 10), the Rev. T. Vincent Tymms says: The wife of a workingman was recently touched with the love of Christ, and her whole character was suddenly transformed. She had inherited a passionate temper, and time had not improved it. Her scolding voice and rasping sarcasms had made home wretched to her husband, who answered railing with oaths, and sometimes, when defeated by her superior tongue, with blows. Now all this was changed. The shrew was tamed, and for some weeks a great peace settled down upon the household. But one morning the old fire blazed up again under some great provocation, and hot words having once burst forth, the woman's anger with herself mingling with the shame of failure and disgrace, made passion more furious and ungovernable than it had ever been before. Hastening to escape, the man went out to work, muttering words of scorn about the religion which had thus speedily proved vain. But before going very far he found that in his excitement he had left his tools behind, and reluctantly turned back. Hoping to avoid notice, he opened the door softly and was creeping along the passage to an outhouse when he heard his wife's voice. She was evidently in distress, but to whom could she be talking? Standing silently in the doorway he looked into the room, and all was plain. The woman sat by the fire-side rocking herself to and fro, her apron drawn up over her face, with hands pressed against the bowed head, while she moaned with strong agony and tears, "O God, forgive me for speaking so to my dear husband! O God, I never thought to do it again! O Lord, I have lost his love for ever now, and I deserve that, but, O Christ, I have driven him away from Thee!" That simple prayer melted the listener's heart. He understood it all now. Visions of new life and tender joys flooded his mind. With a great lump in his throat which choked all words, he uncovered the tear-disfigured face, and the kiss which sealed his penitent forgiveness was a new marriage vow.

THE HIGH CASTES AND OUTCASTS.

AT Lake Lonar, in India, the waters of which are supposed to be efficacious in washing away sin, Mrs. L. W. Moore, the well-known missionary, recently found strangely assorted groups of bathers. In the course of a letter to the Times of Refreshing, describing her visit, she says: "Thousands of men, women, and children come to bathe in the holy (?) waters which flow without ceasing, night and day, out of what seems to be a solid rock, upon which is built a small shrine for the god Maha Dove. Into this rock a stone spout is inserted, the water flowing through it and falling into a tank. Stone steps—some twenty, I should say—lead down to this tank on three sides. On the fourth side is the temple. First, there is a sort of platform, and on this are built small rooms, used as dressing-rooms for those who come to bathe in the sacred waters. From this point we descend a flight of steps toward the lake, which lies 600 or 800 feet below, and we come to another bathing-place. We ask the motley group of bathers who they are, and why they bathe in such filthy water. They reply, 'We are mahars and mangs' (outcasts). In the tank which I have described, hundreds of the high-caste people bathe daily, and not only bathe, but wash all their soiled clothes; besides, persons with all sorts of skin diseases come and wash, looking for relief from their diseases. While we stood there, a mother brought her child, covered with most loathesome sores, to bathe in this tank. This foul water is conveyed thence by pipes through an embankment of earth to the lower platform, which I have described as the bathing-place of the outcasts. Is it any wonder that leprosy and nearly every other foul disease is so prevalent among the people of this land?"

"On the upper platform comes a Brahmin woman to bathe. She enters the little dressing-room, removes her sari, puts on a thin white or yellowish cloth, and descending the steps stands under the stone spout, while the water flows over her. Her bath finished, the old priest comes out, takes a small vessel, fills it with fresh water from the spout, and pours it upon the woman's head, while he repeats in the holy Sanscrit a mantra, which freely translated means, 'I was conceived and born in sin, my works are all sinful, my spirit is polluted with sin; O God, destroy my sins!' This over, the bather is pronounced clean, and goes to offer her gifts to Maha Dove.

* Thy Healer and Faith Witness, a monthly Magazine, edited by Mrs. M. Baxter, contains original articles on Holiness and Healing, Authentic Testimonies of Divine Healing, and Items of Intelligence from Heathen Lands where missionaries are laboring in faith, soliciting no help from man, but relying solely on God for support. Annual Subscription, 50 cents, may be sent to Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD, 71 Bible House, New York.

"Two other worshippers appear; they are aged Brahmin widows. They are not permitted to bathe from the upper platform like the Brahmin lady, but silently, painfully, descend the steps, for they are feeble, and their limbs stiff with age. No priest absolves them. Silently they bathe, wash their clothes, which are mere rags, stand until their clothes are dry, then, on a platform exposed to the cold wind, they remove the cloth they have on, and put on the one they have just washed, then they return to their homes to take up again the weary burden of their lives."

What a blessing it would be to these poor creatures to hear of that fountain opened for sin and uncleanness, to which the poor and despised are specially invited, and to know Him who came not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance!

THE PROPHECY OF UNIVERSAL RIGHTEOUSNESS.

By Dr. Graham

A Prevalent Delusion—Not Taught in Scripture Passages Misconstrued—The Testimony of History—The Three Leavens Still Working—The Leaven of the Sadducee Now Prominent—The Teaching of the Parables—The Promises—The State of Europe—A Motive for Missions.

WE are often assured, from the pulpit and the press, that by the preaching of the Gospel Christianity shall triumph over all its enemies, and fill the world with righteousness and peace, as the waters fill the bosom of the deep. This, we are told, is the work of the Church, and especially the work of missions, and till this is accomplished we need not look for the coming of the Lord. This, indeed, was my own hereditary faith, and it was with many struggles I gave it up. But it cannot stand the test either of Scripture, reason, or experience. I ask, then, the question, "Is the ministry of the Gospel intended to produce universal righteousness?" And to answer the question, I submit the following facts for your consideration:

There is no such statement, either in the Old or the New Testament; for though many passages point us to the hopes of universal peace and prosperity upon the earth, yet they are all connected with the restoration of the Jews and the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ in His kingdom. (Isaiah 9:9; Habakkuk 2:14; Isaiah 2:1-4; 6:3; 24:23.) Read Isaiah 60 and 65, Daniel 7:26-28, and many similar passages which promise universal righteousness; but they are all of the Lord, and the glory which it brings; nor can they be applied to the present widowed and suffering condition of the Church without the greatest violence and distortion. The Lord's promise to the disciples (Mark 16:15; Matthew 2:19) goes not a hair's-breadth farther than saying, "The believer shall be saved, and the rejecter shall be condemned;" but it does not say that all the nations shall become disciples, nor that all the disciples shall be saved, much less that they are expected to fill the earth with righteousness as the waters cover the sea. Hence the beautiful saying of Chalmers, that the Gospel is to be universally preached, but it is not to be universally planted before the next coming of Christ.

Witnesses for the Advent

History is against the belief. In no age or country has there been an example of Christianity becoming national. The flock has always been comparatively a little one; hitherto the gate has been strait and the way narrow; nor is there a hint of alteration while the dispensation lasts. On the contrary, it becomes worse toward the end. (Luke 18:8; 1 Timothy 4:1-3; 2 Timothy 3:1-6.) The solemn word is still the order of Divine Providence, "Many are called, but few are chosen" (Matthew 20:16), and election, and not universality, is the law of this dispensation.

Apostasy began early in the Church, as we learn from the Epistles and from the threatenings of the Lord; and the stream of corruption, in spite of the checks that have been given it by the reformers and martyrs of the different ages, has become deeper and blacker until the present time.

The Three Leavens,

of Herod, of the Pharisee, and of the Sadducee, that is, tyranny, superstition, and infidelity, have from the beginning continued to leaven the churches and the nations, and they seem busier in the present day than ever. Infidelity especially seems to be gaining the mastery in the high places of the Church and of the world.

Perhaps we may recognize a historical as well as a synchronical development of these three leavens, and say the leaven of Herod refers to the tyranny of the old pagan empire with its ten persecutions, and the leaven of the Pharisee to the Papal times of ignorance, superstition, and blood, while the leaven of the Sadducee may be fairly applied to the present generation of the Church, in which the denial of angels and spirits, and a paternal God, and the atonement of the Cross, and a resurrection of the dead, is quite as common and as open as it was among the Jews in the days of the Lord and His apostles. This does not savor of righteousness.

Look at the parables, and what do you find? Sheep and goats, wheat and tares, wise and foolish virgins, mingling together till

The Time of the End.

Is this like universal righteousness? No: it is mixture, and nothing but mixture, until the final separation, when the Lord comes. The two kingdoms are in conflict; the Cains and Abels, the righteous and the wicked, continue in warfare during the whole dispensation. So that there is absolutely no place on earth for your universal righteousness till the dispensation is changed, and till the principle of election ceases to be its law.

Look at the promises which are given to a scattered, persecuted community travelling through the wilderness, surrounded with enemies, fed with manna, and seeking a city that hath foundations whose builder and maker is God. Is that like your universal righteousness? Look at the awful threatenings which, like a black cloud, are suspended over the heads of the persecutors till the very moment of the Lord's coming. (11 Thess. 1:6-10.) While these threatened foes of God and man prevail upon the earth there can be no universal righteousness.

And do you think Babylon is to fall by the preaching of the Gospel? Then all the upon that great harlot, ending in her sudden and utter destruction, like a millstone cast into the sea, are to be interpreted of the operations of Divine grace, and not of consuming vengeance, at the coming of the Lord! Read Revelation 17 and 18, and say, with your hand on the Bible and your eye on God, "Is this possible?"

Judgments to be Poured Out

Again, the Scripture mentions other forms of Antichristianism, such as the Man of Sin, and Son of Perdition, the Beast and the False Prophet of the Apocalypse, and the apostates and mockers of the Epistles; and I demand some evidence that the preaching of the Gospel will ever either convert or silence them. No; Babylon is doomed to destruction, and your duty is to come out of her (Revelation 18:4), and to join with the apostles and prophets, and even heaven itself, in rejoicing over her fall. (Revelation 18:20.) The beast and the false prophet continue their wickedness up to the very end, and they are not to be converted by the preaching of the Gospel, but to be cast alive into the lake of fire. (Revelation 19:20.)

Is not Satan still the serpent, the dragon, and the roaring lion seeking whom he may devour? And does he not continue till Christ comes in flaming fire to bind him and cast him into the bottomless pit? And how can there be peace and prosperity and the conversion of the world and universal righteousness in this world of ours while Satan, Antichrist, and the Beast of the Apocalypse are doing their deadly work among us? The thing is impossible. It has no foundation in the Word of God.

Cast your eye over the nations called Christian, and tell me if their present condition gives any proof of the conversion of the world by the preaching of the Gospel? Survey from Russia to the isles of Greece, and from the isles of Greece to the rock of Lisbon, and what do you find? You find apostasy from the faith and holiness of the Gospel everywhere; abundance of superstition and infidelity; the large cities overflowing with masses of ignorant, turbulent, and licentious men, who have no regard either for God or man. After wars bloodier than either of Napoleon's, you find the nations armed to the teeth, jealous, suspicious, hateful, and hating one another, just waiting to see who will strike the first blow. This does not look like peace, or the reign of peace, which you expect by the preaching of the Gospel. Old Adam is stronger than young Melancthon still; and iron rams, and rifled cannon, and six-barreled revolvers, and armed nations are proof that if the reign of peace and righteousness is to come by the Gospel, we are far from it.

The State of Europe

But you will say, if the world is not to be converted by the ministry of the Gospel what motive have I for preaching? This opinion, you say, strikes at the root of missions, and damps my ardor before I reach the heathen shore. It tells me at the outset that my efforts shall be in vain. Hear me, my brother, and take heed how you hear. If your ardor be a false fire, and your expectations unscriptural, it is right and proper that they should be damped. You have of the Lord: "Go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature. He that believeth shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned." And that is a sufficient motive, though He does not say that all will believe your message. "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life;" and that is another motive. "Labor, watch, preach to the heathen; pray over them night and day, with many tears." (Acts 20:19-21; 11 Cor. 2:4.) Magnify your office, provoke them to emulation, as St. Paul did; and if only some of them are saved, let that motive content you, and be thankful; but do not doubt your commission if many reject it. Yea, hold fast to the command of your Master, though, like St. Paul, you may be scourged and imprisoned, or buffeted and crucified, as your Master was. Your loyalty does not depend on the largeness or number of your victories, but on the commands of your King. Many of His most faithful ministers have had but little success; and His own mission seemed a failure, for one of His apostles betrayed Him, another denied Him, and all forsook Him in the hour of danger.

The High Commission

God does, indeed, in almost all cases, encourage the faithful minister or missionary with more or less success, as we see in the preaching of the Gospel both at home and in the heathen lands. In China, in India, in the South Seas, and in barbarous Africa, infant congregations are being born to the Lord by the Word of His testimony; and for this let us render Him our thanks.

These are some of my reasons for believing that the modern expectation of converting the world is a delusion. I may sum them up in a concluding sentence. I have shown that it is not stated in the Scripture; that it is not promised in the Lord's commission; that all past history is against it; that the apostasy of the churches is against it; that the parable prophecies and promises are against it; that the doom of Babylon, the Beast, and the False Prophet at the coming of the Lord is against it; that the presence of Satan, tempting and devouring, up to the end of the dispensation, is against it; and finally, that the present condition of the Christian nations is utterly opposed to any prospect of universal righteousness and peace.

Volume XI., of the Christian Herald, Containing the numbers for 1888, with complete index, bound in cloth, may be had from this office; price, $2.50, including postage. A few volumes of 1884, 1885, and 1887 are also for sale. We can also furnish complete volumes for 1884, 1885, and 1888, unbound, price $1.00, including postage.

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, 71 AND 73 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 3 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

CURRENT EVENTS.

An Explanation of the Repeal of Prohibition in Rhode Island, which is sufficient to account for the remarkable change of sentiment which has taken place in three years, is furnished by a reporter of the Voice, who was in Providence on the day of voting. He says that it is the custom in that State at elections to have three tables in the voting-rooms. A well-known representative of the Republican party sits at one table, a Democrat at a second, and a Prohibitionist at the third, and the voters are thus able to get a straight ticket on which they can rely, of either kind. This year, though there were no officers to be elected, the tables were occupied as usual, and by the same men. At both the Republican and Democratic tables repeal tickets only were distributed. Thus the voter understood that his party ticket, in either case, was repeal; and when men are more anxious to vote with their party than they are to vote right, such an arrangement must exercise a mighty influence.

A Complete Reorganization of the Navy Department has been ordered by Secretary Tracy. On Thursday last he issued a notice which has caused a general rearrangement of duties, which appears likely to promote the efficiency of the navy and remove causes of friction between the various bureaus. It appears that when General Tracy took charge of the Department he found that the organization of the bureaus was so defective that there was constant loss of time, material, and effort in conducting business. Duties which had no connection were combined, while those naturally associated were divorced. The control of the electric lighting of the ships was claimed by the bureaus of Construction, of Equipment, and of Steam Engineering. There was also a division of the training service. The control of the personnel of the navy had also been divided. The new order enlarges the duties of some of the bureaus, notably those of the Bureau of Equipment, to which is assigned nearly all the duties of supply, heretofore belonging to the Bureau of Navigation. To the Constructing, Manufacturing, and Purchasing bureaus are assigned other duties, grouping them systematically and appropriately. Each bureau exercises control of its shops, labor, superintendence, requisitions, accounts, and appropriations. This difficult and delicate undertaking has long been needed.

The Vacant Position of Minister to Germany was filled on June 26 by the appointment of the Hon. William Walter Phelps, of New Jersey. He has but just returned from Berlin, where he was the head of the United States delegation to the Samoan Conference. It is significant that after President Harrison had studied the treaty negotiated at the conference he immediately appointed Mr. Phelps Minister to Germany. The only inference that can be drawn from the fact is that the treaty was thoroughly satisfactory to the President. It must be noted, too, that the English commissioners to the same conference describe the result as a triumph for the United States. When it is remembered that Mr. Phelps was opposed at the conference to Prince Bismarck, the wildest and most astute statesman in Europe, and to the representatives sent by Lord Salisbury, who is notoriously allied to Bismarck, the fact of the issue of the conference being an American triumph argues considerable diplomatic skill on his part. There is reason, therefore, to hope that our interests will be safe in his hands. He is fifty years of age. He is descended from William Phelps, whose brother John was secretary to Oliver Cromwell.

Several Abuses and Anomalies in our Immigration system were brought to the notice of Secretary Windom last week, by Mr. Edmund Stephenson, of the New York Board of Immigration, who went to Washington for the purpose. In spite of his long experience of official ways he thinks matters may be improved, and, in any case, he wished to do his duty in reporting the evils. Among other anomalies presented was the privileges enjoyed by the Mormons over all other classes. Mr. Stephenson said that the Board of Immigration orders the Superintendent of the Landing Bureau to detain all minor children under the age of sixteen years, not accompanied by relatives or duly accredited guardians, until evidence is presented that the minor child will be properly cared for and not become a public charge. The guarantee of the elders of the Mormon Church is satisfactory to a majority of the Board, thus recognizing that Church by national authority. More than two thousand of this class land at New York every year without let or hindrance, and only because they are Mormons. Only two weeks ago the steamer Wyoming brought 350 immigrants, all of whom were proselytes to the Mormon faith, in charge of the elders of that Church. Many of them were young girls enticed from their parents, their transportation paid by the elders; they were not accompanied by any relatives or legal guardians. They were permitted to land, with no guarantee except that of a lawless community living in violation of the laws of God and man. This is only one of many abuses needing removal, but it is the most flagrant.

The Death of Simon Cameron, which Occurred on June 26, closes one of the most remarkable lives in our history. He was over ninety years of age, having been born in March, 1799, and during the greater part of it he had been in the front rank of political life. Washington was still living when he was born, and he lived to see Harrison inaugurated. He was sixty years of age when Lincoln appointed him Secretary of War, and he did not retire from the scene of his struggles and triumphs in the United States Senate until he was on the verge of his eightieth year. Probably no man in this country ever wielded a power so remarkable as his. It was not acquired by force, or by descent, or by office, but by exquisite tact and strength of will. His friends loved him and were faithful to him, and his political enemies respected him and were not seldom his personal friends. In his own State of Pennsylvania his influence was unlimited. Four times it chose him for Senator, and he might have been elected again had he not chosen to make way for his son. He was a printer in the beginning, and then became an editor, a man of business, a canal builder, a banker, a railroad man, a politician, and a statesman. It was an extraordinary life, and his passing away takes from among us a most interesting personality.

The Revocation of a Railroad Concession in Africa has raised an International European dispute of considerable magnitude, and provoked dangerous race prejudices. The Delagoa Bay Railroad Company, composed mainly of English and American capitalists, held a permission from Portugal to cut a railroad across the strip of territory which Portugal claims in Africa. The company has clearly violated the terms on which the concession was granted, by failing to complete the work within the time specified. Its defence is that the difficulties it has met with in construction were well known to the Portuguese Government, and the time was limited with the express purpose of cancelling the agreement when the inevitable failure occurred. The company asks for an extension of time, and has received the support of the British Government for the demand. Portugal, probably incited by France and Germany, refuses. All three nations are jealous of the growth and extension northward of British influence from the Cape of Good Hope, which the construction of the railroad would naturally develop. The attitude of Portugal has consequently reopened the question of her rights in Africa. She has settlements on the east and west coasts, and she claims the strip of country stretching between them across the continent. This claim has never been definitely conceded by the other nations, and as Portugal has notoriously encouraged the slave trade, the public feeling in Europe against her claim has been strong. Beside this, she owes to England her national existence, which she could never have maintained but for the help, moral and material, which England has given to her in several crises. This fact entitles England to her gratitude, and her conduct in this instance consequently excites indignation against her. Lord Salisbury, however, demands arbitration, and appears to have espoused the cause of the railroad company with vigor. He has the sympathy of the United States Government, to whom the extension of the English-speaking settlements is commercially advantageous.

A Peaceful Solution of the Eastern Question is being strenuously sought by Austria, and Count Kalnoky last week expressed a hope that it would be successful in spite of Russian machinations in Serbia. He admitted that Austria was bound to guard against subversive measures in Serbia, but said that the discontent of a few nations at the balance of power in Europe caused a feeling of insecurity; and, in view of the immense dimensions that wars now assumed, all sovereigns and all governments were firmly resolved to maintain peace. In no case would Austria be responsible in the event of peace being threatened. The allies would do everything possible to maintain peace. Austria's unselfish, treaty-observing policy was the best refutation of the imputation of aggrandizement. He was ardently desirous of deferring war as long as possible—better, by far, barren military expenditures. He deprecated hasty interference in minor Balkan episodes as prejudicial to greater interests.

An Interesting Royal Betrothal was Announced last week. It was that of Princess Louise, the eldest daughter of the Prince of Wales, to the Earl of Fife. The Princess, during the short time she has been in court life has won a popularity only equalled by that of her estimable mother, and the English people are therefore glad to have her remain among them instead of going abroad as the wife of some German princelet. The Earl of Fife is a popular nobleman, and is a close friend of the Prince of Wales. He is reported to be very wealthy, which, in the present condition of affairs, is a decided advantage, as, if the Princess were married to an impecunious German, according to the custom of the family, the Parliament would have to be called upon to make provision for the young couple.

An Exciting Scene Occurred in the French Chamber of Deputies on June 25. A member desired to have a private matter discussed before the Chamber voted the usual appropriations. The ministry, who were eager to have the money voted, objected, but consented to leave the decision with the chamber. An acrimonious discussion followed, in the course of which bitter words and insulting epithets were used. One member characterized the deputies as blackguards. The word increased the excitement. There was a general scuffle, the combatants using their fists freely and tearing one another's hair, until separated by the ushers. One member was seen to produce a revolver. The whole house joined in the uproar.

Any Subscriber Interested in this Journal, and desiring to promote its circulation, may have sample copies sent them postage-paid and free of charge, for distribution at camp-meetings or other places where such distribution will introduce the paper, and lead to increased sales. Send postal card stating number required to The Manager, 71 Bible House, New York.

Contributions to the Fund for the Relief of the Johnstown sufferers have been received to the amount of $27.25, which has been sent through Col. E. Shepard to the treasurer of the fund at Johnstown. The amounts are as follows: Mrs. B. F. Severance, East Shelburne, Mass., $2; Hiram F. Clark, Bridgton, Me., $1; Leesburg Baptist Church, Leesburg, Fla., $2.50; Dwight Lincoln, Westford, Conn., $1; Frank Hornby, Sheffield, Ill., $1; J. R. Conway, Volga, Ind., $1; T. Bauer, Sandusky, O., $3; Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Ware, Madison, Ga., $5; G. W. Waterbury, Baraboo, Wis., $5; J. W. Wood, Baraboo, Wis., $4.25; A. A. Wilson, Belmont, N. C., .50c; D. S. Baker, Davidson College, N. C., $1.

The Rev. Benjamin Senior, Pastor of Surrey Chapel, London, has arrived in this country on a two months' visit. He is receiving a very cordial welcome, not only as a successor of the famous Rowland Hill, but on account of his own character and abilities. On Friday, June 28, he lectured for Dr. Lyman Abbott in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn. On Sunday morning he preached for Rev. John H. Acornley, in the First Primitive Methodist Church, New York, and on Sunday evening for Dr. Talmage in the Brooklyn Tabernacle. He purposes attending Mr. Moody's Conference at Northfield, Mass., after which he will visit Boston, Chicago, and other cities. We hope to publish his portrait and life in an early number.

An Engineer's Race with Death is Described in a press dispatch from Dubuque, Iowa. The man was on an engine on the Wabash road, when he felt the premonitory symptoms of a paralytic seizure. He knew exactly what they were and what they meant, for he had lost many relatives in that way, and believing that his end would be like theirs, he had studied the signs of its approach. Knowing that he would become helpless soon, his anxiety became intense. If, when the train reached Sparta, Mo., he had not sufficient consciousness or strength to stop his engine, the train would dash past the station and might collide with something in the way, and cause the destruction of many lives. He looked at his watch, and calculated that it might be possible to get there while he retained his power. He put on all the speed he could, and told the fireman what to do in the event of death beating him in the race. As the train flew on, his concern increased, for he felt the lifelessness creeping through his limbs. At last the station came in sight, and the engineer, with a sigh of relief, seized the lever with his left hand, which alone was capable of motion, and shut off the steam. It was his last act. When the train stopped at Sparta he was lifted from the cab, and died in a few minutes. It was a pathetic effort, with which every man who realizes his responsibility can sympathize. The thought that death may come upon him before he has done all his duty is an incentive to diligence in the Master's service. (John 9:4.)

An Heiress was Found at the Washtub in Tennessee recently. About a year ago a woman and her eighteen-year-old daughter settled at Gainsboro, in Jackson county. The woman was a divorced wife, and she married again down there, but she did not prosper. Her daughter, a bright, industrious girl, went out washing for twenty-five cents a day. She became engaged to a young farmer who admired her industry and cheerfulness, and regarded those qualities as more desirable than the fortune he might have obtained by marrying elsewhere. They were to be married on June 22, but before that day a Massachusetts lawyer arrived and made inquiries for the girl. He was directed to the house where she was washing that day, and there he found her. He informed her of the death of her father, from whom her mother was divorced, and that she was his sole heiress. After the divorce he had gone into business in Massachusetts and had accumulated a fortune of $110,000, which he had left absolutely to his daughter, with instructions that search should be made for her, as he had not seen her since she was two years old. The girl hurried back with the lawyer, secured the estate, and returned in time to marry her lover on the day fixed. He is a happy man. His wife brings him not only the qualities which won his love, but the money which he did not expect, but which he will doubtless find useful. Many men who have chosen Christ for their portion have had a similar experience. Seeking first the kingdom of God and His righteousness all these things have been added to them. (Matt. 6:3.)

A Derelict of Great Value was Towed into Boston Harbor on June 24. The big ocean tug Argus, which was recently sent out by a Boston firm to hunt for the dangerous derelict lumber-laden Norwegian bark Ottawa, found her several days ago, and brought her into port in triumph. She makes a good prize, her hull and cargo being worth many times the expense of finding her. The Ottawa left Pensacola on May 2 for Buenos Ayres. A hurricane dismasted her, and her crew abandoned her. They were picked up by a tramp steamship, and landed at Greenock, Scotland. Since then the abandoned vessel has been floating about right in the track of navigation for over a month. The captains of several steamships, recognizing her as a rich prize, tried to tow her into port. They were compelled to give up the attempt because of stress of weather. The Argus, however, which went out expressly to seek her has won the prize. There are many human derelicts wandering about our cities who have been abandoned. Servants of Christ, who in obedience to their Master's command go out to seek them will find that their efforts will be rewarded (James 5:20.)

A Child With a Rattlesnake in Her Lap caused her mother a spasm of terror in Texas recently. On June 21 a little girl about six years old left the farm-house near Dennison, where her parents lived, to gather blackberries in an adjacent lot. Shortly afterward her mother followed her, and as the child was not in sight, called her several times. No answer came, and her mother searched among the bushes. In a few minutes she saw her seated near a spring. To her horror, she saw in her lap a large rattlesnake. The child was gazing intently on the snake, whose head was slightly elevated and moving to and fro. Sometimes the snake's head would almost touch the lips of the child, who pushed it away without appearing to anger the snake. The child was so completely under its spell that she paid no attention to the mother, who screamed so loudly that her husband heard her and hurried to the scene. On his approach the snake reared itself and struck the child slightly. The father killed the snake with a stone, and having sucked the wound, carried the child to the city for treatment. It is thought her life will be saved, but it was a narrow escape. Still more dreadful is it to godly parents to see their children fascinated by the wiles of Satan, whom the Bible typifies as a serpent. Like the little girl, they are often unconscious of danger, and are so completely under the spell that they do not heed the warning cry. (11 Cor. 11:14.)

A Tree of Death Has Been Discovered in Mexico by a botanist. In a letter to the Globe-Democrat, of St. Louis, Mo., from Chihuahua, he says that while making a collection of the mountain flora of Mexico he noticed a strange tree growing on an inaccessible rock on a spur of the Sierra Madre Mountains. As examined through a field glass its trunk appeared thick and scaly, and about twenty feet high. A few feet from the ground branches resembling those of the weeping-willow shot out, but the long, drooping, whip-like limbs had the power of erecting and coiling themselves with a motion like sentient life. The botanist's curiosity was intensely excited, and after a day's search he discovered a passage through the rocks, through which he crawled and came out near the tree. As he looked at it, a bird alighted upon it. The branches instantly twisted like snakes around the bird and drew it down until he lost sight of it. In a short time the flattened carcass—only feathers and bones—dropped to the ground.

He saw other birds alight, and in each case the branches held them until they were crushed and drained of blood. At last he ventured to touch a branch with his finger. It was seized instantly and held so tightly that in withdrawing the finger it was stripped of skin. Looking closely at the branches he found that they were covered with small suckers like those of the devil-fish, some of which were stained with the blood of the birds. Professor Wordenhaupt, of Heidelberg University, to whom the botanist sent a description of the tree, says it is the Arbor Diaboli, or devil-tree, of which only two other specimens are known—one on a peak of the Himalayas, and the other on the island of Sumatra. It is well that trees so weird and destructive as this devil-tree are so rare, and it is much to be wished that the Satanic traps of which it is a type were similarly scarce. Unhappily they are to be found everywhere, and their prey is the souls of men. (Eph. 6:11-13.)

BRIEF NOTES.

A million and a half of dollars changed hands in bets on the recent Suburban horse-race.

Managers of various railroads have decided to close twenty-five ticket offices in Chicago on Sunday.

The loss of property by the recent floods is estimated by Bradstreet's at the enormous sum of $44,250,000.

Sing Sing Camp Meeting opens August 6. It will be in charge of Rev. Thomas Harrison. It will continue ten days.

The Rev. A. J. Behrends, of Brooklyn, and Geo. W. Cable, the novelist, are to be the Lyman Beecher lecturers at Yale Theological Seminary next year.

Mr. Moody's Conference at Northfield commenced last Saturday, and closes next Wednesday. It will be followed by a general conference of Christian workers.

The Old Orchard Convention on Holiness and Divine Healing will be held from July 27 to August 5. Applications for board, etc., should be made to Rev. I. Luce, Old Orchard Beach, Me.

Mr. J. D. Rocketteller's offer of $600,000 to found a Baptist University in Chicago on condition of other subscriptions to the amount of $400,000 being raised will be accepted. The greater part is already promised.

Bishop Fallows, of Chicago, is to open the Thirteenth Summer School of the American Institute of Christian Philosophy at Key East, N. J., on the 18th of July. His subject will be "Christian Pantheism."

The Rev. A. B. Simpson's New Gospel Tabernacle on Eighth Avenue and Forty-second Street, New York, was dedicated on June 30. The building is spacious, plain, and adapted to the various departments of the work.

An eleven-year-old boy died in Brooklyn on June 26 from alcoholism. He had been sent on several journeys to a saloon for beer by laborers working on a canal, and had drunk from the can each time. He became intoxicated and died the same night.

Major George A. Hilton, the famous Gospel Temperance evangelist, expects to visit New York for evangelistic work about July 18. Churches or missions desiring to avail themselves of his services may apply to him at 919 East Capitol Street, Washington, D. C.

The Ocean Grove (N. J.) Camp Meeting season commenced on June 30, when Dr. Thomas Hanlon, of Pennington Seminary preached the opening sermon in the large auditorium. Mrs. Palmer began her helping-hand, and Rev. C. H. Yatman his Young People's Meetings.

The New York Sunday-school Association has amalgamated with the American Tract Society in the conduct of the agency at 304 Fourth Avenue, New York. The arrangement will, it is believed, be of mutual advantage and will promote the sale of religious literature.

Mr. H. W. Brown, of Chicago, has been holding very successful services at Lowell, Mass. A deep interest was aroused, and a large number of persons made profession of faith. Mr. Brown went thence to Littleton, N. H., but the meetings at Lowell were so greatly blessed that it was decided to continue them, and Mr. George S. Avery was invited to take charge.

The Central Union Mission of Washington, D. C., is doing a grand work in the city. It is one of the most active and best-managed missions in the country. On June 16 the gospel wagon sent out by the mission was in charge of a band of earnest speakers, every one of whom was converted at the mission. Among them were some who three years ago were drunkards and gamblers.

Mr. Ben Hogan arrived in New York last week from a long and successful tour. He has had good meetings in Jamestown, N. Y., Butler Pa., Classon, Pa., and Wheeling, W. Va. He is setting out for a tour in Europe this week. He expects to spend some time in Berlin, where his familiarity with the German language will be serviceable. He expects also to hold meetings in England, Scotland, and Ireland.

PROFESSION WITHOUT POWER.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away." 1 Timothy 3:5.

The World to Grow Worse, Not Better—The Second Advent the Only Hope for the Church—Surely to Come Before the Millennium—Interlopers to be Found in the Church—I. The Men—What they Had—A Form of Godliness—Attention to the Ordinances—Attendance at Church—Godly Conversation—Religious Activity—The Form Sometimes Hereditary—The Result of Courtship—Of Natural Disposition—Of Desire for Respect—Or Gain—What they Did not Have—The Power—II. The Folly of It—Degrades the Name of Christ—No Value in it—No Comfort—Has no Constancy—A Shameful Thing.

PAUL warns us of certain characters which will appear in the last times. It is a very terrible list. The like have appeared in other days, but we are led by his warning to apprehend that they will appear in greater numbers in the last days than in any previous age. We are nearing that period at this very time. That these people would, some of them, be within the Church is the most painful part of it; but they will be so, for they are comprehended in this last clause of the black catalogue, which we have taken for our text—"Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof."

No Millennium till Jesus Comes.

Paul does not paint the future with rose-color; he is no smooth-tongued prophet of a golden age, into which this dull earth may be imagined to be glowing. There are sanguine brethren who are looking forward to everything growing better and better and better, until, at last, this present age ripens into a millennium. They will not be able to sustain their hopes, for Scripture gives them no solid basis to rest upon. We who believe that there will be no millennial reign without the King, and who expect no rule of righteousness except from the appearing of the righteous Lord, are nearer the mark. Apart from the second Advent of our Lord, the world is more likely to sink into a pandemonium than to rise into a millennium. A divine interposition seems to me the hope set before us in Scripture, and, indeed, to be the only hope adequate to the occasion.

With this cloud upon our spirit, we come to the text itself. Let us consider it carefully, and may the Holy Spirit help us! True religion is a spiritual thing, but it necessarily embodies itself in a form. Man is a spiritual creature, but the human spirit needs a body in which to enshrine itself; and thus, by this need, we become allied to materialism; and if not as one has said, we are certainly both matter and soul. In each of us there is the form or body, and the soul or power. It is so with religion: it is essentially a spiritual thing, but it requires a form in which to embody and manifest itself. If you get both the form, as modelled in the Word of God, and the power, as bestowed by the Spirit of God, you do well, and are living Christians. If you get the power alone, without the ordained form, you somewhat maim yourself; but if you get the form without the power, then you dwell in spiritual death. The raw material of a devil is an angel bereft of holiness. You cannot make a Judas except out of an apostle. The eminently good in outward form, when without inward life, decays into the foulest thing under heaven.

"Half Dust, Half Deity,"

I. First, let us talk awhile of

The Men.

They had the form of godliness, but denied the power thereof. Note what they had, and then observe what they had not. They had a form of godliness. What is the form of godliness? It is, first of all, attention to the ordinances of religion. These, so far as they are Scriptural, are few and simple. There is baptism, wherein, in figure, the believer is buried with Christ, that he may rise into newness of life; and there is the Lord's Supper, wherein, in type and emblem, he feeds upon Christ, and sustains the life which came to him by fellowship with Christ's death. Those who have obeyed the Lord in these two ordinances have exhibited in their own persons the form of godliness.

The form of godliness involves attendance with the assemblies of God's people. Those who have professed Christ are accustomed to come together at certain times for worship, and, in their assemblies, they join in common prayer and common praise. They listen to the testimony of God by His servants whom He calls to preach His Word with power. They also associate together in church fellowship for purposes of mutual help and discipline. This is a very proper form, full of blessing both to the church and to the world, when it does not die down into mere form.

Some go further than worship, for they use

A Great Deal of Religious Talk.

They freely speak of the things of God in Christian company. They can defend the doctrines of Scripture, they can plead for its precepts, and they can narrate the experience of a believer. They are fondest of talking of what is doing in the church: the tattle of the streets of Jerusalem is very pleasant to them. They flavor their speech with godly phrases when they are in company that will relish it. I do not censure them; on the contrary, I wish there were more of holy talk among professors. But there may be a savor of religion about a man's conversation, and yet it may be a borrowed flavor, like hot sauces used to disguise the staleness of ancient meat.

More than this, some have a form of godliness upheld and published by religious activity. It is possible to be intensely active in the outside work of the church, and yet to know nothing of spiritual power. One may be an excellent Sunday-school teacher after a fashion, and yet have need to be taught what it is to be born again. One may be an eloquent preacher, or a diligent officer in the Church of God, and yet know nothing of the mysterious power of the Spirit of truth upon the heart. Brethren, I speak to myself and to each one of you in solemn earnestness; if much speaking, generous giving, and constant occupation could win heaven, we might easily make sure of it; but more is needful.

Why They Hold it.

I need not enlarge further. You all know what a form of godliness is, and most of us who are here present hold fast that form; may we never dishonor it! But now, as these people had not the power of godliness, how did they come to hold the form of it? Some come by the form of godliness in an hereditary way. Their ancestors were always godly people, and they almost naturally take up with the profession of their fathers. This is common, and where it is honest, it is most commendable. Yet the idea of birthright membership is an evil one, and is as perilous as it is unscriptural.

So have I seen the form of godliness taken up on account of friendships. Many a time have led to a formal religiousness, lacking heart. The future husband is induced to make a profession of religion for the sake of gaining one who was a sincere Christian, and would not have broken her Lord's command to be unequally yoked together with an unbeliever. Godliness should never be put on in order that we may put a wedding ring upon the finger; this is a sad abuse of religious profession. Other kinds of friendship, also, have led men and women to profess a faith they never had, and to unite themselves visibly with the church, while they were never truly a part of it.

Courtship and Marriage

Certain persons assume the form of godliness from a natural religious disposition. Do not suppose that all unconverted people are without religion. Much religiousness is found in the heathen, and there are races which have naturally more of reverence than others. The German, with his profound philosophy, is often free, not only from superstition, but from reverence, while the Russian is by race naturally religious, not to say superstitious. We perceive like differences among our own acquaintances; one man is readily fooled by sceptics, while another is ready, with open mouth, to believe every word. One is naturally an infidel, another is as naturally credulous. I mean, then, that to some the form of godliness commends itself, because they have a leaning that way.

I do not doubt that in these silken days many have a form of godliness because of them. Time was, when to be a Christian was to be reviled, if not to be imprisoned, and perhaps burned at the stake. Hypocrites were fewer in those days, for a profession cost too much; yet, strange to say, there were some who played the Judas even in those times. To-day religion walks forth in her velvet slippers; and in certain classes and ranks, if men did not make some profession of religion they would be looked upon with suspicion, and therefore men will take the name of Christian upon them, and wear religion as a part of dress.

The Respect it Brings

From the days of Iscariot until now, some have taken up the form of godliness, to gain thereby. To make gain of godliness is to imitate the son of perdition. This is a perilous road, and yet many risk their souls for the lucre which they find therein. Apparent zeal for God may really be zeal for gold. The Emperor Maximilian showed great zeal against idolatry, and published a decree that images of gold and silver should be melted down. He was extremely zealous about this. The images were all to be melted down, and the metal forfeited to the Emperor. It was shrewdly suspected that this great iconoclast was not altogether swayed by unselfish motives. When a business brings grist to the mill, it is not hard to keep to it. Some love Christ because they carry His bag for Him. Beware of that kind of godliness which makes a man hesitate until he sees whether a duty will pay or not, and then makes him eager because he sees it will answer his purpose.

Once more: I do not doubt that a form of godliness has come to many because it brings them ease of conscience, and they are able, like the Pharisee, to thank God that they are not as other men are. Have they not been to church? Have they not paid for their pew? They can now go about their daily business without those stings of conscience which would come of neglecting the requirements of religion. These people profess to have been converted, and they are numbered with believers; but, alas! they are not of them. Of all people, these are the hardest to reach, and the least likely to be saved.

Let us now remember

What They Did Not Have.

They had "the form" of godliness, but they denied "the power." What is that power? God Himself is the power of godliness. The Holy Spirit is the life and force of it. Godliness is the power which brings a man to God, and binds him to Him. Godliness is that which creates repentance toward God, and faith in Him. Godliness is the result of a great change of heart in reference to God and His character. Godliness looks toward God, and mourns its distance from Him; godliness hastens to draw nigh, and rests not till it is at home with God. Godliness makes a man like God. Godliness leads a man to love God, and to serve God; it brings the fear of God before his eyes, and the love of God into his heart. Godliness leads to consecration, to sanctification, to concentration. Many who have the form of godliness are strangers to this power, and so are in religion worldly, in prayer mechanical, in public one thing, and in private another. True godliness lies in spiritual power, and as they are without this, they are dead while they live.

What is the general history of those who have not this power? Well, dear friends, their course usually runs thus: they do not begin with denying the power, but they begin by trying to do without it. They would like to become members of the church, and as they fear that they are not fit for it, they look about for something which looks like conversion and the new birth. They try to persuade themselves that they have been changed; they accept emotion as regeneration, and a belief of doctrine for belief in Christ. It is rather hard at first to reckon brass as gold, but it grows easier as it is persisted in.

The next step is easy; they deceive themselves, and come to believe that they are surely saved. All is now right for eternity, so they fancy; and they fold their arms in calm security. Thus they deceive others, and help to strengthen themselves in their false hope. They use the choice phrases of earnest Christians. Mixing with them, they pick up their particular expressions, and pronounce Shibboleth in the most approved fashion.

At last they take

The Daring Step

of denying the power. Being without it themselves, they conceive that others are without it also. Judging from their own case, they conclude that it is all an affair of words. They get on very well without any supernatural power, and others, no doubt, do the same; only they add a little cant to it to please the godly folk.

By and by, in some cases, these people profanely deny the divine power of our holy faith, and then they become the greatest enemies of the cross of Christ. Look at the Church of the present day; the advanced school, I mean. In its midst we see preachers who have a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof. They talk of the Lord Jesus, but they deny His Godhead, which is His power; they speak of the Holy Spirit, but deny His personality, wherein lies His very existence. They take away the substance and power from all the doctrines of revelation, though they pretend still to believe them. They talk of redemption, but they deny substitution, which is the essence of it; they extol the Scriptures, but deny their infallibility, wherein lies their value; they use the phrases of orthodoxy, and believe nothing in common with the orthodox. I know not which to loathe the most, their teachings or their spirit: surely they are worthy of each other. They burn the kernel and preserve the husk. "Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof. It is the sin of the age—the sin which is ruining the churches of our land.

II. In the second place, we are to observe

The Wicked Folly

of this hypocritical conduct. First, they degrade the very name of Christ. Brethren, if there is no spiritual power in godliness, it is worth nothing. We want no clouds without rain. Of shams and mere pretences we have more than enough. Those who have not the power of godliness show us a very damaging picture of religion. They make out our Lord's religion to be comparable to a show at a country fair, with fine pictures and loud drumming on the outside, and nothing within worth a moment's consideration. The best of the show is on the outside; or if there be anything within, it is a masquerade where all act borrowed parts, but no one is what he seems to be.

The folly of this is illustrated by the fact that there is no value in such a dead form. The form of godliness without the power is not worthy the trouble it takes to put it together and keep it together. Imitation jewels are pretty and brilliant; but if you take them to the jeweler he will give you nothing for them. There must be a pure heart as well as a clean life; the power of godliness must work within, or else God will not accept our offering. Moreover, there is no comfort in it. The form without the power has nothing in it to warm the heart, to raise the spirits, or to strengthen the mind against the day of sickness or in the hour of death. Oh God, if my religion has been a mere form, what shall I do in the swelling of Jordan? My fine profession will all disappear, and nothing will come of it wherewith I may face the last enemy. Are some of you possessors of a religion which never yields you a drop of comfort? Is it a bondage to you? Do you follow Christ as a slave follows his master? Away with such a religion!

To have the form of godliness without the power of it, is to lack constancy in your religion. You never saw but those who have travelled in the East, when they come home are sure to tell you about it. It is a very hot and thirsty day, and you are riding on a camel. Suddenly there rises before you a beautiful scene. Just a little from you are brooks of water, flowing between beds of osiers and banks of reeds and rushes. Yonder are palm-trees and orange groves. Yes, and a city rises on a hill, crowned with minarets and towers. You are rejoiced, and ask your guide to lead you nearer to the water which glistens in the sun. He grimly answers, "Take no notice: it is the mirage. There is nothing yonder but the burning sand." You can scarce believe him, it seems so real; but lo! it is all gone, like a dream of night. So unsubstantial is the hope which is built upon the form of godliness without the power.

The Mirage,

This nominal godliness, which is devoid of power, is a shameful thing. I close with that. It is a shameful thing for this life, for the Lord Jesus loathes it. When He passed by the fig-tree, which was so early with its leaves, but so empty of fruit, He saw therein the likeness of the vainglorious professor who has no real holiness, and He said, "Henceforth let no fruit grow on thee for ever." His word withered it at once: it stood a terrible emblem of the end of a false profession. How shameful will be when the secrets of all hearts shall be revealed! What shame and everlasting contempt will await him when his falsehood shall be detected, and his baseness shall fill all holy minds with horror! What will be the hell of the false professor!

A Lifeless Professor in Eternity,

I have done when I have added a few words of instruction. The form of godliness is most precious; let those who feel the power of godliness honor it and use it. Do not despise it because others have damaged it. Come forth, and make an open profession of religion; but see that you have the power of it. Do cry to God that you may never wear a sleeve which is longer than your arm; I mean, may never go beyond what is really and truly your own. It will be better for you to go to God as a lost soul, and cry for mercy, than to profess yourself saved when you are not. Yet do confess Christ without fail or fear.

My next is a word of discrimination. Those to whom my text has nothing to say will be the first to take it home to themselves. When I discharge my heart with a faithful sermon, certain trembling souls whom I would fain comfort are sure to think that I mean them.

A Poor Woman,

in deep distress, comes to me, crying, "Sir, I have no feeling." Dear heart, she has ten times too much feeling. Another moans out, "I am sure I am a hypocrite!" I never met with a hypocrite who thought himself one; and I never shall. "Oh!" said another, "I feel condemned." He that feels himself condemned may hope for pardon. If you are afraid of yourselves I am not afraid of you. If the Spirit of God leads you to weep in secret for sin, and to pray in secret for grace; if it leads you to seek after holiness; if it leads you to trust alone in Jesus—then you know the power of godliness, and you have never denied it.

Let me give you a word of admonition. Learn from the text that there is something in godliness worth the having. The "form" of godliness is not all; there is a blessed "power." The Holy Ghost is that power, and He can work in you to will and to do of God's good pleasure. Come you to Jesus Christ, dear souls. Do not come to the minister, nor to the church, in the first place, but come to Jesus. Come, and lay yourselves at His feet and say, "Lord, I will not be comforted unless thou comfort me." Come, and take everything at first hand from your crucified Lord. Then shall you know the power of godliness. Beware of second-hand religion: it is never worth the carrying home. Get your godliness direct from heaven by the personal dealing of your own soul with your Saviour. The Lord bless these words and apply them to each one in His own way by His Holy Spirit! You can make either a blister of them, or a plaster of them, as conscience shall direct. God guide you, for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

HAZING A QUAKER BOY.*

AMONG the school-mates of Eli Jones were James N. Buffum, since ex-mayor of Lynn, Mass., and Peter Neal, who is also an ex-mayor of that city. The latter relates that Eli Jones received the christening always given new boys in those days, and his remark on that occasion was characteristic of him. The old students were put in line at night in the play-ground, and among them stood the new-comer. A "dummy" with swollen cheeks came to each boy in turn, and was answered by all, "Um," until he reached Eli who, as instructed beforehand, said, "Squirt," when suddenly his face was bespattered with water. Instead of the retaliatory attack which the boys expected, Eli quietly remarked, "That was cleverly done." Peter Neal remarks that if he had been known as he was a month later, he would have received no christening. . . . Afterward they respected his message, for his life was pure.

An Answer to a Suitor.

When Eli visited Sybil Jones with the purpose of asking her to become his life-companion, the latter, suspecting his weighty mission, took down the Bible to read a chapter, as was always customary in those days before visitors returned home. On this occasion Sybil opened to the twentieth Psalm, beginning, "The Lord hear thee in the day of trouble; the name of the God of Jacob defend thee, send thee help from the sanctuary, and strengthen thee out of Zion, remember all thy offerings, and accept all thy burnt sacrifices; grant thee according to thine own heart, and fulfil all thy counsel." Eli knew that his mission was accomplished successfully, and for forty years their lives were linked together by the bonds of deep and pure love, while their aims, longings, and desires were merged into the one purpose of showing the world that there is a love which transcends all earthly affection, and that God's love is an unbroken canopy.

Lost at Night in a Forest.

Sybil Jones thus describes an adventure in a forest in Canada while she and her husband were making their way to Truro to hold meetings: "Coming to two roads about noon, we inquired of an innkeeper the direct road to our destination. We followed his directions, found excellent roads, but being through a thick forest it was very lonely. The weather being cloudy, night came on early, without discovering any opening in the dense forest that encompassed us. The thought did not occur that we might be on the wrong road until the horses began to wade very deep in mud. My husband sprang out of the carriage, and went to their heads to lead them. After proceeding a few steps, the mire growing deeper, he ordered the carriage stopped, and after travelling around some time in the dark he exclaimed that we were on the wrong road, that we had come to the end of a road. Our feelings can better be imagined than described. Strangers in a strange land, in a vast wilderness at the end of our road, and the night being without even starlight, I shall never forget my feelings. We found our carriage was fast in the mire. After unharnessing the horses, which, with some difficulty, stepped out on hard ground, the men pried the carriage out, and harnessed to return, while I stood on a dry spot, where my dear husband had placed me." I was afraid that we had been directed thither for a wicked purpose, when these words came to me: 'Judah's lion guards the way, and guides the traveller home.' After going back about fifty rods we discovered a light, and going to it we found that it proceeded from a little hut. The people in it were very kind, and one of them went with us to put us on the right road. We arrived safe, happy, and thankful." Some years later they went over the same ground. As they were driving through the wood they met a huge bear which stood its ground for some time, but finally retreated, and allowed their friends to go on their mission.

* From "Life and Work of Eli and Sybil Jones." By Rufus M. Jones, M. A. The life of these truly Christ-like members of the Society of Friends, and the story of their labors for the Master at home and in other lands, will richly repay perusal. Long and deeply interesting extracts from their diaries give insight into the purity and simplicity of their personal character. 316 pages, with portraits; price $1.50; published by Porter & Coates, 900 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

The Late Mrs. Hayes.

Missionaries in Peril.

A Novel Military Order.

When Eli Jones was in the Maine Legislature some of his friends, as a joke partly upon him as a Quaker, and partly on the State militia, put him in nomination for the office of major-general. The next morning the news had spread that the Quaker would speak in regard to his appointment, and the Representatives' Hall was crowded. After referring to the honor done him, Eli proceeded to say: "It is generally understood that I hold peculiar views in respect to the policy of war. If, however, I am an exponent of the views of the Legislature on this subject, I will cheerfully undertake to serve the State in the capacity indicated. With much pleasure I should stand before the militia and give such orders as I think best. The first would be, 'Ground arms!' The second would be, 'Right about, face!' Beat your swords into ploughshares and your spears into pruning-hooks, and learn war no more!" And I should then dismiss every man to his farm and his merchandise, with an admonition to read daily at his fireside the New Testament, and ponder upon its tidings of 'Peace on earth and good-will to men.' If, on the other hand, it should be determined that my election is a little in advance of the times, I am willing to decline the position tendered me by the House."

MISSIONARIES IN PERIL.

(See Illustration.)

AN adventure which might have resulted in the loss of the lives of two useful missionaries is reported by Mr. Henry Soltan, of the China Inland Mission. In journeying from Burmah to China, in company with Mr. Stevenson, he reached a lofty plateau, which is inhabited by the tribe of La-hums. Until this time the natives accompanying the missionaries had been friendly, but now two or three of the party showed a hostile spirit. On dismounting to seek a good camping-place for the night, Mr.

Soltan noticed that while the riding-ponies were led in one direction, the mules with the baggage were led in another. "Suspecting," he says, "that all was not right, I rushed up to my pony, 'Jet,' and seized his bridle, saying to the Kah-ch'en, 'Wait a little; don't be in a hurry.' He at once began to pull violently at the reins, and on my pulling in the opposite direction, became very angry. With eyes flashing with rage, and teeth clenched, he drew his sword, flourished it over my head, his face looking quite fiendish. Five or six companions came to his aid, all of whom drew their frightful-looking sword-knives, and flourished them over my head as if to cut me down.

"The Lord kept me perfectly calm, and I never felt the least fear. Just then a party of our friends, Cowries and La-hums, rushed up, and drawing their 'dahs' (sword-knives), rushed upon our assailants, and after a hard fight saved our lives and our property. It appears that the men who attacked belonged to the La-hums, on whose land we were, and counted on obtaining the assistance of their friends in their efforts to rob and murder us. But God mercifully watched over us."

THE LATE LUCY W. HAYES.

THE death of Mrs. Hayes, which took place on Tuesday, June 25, removes one of the most earnest and devoted friends of temperance in the whole Union. The moral courage she displayed in banishing intoxicating liquor from the table of the White House when her husband entered it as President of the United States will give distinction to her name in our national history. It was natural that those who had been habitués of the executive mansion during President Grant's term should be discontented with the entertainments over which Mrs. Hayes presided, but her conduct won for her the applause of the temperance men and women of the whole country.

Lucy Webb Hayes was born Aug. 28, 1831; she was therefore nearly fifty-eight years old when she died. She was a daughter of Dr. James Webb, a popular physician of Chillicothe, Ohio. She studied at the Wesleyan Female Seminary at Cincinnati, from which she graduated in 1852. On Dec. 30 of that year she married Rutherford B. Hayes, who held the office of President from 1877 to 1881. During the war she took a deep interest in the hospital service, and after her husband recovered of the wound he received at South Mountain she devoted herself to aiding in nursing other sick soldiers. She was in her usual health until June 21, when she suffered an apoplectic seizure. She never spoke or regained consciousness, but gradually sank until June 25, when she died.

CICELY'S CONTUMACY.

(See Illustration on page 429.)

"O TOM! do be careful; you'll surely break the captain's window."

"I might if I were a girl," Tom answered, contemptuously, picking up Cicely's ball and throwing it again in dangerous proximity to the neighbor's windows; "you think I can't aim any better than you. You'd be sure to hit anywhere but where you meant, but I've played base-ball too much to miss. See me hit that peach-blossom," indicating a blossom which waved a few inches from the window.

"Don't try, Tom; there'd be such a row if you did break the window! Captain Wren would tell papa, and then you know what you would get."

For answer Tom threw the ball. A crash of glass told that he had missed his mark and the dreaded catastrophe had happened. Like a dart Tom scudded across the garden in which he and his sister were playing, ran to the side of the house, climbed a tree, and stepped nimbly on a projecting ledge of the house, and through a window into his own bedroom. Cicely had no way of escape. She sat down on the grass and began to cry. How silly Tom was, and how obstinate! Now he would be punished. He was her idol, and she could not bear to think of what he must suffer. She remembered hearing his cries the last time his father beat him. And now he would be punished again, and Cicely cried in anticipation.

"Tom, Tom!" called the mother's voice from a window looking into the garden. Tom answered from his bedroom, and came down looking innocent and unconcerned, while his mother, looking for him in the garden, caught sight of Cicely sitting weeping on the lawn. The mother beckoned to her and led her into the hall, where Captain Wren stood waiting. Tom had seen him, too, but he passed him carelessly, and went out whistling as if he had no suspicion of the captain's errand.

"I am afraid it must have been my little girl, captain," said Mrs. Marsland. "Tom was up in his bedroom."

"I feel sure I heard Tom's voice in the garden just before the window was broken," said the captain.

"Ah! you must have been mistaken. He was in his bedroom when I called him, and he has only just come down. Yes, that is Cicely's ball," she added, as Captain Wren produced the missile that had done the mischief.

The captain looked at the tear-stained little face and felt sorry that he had come to complain.

"What have you to say, Cicely?" asked Mrs. Marsland. "How came you to break Captain Wren's window?"

Cicely's eyes were fixed on the floor. Must she tell? It was very hard, but Cicely had a girl's pride in her unblemished character. She could not bear to have her mother and the captain think she was so careless and mischievous. But it would be worse to tell and cause Tom to be punished.

"Don't be sulky," said Mrs. Marsland. "How came you to do it? Why don't you speak?"

"It must have been an accident," put in the captain, as Cicely continued silent. "You did not mean to do it, did you Cicely? and you are sorry now?"

Not a word did the child answer. She could not say anything that implied confession, for she had a good girl's repugnance to anything that partook of falsehood. If she answered, the truth would come out somehow, and Cicely had made up her mind that she would not get Tom into trouble.

Mrs. Marsland grew angry. She took the child by the shoulder and shook her. "I am sorry to see her so, captain," she said apologetically. "I never knew Cicely to be so sulky and obstinate before. Tell the captain how it happened, Cicely. Are you not sorry for breaking his window? It is very wicked of you to act so."

Cicely's tears were dry now. She rejoiced that she was going to save Tom from punishment, and the glory she felt in doing it gave a firm, proud look to her face that was far enough from that of contrition, and which both her examiners naturally mistook for effrontery. Even Captain Wren's sympathy faded.

"I shall have to punish you severely," said Mrs. Marsland. "You do not seem a bit sorry."

"Do not do that, madam," said the captain. "I would not have complained if I had suspected that my little friend was the culprit. Master Tom is such an expert at mischief, and he has practiced his tricks on me so often, that I thought this too was his doing, and it was time to stop it."

"If Cicely were not so stubborn, and would explain, I would forgive her," said Mrs. Marsland. "I have no doubt it was an accident; but as she will not explain, she must be punished. I do not like obstinacy in a child." A few more words of apology and regret to the captain, and then he took his leave, and Mrs. Marsland said, ominously, "Come with me, Cicely."

When Tom came home to supper, Cicely was not at the table. He looked around inquiringly, and was about to go to look for her, when his mother, divining his intention, stopped him. "Cicely has been a very naughty girl; I have had to punish her. She will not come to supper, and you must leave her alone, Tom."

He had not the moral courage to confess; and, besides, he thought, what good could it do now? He would only be punished himself, and that could do Cicely no good. But that night he crept quietly to her room and kissed her. The child had cried herself to sleep, but at the touch of her brother's lips she woke and threw an arm around his neck. Tom's caresses were very rare, and this one was so sweet, because he meant it.

Cicely's Contumacy.

"Did it hurt much, Cicely?" he whispered.

"I don't mind it a bit now, Tom, if you love me," said Cicely.

"I do," said Tom, "and I always will. My! you're brave."

The incident was not forgotten by either of them. They thought of it, and understood, when afterward they heard the story of Him who suffered for the sins of the world, and, "as a sheep before the shearers, was dumb."

ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS.

A Life Story: By Mrs. Stenhouse.

For More than Twenty-five Years the Wife of a Mormon Missionary and Elder.

(Continued from page 414.)

In the Endowment House.

I KNEW well that no marriage was considered binding unless it had been celebrated in that place. I knew that the Saints, however long they might have been wedded, were under the necessity of being reunited there before they could be considered lawfully married, and their children legitimate. According to the highest Mormon authority, no marriage is valid unless the ceremony is performed in the Temple. The Temple in Salt Lake City is not yet built, and as Joseph, the prophet, said, "No fellow can be doomed for doing the best he knows how," the Saints, meanwhile, do "the next best thing," and are married in the Endowment House. I knew that there and then the faithful were said to be "endowed" with their heavenly inheritance. I saw how absolutely needful it was that my husband and myself should become partakers of those mysteries; but I was influenced by the strange stories which I had heard, and consequently I feared to enter in.

Persons of both sexes and all ages were also initiated in the Eleusinian mysteries. Nor was it a thing indifferent whether they be so or not, for the neglect of it was looked upon as a crime of a very heinous nature. All persons initiated were thought to live in a state of greater happiness and security than other men, being under the more immediate care and protection of the goddess Ceres; nor did the benefit of it extend only to this life, but after death, too, they enjoyed (as was believed) far greater degrees of felicity than others, and were honored with the first place in the Elysian shades; whereas others were forced to wallow in perpetual mud and unsavory odors.

It was no fear of any personal violence, or any painful disclosures in that respect, that made me reluctant to receive my endowments, for at that time I was, by profession, apparently a good Mormon; if I had my irrepressible doubts and misgivings, I had them in common with nine-tenths of the Mormon women, and had, therefore, nothing to fear. The true cause of my reluctance was of a more personal nature. I had been informed that, if I refused to go, my husband could not go alone: he would be compelled to take another wife, and go with her.

This was not all. I found that it was quite common for the elders to take a second wife when they took their first endowments. Moreover, I had heard of men who feared to introduce a second wife into their households presenting her to their former wife while going through the ceremony at the Endowment House, feeling sure that the wife would not dare to make a scene before the Assembly. How could I know that my husband also had not such an idea in his mind? True, I trusted him implicitly, and did not believe it possible that he could deceive me. But had not men who were universally known among the Mormons for their integrity and honor acted in the same way to their wives? and with so many evidences of the best and most honest natures being corrupted by the unrighteous teachings of their religion, could I be blamed for doubting him whom I loved best?

There was also another reason why I particularly objected to passing through the Endowment House. I had been told many strange stories about the ceremonies which were there performed, for it was said that in the Nauvoo Temple the most objectionable things were done. About what was done at Nauvoo I can say nothing, as it was before my time, but of the Endowments in Utah I can, of course, speak more positively, as I myself passed through them; and I wish to say most distinctly that, although the initiation of the Saints into "The Kingdom" appears now to my mind as a piece of the most ridiculous absurdity conceivable, there was, however, nothing in it indelicate, of which the reader himself shall presently be the judge.

It is an invariable rule among the Mormons for every man or woman to mind his or her own business, and nothing else. Thus it was that, until I myself went through the Endowments, I was totally ignorant of what they were, although of course many people with whom I had daily intercourse could easily have enlightened me if they had been thus minded. Besides this, every Mormon's mouth was closed by the oath of that same Endowment House—the penalty of which was death, a penalty which no one doubted would be sternly enforced in the event of violation.

Before we left England, when speaking of these ceremonies, my husband told me that they were simply a privilege and a matter of choice. But what a choice! I might go or refuse to go; but if I refused, he must, if he went through it all, take another wife in my place, and, as I knew there would be no difficulty in finding one, I should in consequence be known as a rebellious woman, annoyance and indignity would be heaped upon me; while within my own home I should be compelled to occupy the position of second wife—as the one who is married first in the Endowment House is considered the first wife, and has the control of everything. My husband told me that now he was most anxious to go; he had already been notified three times that such was his privilege, and there were, he said, good reasons why we ought gladly to accept the opportunity. It was an honor for which many had waited for years.

My husband reminded me that we had been married by a Gentile, and while living among Gentiles, and that, according to Mormonism, our marriage was not valid, our children were not legitimate. Only those children of ours who were born after the ceremony in the Endowment House would be legitimate; the others were outcasts from the "Kingdom" unless we adopted them after our initiation, and thus made them heirs. In any case, poor children, they could never be considered the real heirs, they could only be heirs by adoption. So I agreed to go, trying to persuade myself that it was a sacred duty; for although my faith in Mormonism had been shaken I still believed that its origin was divine.

At 7 o'clock on the morning of the day appointed we presented ourselves at the door of the Endowment House, and were admitted by Brother Lyon, the Mormon poet. Everything within was faultlessly neat and clean, and a solemn silence pervaded the whole place. The only sound that could be heard was the splashing of water, but whence the sound had proceeded we could not see. In spite of myself a feeling of dread and uncertainty respecting what I had to go through would steal over my mind, and I earnestly wished that the ceremonies of the day were over.

All good Mormons, after they have received their first Endowments, get whole suits of Temple robes made on purpose for them, so that they may be ready for use at any time when they are needed. All marriages in the Endowment House are performed in these robes, and in them all Saints who have received their Endowments are buried at their death. Besides our robes, we were instructed not to forget to take with us a bottle of the best olive oil.

The temple robe, which is a long, loose, flowing garment, made of white linen or bleached muslin and reaching to the ankle, had been placed upon us just before we took the oaths. It was gathered to a band about twelve inches long, which rested on the right shoulder, passed across the breast, and came together under the left arm, and was then fastened by a linen belt. This leaves the left arm entirely free. The veil consists of a large square of Swiss muslin, gathered in one corner, so as to form a sort of cap to fit the head; the remainder falls down as a veil. The men wear the same kind of under garment as the women and their robes are the same, but their head-dress is a round piece of linen drawn up with a string, and a bow in front, something like a Scotch cap.

We waited patiently for a little while, and presently a man entered and seated himself at a table placed there for that purpose, upon which was a large book. He opened the book, and then calling each person in turn, he took their names and ages and the names of their father and mother, and carefully entered each particular in the book. Our bottles of oil were then taken from us by attendants, and we were supposed to be ready for the ceremony.

All the preliminaries for receiving our "Endowments" being complied with, we were told to take off our shoes and leave them in the ante-room, and then to take up our bundles, and pass into another room beyond. This was a large bathroom, which was divided down the middle by a curtain of heavy material placed there for the purpose of separating the men from the women. Here my husband left me—he going to the men's, and I to the women's division. In the bathroom were two or three large bathing-tubs supplied by streams of hot and cold water. We were as much concealed from the men as if we had been in an entirely separate room, and everything was very quiet and most orderly.

Miss Eliza R. Snow, the poetess, and a Mrs. Whitney were the officiating attendants on that occasion. The former conducted me to one of the bathing-tubs, and placing me in it she proceeded to wash me from the crown of my head to the soles of my feet. As she did this she repeated various formulas to the effect that I was now washed clean from the blood of this generation, and should never, if I remained faithful, be partaker in the plagues and miseries which were about to come upon the earth. When I had thus been washed, she wiped me dry, and then taking a large horn filled with the olive oil which we had brought, she anointed me. The horn was said to be the horn of plenty, which, like the widow's cruse of oil, would never fail as long as the ordinance should continue to be administered. In addition to the crown of my head, my eyes, ears, and mouth were anointed; my eyes that they might be quick to see, my ears that they might be apt at hearing, and my mouth that I might with wisdom speak the words of eternal life. She also anointed my feet, that they might be swift to run in the ways of the Lord.

After the washings and anointing above mentioned, I had a certain garment given me to put on. Now this garment is one peculiar to the Mormon people. It is made so as to envelop the whole body, and it is worn night and day. I was told that after having once put it on, I must never wholly take it off before putting on another, but that I should change one half at a time, and that if I did so I should be protected from disease, and even from death itself; for the bullet of an enemy would not penetrate that garment, and that from it even the dagger's point should be turned aside. It has been said that the Prophet Joseph carelessly left off this peculiar garment on the day of his death, and that, had he not done so, the rifles of his assassins would have been harmless.

Such washings and anointing always formed an important item in the old heathen initiatory rites, and there was no exception to this in the Eleusinian mysteries. Of these we read: "As they entered the temple they purified themselves by washing their hands in holy-water, and received for admonition that they were to come with a mind pure and undefiled, without which the cleanness of the body would be unacceptable. After this the holy mysteries were read to them out of a book. Then the priest that initiated proposed certain questions, as, whether they were fasting? &c., to which they returned answers in a set form. On the second day they were commanded to purify themselves by bathing in the sea. . . . The Hierophantes, the revealer of sacred things, anointed his body with the juice of hemlock."

In the Eleusinian mysteries, the garments in which the favored ones were initiated were held sacred, and of no less efficacy to avert evils than charms and incantations. From this circumstance, therefore, they were never left off before they were totally unfit for wear, after which they were appropriated for children, or dedicated to the goddess Ceres. The initiated were then supposed to be under the particular care of the deities. In the Dionysia, previously referred to, they wore white-striped garments.

When thus arrayed, I proceeded to put on a white dress and skirt, stockings, and white linen shoes. A new name was then whispered into my ear, which I was told I must never mention to any living soul except my husband in the Endowment House. This name was taken from the Bible, and I was given to understand that it would be the name whereby I should be admitted into the celestial kingdom. This was, of course, very gratifying. A circumstance, however, occurred which took from me all the pride which might have been mine in the possession of a new name. There was among our number a deaf woman; Mrs. Whitney had to tell her her name once or twice over, loud enough for me to hear, and thus I found that her new name, as well as mine, was Sarah. To make the matter worse, another sister whispered "Why, that is my name too!" This entirely dispelled any enthusiasm which otherwise I might have felt. I could well understand that I might yet become a Sarah in Israel, but if we all were Sarahs there would not be much distinction or honor in being called by that particular name. As a matter of course, I supposed that the men would all become Abrahams. Our washing and anointing being now over, we were ready for the formal initiation—there were about fifteen couples in all.

A voice from behind the curtain asked Miss Snow if we were ready, and was answered in the affirmative. We were then arranged in a row, the curtain was drawn aside, and we stood face to face with the men, who had, of course, on their side of the curtain, been put through a similar ordeal. I felt dreadfully nervous, for I did not know what was coming next, and I could not quite dismiss from my mind the stories that I had heard about these mysteries. But in spite of my nervousness curiosity was strong in me at that moment, as it was, I suppose, in the others, for as soon as the curtain was drawn aside we all cast our eyes in the direction of the men. They, as might be expected, were looking in our direction, and when I beheld them I must say that my sympathies were drawn out towards the poor creatures.

However little vanity or personal pride they possessed, they must have felt it unpleasant to have to appear in the presence of ladies in such a dress; and notwithstanding the solemn meaning of the ceremony, there was just the ghost of a smile upon our faces as we looked at each other, and dropped our eyes again. To any one who did not feel as we did the religious nature of the initiation, the scene must have appeared perfectly ludicrous. In fact, some of us actually felt it so. One sister, just as the curtain was drawn up and we came in full view of our lords, cried out, "Oh dear, oh dear! where shall I go? What shall I do?" This, as may be supposed, caused a laugh, which was, of course, immediately suppressed.*

(To be Continued).

*[What an impious travesty of the holy anointing of God, and the clothing of penitent and believing sinners who trust in the merits of Christ alone for salvation, and are clothed in His perfect righteousness, and enriched with the "new name which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it!" (Rev. 2.)]

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION—1888.

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God.

THE DEATH OF ELI.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for July 14, 1 Samuel 4: 1-18 Golden Text, 1 Samuel, 3: 13.

The People Still Alienated from God—Astonished that the Philistines Defeated them—Did not Inquire of God the Cause—The Plan of Unbelief—Making the Ark a Fetish—Why it Was Bereft of Its Power—Two Rebukes Administered to Eli—His Time of Agonizing Suspense—The Messenger's Tidings—Each Clause Worse than its Predecessor—The Last a Fatal Blow—The Ark in Dagon's Temple—Similar Irreverence in Modern Times—Enemies of God Who Have to Do with His Covenant Must Suffer—Wise Counsel from Pagan Priests.

WHEN the word of the Lord can have free course (or run) in a land, and be glorified (1 Thess. 3: 1), something is sure to happen. "Is not my word like as a fire? saith the Lord; and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?" (Jer. 23: 29.) There will be both burning and breaking when God's word can have way, although it be through a child like Samuel. It is impossible but that the enemies of God's people shall arise, and conflicts occur between them and their enemies. But though the Lord revealed Himself again in Shiloh, the people were not won back to Him, and their enemies were stronger than they, and four thousand of them fell before the Philistines; the people were disappointed, and could not understand their defeat. Surely they were in the right, they thought, to fight against the Philistines, and they bitterly inquired, "Wherefore hath the Lord smitten us to-day before the Philistines?" But they did not inquire of the Lord, and thus He left them to their own counsels, and they fell back on which seeks to bring a pressure to bear on God. "Let us fetch the ark of the covenant of the Lord out of Shiloh unto us, that, when it cometh among us, it may save us out of the hand of our enemies." It is easy, at this distance of time, to discern the idolatry of heart which led to such an idea. But are there none in the present day who do something of the same kind? Are there none who, in times of trial or perplexity, of sickness, or the approaching death of relatives, work themselves up to conquer God by earnest supplication, by days of fasting, with a view to obtain something, by arraying a force of praying people to help them, with the idea that ultimately God will yield to the pressure, and they shall obtain their desire? Is not this very like bringing the ark into the camp? God had ordered that the ark should go before them "to search out a resting-place." (Num. 10: 33; Deut. 1: 33.) They were to follow the ark. But now they go before, and drag the ark of God behind them. It is impossible for God to give victory in such a battle. In order to be victorious, we must know on which side God is before the conflict commences, and be, like Jehoshaphat, ready to praise God before one stroke is struck (11 Chron. 20). We may enter into work which is in itself most good and laudable, but if God has not gone before us, no amount of fervency can constrain God to serve our purpose.

The Usual Plan of Unbelief.

The children of Israel succeeded in bringing the ark into the camp, but where was the pillar of cloud and of fire? Jericho had fallen truly when the ark was carried round its walls. (Josh. 6: 13, 20.) Jordan and the Red Sea were divided before the ark of the covenant, but this was when God had ordered that it should lead the march of Israel. It was quite another thing now, when they would constrain God to come in as second, to conquer the foes which they had not prevailed to conquer. We have not to conquer God, but

To Be Conquered By God.

The people shouted when the ark of God was brought into the camp: they felt sure of victory, this expedient could not fail: it had always answered before. Yes; when God was leading; but it was another thing now: the people were acting as God's masters. But in the camp of the Philistines there was dismay. From afar they had heard of the power of the God of Israel, and they cried. "God is come into the camp. . . . Woe unto us; there hath not been such a thing heretofore. Woe unto us; who shall deliver us out of the hand of these mighty gods? These are the gods that smote the Egyptians with all manner of plagues in the wilderness." And they exhorted their soldiers to fight like men for their liberty. These heathen were more true in their apprehension of God than were the children of Israel; these latter expected everything from the ark; the Philistines dreaded a mighty God.

The times of ignorance God winked at, but when His word is abroad, He "commandeth men everywhere to repent." (Acts 17: 30.) There was among them a prophet whom God could trust, but the elders of Israel at the mouth of Samuel, and they must take the consequences. Israel was smitten, the guilty sons of Eli were slain, and the ark of God, on which they had depended in the place of God Himself, passed over into their enemies' hands! It looked as though the cause of God and His people were a complete failure; but the sequel shows that our faithful God was working to His own ends for deeper blessing, and preparing the way to lead back the hearts of His people, which had gone astray.

Did Not Ask God's Counsel

The old priest Eli had been rebuked of God for his son's defection. Once directly, and a second time through the child-prophet, God had foretold His coming judgment on his family; and those were awful hours for Eli when he knew the battle was raging, and, with his eyes dim from age, he sat beside the gate, listening intently for any sound which might confirm or allay his fears for those erring sons. Oh how heavily the hours must have passed by! how awful must have been the suspense! At last, sounds of footsteps were heard; it was a messenger from the battle-field, and Eli asked his last question upon earth, "How went the matter, my son?" The old man was, in some measure, prepared for coming trouble, but not for the overwhelming tidings which were poured into his ear. Israel had fled before the Philistines, there was a great slaughter, his two sons were slain, and the ark of God was taken. Blow after blow fell on the old man's heart, and it failed him. "It came to pass when the messenger made mention of the ark of God, that he fell from off his seat backward by the side of the gate, and his neck brake, and he died; for he was an old man, and heavy." This was not the only member of the family who died under the burden of these tidings—the wife of Phinehas gave birth to a child prematurely born, and named him Ichabod, "No Glory." It may be this woman had had the cause of God at heart, as her unhappy husband had not, for her last word was.

"The Glory is Departed"

from Israel: for the ark of God is taken." This was a deeper sorrow than her widowhood even at such an hour, and she died.

But the Philistines had something to learn; God would not leave Himself without a witness, and His enemies must know that they had not triumphed over Him. The ark, which they had so feared at a distance, was treated by them with contempt when they became familiar with its appearance, and they placed it in the house of Dagon their god, as though to say that the God of Israel and their god were rival gods. A fearful irreverence for God is creeping over this generation; the gospel has been preached until many look upon it as an old song, and there are many who do not hesitate to compare Christianity with Buddhism and Mahometanism to the disparagement of the first. But in the darkness of the night, when no eye saw, the hand of God cast down the idol Dagon, and His impious worshippers entered the temple to find their god prostrate before the ark of the Lord. This was God's first appeal to these idolaters, but, inflated with victory, they did not heed it, and after such a sign they had the daring to set the image of Dagon again its place. Anxiety to know the fate of their god woke them early on each morning, and this second day they found their idol not only prostrate, but with head and hands cut off, before the ark of the Lord.

It is a fearful thing to trifle with God. At first, His hand was only upon the idol, but now it was heavy upon the Philistines, and painful sores broke out upon their bodies, and the land was infested with mice. There was no question among the people as to what the cause of these judgments was; they recognized the hand of God in their afflictions. Surely these heathen people had more of the fear of God before their eyes than many of the so-called Christian peoples of the earth in these days, who quite laugh at the idea, as superstitious, that any calamity which takes place can be traced directly to the hand of God. The people of Ashdod sent the ark to Gath, but with the ark came the judgments; they had to know that they could not have to do with the ark of God's covenant, while they remained His enemies, without suffering judgment at His hands. The inhabitants of Gath sent on the ark to Ekron. But the Ekronites would not receive the dreaded witness of the power and presence of the God of Israel, and a general council of all the lords of the Philistines was called, to consider what should be done with the ark of God. The lords could come to no conclusion, and they called the priests and diviners, and the hand of God was wonderfully with them, for He overruled them in such a way that bore witness of Him as a mighty and a righteous God. They gave counsel that golden images of their tumors, and of the mice, should be made to offer to the God of Israel as a trespass offering. This was an acknowledgment that He had afflicted them; "The beginning of wisdom" which is "the fear of God" was in this action of theirs, "And ye shall give glory to the God of Israel." These were wondrous words from heathen priests, "Peradventure He will lighten His hand from off you, and from off your gods, and from off your land. Wherefore, then, do ye harden your hearts, as the Egyptians and Pharaoh hardened their hearts? When He had wrought wonderfully among them, did they not let the people go, and they departed?" And then these heathen priests gave their own people a sign by which they should recognize that the God of Israel had smitten them. They should put the ark in a new cart, drawn by milch kine which had never before been under the yoke, and the calves of which should be shut up at home—everything so ordered as to make it difficult for them to draw the cart aright. If they took the road to Bethshemesh, the nearest point of the frontier of Israel, then they were to recognize that God had smitten them, but if, on the contrary, the kine turned homeward to their calves, as would be natural, they would know it was "a chance that happened to them." It was a wonderful dealing of God, and the Philistines could no longer be in ignorance that the God of Israel was indeed the true and living God, when they saw the kine, without guide or driver, take the direct road to Bethshemesh.

Their Own Priests

Once more the ark of God was in His own land, and the men of Bethshemesh began well, and received the ark of God with joy, and "they offered burnt offerings and sacrifices unto the Lord." But the same lack of reverence which had made it possible for them to bring the ark of God into the camp, led them to look into the ark. According to the law of Moses, no eye was to see it but that of the high priest, and then not without blood. When irreverent curiosity intrudes into the holiest, it cannot but bring judgment. True, in these blessed gospel days we may draw near with faith, and enter into the holiest, yet only with the blood of Christ. No uncleaned foot may tread the Holy of holies. Fifty thousand and seventy men were smitten for thus tampering with the holy ark of God. Let us take heed how we draw nigh to God, that we may not come unbidden.

YET THERE IS ROOM!

Yet there is room! The Lamb's bright hall of song,
With its fair glory beckons thee along.
Yet there is room! Still open stands the gate,
The gate of love - it is not yet too late.
Pass in, pass in! That banquet is for thee,
That cup of everlasting love is free
Ere night that gate may close, and seal thy doom.
Then the last, low, long cry - "No room, no room!"

OUR 75 CENT COLORED SILK.

We have had unusual success with this line of Gros Grains.

They are 19 1-2 inches wide, have a fine cord weave, and are in 40 different, excellent shades. Under ordinary circumstances they would sell for $1 per yard.

Send for samples; they will surely please you.

JAMES McCREERY & CO.,
Broadway & Eleventh St.
New York.

HIRES

ROOT BEER

The most APPETIZING and WHOLESOME TEMPERANCE DRINK in the world. TRY IT.

Ask your Druggist or Grocer for it.

C. E. HIRES, PHILADELPHIA.

For a DISORDERED LIVER
Try BEECHAM'S PILLS.
25cts. a Box.
OF ALL DRUGGISTS.

Send 6 Cents for samples of the famous custom-made Plymouth Rock #3 Pants. Rules for self-measurement and a cloth tape measure included. Every pair guaranteed or money refunded. Plymouth Rock Pants Co., 11 to 17 Elliot St., Boston, Mass.

SAFE INVESTMENT
FARRAND & VOTY
ORGANS
DETROIT, MICH. U.S.A.

SAMPLE PAGES FROM THE LATEST
SUNDAY SCHOOL SONG BOOKS FREE,
THE ECHO MUSIC CO., La Fayette, Indiana.

Will be found invaluable for Cholera Infantum and all summer complaints, children or adults. It is a medicine but will be retained & sustain life when everything else fails. 4 sizes 35 cts. up.

BECHAM'S PILLS cure bilious and nervous ill.
BECHAM'S PILLS cure sick-headache.

TWIN BABIES.

To You and Your Husband:

We wish you could see our twin babies, the funniest little dimpled darlings you can imagine. All families cannot have twins, but here is something which for certain reasons many people prefer. Send us your name on a postal card and we will deliver you a Great Bargain Box containing 100 Cakes (full size) Sweet Home Family Soap, and in the box will be packed without charge all of the valuable presents, extras, etc., named below:

One fine silver-plated Sugar Spoon.
One fine silver-plated Child's Spoon.
One fine silver-plated Butter Knife.
One fine silver-plated Individual Cutter Plate.
One fine silver-plated Button Hook.
One Lady's Celluloid Pen Holder (very best).
One Arabesque Mat.
One Turkish Towel.
One Wash Cloth.
One Glove Buttoner.
One Package Pins.
One Spool Black Silk Thread.
One Japanese Silk Handkerchief.
One Gentleman's Handkerchief (large).
One Lady's Handkerchief.
One Child's Lettered Handkerchief.
One Biscuit Cutter.
One Cake Cutter.
One Doughnut Cutter.
One handsome Scrap Book or Portfolio.
One Package Assorted Scrap Pictures.
Two Celluloid Collar Buttons (patented).

Twenty-two Photo-Engraved Pictures of the Presidents of the United States.

Twenty-four Pictures.

Many of which are copper-plate engravings, suitable for framing, and are handsome decorations for the parlor, entitled:

Desdemona.
Our Boys.
Doe's Head.
Morning in the Highlands.
Evening in the Highlands.
A Faithful Friend.
Marguerite.
Sunshine and Shadow.
Jockey Joe.
Skye Terrier.
Phunny Fellows.
The Monkeys.
Owl'd Lang Syne.
Our Pets.

GRANDMA.

The Darlings.
Evangeline.
La Petite Babette.
The Maid of Orleans.
After the Storm.
Love's Young Dream.
Futurity.
The Interview.
On the Sands.
Yachting.

One Box (1-4 Doz.) Modjeska Complexion Soap.—An exquisite beautifier. Producing that peculiar delicate transparency, and imparting a velvety softness to the skin which is so greatly admired. It removes all roughness, removes blotches, pimples and imperfections from the hands and face. For all toilet purposes it is the luxury of luxuries. Especially adapted for the nursery or children's use, or those of delicate skin.

One Bottle Modjeska Perfume.—A delicate, refined delicious odor for the handkerchief and clothing. The most popular and lasting perfume ever made.

One Bottle Modjeska Tooth Powder.—An incomparable dentrifice, giving beauty and whiteness to the teeth preserving them and invigorating the gums. Purifies the breath. One bottle lasts a half year. Men, women, children—young and old—prefer MODJESKA TOOTH POWDER to any other; always ready to use by shaking a little on the brush.

One Napoleon Shaving-Stick.—"Shall I call a barber to shave you?" was asked of Napoleon. "Men who rule empires shave themselves," was the reply. Our Napoleon Shaving-Stick meets the exact want of all men, young and old; it is ready for use always, no shaving-cup (to get dirty and break) is required; made of the finest vegetable and imported oils. We guarantee it will keep the face free from tetter and all kinds of sores, pimples, or blotches.

One Box 1-4 dozen Elite Toilet Soap.

One Box 1-4 dozen Creme Oatmeal Toilet Soap.

One Box 1-4 dozen Ocean Bath Toilet Soap.

One Box 1-4 dozen Artistic Toilet Soap.

Six Packages Boraxine, for cleaning woodwork, washing dishes, dairy utensils, removing grease spots or stains from carpets, etc., or general house-cleaning. Has no equal. Saves half the labor of washing, is a thorough disinfectant, and is a blessing to every housekeeper who uses it.

It costs only one cent for a postal card to bring right to your door all of the above sent as presents in our Great Box which also contains 100 Large Cakes "Sweet Home" Family Soap. A full year's supply of soap for the average family. We have unlimited confidence in the judgment and sterling honesty of the readers of The Christian Herald. They know good value when they see it. They appreciate the energy and enterprise of a firm which shows itself capable of doing a service to them either in saving actual outlay or improving the standard of the goods they want to use.

Our price for the great box complete is $6.00, freight prepaid to all Railroad Stations East of the Rocky Mountains. A full year's supply of Soap for the average family.

WHY WE MAKE THIS TEMPTING OFFER. First.—It is to introduce "Sweet Home" Soap into every neighborhood where this advertisement is read. It is the very best soap made, and any person once using it will always use it, and become a steady customer.

Second.—We propose a new departure in the Soap Trade, and shall sell direct from the factory to consumer, spending the money allowed for expenses of traveling men, wholesale and retail grocers' profits in handsome presents to those who order at once a case of "Sweet Home."

Third.—No AGENTS ARE wanted, and we do not sell to grocers. "Sweet Home" Soap is made for the select family trade only. It is perfectly pure, thoroughly seasoned, and gives perfect satisfaction, and to induce people to try it we accompany each case with the useful and valuable presents named above. "Sweet Home" is the perfection of family soaps.

OUR TERMS.—We do not ask you to remit in advance, nor run any risks, nor take any chances. We merely ask permission to deliver you a case of these goods, and if after 30 days' trial you are fully convinced that the soap is all we claim, and the extras all we advertise, you can then pay the bill. But if you are not satisfied in every way, no charge will be made for what you have used. How can we do more?

Some people prefer to send cash with order. We do not ask it—but in such cases we place one extra present of value in the Box (just as we do in all boxes sent to Clergymen) and ship the same day the order is received, freight prepaid, all other orders being filled in their regular turn.

J. D. LARKIN & CO.,

659, 661, 663, 665 and 667
SENECA STREET,

BUFFALO, N. Y.

REMEMBER "Sweet Home" Family Soap is an extra fine, pure soap, made from refined tallow and vegetable oils. On account of its firmness and purity each cake will do double the work of the common cheap soaps usually sold from groceries. Please do not confound "Sweet Home" Family Soap with the common cheap soaps (made to sell). "Sweet Home" is made for use, and each cake will go twice as far as the common stuff sold at five cents per bar.

Our firm has been in the Soap business many years, and as to our reliability we refer you to any banker in the United States. When you are in Buffalo come and see us. Visitors are always welcome. Our factory is a large five-story brick building and has a capacity of Ten Million Pounds a year. The Advertising Manager of this paper has used the "SWEET HOME" Soap in his household for over a year, and does not hesitate to pronounce the goods first-class. There is no "catch" about the above advertisement and subscribers to The Christian Herald will do well to accept the offer at once.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1880, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. XII., No. 26. Office, 71 Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 26, 1889.

Price, 3 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF THE LATE FATHER DAMIEN, THE HEROIC FRIEND OF THE LEPERS OF HAWAII.

CAPTURED WEAPONS. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS

ANTICHRIST: HIS PERSON AND RELATIONS.

By Rev. A. B. Fausset.

The Deacon's Experiment—A Visit to Mrs. Livingstone's Grave—Three French Converts—Torture in India—A Mothers' Meeting in China.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF DR. FALDING, the New Chairman of the English Congregational Union.

A WELCOME TO A MISSIONARY. (With Illus.)

TAKING POSSESSION. A New Sermon by Rev. O. H. Spurgeon.

Gems from New Books: A Child's Strange Pity—The Uses of the Rod—A Roman Process of Law.

IN THE TOLLS. (With Illustration.)

ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS. An Autobiographical Story by Mrs. Stenhouse. (Continued)

SAMUEL CALLED OF GOD. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

The Late Father Damien, the Heroic Friend of the Lepers of Hawaii—Died April 15, 1889.

THE LATE FATHER DAMIEN,

The Heroic Friend of the Lepers.

The Portrait Criticised by the Priest—Damien's Early Life—How he went to Hawaii—The Leper Colony Established in 1865—A Scene of Vice and Despair—The Orgies of the Dying Lepers—The Island Prison—Damien's Arrival—First Efforts—Discouragements—Signs of Success—His Own Story—Fatal Symptoms—A Successor Volunteers—The Last Picture of his Sickness—A Protestant Lazar House.

IN the news columns of this journal on May 15 it was briefly announced that Father Damien was dead. A life so noble, so Christ-like in its devotion and self-sacrifice, deserves more than passing mention, and it claims a tribute of homage and recognition of its grandeur, especially from those of a different faith. We, therefore, tell here the pathetic story of his voluntary self-abnegation, his heroic labors, and his triumphant death. Would that the people of his creed, who are naturally proud that their Church produced so noble a man, could see the qualities they admire in Father Damien manifested in infinitely higher plenitude in Christ, and casting off all trust in the creature, rest only on Him who quitted His high estate and lived and died among men that He might redeem them from their sins!

The Portrait

on the preceding page was taken recently by an artist who visited Father Damien in his island home. It is alone a striking evidence of the horrible character of the disease to which the heroic man knew he must sooner or later fall a victim when he cast in his lot with the lepers. "He is," said the artist, "a thick-set, strongly built man, with black, curly hair and short beard, turning gray. His face must have been rather handsome, with a full, well-curved mouth, and a short, straight nose; but he is now a good deal disfigured by leprosy, though not so badly as to make it anything but a pleasure to look at his bright, sensible face. His forehead is swollen and ridged, the eyebrows are gone, the nose is knotted, and the ears are greatly enlarged. His hands and body also show many signs of the disease." How little thought he had given to himself and his own sufferings may be inferred from the surprise he manifested when he saw his picture on the artist's canvas. "What an ugly face!" he said; "I did not know the disease had made such progress."

The Early Consecration

of the man was of a character that might be inferred from his later years. Joseph Damien was born on Jan. 3, 1841, near Louvain, in Belgium. When he was nineteen years old he paid a visit to his brother, who was preparing for the priesthood, and during that visit he resolved to devote himself to the same work. It was expected that he would return home with his father, who had accompanied him, but the young man urged that it would be less painful to his mother if he remained there than rather than go home for a formal leave-taking. The father reluctantly yielded, and returned alone. The brother had determined to go to Hawaii as a missionary, but just at the last he was stricken down with fever, and the physicians pronounced him permanently unfitted for mission work. He was grievously disappointed, but it was a relief to him when his younger brother proposed to go in his stead to the Hawaiian field of labor. His offer was accepted, and in 1864 Joseph Damien landed in Honolulu. He was then twenty-three years old, and was esteemed as a man of indomitable energy and brilliant abilities. He had been laboring in Hawaii for nine years, when one day he heard his bishop express a wish that some priest would volunteer to go to Molokai and labor among the lepers. It was an appalling undertaking, but Damien was attracted by it. He took a week to consider, and then offered himself for the work. He was accepted, and in 1873 he was placed on the island.

The Leper Colony

in Molokai was formed in 1865. Leprosy had existed in Hawaii for many years, but not extensively. In 1860, however, it began to spread rapidly. The sufferers, before they were known, and sometimes before they knew themselves that they had the disease, infected men with whom they worked, their own families, and men whom they met in public gatherings. Clearly it was necessary for the public safety that they be sent away to live by themselves. The question was agitated for some years, and finally it was decided to send all lepers to Molokai, and forbid their leaving the island. The decision was carried out. Parents were separated from their children, husbands from their wives, and brothers and sisters from each other. The friends and relatives of those infected with the disease in many instances secreted the sufferers, and the officers charged with enforcing the "law of segregation" often had to capture their victims by stealth.

The Leper Island

of Molokai might well inspire the dread of the sufferers. It is an island of the Hawaiian group, and Kalawao, a village on the island, was the lepers' home. As is well known, the settlement is simply a prison hospital, none of the people living there being permitted to depart. A prison in name, Kalawao is a prison in reality. So far as isolation is concerned, no better place for the leper settlement could have been imagined. Kalawao is simply a tongue of land, washed on three sides by the ocean, and thrust out there from a line of cliffs four thousand feet high. No one has ever escaped from Kalawao. The little peninsula is three miles long and a mile wide. It is treeless and exposed, naked, to the full force of the northeast trade wind. During the winter months the climate of Kalawao is bleak, cold, and rainy. In the summer-time the sun beats down fiercely. The mountains hang over the peninsula like giants.

Misery, Vice, Despair,

reigned supreme in the island. The lepers—eight hundred and sixteen in number—had no houses but flimsy huts, no decent clothing, no medical attendance worthy of the name, and but the poorest kind of food. The oldest of the miserable creatures sank into a kind of apathy, and lay down and died. Among the youngest, after the first few years had killed hope in their hearts, began what may only be termed the orgies of despair. They abandoned themselves to excesses. They made native alcohol and ki-root beer. The outrageous hula dances were matters of continual occurrence. The Hawaiian Government paid no attention to them. On the arrival of a new number of lepers, the old ones were soon at work to impress them with the erroneous axiom, "Aole kanawai ma keia wahi"—"in this place there is no law." "Not only in private conversation," said Father Damien, "but in public meetings, I myself heard this doctrine proclaimed; and for a long time, indeed, I was obliged to fight against its application being made to the Divine law as well as to human law."

Damien's Arrival

in the colony in 1873 inaugurated a change. He was not allowed to cherish any hope when he went there. He was warned that if he went to Molokai he must not only stay there forever, but must, in all human probability, die a leper's death. He had no money, or means of providing for himself. He had to trust entirely to the kind-hearted ones among the lepers. The horrible scenes he met with at first appalled him. There were so many people in the last agonies, and Damien spent so much time with them, that for a time he was not able to build himself a hut, and he had to sleep at night under a rock. The Hawaiian Government treated him with sternness. He was not allowed to leave the island for any object, and the sheriff at Molokai had orders to put the priest in jail if he stirred off the peninsula on which the lepers were.

Damien speedily saw that he could do little for their spiritual welfare until they were better off temporally. In their miserable, hopeless condition they jeered at God and man, and rioted in a frenzied attempt to drown the thoughts of their end. Damien immediately began to write letters to the Government, detailing the horrible state of affairs on Molokai. He sent letter after letter unceasingly. Finally committees of the Board of Health and of the Hawaiian Legislature appeared on Molokai. The devoted priest, his eyes filled with tears, pointed out to the officials what was needed. Medical men in Hawaii began to pay a great deal of attention to the study of leprosy, and the leper settlement at Molokai was much discussed. One by one the bad things at Molokai were measurably remedied. He did not relax with little benefits given the settlement, but pushed ahead zealously, continually demanding governmental aid. He finally had the pleasure of seeing most of the evils entirely removed.

His Work.

Damien became at Kalawao, as he wrote himself, "physician of the soul and body, magistrate, school teacher, carpenter, joiner, painter, gardener, housekeeper, cook, and often undertaker and grave-digger." The poor lepers came to look upon him as their friend and assistant in every possible way. He moved among them and lived with them as one of themselves. His influence became unbounded. He was the arbiter of all disputes, the resource in every trouble.

Damien's heroism became known all over the world. The King of Hawaii made him a Knight Commander of the Order of Kalakaua I., but the priest never wore the glittering decoration of the order. He said that it would shame his worn and patched cassock. In England, Henry Labouchère started a subscription for Damien in his paper, which came to $1,500. This amount was forwarded to Damien by Cardinal Manning. Shortly afterward, the Rev. Hugh B. Chapman, a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, the vicar of St. Luke's, Camberwell, London, forwarded to Father Damien a draft for $5,000, the contribution of himself and some of his parishioners.

His Own Story

of his labors came out in a report which Father Damien sent to the Hawaiian Government suggesting various improvements. After describing the condition of the colony when he first arrived, and dwelling especially on the horrible intoxicating liquor that they made and drank, he said: "For a long time, under the influence of this pernicious liquor, they would neglect everything else except the hula, vicious orgies, and drinking. As they had no spiritual adviser, they would hasten along the road of complete ruin. A good many of the sick and prostrated were left lying there to take care of themselves, and several of them died for want of assistance, while those who should have given a helping hand were going around seeking enjoyment of the most pernicious and immoral kind. As there were so many dying people, my priestly duty toward them often gave me the opportunity to visit them at their domiciles, and although my exhortations were especially addressed to the prostrated, often they would fall upon the ears of public sinners, who, little by little, became conscious of the consequences of their wicked lives and began to reform, and thus, with the hope in the Saviour, gave up their bad habits."

"Kindness to all, charity to the needy, a sympathizing hand to the sufferers and the dying, in conjunction with religious instruction to my listeners, have been my constant means to introduce moral habits among the lepers. I am happy to say that, assisted by the local administration, my labors here, which seemed to be almost in vain at the beginning, have, thanks to a kind Providence, been greatly crowned with success, as at present there are very little, if any at all, of the above-mentioned evils committed."

Fatal Symptoms

appeared in Father Damien himself in 1884. He was with the lepers, of course, daily and hourly. He was in contact with lepers of all grades, including the most severe cases. He had some knowledge of medicine, and before the advent of the physicians was medical adviser to half the settlement. Until 1884 he felt fairly well. In that year pains in the left foot troubled him.

These continued to get worse, and, in the absence of any other signs, were attributed to rheumatism. But he did not deceive himself. "He told me," says a gentleman who visited him in the latter part of last year, "that he had always expected that he should sooner or later become a leper, though exactly how he caught it he does not know. But it was not likely that he would escape, as he was constantly living in a polluted atmosphere, dressing the sufferers' sores, washing their bodies, visiting their death-beds, and even digging their graves. He knew the risk he ran, and did not fail to recognize the symptoms which he had seen in others. One day he asked Dr. Arning to give him a thorough examination. 'I cannot bear to tell you,' said the doctor, 'but what you say is true.'

"It is no shock to me," said Damien, with fortitude, "for I have long felt sure of it."

"And he worked on with the same cheerful, sturdy courage, accepting the will of God with readiness. He said to me, with quiet resolution, 'I would not be cured if the price of my cure was that I must leave the island and give up my work.'"

A lady wrote him, "You have given up all earthly things to serve God, to help others, and I believe that you must have now that joy that nothing can take from you, and a great reward hereafter." "Tell her," said he, "that this is true; I do have that joy now."

In May, 1885, the doctors, after a careful examination, found no signs that the disease was breaching in Damien; but in August of that year leprosy plainly manifested themselves in his face, and poor Damien knew that his doom was sealed. But the heroic priest did not relinquish his work. He still walked and talked with the lepers, ministering to the sick, teaching the children, and living the same old life of poverty and hardship.

Help Arrives.

In the spring of 1886 arrived an assistant to Father Damien—Father Conrardi, a native of the region, and a young man in full health. Father Conrardi, like Damien, volunteered to go among the lepers, and hastened his departure when he learned that Damien had been stricken with the leprosy. Father Damien willingly received Conrardi, knowing that he himself would soon be too sick to work, and that he must have a successor. In a few months there also arrived seven Sisters of the Franciscan Order to serve as nurses in the leper hospitals. Two of them came from Syracuse, N. Y.

The Last Picture

We have of the devoted man is that sent by his assistant, Conrardi, shortly before the brief notice of his death. He said: "I am going to give you a few lines about the dear Father Damien, who will soon be no more, as he is falling a victim to his charity. In England and America they call him the hero-martyr. It is my privilege to be near him, to live with him. Leprosy has done its work in his ears, his eyes, nose, throat, his hands, and his lungs. The poor Father has suffered dreadfully. He is completely disfigured. His voice is almost extinct. If you could only see him as he lies in his bed of suffering, tears would come to your eyes at the sight of that man who has done so much for thousands of lepers, now himself reduced to so terrible a condition, with so little that can be done for him." Sixteen years had passed since, in May, 1873, he commenced his work in the island, and he did not quit it until April 15, 1889, when he breathed his last.

A Protestant Work

of a similar character to that of Father Damien has recently come to light. A contemporary referring to the subject of this sketch says that outside of the walls of Jerusalem is a lepers' hospital, tended by deaconesses from the German religious houses. Year after year these heroic women, without pretentiousness, without any appeal for aid or sympathy, almost unknown to the world, have waited upon lepers, while themselves literally dying by inches. Their courage has only come to light by the casual notice of travellers.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

A Wealthy Man's Folly.—Dr. Pentecost said: "A very wealthy man died who had heard often that no matter how rich a man might be he would require to leave all his wealth when he passed away from the world. Heresolved, therefore, to show the people their mistake, and made his will bequeathing his property to his nephew, on condition that part of his money and jewels should be buried with him. The sorrowful heir buried his uncle, and with him the money and jewels as required. He mourned for the old man, and even wept for him; but that did not keep him from going to the grave the following day and digging up the treasure. The will of the dead man had been kept to the letter, but he lost his riches all the same. In spite of his will he lay penniless in his grave. Let us lay up treasure in heaven, that we may be rich to all eternity."

Wise Words of the Dying Socrates.—"When the Athenian Senate condemned Socrates to death by drinking a cup of hemlock, the disciples of that most remarkable man gathered around him to hear the last words of wisdom that might fall from his lips, and carry out his dying behest. As they sat at his feet one of them said, 'Good master, after you have drunk that cup of hemlock, where shall we bury you?' 'Ah,' replied the sage, with a smile, 'you can bury me where you please, if you can catch me.' He talked of himself, the real invisible Socrates, whom he knew could never die, and upon whom the deadly poison would have no effect, while they talked of his body, the temporary dwelling-place of the spirit. If we, who have never seen our neighbor's spirit, believe that it is, how can we deny the existence of God, the Great Spirit, because we have never seen Him? A faith which we manifest every day toward our fellow-men, we sometimes deny to our God."

A Chief Gives Up His Idols for Christ.—"Mr. Richardson, who had been zealously preaching the Gospel, went to a village about three miles from his headquarters on the Congo. There he began to preach, and gave out that well-known hymn, 'Come, oh come to Me.' They had scarcely finished the first verse, when the chief of the village came out of the crowd and said, 'White man, here are my idols and charms; do with them as you please; I can stand against your God no longer.' That was the beginning of a most wonderful awakening. Some time afterwards, when I again passed through that part of the country, I found flourishing there a church with over 200 members. These people had tasted of Christ and found His worth. They were not going selfishly to keep that knowledge to themselves. They took two of their people and sent them to preach Christ to their brothers, and they sustained them. That is the kind of converts we have in Africa, who, when they accept Christ, accept Him wholly and simply, prepared to follow the teaching of His Word. Would that all professing Christians in civilized nations were the same!"

Insulting the Federal Flag.—Dr. Pentecost said: "A man in New Orleans said to me, 'Dr. Pentecost, do you believe that story about Eve eating the apple in the Garden of Eden, and Adam and she being driven out in consequence, and that act entailing sin upon all their descendants?' 'Yes,' I replied, 'I do.' 'Well, I do not,' he hotly rejoined; 'the thing is monstrous—cruel.' And the man turned on his heel and walked off. New Orleans at that time had just been occupied by the Federal troops, and the general had just hoisted the Stars and Stripes in place of the Confederate flag. The first night it was hoisted, some one under the cover of the darkness had slipped up to the flag-staff and cut the cord, and the next morning that proud ensign lay trampled in the dust. It was again hoisted, but for three consecutive nights the same thing occurred. When it was reported to General Dix, he answered curtly, 'If any man tries to haul down the flag shoot him on the spot.' Shortly afterwards I met that friend who had been condemning God's alleged cruelty to our first parents, and I remarked to him, 'Did you hear that affair about the flag? Don't you think it was a monstrous deed of General Dix to condemn a man to be shot for such a trivial offence as the mere cutting of a cord? What a cruel, blood-thirsty man he must be!' 'No, indeed,' he replied warmly; 'serve the miscreant right. It was not the mere cutting of a cord, it was the act intended to show contempt for the nation which that flag represents.' 'And,' I said, 'It was not the mere eating of an apple for which God condemned Adam and Eve, but the act of disobedience, and the showing contempt to the command of God.'"

A Missionary Mother's Brave Farewell.—Mr. Scroggie says: "The wife of an American missionary to the South Africans, and herself a most zealous worker among the native women, had been in that burning country for a considerable time. The climate was telling upon their health, but especially upon that of their three little children. After much anxious attention it was evident that the only thing to save their lives was to return to America. A council was held, and the missionary insisted that his wife and children should at once set out for home. But his wife saw that she could be spared even less than her husband. She thought of how much God had done for her, and resolved, even at the risk of her life, and the pain of separation from her children, to remain at her post. In vain her husband tried to persuade her to go. She was determined, and having engaged a governess to take care of the children, she secured a passage for them in the first steamer. The fond mother accompanied them on board, and stayed with them until the last moment. Then, when the bell rang for non-passengers to leave the ship, she knelt down, and, clasping her children to her bosom, commended them to God, and hastened away. She knew that God could tend her children when away from her, as well as when by her side. It was the last time she ever saw her children. She died, and was buried in Africa's burning sands, committing her children to God's care."

Christian Skippers of Fishing Smacks.—A converted skipper recently had sailing with him an ungodly crew, and used to read the Bible to them; then he induced them to sign the pledge, and now he had come on shore to purchase a Bible for each of his men, and said he wanted to lead them to Jesus. Three nights after the conversion of its skipper a smack passed astern of us. We heard hymn-singing on board, and afterwards learned he had meetings with his crew; he too, wished to lead them to Jesus. Another example is that of a man who had the reputation of being one of the wickedest men afloat. He was instrumental in rescuing a part of the crew of a vessel that was lost. When standing in for the Knoll, he fell in with a boat containing thirteen men belonging to a steamer that had gone ashore on the Hasborough sands. They were promptly taken on board the smack, and amongst those rescued was the captain, who said that another boat had just put off from the ill-fated craft, having in it the remainder of his crew. A man was at once sent aloft to look out for the missing boat, and then the skipper took them into the cabin, and when he had made them as comfortable as circumstances permitted, he said, "I fear God; may I ask you and your men, captain, to join with me in thanks to the Almighty for having spared your lives?" and there, in his little cabin, he pleaded with God for the salvation of their souls as well as their bodies. On rising from their knees the captain said: "Skipper, in my ship I lose quite $1,000; but, thank God, I feel that I have to-day found something of far greater value."

An Invaluable Work on Prophecy by G. H. Pember, M. A., entitled "The Great Prophecies concerning the Jews the Gentiles, and the Church of God," is for sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York. It is written in a most popular and eloquent style, and describes the impending fulfilment of Revelation and Daniel, and is illustrated by a colored chart. 458 pages. Price, including postage, $1.

CAPTURED WEAPONS.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon preached last Sunday,
June 23, 1889.

"There is none like that; give it me." 1 Sam. 21: 9.
David in Need of a Sword—Is Offered that of His Old Enemy—The Philistines' Weapons in the Gospel Armory—The Weapon of Scientific Exploration—Worldly Philosophy Supplying Weapons—
A Christian Explanation of Joshua's Miracle—Corrupting Influences of Travel—Locomotive Facilities Used to Disseminate the Truth—Learning and Eloquence—The Painter's Pencil Captured—Business Acumen in the Church—
An Optimistic Influence.

DAVID fled from his pursuers. The world runs very fast when it is chasing a good man. The country is trying to catch David, and to slay him. David goes into the house of a priest, and asks him for a sword or spear with which to defend himself. The priest, not being accustomed to use deadly weapons, tells David that he cannot supply him: but suddenly the priest thinks of an old sword that had been carefully wrapped up and laid away—the very sword that Goliath formerly used—and he takes down that sword, and while he is unwrapping the sharp, glittering, memorable blade, it flashes upon David's mind that this was the sword that when he was in the fight with Goliath, and David can hardly keep his hand off it until the priest has unwound it. David stretches out his hand toward that old sword, and says: "There is none like that; give it me." In other words, "I want in my own hand the sword that has been used against me, and against the cause of God." So it was given him. Well, my friends, that is not the first or the last sword once used by giant and Philistine iniquity which is to come into the possession of Jesus Christ, and of His glorious Church. I want, as well as God may help me, to show you that many a weapon which has been used against the armies of God is yet to be captured and used on our side; and I only imitate David when I stretch out my hand toward the blade of the Philistine, and cry, "There is none like that; give it me."

Was Used Against Himself

I remark, first, that this is true in regard to Scientific Exploration.

You know that the first discoveries in astronomy and geology and chronology were used to battle Christianity. Worldly philosophy came out of its laboratory and out of its observatory, and said: "Now we will prove, by the very structure of the earth and by the movement of the heavenly bodies, that the Bible is a lie, and that Christianity, as we have it among men, is a positive imposition." Good men trembled. The telescope, the Leyden-jars, the electric batteries—all in the hands of the Philistines! But one day, Christianity, looking about for some weapon with which to defend itself, happened to see the very old sword that these atheistic Philistines had been using against the truth, and cried out, "There is none like that; give it me!" And Copernicus, and Galileo, and Kepler, and Isaac Newton came forth and told the world that, in their ransacking of the earth and heaven, they had found overwhelming presence of the God whom we worship; and this old Bible began to shake itself from the Koran and Shaster and Zendavesta with which it had been covered up, and lay on the desk of the scholar, and in the laboratory of the chemist, and in the lap of the Christian, unharmed and unanswered, while the towers of the midnight heavens struck a silvery chime in its praise.

Worldly Philosophy

said: "Matter is eternal. The world always was. God did not make it." Christian philosophy plunges its crowbar into rocks, and finds that the world was gradually made; and if gradually made, there must have been some point at which the process started; then who started it? and so that objection was overcome, and in the first three words of the Bible we find that Moses stated a magnificent truth when he said: "In the beginning."

Worldly philosophy said: "Your Bible is a most inaccurate book; all that story in the Old Testament, again and again told, about the army of the locusts—it is preposterous! There is nothing in the coming of the locusts like an army. An army walks, locusts fly. An army goes in order and procession, locusts without order." "Wait!" said and in 1868, in the southwestern part of this country, Christian men went out to examine the march of the locust. There are men right before me who must have noticed in that very part of the country the coming up of the locust like an army; and it was found that all the newspapers unwittingly spoke of them as an army. Why? They seem to have a commander. They march like a host. They halt like a host. No arrow ever went with straighter flight than the locusts come—not even turning aside for the wind. If the wind rises, the locusts drop, and then rise again after it has gone down, taking the same line of march, not varying a foot. The old Bible right every time; worldly philosophy wrong.

Christian Philosophy;

Worldly philosophy said: "All that story about the light 'turned as clay to the seal' is simply an absurdity." Old-time worldly philosophy said: "The light comes straight." Christian philosophy said: "Wait a little while," and it goes on and makes discoveries, and finds that the atmosphere curves and bends the rays of light around the earth, literally "as the clay to the seal."

The Bible Right Again;

philosophy wrong again. "Ah," says worldly philosophy, "all that illusion in Job about the foundations of the earth is simply an absurdity. 'Where wast thou,' says God, 'when I set the foundations of the earth?' The earth has no foundations." Christian philosophy comes and finds that the word as translated "foundations" may be better translated "sockets." So, now, see how it will read if it is translated right: "Where wast thou when I set the sockets of the earth?" Where is the socket? It is the hollow of God's hand—a socket large enough for any world to turn in.

Worldly philosophy said: "What an absurd story about Joshua making the sun and moon stand still! If the world had stopped an instant, the whole universe would have been out of gear." "Stop," said Christian philosophy, "not quite so quick." The world has two motions—one on its own axis, and the other around the sun. It was not necessary in making it stand still that both motions should be stopped—only the one turning the world on its own axis. There was no reason why the halting of the earth should have jarred and disarranged the whole universe, Joshua right, and God right; infidelity wrong every time. I knew it would be wrong. I thank God that at any scientific exploration. The fact is that religion and science have struck hands in eternal friendship, and the deeper down geology can dig, and the higher up astronomy can soar, all the better for us. The armies of the Lord Jesus Christ have stormed the observatories of the world's science, and from the highest towers have flung out the banner of the cross, and Christianity to-night, from the observatories of Albany and Washington, stretches out its hand towards the opposing scientific weapon, crying, "There is none like that; give it me!" I was reading this afternoon of Herschel, who was looking at a meteor through a telescope, and when it came over the face of the telescope it was so powerful that he had to avert his eyes. And it has been just so that many an astronomer has gone into an observatory and looked up into the midnight heavens, and the Lord God has, through some swinging world, flamed upon his vision, and the learned man cried out: "Who am I? Undone! Unclean! Have mercy, Lord God!"

Christians Need Not be Scared

Again, I remark that the travelling disposition of the world, which was averse to morals and religion, is to be brought on our side. The man that went down to Jericho and fell amidst thieves was a type of a great many travel. There is many a man who is very honest at home who, when he is abroad, has his honesty filched, and his good habits stolen. There but very few men who can stand the stress of an expedition. Six weeks at a watering-place has damned many a man. In the olden times God forbade the travelling of men for the purposes of trade, because of the corrupting influences attending it. A good many men now from one place to another. Some men seem to be very consistent at home in the observance of keeping the Sabbath, when they get to Spain, on the Lord's day always go out to the bull-fights. Plato said that no city ought to be built nearer to the sea than ten miles, lest it be tempted to commerce. But this travelling disposition of the world, which was adverse to that which is good, is to be brought on our side. These rail-trains, why, they are to take the place of Bibles; these steamships, they are to transport our missionaries; these sailors rushing from city to city all around the world, are to be converted into Christian heralds and go out and preach Christ among the heathen nations. The gospels are infinitely multiplied in beauty and power since Robinson and Thompson and Burckhardt have come back, and talked to us about Siloam and Capernaum and Jerusalem, pointing out to us the lilies about which Jesus preached; the beach upon which Paul was shipwrecked; the fords at which Jordan was passed; the Red Sea bank on which were tossed the carcasses of the drowned Egyptians. A man said: "I went to the Holy Land an infidel, I came back a Christian. I could not help it."

Cannot Stand Transition

I am not shocked at the idea of building a railroad to the Holy Land. I wish that all the world might go and see Golgotha and Bethlehem. If we cannot afford to pay for muleteers now, perhaps when the rail-train goes we can afford to buy a ticket from Constantinople to Joppa, and so get to see the Holy Land. The Let Christians Travel!

God speed the rail-trains, and guide the steamships this day panting across the deep in the phosphorescent wake of the shining feet of Him who from wave cliff to wave cliff trod the stormy Tiberias! The Japanese come across the water and see our civilization, and examine our Christianity, and go back and tell the story, and keep that empire rocking until Jesus reigns

where'er the sun

Does his successive journeys run.

And the fire-arms with which the infidel traveller brought down the Arab horseman and the jackals of the desert have been surrendered to the Church, and we reach forth our hands, crying: "There is none like that; give it me!"

So it has also been with the Learning and Eloquence of the world. People say: "Religion is very good for women, it is very good for children, but not for men." But we have in the roll of Christ's host Mozart and Handel in music; Canova and Angelo in sculpture; Raphael and Reynolds in painting; Harvey and Boerhaave in medicine; Cowper and Scott in poetry; Croft and Burke in statesmanship; Boyle and Leibnitz in philosophy; Thomas Chalmers and John Mason in theology. The most brilliant writings of a worldly nature are all aglow with Scriptural allusions. Through senatorial speech and through essayists' discourse Sinai thunders and Calvary pleads, and Siloam sparkles.

Samuel L. Southard was mighty in the courtroom and in the senate chamber, but he reserved his strongest eloquence for that day when he stood before the literary societies at Princeton. Commencement and pleaded for the grandeur of our Bible. Daniel Webster won not his chief garlands while he was consuming Hayne, nor when he opened the batteries of his eloquence on Bunker Hill, that rocking Sinai of the American Revolution, but on that day when, in the famous Girard will case, he showed his affection for the Christian religion and eulogized the Bible. The eloquence and the learning that been on the other side came over to our side. Where is Gibbon's historical pen? Where Robespierre's sword? Captured for God! or, also, has it been with the picture-making of the world. We are very anxious on this day to have the printing-press and the platform on the side of Christianity; but we overlook the graver's knife and

The Painter's Pencil.

The antiquarian goes and looks at pictured stones, or examines the chiselled pillars of Thebes and Nineveh and Pompeii, and then comes back to tell us of the beastliness of ancient art; and it is a fact, now, that many of the finest specimens—merely artistically considered—of sculpture and painting that are to be found amidst those ruins are not fit to be looked at, and they are locked up. How Paul must have felt when, standing amidst those impurities and stared on him from the walls and the pavements and the bazars of Corinth, he preached the pure and holy Jesus! The art of the world on the side of obscenity and crime.

In later days the palaces of kings were adorned with pictures. But what to unclean Henry VIII. was a beautiful picture of the Madonna? What to Lord Jeffrey, the unjust judge, the picture of the "Last Judgment"? What to Nero, the unwashed, a picture of the baptism in the Jordan? The art of the world on the side of superstition and death. But what is being changed now.

The Christian Artist

As he goes across the water, looks at the pictures, and brings back to his American studio much of the power of those old masters. The Christian minister goes over to Venice, looks at the "Crucifixion of Christ," and comes back to his American pulpit to talk as never before of the sufferings of the Saviour. The private tourist goes to Rome and looks at Raphael's picture of "The Last Judgment." The tears start, and he goes back to his room in the hotel, and prays God for preparation for that day when,

Shrivelling like a parched scroll,
The flaming heavens together roll.

Our Sunday-school newspapers and walls are adorned with pictures of Joseph in the court, Daniel in the den, Shadrach in the fire, Paul in the shipwreck, Christ on the Cross. Oh that we might in our families think more of the power of Christian pictures! One little sketch of Samuel kneeling in prayer will mean more to your children than twenty sermons on devotion. One patient face of Christ by the hand of the artist will be more to your child than fifty sermons on forbearance. The art of the world is to be taken for Christ. What has become of Thorwaldsen's chisel and Ghirlandajo's crayon? Captured for the truth! "There is none like that; give it me."

So, I remark, it is with

Business Acumen

and tact. When Christ was upon earth, the people that followed Him, for the most part, had no social position. There was but one man naturally brilliant in all the apostleship. Joseph of Arimathea, the rich man, risked nothing when he offered a hole in the rock for the dead Christ. How many of the merchants in Asia Minor befriended Jesus? I think of only one—Lydia. How many of the castles on the beach of Galilee entertained Christ? Not one! When Peter came to Joppa, he stopped with one Simon, a tanner. What power had Christ's name on the Roman exchange, or in the bazars of Corinth? None. The prominent men of the day did not want to risk their reputation for sanity by pretending to be one of His followers. Now that is all changed. Among the mightiest men in our great cities to-day are the Christian merchants and the Christian bankers; and if to-morrow, at the Board of Trade, any man should get up and malign the name of Jesus, he would be quickly silenced or put out. In the front rank of all our Christian workers to-day are the Christian merchants; and the enterprises of the world are coming on the right side.

There was a farm willed away some years ago, all the proceeds of that farm to go for spreading infidel books. Somehow matters have changed, and now all the proceeds of that farm go toward the missionary cause. One of the finest printing-presses ever built was built for the express purpose of publishing infidel tracts and books. Now it does nothing but print Holy Bibles. I believe that the time will come when, in commercial circles, the voice of Christ will be the mightiest of all voices, and the ships of Tarshish will bring presents, and the Queen of Sheba her glory, and the wise men of the East their myrrh and frankincense. I look off upon the business men of our cities and rejoice at the prospect that their tact and ingenuity and talent will, after a while, all be brought into the service of Christ. It will be one of the mightiest of weapons. "There is none like that; give it me."

Now, if what I have said be true,

Away With All Downheartedness!

If science is to be on the right side, and the travelling disposition of the world on the right side, and the learning of the world on the right side, and the picture-making on the right side, and the business acumen and tact of the world on the right side—thine, O Lord, is the kingdom! Oh, fall into line, all ye people! It is a grand thing to be in such an army, and led by such a commander, and on the way to such a victory. If what I have said is true, then Christ is going to gather up for Himself out of this world everything that is worth anything, and there will be nothing but the scum left. A proclamation of amnesty goes forth now from the throne of God, saying, "Whosoever will, let him come." However long you may have wandered, however great your sins may have been, "whosoever will, let him come." Oh that I could marshal all this audience on the side of Christ! He is the best friend a man ever had. He is so kind, He is so lovely, so sympathetic! I cannot see how you can stay away from Him. Come now, and accept His mercy. Behold Him as He stretches out the arms of His salvation, saying: "Look unto Me, all ye ends of the earth, and be ye saved; for I am God." Make final choice now. You will either be willows planted by the water-courses, or the chaff which the wind driveth away.

A VISIT TO THE SIOUX.

MEN who still hold to the barbarous opinion that "the only good Indian is a dead Indian" would do well to read an article which George Louis Curtis has sent to the Interior describing a recent visit to the Standing Rock Agency, which shows what kindness and tact have done for the savage tribe located there. In the course of his narrative he says:

We gained the summit of the bluff, and the vesper breeze gave temporary relief from our assailants by the side of the small, shapless boulder, the sacred stone of the Sioux, which gives name to the agency. There is nothing in its rough, unhewn sides, besmeared with blue and red paint, to suggest the lines of feminine beauty, or the fanciful legend of the Standing Rock. But in the firm belief of these nature-worshippers this is all that now remains of an Indian Bride, who, torn from her home by a band of Ree invaders, refused to follow her captors, and preferring death to dishonor, was changed into stone by the Great Spirit in rescue and reward. The Standing Rock was long a rolling stone; but its wanderings terminated with its erection by the agent upon the present rude pedestal in 1886, when it was dedicated with solemn ceremonies in the presence of thousands of devout Dakotas.

The controlling influence at Standing Rock lies not with the military, but with the civic resident. Victories of peace more lasting than those in the field, have been here won during the administration of Agent James McLaughlin, and the extraordinary change in sentiment and life among the old "hostiles" during the past eight years is a tribute alike to the genius of the agent and the character of his savage subjects. Nearly three thousand wretched, vanquished creatures were transferred hither by the army in 1881, the last pitiful remnant of the outlaws who had left an invaded reservation, inflicted terrible vengeance at the Little Big Horn, and had been finally starved into submission and surrender with Sitting Bull. Humiliated and broken in spirit, they were eager to grasp the outstretched hand; and the transformation from warriors to wards, under the tutelage of the best Indian agent in the service, has been no less remarkable than that of their kindred which followed the Minnesota massacre of 1862. "McLaughlin holds his Indians with a wreath of roses," is the saying at Bismarck, yet in his hands it proves a firm rein. Indian judges hear complaints and try all criminal cases before they are submitted to the agent; and the corps of Indian police, officered from their own number, would doubtless attempt the arrest of the commander of the post, should the order be given.

An incident that occurred just before our visit gave striking proof of present control and social security. The transfer of the Eleventh United States Infantry from the posts along the Missouri to New York State was ordered before the arrival of the Twelfth Regiment, that was to relieve it, and some anxiety was felt at Washington as to the safety of leaving the agency thus slenderly protected. "You may inform the Department," was the reply of Agent McLaughlin, "that it is safe to remove not only the infantry but also the cavalry from Fort Yates; and, furthermore, that if they so desire, I am ready to receipt for the property and assume all responsibility for the post for the next three months, garrisoned solely by my Indians." Such has been the effect of a few short years of civilizing policy, and the moral result of a helping hand.

Indian Womanhood,

as studied by Mr. Curtis at the Standing Rock Agency, is certainly picturesque and hopeful. "I listened," he says, "to the salutatory at the Agency school delivered by the pretty little daughter of Old Goose, a prominent member of the Blackfeet band. There was a momentary hesitation as she neared a formidable obstacle of five syllables, a tiny gasp of the throat accustomed to smoother Siouan sounds. Then with a flush of color and a flash of the eye she successfully cleared it, amid the enthusiasm of the painted audience, and to the shy delight of the squaw at the window, whose face, shrouded in her blanket, peered in curiously but proudly upon her child. 'The intelligent, decent Indian girl is a problem,' was the report in 1881 of one who had initiated effort for her emancipation from the hoe, and her elevation to the plane of white womanhood. 'Teaching would do much for her, if schools were provided.' The statement seemed a prophecy as I grasped the gloved hand of the graceful, full-blooded daughter of a Hunkpapa chief, dressed as neatly and tastefully as any New England 'school-marm,' who taught the day-school nearest the agency. The pretty broken English which she imparted to the sturdy little brown Dakotas was not the most valuable or the most striking acquisition of her Hampton school days. A sight of her manner, and her methods in the class-room, drew forth from a visiting Congressman the hearty encomium, 'This solves the Indian problem.'

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION—1888.

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 523 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God.

THE DEACON'S EXPERIMENT.

AN incident showing how God cares for the temporal needs of those who trust Him is related by a New England pastor. He says that among the officers of his church was Deacon C—. The deacon disposed of all his income every year, giving to God the greater part. He was considered imprudent in not laying up a provision for sickness or old age. The young men in his Bible class asked him, "Would you advise us to go on in your style, spending or giving every dollar, and never taking the future into account?" "Why," he would answer, "according to your faith be it unto you, Can you enjoy this kind of life? That is the question. Can you rest on God, with nothing else on which to rest, as you would on $50,000 worth of bonds? Can you believe, clear down to the bottom of your soul, and without a quiver of doubt, that the Lord will take care of you? If you can, then do it, and God will bless you in it. But if you are going into this way of living as you would into a lion's cage, trembling all over; if you see nothing but starvation at the end of it; then I advise you not to make the venture."

And there were few or none who did make the venture. The question often went from mouth to mouth, "How will the deacon come out with his experiment? How will it strike him when too old to work?"

I removed from the town while Deacon C— was in the prime of his powers.

Years passed on, and I heard nothing of him or his fortunes. But at last, shortly after his death, came a letter from an excellent lady, in the same church, which read substantially as follows:

"By the way, it will interest you to know how Deacon C— came out at last with his life of faith. Some two years before his death he was struck with paralysis and rendered helpless. The E— Company (a large corporation in whose service he was) esteemed him so highly that for a year they continued his salary. Then it fell off to half-pay for about the same period. At last his income ceased altogether. But his cheerfulness never abated; his confidence, that God would provide for him never seemed clouded. He was brought finally to his last hundred dollars, when the time arrived for his annual contribution to the American Board. Without hesitation he divided the amount with the Lord, giving $50 to the cause of missions. So matters stood when an aged aunt of his, who had died suddenly, was found to have left him $11,000, which provided for him through the remainder of his life."

A VISIT TO MRS. LIVINGSTONE'S GRAVE.

IN a recently published work on Tropical Africa, Professor Drummond thus describes a visit which he paid to the grave of the wife of the great explorer and the daughter of Dr. Robert Moffat: "Late in the afternoon we reached the spot—a low ruined hut 100 yards from the river's bank, with a broad veranda shading its crumbling walls. A grass-grown path straggled to the doorway, and the fresh print of a hippopotamus told how neglected the spot is. Pushing the door open, we found ourselves in a long dark room, its mud-floor broken into fragments, and remains of native fires betraying its latest occupants. Turning to the right, we entered a smaller chamber, the walls bare and stained, with two glassless windows facing the river. The evening sun, setting over the far-off Morumballa Mountains, filled the room with its soft glow, and took our thoughts back to that Sunday evening, twenty years ago, when in this same bedroom, at this same hour, Livingstone knelt over his dying wife, and witnessed the great sunset of his life. Under a huge baobab tree—a miracle of vegetable vitality and luxuriance—is Mrs. Livingstone's grave. The picture in Livingstone's book represents the place as well kept and surrounded with neatly planted trees. But now it is an utter wilderness, matted with jungle grass, and trodden by the beasts of the forest; and as I looked at the forsaken mound and contrasted it with her husband's tomb in Westminster Abbey, I thought perhaps the woman's love which had brought her to a spot like this might be not less worthy of immortality.

"The day will come when that now 'forsaken mound' will be sacred to African Christianity. The cause for which the daughter of Robert Moffat and the wife of David Livingstone lived and died will triumph gloriously. Africa will be redeemed."

THREE FRENCH CONVERTS.

IN the recently issued report of the McAll Mission in France the following significant incidents are reported: More than a year ago an elderly gentleman took a back seat one evening in one of the mission rooms, being led to attend by receiving an invitation paper in the street. After some weeks' attendance, he said to the missionary: "Sir, I have made a discovery; without knowing it, I am already of your religion." "What religion is that?" "I was sick in the hospital, and one of the fathers urged me to the confessional. I said, 'I respect you, my father, and will listen to you; but I cannot confess to a man.' Since coming here, I find that I am of your religion, the religion of God—of Jesus Christ." "Have you read the New Testament?" "The New Testament—what is that?" "The Book that teaches our religion." "No, I never heard of it." The Book was, for the first time in his life, put into his hand, and thenceforward he became a diligent student of the Bible. After listening to a sermon on "Only believe," light dawned upon him, and he exercised the power of faith. Since then he has been "another man," and is now a member of the Reformed Church.

Another man, who had sunk to the lowest depths of degradation, heard words of hope in a mission-hall, and, by the grace of God, has been enabled to show by outward change how real is the inward transformation which has been wrought. This is not the only man who, after such an experience, has boldly come forward and acknowledged a debt of gratitude to the Mission, which God has honored to both present and eternal salvation.

The case of many French working men is represented by the remark of one of their class at a meeting at Versailles, lately. This man listened eagerly to the Gospel message, then heard for the first time, and when asked afterwards whether he liked what had been said, he replied: "Sir, if it could be true, if I could believe it, how happy I should be!" Thus it is clear that the workers have to show the people that the Gospel has its foundation in truth, for the multitudes have been led away by the conflicting errors of superstition and scepticism. It cannot be said that they have rejected the truth, for they have never known it.

TORTURE IN INDIA.

WHAT heathenism is capable of in the way of inhumanity may be realized from an incident reported in the Indian Witness of May 11. It says: In a small village in the Chennar taluka, in the Nizam's dominions, were several shepherds who for some unknown, or at any rate unstated, reason were looked upon by the natives with a suspicious eye. It was held that there was something uncanny about them, and a bachcha falling sick after being "looked at" by one of the unhappy Strephons, it began to be whispered that the man had dealings in witchcraft. Like most isolated villagers, the people were superstitious to a degree, and when an outbreak of cholera took place, they naturally attributed the epidemic to the evil influence of the shepherds. The people murmured at them when they met, and threatened them with sticks, and eventually, when the cholera had carried off fifteen or sixteen of their number, the survivors assembled in a body and went out to seize the evil ones. They were successful in finding only two of them, and these they brought down to the village well, where they were solemnly tried by a punchayet for witchcraft. They were found guilty, of course, and sentenced to death by torture. They were first carried to an open space on the outskirts of the village, and there in the presence of all the people who had escaped the epidemic, their teeth were drawn with pincers and their heads shaved. "Water in which leather had been well soaked" was then given them, and they were compelled to drink liberally of it. While all this was going on, two narrow pits were being dug in the sandy soil, and when these were ready, the miserable victims of superstition—alive but in desperate agony—were buried in them up to their necks. Then, as a crowning horror, wood was piled round the living heads, a fire was lighted, and the skulls of the unhappy men were roasted into powder. It is a melancholy kind of satisfaction to learn that some twenty-eight or thirty of the villagers who took part in this ghastly tragedy have been sentenced to terms of imprisonment varying from seven to fourteen years, and we understand that Colonel Ludlow is moving to have this punishment increased. There is evidently a great field for missionary effort in the Nizam's territory.

A MOTHER'S MEETING IN CHINA.

IN a new book, descriptive of her work in China, Miss Geraldine Guinness thus describes a mother's meeting at which she was present in which smoking was allowed:

When I went in, the room, to my surprise, was full of smoke. Nobody seemed concerned, however, so, though I could not see the source from whence the smoke proceeded, I suppose it must be all right, and take my place at the back of the room, from whence I can see all that is going on. One dear woman just in front of me listens as indeed to a new story; she has never come before, and never heard the gospel message until to-day! She is elderly, and very poor, but evidently drinks in the meaning of the words lovingly addressed to her by our sisters. Her face is very kindly and intelligent, though all wrinkled and seamed with age and care. It is quite a conversational meeting, this. The friends put in remarks with perfect freedom, and in loud tones that must be almost confusing, I should think, to the chief speakers.

The two grand T'ai T'ai (ladies) in the front row seem very interested and intelligent; and one of them appears to interpret to the rest, and both respond at every few words with loud and consenting exclamations.

Such gay, wonderful figures these ladies make in their black ruar-tsi (or outer garment) trimmed with broad bands of color and bright lan-kan (or many-hued ribbon border), their shining black hair garnished with wonderful, countless ornaments of trembling filigree or polished brilliant stones, their long and heavy ear-rings reaching to their shoulders, and their massive golden chains and bracelets! One of them holds in her hand a thin cane, fully four feet in length, the upper end of which is richly mounted in silver. I think it must be—yes, it is—actually a pipe! The servant is even now stooping to light it, and the mysterious smoke is explained. The maid produces tobacco (I suppose) and matches, and bending down to the floor on which the bowl of the long pipe rests, kindles the flame, while her young mistress puffs away the smoke from the further end quite complacently, and almost without interrupting her running commentary on what is being said. Wonderful spectacle! The little hand, with its heavy gold rings and long, carefully preserved nails, holding the richly engraved silver head of the long, thin pipe; the olive-tinted Chinese face, shining black hair, carefully dressed and gay with green, amber, and golden pins and many-colored artificial flowers, and all wreathed in clouds of softly tinted smoke puffed from the placid lips of the lady. The strange sight, however, produces no disturbing effect upon the meeting, which goes quietly on as if nothing unusual were happening. One poor woman in front follows her grander sister's example, and lights her more humble pipe, at which she is now contentedly puffing away, her eyes all the time fixed on the bright face of the dear speaker.

The various short addresses over, the meeting breaks up into small groups for conversation; our friends seem unwilling to go just yet, though they have been here over an hour. The poor woman, who had never heard the glad tidings before, listens with deep interest as the Gospel story is fully and patiently explained to her by one of our sisters.

ANTICHRIST: HIS PERSON AND RELATIONS.

By Rev. A. R. Fausset.

The Latent and Patent Apostasy—The Distinction Defined by Jesus—By John—Paul's Adversary Identified with Antichrist—His Coming Preceded by a Falling Away—The Unclean Spirits—His Coming Near at Hand—His Relation to the Jews—A Persecutor Cut Off—His Relation to the Church—His Destruction.

MANY believe that Antichrist has already come, and that the Romish apostasy realizes all the foretold features. But we must distinguish between the Antichristianity that is latent in the long ages of apostatizing Christendom and the patent antagonism to God of the last Antichrist. That latent Antichristianity answers to "the harlot;" this patent antagonism to Christ answers to the second "beast," ministering to the first beast of Rev. 13. Jesus foretells the former (Matt. 24:5), "Many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ." But he emphatically distinguishes these from the last Antichrist, who shall come in his own name. John 5:23. "If another shall come in His own name, Him ye will receive." It is the apostle John who alone uses the name "Antichrist." His definition decides the question. 1 John 2:22: "He that denieth that Jesus is the Christ; he is Antichrist that denieth the Father and the Son." Like his Master, John distinguishes the many Antichrists of the Church from the one Antichrist of the last age. "For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an Antichrist." An Antichrist has come in many past ages; as Cerinthus and the Gnostics in John's time, and Mahomet subsequently denying Jesus' Messiahship and Divinity. But these are not the Antichrist to come.

Many Coming in Christ's Name

The Adversary,

in Paul's 11 Thess. 2:1-12 is John's Antichristos. He, too, "opposeth all that is called God, or that is worshipped. So that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God." The Pope as God does sit in God's temple, claiming God's exclusive prerogative of infallibility: but it is in God's name he does it, and not as "opposing all that is called God." "The mystery of lawlessness" was working in Paul's days (11 Thess. 2:7, 8), and has been for 1,800 years; but the "revelation" of "the lawless one," "the man of sin," "the son of perdition" (the designation given only to the two persons, Judas and Antichrist), is reserved for the last short days which precede the Lord's "destroying him with the brightness of His coming."

The "falling away first" (11 Thess. 2:3, 9) precedes the revelation of the man of sin, "whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power, signs, and lying wonders." The mediæval apostasy of Rome and the Greek churches answers to the "lawless in mystery." But Holy Writ plainly indicates that just before the Son of man shall come to take His great power, and bring under law the disordered world, there shall be of the people and their rulers "against the Lord and against His Anointed." Our Lord Himself foretells the same lawlessness; and that its result will be that waning of love which is to be characteristic of the Laodicean or last age of the Church. "Because lawlessness shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold." (Matt. 24:12.)

A Wide-Spread Conspiracy

The culmination of this rebellion against law, and God the Lawgiver, shall be under Antichrist fully revealed, after the elect Church shall be translated. (Luke 18:8): "When the Son of man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?" This plainly implies that the close of this dispensation, like that of the Jewish dispensation, shall be unbelief.

Similarly in 1 Tim. 4, the earlier stage of lawlessness, namely, while it is in mystery, is depicted: "The Spirit speaketh expressly that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing demons, forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats, which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving." Here the mediæval apostasy is plainly indicted. But in the later Epistle, 11 Tim. 3, mark the change from "latter" to "last," and from "times" to "days." "In the last days perilous times shall come." The features here are no longer those of lawlessness in mystery, but of lawlessness

On the Verge of Being Openly Revealed.

In a word, the last days will be a relapse from God to paganism, from Christianity to Antichristianity. The unclean spirit of pagan idolatry and sorcery, cast out once by early Christianity, and again at the Reformation, shall return with seven-fold more wicked spirits, and the last state shall be worse than the first.

The second beast is identified in Rev. 19:20 with "the false prophet," who did miracles before the first beast to deceive men into worshipping the image of the first beast, (13:13, 14.) Our Lord foretells (Matt. 24:24), "False Christs and false prophets shall show great signs, inasmuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the elect." St. Paul said (11 Thess. 2:9), that "the lawless one's coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders." And St. John (Rev. 16:13, 14) said that "three unclean spirits came out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet; for they are the spirits of demons, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the war of that great day of God Almighty."

The Unclean Spirits.

Infidelity is the unclean spirit from the dragon Satan, lawlessness from the beast, and false spiritualism from the false prophet. (Rev. 19:20; 22:15.) When the apostate church is cast off by the beast or world—as men cannot do without some spiritual worship, however untrue—the false prophet, the last Antichrist, meets their want, and takes the place of the discarded apostate church. (Rev. 13.) As "patience" was the believer's need to overcome the long-continuing first beast, so "wisdom is our need against the second beast. World-principles generally culminate in a person; so the world-conforming principles of apostate Judaism issued in the Old Testament Antichrist, Antiochus Epiphanes, who set up the idol Jupiter in the temple of Jehovah at Jerusalem, and persecuted all who would not conform to idolatry.

The signs of our times warn us that the last Antichrist's manifestation Cannot be Far Off.

Never was infidelity, the dragon's lie, so rampant. Evolution without the Divine Evolver; matter alleged to be the potential mother of life and mind; God denied alike in nature and in revelation; the higher criticism undermining the authority of Holy Scripture within the Church, and the world-philosophers from without utterly repudiating it; the Lord's coming in the past, and in the future ignored by multitudes. Then Nihilism, Communism, Postivism, Dynamitism, and mobocracy indicate the growing antipathy to all law, while Spiritualism already alleges its necromantic miracles, which seem ominous of some coming false prophet's lying signs.

His Relation to the Jews.

But what is the relation of Antichrist to the Jews? Besides the little horn of the fourth kingdom, which answers to the first beast rider, upon by the harlot, and which is mentioned in Dan. 7, there is the little horn of the third kingdom (Dan. 8), which is associated especially with the Jews: indeed, it is significant that Dan. 2 and 7 are in Chaldee, the language of the Gentiles, but 8, 11, and 12 in Hebrew, the language of the Jews. Antiochus Epiphanes, the Old Testament Antichrist, is portrayed in Dan. 11 in minute detail. But language is there used which shows that the final and exhaustive fulfilment is yet future, for the coming king is to corrupt by flatteries such as do wickedly against the covenant, and to do according to his will, and, like the lawless one of 11 Thess. 2, to "exalt himself above every god, and speak marvellous things against the God of gods." In Dan. 9:27, also, a "prince" is mentioned who "shall confirm the covenant with many for one week, and in the midst of the week cause the sacrifice to cease."

Blessed be God, the oppression of Israel by Antichrist, though terrible, shall be brief; the ten kings whom Antichrist seduces receive power only for one mystical hour with the beast (Rev. 17:12). From the first he is doomed to perdition, and therefore called "the son of perdition" (Rev. 17). "He shall plant the tabernacles of his palace between the seas in the glorious holy mountain; yet he shall come to his end, and none shall help him." (Dan. 11:45.) "Alas! for that day is great, so that none is like it; it is even the time of Jacob's trouble; but he shall be saved out of it." (Jer. 30:7.)

His Relation to the Church.

What is Antichrist's relation to the Church, and to the world, and to the Lord's second coming? Already the beast or world-power is more and more throwing off the apostate church which has ridden upon it, in those once priest-ridden countries, Austria, France, Spain, and even Rome itself. In Protestant countries, also, governments and peoples are less and less under the authority of the external Church. When the world has completely got rid of its sham profession of Christianity, then will Antichrist be revealed. The pure Church, the Lamb's Bride, known to God amid hollow professors, will then be ready for her translation. She may suffer, or not, in the early part of Antichrist's persecutions of the elect Jews. But she shall be caught up to her Lord directly after Antichrist's "gathering his hosts to the war of that great day of the Lord," and before his gathering them together to Armageddon.

His Destruction.

Yes, believing brethren, ye who "watch and pray always" shall be "counted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man." When Antichrist gathers the kings of the earth and their armies, the Lord Christ gathers His saints; "they that are with Him are called, and chosen, and faithful" (Rev. 17:14); with them He inflicts the blow which decides that the beast, the false prophet, and then Satan himself, are to cease oppressing this earth. "The Lord shall destroy Antichrist with the brightness of His coming." (11 Thess. 2:8.) "I will encamp about mine house (the restored temple) because of the army"—that of Antichrist usurping God's place in God's temple (Zech. 9:8), and slaying Christ's two witnesses then at Jerusalem (Rev. 11). He whose right it is shall take the kingdom as His own. With Him shall reign His saints over the world, just because they gained "the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." (1 John 5:4.) Believers would not accept the world kingdom at Satan's hands; therefore they shall have it at Jesus' hands. Having such glorious hopes, and seeing that the predicted signs are "beginning to come to pass, lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh." (Luke 21:28.)

Prophetic Studies. A Report of the Address delivered at the Prophetic Conference at Chicago, with portraits of some of the speakers. It contains 216 pages. Fifty cents in paper covers, including postage. Address Manager, 63 Bible House, New York.

OFFICES, 71 AND 73 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 3 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Measures for the Relief of the Johnstown sufferers are being actively pushed forward. Dynamite has been used on the gorge at the bridge, all other means having failed to break it up. Even now the passage is not quite clear of obstructing beams and logs. The number of men now at work on the ruins is 5,500. The relief committee intends to erect 100 portable houses for the survivors. The houses will be 12 by 26 feet, and each will be large enough to accommodate six persons. They will be furnished with a stove and utensils, chairs, beds and bedclothes, and other household necessities. The object is to start the town on a rise from the ruins. If the houses give satisfaction the committee will buy 1,000 of them and build up the city. Gen. Hastings has purchased an immense quantity of lumber, and will begin building shanty stores for those who will resume business. More than one hundred have already made application.

Two Overwhelming Disasters Befell the prohibition cause last week. On Tuesday, Pennsylvania voted on the amendment, and rejected it by the enormous majority of 185,173. On Thursday, Rhode Island, which has had the amendment in her constitution for three years, voted its repeal by a majority of 18,596. In the latter case the prohibition vote was 9,853. In 1886, when the amendment was added to the constitution, it was 15,113. The liquor vote, which in 1886 was 9,230, has risen to 28,449. The result may have been due to some extent to the example of Pennsylvania two days before, but unprejudiced observers say that it was chiefly due to the lax enforcement of prohibition during the past three years. They believe that many voted for repeal, not because they had become friendly to liquor-selling, but because they found prohibition was not enforced, and preferred, if liquor must be sold, to have it sold openly under the regulation of the authorities. In Pennsylvania the prohibitionists complain loudly of treachery. They say that the machine of both political parties was used unscrupulously to roll up the enormous majority. Chairman Palmer, of the prohibitionist committee, is most bitter against Senator Quay, who professed to be in favor of the amendment, while his heelers, who are completely under his influence, were the most active workers against it. He was, however, careful to say that his accusation of treachery did not apply to Gov. Beaver, Gen. Hastings, or James McManus, "who were honestly for the amendment." Happily, the prohibitionists are not the kind of men who easily lose heart, or the series of defeats they have sustained in the last two years would crush them.

President Harrison Gave a Pledge to a party of New Yorkers who waited upon him on Thursday last, which it may be hoped he will withdraw on further consideration. At the last election a man named Crowley was nominated by the Republicans of his district for the Assembly. He was defeated, because many Republicans quietly scratched his name from the ticket, and others openly worked against his election. The assistance of the President has now been invoked to secure the punishment of these bolters. There was a possibility, it appears, that one of them would be appointed a collector, and another a postmaster, and a deputation was sent to the President to protest against the appointments. The President is reported to have said: "No man who is a traitor to his party, or to any solemn obligation, can be appointed to office with my permission." We are sorry to hear of this determination, because, if maintained, it will exclude from office many men who would be efficient employees, whose appointment would do credit to the Administration. Unhappily the conventions sometimes nominate men of immoral character, or men mentally incapable of performing the duties of the office to which they are nominated. Then citizens are placed in a dilemma. They must either vote for the candidate of their party, and so be traitors to their conscience, or vote against him, and so be traitors to their party. Men who choose the latter alternative are more likely to be honest and trustworthy office-holders than those who choose the former. It will be very unfortunate if they are ineligible for office.

Mr. Roosevelt's Determination to Enforce Civil Service Reform so far as he and his fellow commissioners have the power to do so, was emphatically stated in an interview with a Herald correspondent on June 18. Referring to the Western trip on which the commissioners are starting, Mr. Roosevelt said: "We are going to try our best, both in the course of this trip and at all other times, to impress both public officials and the public itself with the fact that these examinations are going to be conducted absolutely on the square; that the law is to be administered without the least flinching and without the least favor; that every man who comes forward will be examined, marked, and certified purely on his merits, and absolutely without regard to his politics; and that the slightest attempt at evading the law, on the part of any postmaster or other public official, will be punished instantly to the extent of our powers. If enough men come forward at an examination, and the eligible lists are kept full, it is entirely impossible for an appointing officer to discriminate in favor of party friends." Mr. Roosevelt has been long enough in public life to know the obstacles that lie in his way. We may, therefore, conclude that he will not be discouraged when he encounters them. Comparatively few men desire to see the law honestly enforced, and those few are not in high office.

The Weldon Bill Making Canada an Unsafe refuge for fraudulent citizens of the United States having passed the Dominion Parliament and received the assent of the Governor-General, has been transmitted to England for the consideration of the Imperial Government. Its importance will be realized when it is known that on going into effect the United States can secure the extradition of men charged with larceny, embezzlement, obtaining money by false pretences, fraud committed in public office, or by a trustee or banker, and many other charges not now included in the list of extraditable offences. It is unusual to enlarge the list by legislative enactment, it is usually done by treaty, but Canada is so willing to rid herself of these criminals that she has not waited to negotiate for reciprocal favors. She has been led to enact the law by the fact that in many Canadian cities and towns are to be found United States fugitives from justice, who exert a vicious influence upon the Canadian population.

The Samoan Treaty was Signed in Berlin on Friday, June 13, and the plenipotentiaries immediately separated. A cable dispatch containing 5,000 words was sent to the State Department in Washington, but the definite terms of the agreement have not been disclosed, except to the respective Governments. The English newspapers, however, profess to have general knowledge of its provisions. The London Standard says that it secures an autonomous administration of the Samoan Islands under the joint control of Germany and the United States, Great Britain acting as arbitrator in the event of any difference arising. The Samoans will, under the new treaty, elect their own king and viceroy, and will be represented by a Senate composed of the principal chiefs, and a Chamber elected by the people. Samoa will have the right of levying duties of every description, and the treaty also stipulates that the Germans shall receive a money indemnity for their losses."

A Russian Proposal to Serbia for a Military convention confirmed last week the apprehensions of trouble in Serbia produced by the Czar's effusive speech. It is believed that it is a preliminary step for thrusting aside Queen Natalie and her son, and placing Prince Nikolo, of Montenegro, on the throne. The Regents told the Russian Minister that they were much gratified by the proposal, and had no doubt that they would be able to accept it. "The ratification of such a treaty of martial alliance," says the European correspondent of the New York Times, "will be accepted everywhere as a declaration of war against Austrian influence in the Balkans, and against the existence of Austrian rule in Bosnia and Herzegovina." The Austrian official journal, speaking for the Foreign Office, explicitly warned the Servians that Austria, Germany, and Italy would not remain idle lookers-on if any overt act of sympathy with Russia occurred.

Turkey is Reported to be Dreading a Renewal of Russian hostilities. During the past week the Russian Government has called the Sultan's attention to the condition of one of his provinces. This is the way in which the Russian attacks on Turkey have always been prefaced. The Sultan received a peremptory note from the Russian Ambassador, calling attention to the condition of Armenia, and demanding that the promises of reform and improvement made in Article 61 of the Treaty of Berlin be immediately fulfilled. If Russia was intent upon war, experience shows that this is precisely the sort of prefatory demand she would make upon the Porte.

An Innovation in Naturalization Law Has been made by the French Chamber of Deputies. It has passed a bill providing that children born in France of foreign parents and domiciled in France, at their majority shall be considered French citizens, unless they formally decline such citizenship; it also provides that children born in France of foreigners who were themselves born in France shall be regarded as citizens, but without the right of protest. The summary of the act cabled to this country says nothing about conscription. That is the most important aspect of the question. If there is no immunity from conscription for children of foreign parents born in France, it will be dangerous for such persons to visit France when they reach their manhood.

A Railway in Africa is to be Built to Open up the Congo country. It is stated that the King of the Belgians has agreed to furnish two million dollars toward the cost of constructing a railroad between the Falls of the Congo and Stanley Pool, a distance of 262 miles. The same amount is to be subscribed by Belgian stockholders, another million by Mr. McKinnon, the Scottish shipowner, and half a million by Mr. C. P. Huntington, the President of the Southern Pacific Railroad. There is also a rumor that an English syndicate has arranged to build a railroad from Zanzibar, on the east coast, to the Victoria Nyanza, a distance of about 400 miles. There is reason to hope that these railroads will be the means of breaking up the slave trade. At present Arab traders buy or steal slaves to carry the ivory they purchase in the interior to the coast, and on their arrival there sell the ivory and the slaves together. Conveying the ivory by rail will be safer and more speedy, and the traders will naturally avail themselves of the opportunity, and thus have less temptation to traffic in human flesh.

Any Subscriber Interested in this Journal, and desiring to promote its circulation, may have sample copies sent them postage-paid and free of charge, for distribution at camp-meetings or other places where such distribution will introduce the paper, and lead to increased sales. Send postal card stating number required to The Manager, 71 Bible House, New York.

The American Delegates to the International Sunday-School Convention in London sailed from New York on Wednesday last. The Cunard steamer Bothnia, was specially chartered to convey them. There were delegates from every State and Territory in the Union, and from each Province of Canada. There were over three hundred in all. The party were under the management of Mr. W. N. Hartshorn, who will look after their interests while abroad. If not prevented by bad weather, religious services will be held each morning and afternoon on the deck of the steamer. The steamer is expected to arrive in Liverpool on June 29, and special trains over the Midland Railway will take the company to London, where they will be quartered at the Midland Grand Hotel. On Monday evening, July 1, the delegates will be entertained at a special reception at the Mansion House, London, given in their honor by the Lord Mayor. The following day the opening exercises of the great Convention will be held in Memorial Hall, the spacious building erected by the Congregationalists for the meetings of their ministers. The sessions will continue until July 6, when the delegates will go to Willesden as guests of the Earl and Countess of Aberdeen, who have made extensive preparations for their entertainment.

Workmen's Dimes in a Ship's Bell have imparted to it a tone of extraordinary melody. Secretary Tracy, of the Navy, recently sent an inquiry about the bell of the new cruiser Charleston to the firm of contractors at San Francisco who built the ship. The head of the firm last week sent him a reply explaining the cause of the wonderful sweetness of the bell's sound. He said that a few days before the casting of the bell, the pattern-maker at the works suggested that it would be a pity to use ordinary metal, and suggested that each of the workmen on the steamer contribute ten cents in silver to enrich the composition and give a superior ring to it. The entire force of over a thousand responded to a man, the sum realized being nearly $150, almost all in ten-cent pieces, which was placed in the crucible and mixed with the other metal of the bell before casting. To a thoughtful man who hears the bell on that ship in after years, its dulcet note will be all the more impressive because its sweetness comes from the gifts of men of patriotic spirit. Infinitely more tender and impressive is the sound of the gospel bell. The Christian hearing its inviting sound knows that the secret of its power and value is that Christ gave His life that its sound might reverberate around the whole world. (Acts. 13: 38.)

A Little Child's Prayer furnished decisive evidence in a suit in a Court at Fresno, Cal., on June 7. A man had deserted his wife and his two children, and had been found in Fresno. His wife and her brother had an interview with him and endeavored to induce him to return. He refused, and when the law was invoked he defended his conduct in Court. He testified that his wife was a wicked woman, with whom he could not live, and that by word and example she corrupted her children. "Don't believe him, Judge," said the wife; "I have done my best with my home and the children, and I have reared them as they should be." The man still persisted, and between so much cross-swearing the Judge was puzzled. At last he asked if the children were in Court. A little girl three years old came forward, and the Judge questioned her. One or two questions were answered intelligently, and then the Judge said, "Could you say your prayers?" Without a moment's hesitation the little girl knelt in the Court-room, closed her eyes, clasped her hands, and in a reverential voice began, "Our Father who art in heaven." Before she reached the end of the prayer, tears stood in the eyes of the Judge, and the deep silence of the Court-room was broken by sobs from more than one rough fellow to whom the words recalled childhood's memories. There was no doubt in the mind of any one as to the justice in the case when the girl added to the Lord's Prayer an earnest petition for her father, which she had evidently been in the habit of putting up night and morning during his shameful absence from his family. The Judge would hear no more evidence, and in a voice broken with emotion, he gave his decision against the father. The mother could have had no idea when she so trained her child, that the result would be so valuable to her in the crisis of her life, but she did her duty, and her child enabled her "to answer him that reproached" her. (Prov. 27: 11.)

An Offer of $500 to Any One Willing to be bitten by a rabid dog was made in a joke recently by a physician at Sedalia, Mo. It was promptly accepted by a man who came on from Arkansas to submit to the experiment. The doctor explained to him that he did not intend the offer seriously, but only to show that the persons who professed faith in divers nostrums as an infallible cure for hydrophobia did not really believe in them. He thought no one believed in them so thoroughly as to risk their life on the efficacy of the remedy. The Arkansas man thought the doctor was trying to avoid paying the money, and was determined to win it. He had a madstone with him in which he had absolute confidence. He gained access to the place where the rabid dog was, boldly bared his arm, and exposed it to the dog. The animal immediately bit a piece of flesh out of it. The dog died in convulsions fifteen minutes later. The man applied his madstone to the wound, and on June 19 was still alive and well, but apprehensions are felt of his future condition. A better illustration of what faith is could not easily be found. He who trusts in Christ to save him from perdition as fully as that man trusted in his madstone to save him from hydrophobia, exercises saving faith. (11 Tim. 1: 12.)

The Strange History of a Ring Was Related at a fishing resort last week, and the story was investigated by a reporter of the New York Sun. It appears that in 1874 General Grant visited Greenwood Lake to fish. One afternoon he was fishing for pickerel, when he hooked a large eel. The slimy creature knotted itself with the leader, and in removing it a beautiful horseshoe ring slipped from the General's finger, and fell overboard. Banker J. Rhinelander Dillon visited the lake some weeks afterward, and killed a large pickerel. The idea occurred to him that he would like to taste a fish just out of the water, so his guide cleaned it, and they were about to row to shore to cook it when the guide picked up the entrails, preparing to throw them overboard. To his surprise he discovered a ring, which proved to be the very ring which General Grant had lost some weeks before. So many apocryphal fishing stories are told, that the reporter called upon Mr. Dillon to inquire about this one. Mr. Dillon was wearing the ring, and confirmed the story. He said that when he found that the ring had belonged to General Grant, he wrote to the family about it. Colonel Fred. Grant had replied that the family wished him to keep the ring he had so strangely found. Sometimes a preacher is discouraged by thinking that the pearl of gospel truth falling from his lips is as hopelessly lost as was that ring; yet in after years multitudes are enriched for all eternity when some one into whose soul it entered is holding it forth to the world. (Eccles. 11: 1, 6.)

A Fatal Flight From Danger was Taken by a terrified woman at Elmwood, Mass., during a recent thunder-storm. When the storm broke, a woman about sixty years of age was sitting alone in her house. She had always been afraid of the lightning, and on this occasion flash succeeded flash so rapidly, and the thunder peals were so deafening, that she was almost beside herself with terror. At length, during a lull of the storm, she summoned all her courage and ran to the house of a neighbor for company. She told how much she was afraid, and asked to be allowed to remain until the storm passed. She was welcomed, and sat down in an inner room. Scarcely had she seated herself when the storm broke with redoubled fury. One blinding flash struck the house, and the woman was seen to fall from her chair to the floor. At first it was thought that she had fainted in her fright, but on raising her it was found that she had been struck by the lightning and killed. Marks on her hair and her dress showed where the fatal bolt passed over her. It was a sad, strange result of the natural craving of a constitutionally timid person for human companionship in a time of terror. She did not go to them for safety, but for relief from her own distress. That is the course awakened sinners sometimes pursue. They go into society, to the theatre, or to other diverting scenes, not because they hope to gain there safety from the lightnings of Sinai, but that they may forget their fears. It is a foolish course, and the end of it is often far more awful than that of the poor creature who lost her life by the lightning. (Jonah 2: 7, 8.)

BRIEF NOTES.

A Woman's Christian Temperance Union is about to be organized in Oklahoma.

At a special meeting of the Montreal Presbytery, Messrs. MacVicar, MacKensie and MacDougall were ordained missionaries to China.

The University College of Toronto supports a missionary in Korea—the Rev. James S. Gale. He writes that the people are poor and down-trodden.

Mr. William Noble, the Temperance evangelist, has experienced another relapse, and is ordered to rest for six months. The doctors hope that he will then be fully restored and prepared for work.

Major Whittle has been holding very successful meetings in Stirling and Inverness, Scotland. Like his meetings in Edinburgh, Dundee, and Aberdeen, they were the means of a large number of conversions.

Mr. Yatman's meetings in Toledo, O., were blessed to the conversion of over four hundred persons. In spite of the excessively hot weather the largest auditorium in the city was crowded twice a day.

The Congregational church of Brunswick, Me., celebrated its 150th birthday on June 9. The Rev. W. P. Fisher delivered a historical sermon, and addresses were made by Professor Egbert Smyth and others.

A few gentlemen in Toronto have engaged what they call a "Cottage-Meeting Wagon," which they use for travelling through the city and outlying districts, from which they will hold religious meetings in the open air.

At the invitation of Rev. C. H. Spurgeon between 700 and 800 ministers and deacons belonging to various evangelical denominations in London met at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on May 30, to consider how best to deepen the spiritual life of the churches.

Lord Adelbert P. Cecil, the English evangelist, was drowned on June 13, in the Bay of Quinte, near Adolphus-town, about six miles east of Picton, Ont. Lord Cecil was a son of the second Marquis of Exeter, and was born in 1841. He was formerly a lieutenant in the Army.

The Rev. J. H. Lish, whose portrait appeared in this journal on March 6, has just graduated from the Allegheny Theological Seminary and received his license to preach. He would be glad to engage in evangelistic work or to supply a vacant pulpit. His address is 17 St. Mark's Place, New York.

The valuable work of the Young Women's Christian Association in New York, of establishing a sea-side cottage for girls in need of rest and change of air, is now in operation. The cottage is called the Leslie, and stands on the border of the lake close to the ocean. The cost of a two weeks' stay at the Leslie, including railroad fare to and from New York, is only $9.

The annual session of the Southern Baptist Convention was held lately in Memphis, Tenn. The delegated representation covered the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, Missouri, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia. The District of Columbia and the Indian Territory were also represented.

At the coming International Convention of Christian Endeavor Societies in Philadelphia, July 9, 10, and 11, at least six thousand young people are expected to attend from all parts of the United States and Canada. The Convention will meet on the afternoon of Tuesday, July 9, in the Armory Hall of the First Regiment on Broad Street, where the principal sessions will be held.

Dr. L. W. Munhall's meetings at Atchison, Kans., are attended with a wonderful outpouring of the Spirit. On June 12 the huge tent was crowded with over fifteen hundred people both afternoon and evening. It is remarkable that at the afternoon meeting so large a number of business men are present; it is a notable testimony to the influence of the services. Prof. and Mrs. Lowe's singing has a very marked effect.

TAKING POSSESSION.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"Moses my servant is dead; now therefore arise, go over this Jordan, thou, and all this people, unto the land which I do give to them, even to the children of Israel. Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, that have I given unto you, as I said unto Moses." Josh. 1: 2, 3.

Unsatisfactory Wanderings—Near the Inheritance, but Not in It—I. A Survey of the Inheritance—Exceeding Broad—The Limitation Self-Imposed—The Possessions Attainable—Assurance—Sonship—Holiness Communion—A Desirable Land—Full of Variety—II. The Title Deeds—A Valid Covenant—Gracious—Righteous—Sure—III. A Move Toward Possession—Going Over Jordan—How Possession is Taken—The Bargain of Penn and the Indians—How Sin is Driven Out—Reasons Why Possession is not Taken—A Hungry Man at a Free Meal.

UNDER the leadership of Moses the children of Israel had been journeying toward the land of promise. Owing to their waywardness, what might have been done in less than a month occupied many years. They wandered up and down in the wilderness, sometimes close on the border of their inheritance, and anon lost in the great desert. Alas! many of God's people are still in this unsatisfactory condition: they have come out of Egypt, the depths have swallowed up their adversaries, and they are on the way to the promised heritage: but they have not yet entered into rest. They will, we trust, ultimately reach the peace of God which passeth all understanding, for they have faith sufficient to prove them to be God's people, and, therefore, the Lord will surely bring them in; but, assuredly, they make a great deal of marching for very small progress. For lack of faith they go about, when with a step they might possess

The Promised Canaan.

Our friends have come as far as that first verse of our Lord's invitation, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest;" and they have a measure of that rest which comes of pardoned sin and confidence in Jesus. The pity is that they have not advanced to His next word of exhortation, "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me: and ye shall find rest unto your souls." This is a rest discovered and enjoyed through willing service; "Ye shall find rest unto your souls." Many people are saved in one sense, but in another sense they are seeking salvation. Oh that we may come to be saved in every sense! May salvation be ours in the broadest, widest, deepest, highest meaning of that blessed word! May we not only be saved from, but saved to! Saved from sin, that makes us safe. Saved to holiness, that makes us happy. May we realize our completeness in Christ this day, and cease from the wanderings of fear! It is time that we took possession of that goodly heritage which the Lord has made our own, for in Christ Jesus "we have obtained an inheritance."

I. First, let us take

A Survey of the Inheritance.

I would say of the inheritance which God has prepared for His saints, and has given to them, that it is exceeding broad. We read here in this Book of Joshua, "From the wilderness and this Lebanon, even unto the great river, the river Euphrates, all the land of the Hittites, and unto the great sea toward the going down of the sun, shall be your coast." These people did not conquer all the country, but were content with the narrow bounds of Canaan. They began their enterprise bravely, but soon showed a contracted spirit. Moses, in the thirty-fourth of Numbers, which is well worthy of a careful reading, gave them a little map, or ordnance survey, of the inner country, which they were commanded to conquer, and out of which they were to drive the inhabitants with the sword.

The various races of Canaanites had brought upon themselves the curse of a righteous God. Their existence upon the face of God's earth had become a calamity to mankind by reason of their horrible vices. They were doomed to utter extinction by the justice of God, as other races have been whose story profane history records. The Israelites were appointed to be their executioners. They did not accomplish their task; after a little while they began to make treaties and marriages with the doomed people, and they became thorns in their sides. Outside of these Canaanitish nations were greater territories, which stretched right away from the Lebanon ranges down to the border of Egypt as far east as the great river Euphrates, from whose banks their fathers came. This large domain was never altogether conquered by Israel, although David possessed a large portion of it, and Solomon still more. The people of these wide regions were not so far gone in evil as the degraded tribes of Canaan; and so they were to be spared, if they submitted to the sway of Israel. Even the inner kingdom Israel did not wholly subdue, and the wider region it left for centuries untouched.

Beloved, this is a sadly correct picture of what happens to numbers of God's people nowadays. The inheritance that God has given us to enjoy in Christ Jesus is exceeding broad; but

We Limit Ourselves.

All that we can think or desire is ours in the covenant of grace. There are immeasurable breadths and lengths, but we confine ourselves to close quarters. Truly "there is very much land yet to be possessed!" Some graces you must have, or you are not saved; some sins must at once be driven out of your life at the sword's point, or you are not the Lord's. As for the choicer graces, you are foolish indeed if you think of doing without them; and as for the less violent sins, you err greatly if you spare one of them. The deep knowledge, the spiritual experience, the high joy, the extreme delight, and the heavenly communion, which fall to the lot of certain of the saints, should be enjoyed by us all. There is no reason why one should miss them; for if they have but faith enough to grasp all that God gives, they have full permission to do so.

Just let me show what I mean. When we at first come to Christ by faith, into our inheritance, for we obtain the pardon of sin. Some believers are not even sure that they have a present and perfect remission; but some of us know that we are, once for all, "washed in the blood of the Lamb," and therefore we are whiter than snow. This we know; but beyond that lies "acceptance in the Beloved," which possibly we have not dared to claim. Hosts of professors are satisfied to be washed, but have not yet asked to be clothed with the righteousness of Christ.

We Begin to Enter

Think of another great blessing, namely, that of sonship. But sonship is not all—"If children, then heirs, heirs of God, joint heirs with Jesus Christ." Adoption you must have, heirship you ought to have. How rich you are, since God Himself is yours—"heirs of God"! Yes, God Himself is as truly yours as He is Christ's—"joint heirs with Jesus Christ." Why are we naked and poor and miserable, when we are heirs of a kingdom by reason of our adoption of the Lord? Let us take the good the Lord provides us.

Consider now the matter of regeneration. When we come to Christ by faith, we are born again, and made new creatures in Christ Jesus; this must be. But, brethren, when we are born again we perceive that the new birth begets and that new life develops itself in the beauty of holiness. Holiness is the fruit of regeneration; yet some imagine that they cannot be holy, at least not to any great extent. They believe that they can be saved from certain grosser evils, but they cannot ascend to those glorious heights of consecration and sanctification without which the believer can never attain to the stature of a man in Christ Jesus. My message to you is, "Arise, go over this Jordan, and take possession of the larger inheritance. Aspire to the utmost God can give.

A New Life,

Again, as soon as a man has believed in Jesus

he is safe. If thou believest that Jesus is the Christ, thou art born of God; and, being born of God, thou comest and the Lord shall preserve thee from evil. Many are satisfied that this is true, but they do not, therefore, enter into peace as they should. That undisturbed serenity which springs from a sense of perfect safety in Christ Jesus is a glorious domain into which they do not enter. This must not go on. We must have faith; but we may have, and we ought to have, the full assurance of faith.

Under the Divine Wing,

Once more: when we come to Christ by faith we have communion with God; and this is a land that floweth with milk and honey. Out of communion comes usefulness, and there are certain who fancy that they can never be very useful. The Lord cannot do many mighty works through them, because of their unbelief. They have to be fed with a spoon, like invalid children. If they had but faith enough to receive power from on high by fuller communion with God, they might become as David. There is no limit to the possibilities of usefulness in any man or woman when perfectly consecrated.

Next, it is exceedingly desirable. The country into which Israel entered was of a choice kind. Travellers in Palestine tell us that it is Within that narrow strip of territory you get plains and hills, frosts of winter and heats of summer, with products both of the semi-tropical and temperate zones. Palestine is the whole earth in miniature, and all the advantages of all lands are gathered into it. It was, in Joshua's days, a place of extreme fertility: "a land that floweth with milk and honey." Nor was this all; while it was fertile on the surface it was rich underneath. The useful metals were near at hand, and every other convenience. All things were waiting for the true heirs of the land. Beloved, when faith gets her heritage in Christ, she is brought into a wealthy place. When sin is driven out, and we come to live in God's own land, then we find precious treasure; we dig, and we are enriched. Why do we not take possession of that He has prepared for us?

The World Condensed.

This heritage upon which we are now looking down from the summit of our faith is full of variety. In Palestine there were fertile plains and rich valleys between rising hills and towering mountains. It was a land of brooks and rivers, a land which the Lord God thought upon. It was, in those days, the joy of all the earth; it was as the garden of the Lord for exceeding excellency. Beloved, if you come to Christ, you shall never need to go away from Him to find variety of joys. In His teaching you shall find Lebanons of sublime doctrine, and Sharons of pleasant precept. Here are Hermons of experience, Tabors of communion, Jabboks of prevailing prayer, and Cheriths of Divine Providence. The revelation of God is a blessed country, full of all manner of delights. All that is in Christ is meant for all believers, and, therefore, all believers may have all that is in Christ, who is all in all. We should not be content with pence when He endows us with pounds.

II. I beg you, in the next place, to glance at

The Title Deeds

of our inheritance. We shall not require a lawyer, to assist us in our examination; but if there should be here a legal critic who would like to overhaul our papers, he is welcome to do so. I would not mind exhibiting our title before the bench of judges, for it has no flaw in it, and will stand in the highest court—yea, even in the last judgment. I have pleaded this incomparable title in several courts already, and it has been found to convey to me a valid gift. Here is the title deed, "The land which I do give to them, even to the children of Israel." It is repeated further on, "Every place that the soul of your foot shall tread upon, that have I given unto you." This is an abstract of our title.

First, notice its covenant character: "I have given it to you." The Lord had given it to them from of old when He promised it to their father Abraham. Thus they came into possession by an ancient deed of gift which entailed it upon them from generation to generation. I am glad that our tenure of the kingdom of grace is ancient and well established, and that it is not so much with us, directly, as with One infinitely greater, with whom it stands fast for ever. Observe, next, that is notable for its graciousness. How does it run? Which I do sell to them? Ah, no! It is no sale, but a free gift. Does it say, "Which I do offer to them if they will earn it"? No, no! it is a present, unconditional grant of sovereign love. Nothing is freer than a gift: "The gift of God is eternal life." He has given us all things for nothing, that we might behold the exceeding riches of His grace.

This Deed of Gift

Note well the righteousness of our title—"Which I do give them." The Lord God has a right to give what He pleases, for "the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein." Of His own has He given unto us. Do not fail to see its sureness. He not only says, "I have given it," and in some other places, "I will give it," but He declares, "I do give it." God gives Christ and His grace to us every day. The highest privileges of the covenant of grace are not the monopoly of advanced saints, but they are the common property of all believers. Well, then, being yourselves favored and chosen, why do you not take hold upon the glorious estate which belongs to the chosen family? Come, brethren, bestir yourselves and claim your heirship. Take possession of the whole territory of grace which the Lord has dedicated to your use.

III. Now I have brought you to the third point—let us make

A Move Toward Our Possessions.

There is your land, but Jordan rolls between. The first thing to do in this matter is to go over this Jordan. What do we mean? Out in the wilderness, as a seeker whose faith does not enter in, you are like a sheep which wanders from the fold, and you find little rest. You are apt to be numbered with the Bedouin of the desert, and not with the people of the Lord. Come out from the world, and be separate. The land of gracious experience is meant for you to dwell in, so that you may be recognized as the Lord's peculiar people, separated unto the Most High. Are you ready to come right out, to be settled in Immanuel's land, to break every link with "the world which lieth in wickedness"? It is required of you, in order to your full entrance into the grace state, that you take up a decided stand on the Lord's side. On the other side of Jordan is your portion, and not in the wilderness of Sin.

Having decided for the Lord, you are next to take possession by an act of simple faith. The Lord says to you, "Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, that have I given unto you." This is an easy way of taking land: to put your foot down upon it. You will remember that the red Indians agreed to sell to William Penn as much land as a man could walk round in a day; and I do not wonder that at the end of the day they complained that the white brother had made a big walk. I think I should have put my best leg foremost if whatever I could put my foot upon would be mine; would not you? Why, then, do you not hurry up in spiritual matters? Many of the Lord's poor and unlearned ones obtain more from the promise than the more cultured ever do. The learned man lifts his head up, but the simple put their foot down; and this last is the way to the inheritance. By criticism you may put your foot in it, but by faith you Put Your Foot on it.

Strangers cavil, children claim. He that can trust his Lord may say, "In the name of the living God this blessing is mine." Come, then, brother, if there be more holiness, put your foot on it; if there be more happiness, put your foot on it; if there be more usefulness, put your foot on it. Lay your claim to all that is put within your reach in Scripture; this is the victory that overcometh the world, and conquereth Canaan, even our faith.

But the Canaanite was there! Yes, I know it; but you see he had no right there; the Lord had outlawed him. The land was Israel's by the Lord's gift, and they had a right to fight for the possession of their own estates. God's people are in conflict with sin, and they carry out this war vigorously when they have first seen their right to the blessings of grace, as given them of the living God. In spiritual things, Waive No Spiritual Right.

Say to sin, that now mars your peace, "Peace is mine; clear out!" Say to sin, that stops your usefulness, "That usefulness is mine. I claim it; clear out!" Hivite, Jebusite, Gergashite, whatever sort of fellow you are, clear out of my heart and life, for holiness is mine! God, the sovereign possessor of all things, has given us our redeemed nature, to have and to hold for His glory, and we mean to have it!

I long to encourage you, my friends, to carry on this sacred crusade. I would have you grasp all which the hand of love holds out to you. Need I urge you? If there be such need, you are in a sorry way. I do not believe that if I should read from this pulpit that my friend John Smith over there had been left five thousand acres of land, I should require to follow him home to persuade him to go and look at it. If my sister yonder received a notification that a very nice little estate had been left her in the country, I do not believe I need beg her to look after it. She would take an early train to-morrow morning to go and look over her farm. Brethren, here is an inheritance so broad and wide and lasting; why do you not hasten to take it? There is holiness, do you not want it? There is serenity, do you not desire it? There is joy unspeakable and full of glory, do you not wish for it? There is usefulness, do you not hunger for it? This is the reason Why Some are Indifferent.

They are ignorant; they do not even know that these choice blessings are to be had. But all that any child of God was, you may be; all the joy and bliss and holiness ever enjoyed on earth, you may enjoy. The land is before you; go in to possess it. Many do not possess the land because of unbelief. You are empty, but Jesus fills you. You are in prison, but Jesus sets you at liberty. Why not rejoice in that liberty? The Lord deliver us from unbelief, for it is enough to shut any man out of the inheritance. Many are indolent. Oh the laziness of some of God's people! I will not enlarge upon this matter, probably you know something about it yourselves. Lastly, the indecision of a great many is another cause why they do not possess the land. There is a hesitancy to go up and seize it. They mean to be better Christians before they die. I wonder how many Christians here would like to finish their lives to-day! Set your house in order at once, my brother. Give away a full portion of your substance immediately. Begin to work for Jesus at once. Why should you hesitate? You blame the sinner when he delays; surely the saint is to be blamed, too, when he also lingers.

A Free Meal.

I have done when I have said to any soul here that is seeking the Lord, if you to-day come in, and accept the blessings of the covenant, you may have them and welcome. Do not say to yourself, "It will be a presumptuous thing for me to believe in Jesus." It will be a kind of presumption which has no sin in it. If a rich man in one of the famine-stricken districts of China were to say to his servant, "Provide a great feast, and set it out in the street," and he were then to put up a notice to hungry Chinamen, "Whosoever will may come," I do not think that, if I were a hungry Chinaman, I should stop away from the dinner from fear of presumption. I should fall to, and ask no questions, for my stomach's sake, if for nothing else. O poor, doubting sinner, you had better do the same. Feed freely, and fear not. Come, let us sing together that little ditty:

"I do believe, I will believe,
That Jesus died for me;
And on the cross He shed His blood
From sin to set me free."

This will be a blessed morning for you, if you can not only sing it, but carry it out at once, by a simple faith in our living, risen, reigning Saviour. God bless you for Christ's sake!

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

A CHILD'S STRANGE PITY.*

A FEW months ago a child of some five or six years of age had said her prayers one evening, and was lying in her bed between sleeping and waking, her mother sitting by her side till she fell asleep. As she lay there in her drowsy mood she was overheard saying under her breath, "Poor God! Poor God!" "But why do you pity Him, Alice?" asked her mother. "Because," said the child, "because He has to sit up all night to take care of little children." That was very pretty of her, was it not? And I think it must have been as pretty to God Himself as it appears to us: for if I know anything of our Father in heaven, He must have been more pleased with the gentle pity and thoughtfulness of that simple and kindly heart than with many a solemn function of public worship. But what a treasure such a thought must have been to little Alice herself! What terror could the darkness hold for her when she was so sure that God, her kind Father in heaven, was sitting up all night to take care of her and of all little children? She had taken shelter in the harbor of a simple trust in God, and knew that she was safe, let the winds rave and blow as they would. And you will find safety and rest from all you fear, whatever it may be, if only you are sure that God is your Father in heaven, and loves you as much better than your earthly father, or even your mother, as the heavens are high above the earth. For God is all-wise, and knows what is best for you; all-good, and will give you what is best; all-powerful, and can give you what it is best for you to have. No one of you is too little, or too weak, to love Him and put your trust in Him; to believe, with little Alice, that He watches all day and sits up all night to take care of little children. And if He is taking care of you by night and by day, of what need you be afraid?

The Uses of the Rod,

Were we swift to hear, there would be no need of the rod. In this life at least God is training us for wisdom and goodness, in order that by and by we may serve Him with a perfect heart. He is seeking to make us partakers of His own righteousness, that we may be partakers of His own peace and blessedness. And were we, while at school, to learn the lessons He sets us, with diligence, and mind our manners and do our duty, He who does not willingly afflict the children of men would not have recourse to the rod. It is we who by our own indolence, our undutifulness, our self-will, or our open and flagrant disobedience to His commands, compel Him to chastise and correct us.

A Roman Process of Law.

It was quite common for a Roman citizen, if he were childless, to adopt a son; and not infrequently he selected a well-born or an accomplished slave, who had assisted him in his studies or had managed his household affairs. The legal process of adoption was complicated and tedious. First, the lad or man was taken before the civil magistrate and released from the bonds and disabilities of his servile condition by a formal instrument. Then for a period he had to enter on a state of probation, during which, without a son's rights or claims, he had to discharge the duties of a son and occupy a son's place. If he showed a filial temper and stood his probation well, he was once more taken before the magistrate and formally arrayed in the toga virilis, the robe of free Roman manhood, declared to be the son of his former master, and instated in all the rights, immunities, and privileges both of citizenship and sonship. This final ceremony was called "the adoption." It is to this ceremonial act that the apostle seems to refer when describing the future glory of the redeemed. (Rom. 8:23.) Once in bondage to vanity and corruption, they have even now already been raised from their abject condition. They are no longer slaves. They are being proved and trained. Remnants of their past servile condition and habits still cling to them, some danger of falling away from, of proving unfit for, "the adoption." But when the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised, then they will be openly avowed to be the sons of God, amid the splendors of the heavenly court, be clothed upon with the new robe of a free and glorious humanity, admitted to all the rights, honors, and privileges of Divine sonship, and enter on the inheritance.

* "The House and Its Builder." A book for the doubtful. By Samuel Cox, D. D. A series of discourses showing that even those who accept all that sceptical scientists contend for must logically acknowledge the existence of a Being entitled to reverence, gratitude, and love. Any young man who has drifted from the anchorage of his fathers would find in this work brotherly counsel and guidance, which are the more valuable because they start from his level and proceed on lines which he is accustomed to follow. Pp. 195; price $1; published by Thomas Whittaker, 2 and 3 Bie House, New York.

Dr. F. J. Falding.

Tahitians Welcoming John Williams.

A WELCOME TO A MISSIONARY.

(See Illustration.)

SEVENTY-THREE years ago nine young men were ordained at one solemn service as missionaries to the heathen. Among them were two whose names the Church will never forget. They were John Williams and Robert Moffat. One year later, John Williams and his young wife, Mary Chauner, landed and commenced their work in Tahiti. The story of their difficulties, their hardships, their unwavering faith, has often been told. How they went from Tahiti to Raiatea and from island to island preaching to peoples who had never heard the word of God before, is a matter of history. Seventeen years they worked there, and they had the joy of receiving into communion men who not long before were half-naked savages, whose highest enjoyment was in massacre and bloodshed, and who were familiar with the taste of human flesh. Never since the Apostolic days was so wonderful a change in a whole people witnessed as under the labors of John Williams and his devoted wife. But at the end of the seventeen years the glorious work had to be suspended for a time, Mrs. Williams was prostrated with illness, and Mr. Williams was enfeebled by protracted labor. They paid a visit to their native land for rest and recuperation. Four years later Mr. and Mrs. Williams returned, carrying with them five thousand New Testaments in the Raratonga language. Their reception was a striking testimony to the value of their work. Canoes filled with rejoicing natives put off for the ship in which they were, and competed for the honor of carrying their white friends ashore. Shouts of joyous welcome rent the air; the men waved their paddles above their heads, and manifested, by every means they could think of, their gladness at the return of their beloved teachers. It is a matter for thankfulness now that John Williams had the pleasure which that welcome must have given him. Just a year later his earthly labors closed forever. On the beach at Erromanga, whither in spite of warnings of the ferocity of its people he went to plant the gospel, he fell beneath the cruel blows of the men to whom he was carrying the glad tidings of eternal life.

REV. F. J. FALDING, D. D.,

Chairman of the English Congregational Union.

THE much-coveted honor of presiding over the Union of the Congregational ministers of England and Wales has fallen for this year to Dr. Falding, the principal of the college now known as the United Yorkshire College, which is a union of Airedale and Rotherham colleges. The Union had elected as its chairman the Rev. Griffith John, the eminent missionary in China, but Mr. John felt himself compelled to decline the honor, the work in China having, as he said, so completely absorbed his thoughts and affections that everything else appeared to him insignificant in comparison. The council of the Union thereupon invited Dr. Falding to occupy the chair, and he accepted.

Frederick J. Falding is seventy-one years of age. He was born at Lounside, near Sheffield, in 1818. Happily for him, he had the advantage not only of a pious home, but of a school the principal of which was an earnest Congregational minister. As a boy he was remarkable for his studious disposition, and when he left school he was able to take a position as teacher in a school in Leeds. There he formed the acquaintance of the Rev. John Ely, by whose advice he devoted himself to the ministry. He was admitted to Rotherham College in 1839, but in 1843 he secured a scholarship in Glasgow University. He graduated from that institution with the degree of M. A. His first charge was at Wellington, in Shropshire, but subsequently removed to Bury, in Lancashire, where he combined his ministerial duties with a Professorship at Rotherham College. In 1850 he was elected principal of the college, which position he held until its union with Airedale, when he became President of the united college. Though past the threescore years and ten of the Psalmist's allotted period of life, Dr. Falding is hale and vigorous, and shows no diminution of the energy that has characterized his early manhood.

IN THE TOILS.

(See Illustration on page 413.)

FEW men were more popular in his own city than Harold Grey. The best of good fellows, the brightest of companions, and the most generous of friends, he was voted by all his circle. It was not very welcome news when it was announced that he was going to be married. Not a few deplored the change in his condition, and prophesied that the bachelors' parties would be dull without him.

He was married, and after spending a year in Europe, he and his wife returned. Not many days afterward a party was given in their honor by one of Grey's oldest friends. Mrs. Grey was a stranger to most of the guests, but she could not fail to see how highly esteemed her husband was by them all. It was a pleasant party, full of good-humor and merriment. At last the ladies rose, and Harold Grey held the door open for them to pass out.

"Do not stay long over the wine, Harold," Mrs. Grey said, in an undertone, as she passed him. "I shall be dull without you among so many strangers."

"No, dear," he said, "only half an hour."

The door closed, Grey returned to the table, and droll stories and witty sallies made the time pass quickly. Grey wished he had not been quite so definite in his promise to his wife; but he rose punctually and begged his friends to excuse him.

"No," said one of them, "we cannot spare you yet. Sit down a few minutes, and then we will all go. It is early days for you to surrender your liberty. You have a charming wife, but she must not monopolize you."

So urged, Harold resumed his seat, and the wine passed freely and the talk grew more animated. Grey was amazed when, looking at his watch, he saw that it was nearly two hours since he had made that promise to his wife. He was vexed and sorry, and immediately arose and claimed the fulfilment of his friends' promise to accompany him to the drawing-room.

"Yes," said the one who had urged him to remain, "and if you think you will have a curtain lecture, I will help you make peace."

Meanwhile Mrs. Grey was sitting among the ladies listening to feminine gossip without paying much attention to it. It was not so much that she was hurt by her husband's failure to keep the promise he had made to her, as that there was, deep down in her heart, a vague dread which she had held down and would not admit even to herself. The husband she loved, almost idolized, was a weaker man than she had thought him. Since their marriage she had observed him more closely than she had opportunity of doing before, and probably he too had relaxed some of the devotion of the lover, and was less upon his guard than when he had not secured his prize. More than once during their tour in Europe he had entered her room with his face flushed and with an unnatural gaiety that had been inexplicable to her at first. Afterward, however, it dawned upon her that the occasions on which she had noticed this alteration in his appearance and manner were those succeeding an absence with other gentlemen. Was it possible, she asked herself, that the man to whom she had given herself was a slave to the wine cup? It could not be, for he was so strong, so affectionate, so devoted to her. Yet there was sufficient in what she had seen to give her cause for uneasiness when he was away from her.

The young man who had volunteered to save Harold Grey from a curtain lecture soon found that his services were not needed. Mrs. Grey was not the lady to permit any young man to talk to her about her husband, and very quickly ended any overtures on that subject. Nor was there at any time any danger of curtain lectures for her husband. She had too much sense and too much delicacy to lower herself into the querulous, complaining manner by which some wives wear away their husbands' patience and love. Very delicately she endeavored to attract him to her side, and to win him away from the society in which his danger lay.

It was a struggle that covered many years, in which the influence of the wife was pitted against the influence of the husband's enemies, whom he called his friends. Who can tell what the wife suffered in that struggle! With what helpless indignation she saw men of honor, men professing Christianity, luring her husband into scenes in which he always lost his self-control! They praised his wit, delighted in his songs, called him excellent company, but they never thought or seemed to care that they were aiding in his degradation. And all the time, the wife, ever careful of her husband's good name, could not bring herself to say, "My husband is weak; do not tempt him."

And, after all, she failed. Harold Grey, cursing his weakness, hating himself for his outrages on his wife's love, sank steadily downward. Not one word of reproach did he hear from her, but he noted the anxious look, and the pallid cheek, and the glance of horror with which she now refused to touch intoxicating liquor. He resolved again and again to break off his evil habit for her sake, but even love for her, the most potent force in his nature, was defeated, and there came a time when the night seldom found him quite sober.

Happily for both, however, a deliverance was at hand. Harold Grey was found one night, by a young clergyman who knew him, helplessly intoxicated on the street. He took him to his home, and then for the first time Beatrice Grey opened her heart. Mr. Leigh listened in silence, then prayed with her, and, asking permission to call again in the morning, left. The next day he had a long talk with Harold Grey. His sympathy and manly frankness won from Harold his whole story of broken resolutions, and vain attempts to overcome for his wife's sake, ending with a despairing statement that he had now no hope. But Mr. Leigh had seen more desperate cases cured among his people, who, though with less culture and more brutality, had been rescued. To this man of culture and sensibility he preached the same remedy, and pointed him to a Saviour able to save to the uttermost. What self-respect and wifely love could not do was done by the almighty power of Jesus. Harold Grey was delivered, and both he and his wife never cease to bless the day when they first heard of the mighty power of a Saviour's love to snap asunder the chains of sinful indulgence.

A Wife's Appeal.

ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS.

A Life Story: By Mrs. Stenhouse.

For More than Twenty-five Years the Wife of a Mormon Missionary and Elder.

(Continued from page 398.)

Working for Brigham Young

ALMOST the first visitors who called to see me were a lady and her daughter. I talked freely to her and answered her inquiries, and she told me that she herself had had some experience in the business. "In Salt Lake City," she said, "I think you will not be able to sell those goods; they are too fashionable for the people here, and there is no encouragement given to any one in this business. I am afraid you will be disappointed."

I believed every word she said, and felt all my airy, hopeful castles begin to crumble away. Before she left, however, she very kindly offered to purchase all my goods at a low figure, and thus relieve me of the anxiety and trouble of selling them. But I had had a little experience in the world—although probably I appeared to her somewhat innocent—and I thought that if she could sell them, there was a chance at least that I also might be able to do so. At any rate, I resolved to try, and I told her so, when she left me with many kind wishes for my success. But what she had said during her visit had chilled my enthusiasm, and I pictured all my pretty new-made articles becoming soiled and faded, with no one to buy them; while the little ones, barefooted—like so many children in Utah then—were running about crying for bread. I felt sad, and, if I must confess it, I sat down and had a good cry. Just at that moment I heard a knock at the door, and hastily drying my eyes, I opened it, and there stood my talkative friend.

"Stop crying!" she exclaimed. "What is the matter, my dear? Oh, do stop crying. I don't like crying women; we see so many of them among the saints of God here that it is really a shame and a disgrace. Tell me, what is the matter?"

Question after question was uttered in a breath, and without the possibility of my putting in a word by way of reply or remonstrance. At last I told her that I had just had a visit from one of the sisters and her daughter, whom I described.

"I know," she said; "I met her as I was coming here. Do you know who she is?" "No," I replied; "I do not think she told me her name; she simply came to look at the goods."

"And did she tell you that they would sell well, and that they are the best investment that you could have made?" she inquired, with a smile.

"Quite the contrary," I said; "she discouraged me so much that I could not help shedding tears."

"Well, now," she answered, "that was Mrs. C., one of our milliners here; and you suppose she was going to encourage you to set up an opposition establishment, do you? If you do, why, you've got something yet to learn." Indeed, I felt that I had got a great deal to learn.

"Now I have come to tell you quite a different story," she said. "This very afternoon you will have at least a dozen ladies here; and ladies, too, who have got the money to pay for what they have, and who won't pay you in salt chips and whetstones."

"Do they ever pay in such things?" I inquired.

"Why, certainly they do; that is the kind of pay the good Saints generally expect their poor brethren and sisters to be satisfied with, and to feed their hungry children upon. But I say that this is wrong. Not that I want to set myself up as a judge, or that I should criticise the actions of the brethren—God forbid! But when I see the rich brethren grinding the faces of the poor in that way, why, I say that it is wrong. You must not take such pay as that. You may not always get money, but you can get flour, potatoes, and molasses. Now, I tell you that you are going to sell every article you have, and I shall take pleasure in recommending you and talking about it. Why, I've been to about two score people already; but there! I see your husband coming, and I must go!"

My husband, indeed, was there. He was not very fond of my talkative friend, and passed her by with a polite salutation only; but when he saw what I had been doing, the light dawned upon his mind; he no longer wondered what had become of the dollars in New York, and astonished at my success, he congratulated me upon the good use to which I had put them.

After the interview with my talkative friend I felt quite encouraged, and I very soon found that her predictions were correct. I had no difficulty in selling the millinery I had made, and very soon I had created quite a little business, although we lived a considerable distance from Main Street. And what with my efforts, and some employment which my husband obtained, we contrived to get through our first winter in Salt Lake City. But I anticipate.

One day my husband informed me that there was a house about to be vacated shortly, and that Brigham Young had told him we had better take it. It was pleasantly situated near the Tabernacle, and, as houses then were, it was quite a desirable residence. We had it thoroughly cleaned, and then moved in. When I arrived in the evening I found that Mr. Stenhouse, with the assistance of our faithful Swiss girl, had arranged everything as the goods arrived from the other house; and the place looked so clean, and there was such a bright fire burning, that I felt that we now had really something like a home, and my heart was filled with gratitude to God.

Soon after our establishment in our new home, Brigham sent for me and asked me to make a handsome bonnet for his then favorite wife Emmeline. He left it entirely to my taste; I was to make just what I pleased, so that it suited her and gave satisfaction. I made the bonnet; and when I presented it, Brigham Young was so pleased that he immediately gave me an order to make one for each of his wives. I was very much pleased at this, for we needed furniture and many other necessities, and I thought that this would enable me to get them.

I expected that my account would be paid in money, for I did not suppose that the Mormon Prophet would offer me chips or whetstones; he could afford to pay cash, and, of course, would do so. He had furnished me with some material for the bonnets out of his own store—for Brigham Young had a dry-goods and grocery store of his own—and I was to furnish the remainder. It was very little that he supplied, and therefore my account was likely to amount to a considerable sum, for almost every wife had at least one bonnet which she wished made over again with new trimmings, besides the new one.

I worked constantly for three weeks, with the assistance of two girls, to each of whom I paid six dollars a week, besides board. This was a difficult thing for me to do at that time in Utah, for money was seldom seen there then; but I was rejoicing in the prospect of the comfortable new furniture which I should have when it was all done. Furniture at that time was very expensive; there was nothing better than white-pine-wood articles, stained or painted. The commonest kind of wooden rocking-chair cost fifteen dollars, and common painted wooden chairs were six dollars a piece, with everything else in proportion. This being our first winter, we had not been able to get much, and I thought I would devote the proceeds of the work I was doing for Brigham Young to fitting up the house a little; and, what with I earned from my other customers, I contrived to pay my maid, so as to have all the rest clear.

All was completed, and great satisfaction expressed at the result of my labors. So I asked my husband to present my account, and, if possible, get it settled; it amounted to about 275 dollars although I had dealt liberally with the Prophet, and had charged for the goods but little more than they cost me. When my husband returned, I hastened to meet him, for I had partly selected the furniture, and wanted to go and purchase it. But I was like poor Perrette, the milkmaid, who counted her chickens a little too soon; for Mr. Stenhouse told me that Brother Brigham had given orders that the amount should be credited to us for tithing! What a shock this was to me; for that sum, small as it may appear, was my whole fortune at the time, and it was gone at one sweep! "Can it be possible," I said, "that he can be so mean as that? Where can his conscience be, or hasn't he any, to deprive me of my hard earnings in this way? He shall not do it—I will make him pay me."

My indignation was so great that I did not reflect how imprudent I was to talk thus of one who was called the Prophet of the Lord! but my husband said, "What can you do? You cannot help yourself. You can do nothing but submit. Let us try to forget it; or, if not, it will perhaps be a lesson to us." But I did not forget it, and never could, although I tried very hard; and when many months had passed, and I no longer suffered from the effects of my loss, I still remembered it, and I always shall remember the way in which Brigham Young paid for his wives' bonnets.

The grasping, avaricious spirit which induced Brigham to settle his account in this way is generally acknowledged by others. W. F. Rae said of him in 1870: "Avarice and lust are the vices which master him to the exclusion of all others, and his arrangements are admirably adapted for keeping the majority of his followers obedient to his will. So long as they can neither buy nor sell, but must supply their wants through the primitive agency of barter, it is hard for them to become strong enough to challenge his claims. The payments he makes are calculated in dollars; but instead of paying his creditors in cash, he hands them orders on the Tithing-office, where grain, firewood, flour and other necessities of life can be had at the option of the holders. Some payments are made in Salt Lake notes, which are current in the Territory only. Men who nominally receive so much a day for their labor have told me that the very sight of United States money is a rare one to them. They get wherewith to sustain life, but they cannot lay up that store against a rainy day which the thrifty laborer loves to accumulate.

"These persons are virtual prisoners in Utah Territory. Without money they cannot escape from the home of bondage, and of money they are almost bereft. Now and then one of the dissatisfied class does that which leads to his excommunication, and the practical confiscation of his property. As soon as he is cast out of the Church, or voluntarily secedes, the whole power of the Church is exerted to crush him. Good Mormons are forbidden to give him shelter, to associate with him, to trade with him. The great object is to expel him from Utah. Should this end be attained, then the outcast is obliged to begin life again, after his hopes have been blighted, with his labor expended in vain, and his experience gained to no good purpose.

"The despotism of Mormonism, as it was practiced by Brigham Young, was temporal as well as spiritual. Nothing is left to the free will of the people. Everything is done in obedience to a decree. The phrase, 'Thus saith the Lord,' is always uttered by the leaders when they desire to impose their decisions on their credulous followers. President Young tolerated no differences of opinion between himself and his flock. He had been elected by them, and he considered it his prerogative to govern them with a rod of iron. Universal suffrage, exercised by the ignorant, had placed him where he was, and he interpreted universal suffrage as others have done in Europe, to mean the prerogative to act without scruple in pursuance of personal ends.*"

Mrs. Dickenson, a recent writer on Mormonism has also remarked: "Brigham Young's two most conspicuous qualities were his selfishness and his imposture. No mortal can estimate the dreadful influence of his thirty-three years' rule upon the Mormons. He set them examples of robbery, perjury, open murder, and secret assassination." As an example of how the people copied and obeyed their leader in these matters, she quotes the following from an army officer, who was familiar with Mormon habits.

"In 1865 the Mormons began, and persistently followed up, the practice of arresting soldiers who were in Salt Lake City from Camp Douglas, and fining them for nominal offences which they induced them to commit, such as giving them spirits, and then arresting them and fining them under special orders. No Mormon would swear in their behalf, and the officers had no remedy. On one occasion troops were sent to rescue the imprisoned men, and a serious conflict was imminent, when Brigham, to escape the dilemma, disavowed the action of his officers acting under his orders.

[*It is singular that Antichrist is, according to Revelation 13 and 17, to be elected European Emperor by universal suffrage, and is also to practice boycotting.]

"The Indians of Arizona, Montana, Wyoming, and Dakota found ready market with Mormon agents for Government horses which they had stolen, so that at one time thirty branded horses, fully recognized, were found in Salt Lake City, in Mormon stables, within two weeks after they had been stolen by Indians. The same was true of clothing and other supplies, which, instead of being carried to their own tribes by the plunderers, were sold to the Mormons by systematic arrangement. This was one powerful reason why the Mormons themselves were rarely disturbed by Indians. By systematic false swearing they protected the Indians, and by presents and supplies of arms and powder they fomented Indian hostility against the United States."

Not many weeks after our arrival in Salt Lake City my husband told me that we might now enjoy the privilege of going through the Endowment House. This was intended as a great favor to us, on the part of the authorities, for most people have to wait a long while before receiving their Endowments; but my husband's influence and position in the Church was the reason why we were admitted so soon.

Now I had heard so much of the Endowments and the Endowment House that I quite dreaded to pass through this ordeal. The idea of the whole ceremony was that thereby we should receive the special grace of God; be united, man and woman making one perfect creature; receive our inheritance as children of God; and, in fact, be made partakers of the plenitude of every blessing.

The similarity of the initiatory rites of the Endowment House, and the ancient mysteries known as the Eleusinia and the Dionysia or Bacchanalia, has been frequently remarked.

The Eleusinia was a festival observed every fourth year by the Cretans, Lacedæmonians, and others: but more particularly by the people of Athens every fifth year at Eleusis in Attica, where it was introduced by Eumolpus B. C. 1356. It was the most celebrated of all the religious ceremonies of Greece, whence it is often called by the way of pre-eminence the mysteries. The Dionysia were introduced into Greece from Egypt, and were probably the same as the festivals celebrated in honor of Isis. The Eleusinian mysteries were performed in a temple that was specially built for their celebration. Thus we read, "The candidates, crowned with myrtle, were admitted by night into a place called the mystical temple, a vast and stupendous building."

In this Joseph Smith attempted to imitate his heathen forerunners, since he commenced building a massive temple in Nauvoo, having, as he said, received a special revelation to do so. In 1841 he issued a proclamation to all his followers, "that God commanded them through him to build Him a house, wherein He, the Lord, might reveal through His prophet Joseph ordinances essential to their salvation, which had been hidden from the Church from the foundation of the world." Smith was killed during the erection of the building, after which it was continued by his followers, but was destroyed after the exodus from that place, and the mysteries are carried on at the Endowment House.

(To be Continued.)

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman (London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 71 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles, among others, are contained in the number for June:

The Future Ten Kingdoms and Antichrist's Week. Stars and Prophecy. By W. Appleford. Historical Fulfilment of the Fourth Trumpet. Overpopulation, One of the Darkest Clouds in the Future. By D. T. Taylor. Order of the Events of the Revelation. By the late Lieut.-Col. White. Spiritualism Unveiled. By Lieut.-Gen. Sir Robert Phayre. The 144,000. By the late Rev. R. A. Purdon. Antichrist's Future Acting; Described in Dan. II: 21-45. What the Jewish Papers are Saying. Passing Events Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

SAMUEL CALLED OF GOD.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for July 7, 1 Samuel 3:4-14.
Golden Text, 1 Samuel 3:10.

Anarchy in Israel—Every Man His Own Law-giver—The Child of Prayer—The Little Neophyte—In an Atmosphere of Hypocrisy—Kept Uncontaminated—Familiarized with the Ritual—The Call in the Night—The Child's Natural Inference—Eli's Disclaimer—His Wise Direction to One Called of God—Christians Uncertain About Their Call to Service—The Way Closed by Family Ties—Duty in Doubtful Circumstances—Ambition Not a Call—God Reveals Himself to the Child-like.

It was in the time of the judges; self-will ruled the people. "In those days there was no king in Israel: every man did that which was right in his own eyes." (Judges 21:25.) The almost universal departure from God was as apparent among the priests as the people; the two sons of Eli, the high priest, were notoriously profligate. The condition of things was much like that described by Hosea: "There is no truth, nor mercy, nor knowledge of God in the land." (Hos. 4:1.) The word of God was precious (or rare) in those days; there was no open vision, no continual communion with God. God had no "friend" among His people from whom He could not hide what He was about to do, as in Abraham's time, before the destruction of Sodom. (Gen. 19:17-21.) But it is always in such times that God raises up

His True Prophets,

His prepared instruments, to be the recipients of His thoughts, to enter into His purposes, and to be the exponents of His will to other men. It was in such a time that Samuel was born in an atmosphere of prayer. His very existence was an answered prayer, and the strain of praise which fell from his mother's lips, when her prayer was heard, and God had given her the son whom she gladly and joyfully yielded up to His service, would lead us to suppose that because of God lay very near her heart. It may be that the godlessness which surrounded her was a true burden of the Lord upon her, and that her prayer for a son was really a prayer that he might be the mother of a prophet who should bring Israel back to the God whom they had forsaken. She dealt too closely with God when she prayed in the temple for a son, to resent Eli's imputation of drunkenness, and her resentment of her child when so young for the service of the Lord also showed how completely God took the leading place in her heart and life.

What kind of son should Samuel be as the child of such a mother? Hannah brought him to the temple as soon as he could walk and talk. Samuel should be acquainted with the worship of God as the one purpose of his life. Samuel ministered unto the Lord, being a child, girded with a linen ephod." (1 Sam. 2:1.) His priesthood was an exception; he was neither of the tribe of Levi, the priestly tribe, nor yet was he of the age, "thirty years," when the priests were first admitted to the service of the tabernacle. (Num. 4:3, 35, 39.) But Samuel's service had been on his part a simple obedience to his mother and to Eli. No doubt that mother's prayers had followed him, and he had trusted her God to keep her child pure from the baneful influence of the sons of Eli, and to make Eli, who did not restrain his own sins, exercise nevertheless a due restraint upon hers. And it is evident these prayers were heard, and that Samuel was indeed preserved from the contamination of the sin which surrounded him. But as yet neither was the word of the Lord yet revealed to him. He had done his duty as far as he knew, had respected God, worshipped Him as an unconverted child can, had obeyed Eli, and been what is generally called "a good child." But he was not really acquainted with God. His prayers were not consciously answered; the altar, the sacrifices, the laver, the words of prayer, these were all better known to him than the God who was worshipped by all these. There needed something from the other side, something direct from God to his own soul, in order that Samuel should know the Lord. It is the same with the conversion of a child as with an older person: the touch of God does the work. No human power can bring about the revelation of God to a human soul, but He has promised that "they that seek shall find, and to them that knock it shall be opened."

He Did Not "Know the Lord,"

It was night when God called Samuel—a deeper night in Israel's relations with God than that which lay over the face of nature. Eli, whose eyes were beginning to fail him with age, was gone to rest, and the golden candlestick, "the lamp of God," was burning with a flickering light, only too typical of the state of Israel's piety. It was a statute forever in their generations that this lamp was to burn always (Ex. 27:20, 21), signifying unbroken communion with God. Samuel was laid down to sleep, the sweet sleep of a child, when the Lord called, "Samuel!"

The Habit of Obedience

had been formed, and the child instantly rose and went to Eli, saying, "Here I am, for thou calledst me." It was a call heard, but not understood. The boy did not argue the point, but obeyed the command, "Lie down again." A second time the same clear, unmistakable voice called, "Samuel!" and again the child, knowing no one else was at hand, and having no former experience of the voice of God, ran to Eli and said, "Here am I, for thou didst call me." But even now, when Eli disclaimed the voice as his, Samuel did not argue; but, whatever he may have thought in his own mind, he said nothing. Whether he slept again we know not. Probably not. A third time the Lord called him; but now, when he went to Eli, the old priest, whose spiritual perceptions were growing rusty from disuse, "perceived that the Lord had called the child." There was still left him the knowledge of how to direct a soul to whom God is speaking.

Eli gave good counsel. It would be well if every one who deals with souls would follow it. He directed the lad to go back, and if God should call him again, he was to say, "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth." Our part in the direction of anxious souls is to bring them into contact with Jesus, and then leave Him to speak to them; we cannot speak peace to a soul. We may tell him what God says in His Word, but He must speak it into the heart. A fourth time came that now well-known voice, "Samuel! Samuel!" and the lad trustingly said, "Speak, for thy servant heareth." And now, for the first time in his experience, it was not Samuel speaking prayers to God, in a hope mingled with awe and fear that some way God would hear, but it was God taking the initiative; and the wondering child knew that the mighty God who created heaven and earth was now talking to him! Such was Samuel's call.

Am I Called

into the Lord's work? is a question which is stirring thousands of souls at the present time. The wave of evangelistic and missionary interest which is abroad very naturally suggests it. There are many classes of Christians who ask this question. There are some who have been given to the work by a father's or a mother's prayers, like Samuel, whose whole education has led that way; and who, when a distinct call comes to them, can do no other thing than go, joyful and grateful that God condescends to use them. There are others on whom the burden of souls lies, who are keenly alive to the interests of eternity, and yet who are bound by the care of a family, and find the struggle at times a very hard and difficult one between what seems to be two opposing duties. But surely God knows the position of things; surely if He wants such an one to leave all for Him, He can make the way, although everything may seem impossible; and most surely it is the duty of such an one to care for his family until the way is made plain for him. He may do much in praying for others; he may do much in winning souls within his reach; he may encourage and cheer on many who are not bound by such ties as he has. There is another class, composed of those whose hearts burn within them with a conscious call of God, and yet their education is so small, their manners are so rough, and their means are so limited, that they see no way before them. But if the call is really from God, let them not be disheartened; the God who called Samuel, who was only a child, unformed, uneducated, unsophisticated, can use them too. But let them not push forward, but wait first for the Lord to speak to them, and to open their way.

There is another and a very numerous class, composed largely of young ladies who are converted, but who have never been converted from their self-life. In their hearts they say, "I would like to be a missionary, but I should like all my friends to understand me, and to think well of me, and I should like to have some home comforts, and to be able to return home sometimes, etc., etc." Of precisely the same class are many young servants, who think, "I should like to be an evangelist or a missionary, I should be more thought of, and more noticed than I am now. Besides, I like talking to people in the meetings, it is such interesting work." And of the same class are those who feel, "I would rather work for God than go on with my trade," or, "I would rather work for God than stay at home and help my mother." Now, in all such cases there is no real call from God.

"I Should Like,"

or "I would rather" is not God speaking, but self speaking, and all such should beware how they put their hands to the work of God. It is such evangelists as these who damage God's reputation, and lower the standard of Christianity. It is such as these who get up bazaars, entertainments, etc., etc., and who, if they do win souls, turn them out as selfish and as unlike Christ as themselves. A real call to the work of God leaves no place for "I should like" in the heart. It is so crushing and humbling to think that such a God can come down to use such an one as I am! What can I say but, "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth"? One who is really called of God obeys at once, and makes no stipulations, seeks no special provisions, like Amos when he said, "I was no prophet, neither was I a prophet's son . . . but the Lord took me as I followed the flock, and the Lord said unto me, go, prophesy unto my people Israel;" like Paul when he said, "Woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel;" they go

Impelled by the Holy Ghost.

God communicated to Samuel, little Samuel, as the only heart free enough and pure enough to understand Him, His designs of judgment upon the house of Eli. Man would have said, "How unwise to harrow so young and tender a heart with such sorrow!" But God knows how to fit the heart for all it is called to pass through; and one whose attitude always is, "Speak, Lord, only speak thou, I can understand thee, thy servant, living only for thy service, hears thee," does not misinterpret God. Eli was dear to Samuel, but God made the reformation of Israel dearer still. The morning broke, and with it came the old priest to the young prophet to know what God had said to him. It was a crucial moment. Could Samuel be true to God, and tell all? He feared to show Eli the vision. But with the moment of decision came the present help of God, "and Samuel told him every whit, and hid nothing from him." The old loyalty to God awoke in the aged priest, and though it meant the loss for ever of his two sons, he said, "It is the Lord; let Him do what seemeth Him good;" poor, poor Eli!

Samuel was yet a child; God is at large with the child-like. "Samuel grew, and the Lord was with him, and did let none of his words fall to the ground." Samuel's words were all messages, and he but the messenger of God. All Israel was alive now to the fact that God was speaking through Samuel. And "the Lord appeared again," and "the Lord revealed Himself" again because He had found one empty, child-like spirit in Israel.

"For precept must be upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little."—Is. 28: 10.

Over and over again,
No matter which way I turn,
I always find in the Book of Life
Some lesson I have to learn.
I must take my turn at the mill,
I must grind out the golden grain,
I must work at my task with a resolute will,
Over and over again.

We cannot measure the need
Of even the tiniest flower,
Nor check the flow of the golden sands
That run through a single hour;
But the morning dews must fall,
And the sun and the summer rain
Must do their part, and perform it all Over and over again.

Over and over again
The brook through the meadow flows,
And over and over again
The ponderous mill-wheel goes.
Once doing will not suffice,
Though doing be not in vain,
And a blessing, failing us once or twice,
May come if we try again.

The path that has once been trod
Is never so rough to the feet;
And the lesson we once have learned
Is never so hard to repeat.
Though sorrowful tears may fall,
And the heart to its depths be riven
With storm and tempest, we need them all To render us meet for Heaven.

—Josephine Pollard.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher: 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent, post-paid, for 10 cts., or 100 for 20 cts. Postage stamps taken.

The latest and best Imperial Photographs of Dr. Talmage and Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, with their fac-simile autograph, and also imperial photograph of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, can be obtained from J. E. Jewett, 77 Bible House, New York. Sent postpaid for twenty-five cents each. Postage stamps taken.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressing needed, and can be mailed to the address of BISHOP H. C. RILEY, Care of J. P. HEATH 43 Bible House, New York.

THE GREAT FLOOD!

ATTENTION, AGENTS!

The first in the field. A complete history of this terrible calamity at Johnstown, has just been issued. 300 pages, 25 full-page illustrations, handsomely bound in cloth, price $1.00. Discount to agents, 50 per cent. Send 25 cents for Prospectus Book and package of circulars, and go to work. Address J. S. OGILVIE, Publisher, 57 Rose Street, New York.

WANTED Christian Men and Women to sell REPORTS: "Yesterday I started out about 8 o'clock and at noon had 8 new names." "Monday I worked 54 hours and took 9 orders." "Tuesday 7 hours and added 12 good names."—Circulars and recommendations free. W. J. HOLLAND, 150 Nassau St., New York. E. E. HOLLAND, 40 Dearborn St., Chicago.

AGENTS WANTED for the Book entitled "THE JOHNSTOWN HORROR."

This is the most complete and only reliable edition published. The book contains 600 pages and many full-page illustrations. There are many books sold at a lower price than mine, but they are not so complete in detail. Price $2.00. Canvassing Book 30 cts. B. G. STAUFFER, Quakertown, Pa.

EAST GREENWICH ACADEMY.

Founded 1802. For both sexes. Charming location on Narragansett Bay. Steam heat. Electric light. Well endowed. Prepares for College or Business. Eleven courses of instruction, including normal, with training school. $200 a year. Opens Sept. 3d. For illustrated catalogue address Rev. F. D. BLAKESLEE, A. M., East Greenwich, R. I.

3000 ROLLS CHINA MATTINGS.—Red Check, Fancy and White, from $3.75 per roll, 40 yards; special sale of fine white mattings, last season's stock, at $5.00, worth $8.00. Special:—Finest Moquette Rug, 27x64, at $2.25; Tapestry Brussels Rugs, 22x50, 80 cts.; 27x54, $1.15; 30x68, $1.45; figured and floral designs. 500 Hassocks, 25 cts. each. Correspondence invited. Mail orders promptly filled. ANDREW ESTER'S SONS, 739 & 741 Broadway, New York.

AN ESSAY ON DUDES.

Do not hire a dude to take care of your twin babies. A dude is all right in his place; but just where his place is, and what he is good for, we do not exactly know. We are confident, however, that large advertisements have for several months appeared in the papers making unusual offers to those ordering Sweet Home Soap. The firm will send a Great Bargain Box, price $6.00 for the entire case of 100 cakes and extras, to any subscriber of this paper on thirty days' trial. A great many will wonder how any one in this grasping age is willing to give so much for so little money.

"How do you like your bargain?" was asked of a well-known lawyer a few days ago. "Like it! why, man how can I help but like it? The laundress says 'Sweet Home' is the best Soap she has ever used. Think of it! Enough Soap to last a year; Toilet Soap, Perfumery, Tooth Powder, Shaving Stick, etc., enough to start a drug-store; presents for each of the eleven children, besides two hired girls and the coachman." And he passed down the street whistling "Sweet Home."

It will cost only a cent for a postal card to send your name and address to the advertising manager of this paper, Mr. J. E. Jewett, 77 Bible House, New York, and the Great Bargain Box will then be delivered at your door, and if in thirty days you are not pleased with the goods in every way, you need not feel under any obligation to keep the case, but it will be called for and taken away free of all expense to you.

YOUR ADDRESS ON A Postal Card

Mailed to us, brings you promptly 30 samples of cloth, guaranteed self-measurement blanks, whereby you can have your clothing cut to order and sent to any express or P.O. Pants $3 to $5. Suits, $13.25 to $21.

PLYMOUTH ROCK PANTS CO. 11 to 17 Eliot St., or 18 Summer St., Boston, Mass. Or call at our nearest BRANCH STORE: 255 Broadway, New York; 913 Pennsylvania Ave., Washington, D. C.; 72 Adams St., Chicago, Ill.; Burnside Building, Worcester, Mass.; Gilmore House, Springfield, Mass.; 914 Main St., Richmond, Va.; 198 Westminster St., Providence, R. I.; Old Register Building, New Haven, Conn.

TACOMA WASHINGTON

8% debentures (interest quarterly). 7 and 8% guaranteed first mortgages on city and farm property. Particular attention paid to investments for savings banks, trustees and individuals. For full illustrated information, maps, etc., and any special information concerning this wonderful city and investments therein, mailed free. Address, Oakland Land, Loan and Trust Company, Tacoma, Washington.

PIANOS UNIVERSITY ORGANS

$150 to $1500 Guaranteed 6 years. $35 to $500

They Lead the World. We sell direct to families and send for trial in your own home before you buy. Catalogue Free. Estab. 1859. Incor. 1877. MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO., 235 East 21st Street, N. Y.

"Demonology or Spiritualism." Ancient and Modern. "An effective weapon." "A sword of fire." "Only unanswerable work on the subject."—startling disclosures.—History facts and data—Scores saved already. Whole communities rescued. Every family, preacher and christian worker needs one. 310 pp. 12mo. cloth. Price reduced to $1. Sent by mail, post paid, on receipt of price. Address J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York

The Most RELIABLE FOOD For Infants & Invalids. Note note: but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach, 4 sizes cans. Pamphlet free. Worrich & Co. (on every label). Pulmer, Mass.

MIRABILIS.

The great Cancer Cure, an infallible remedy wherever located. Send stamped directed envelope for particulars mentioning Christian Herald to M. MILLEN, 767-769 Broadway, N. Y.

BEECHAM'S PILLS act like magic on a weak stomach, For a DISORDERED LIVER try BEECHAM'S PILLS.

For the Sunday-School Lessons.

FROM SAMUEL TO SOLOMON. By Rev. C. S. Robinson, D. D. LL. D. 12mo. 310 pp. Cloth, $1.25. Stout paper with cloth back, 50 cts. Covering week by week the International Lessons from July, 1889, to January, 1890.

A bright, fresh, suggestive book; full of apt illustrations. A timely aid to Sabbath-School Teachers.

The Star Library.

A new and attractive Sunday-School Library of ONE HUNDRED 16mo VOLUMES.

Each volume illustrated and strongly bound in red cloth, with gilt back. Over 15,000 pages of reading, in large, legible type. In handsome chestnut case.

Every Sunday-School, before looking elsewhere, should examine this large set of excellent books, which is offered at an extremely low price.

ONLY TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, NET. AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY,

150 Nassau St. & 304 Fourth Ave., New York.

Boston, 54 Bromfield St.; Rochester, N. Y., 93 State St.; Chicago, 122 Wabash Av.; Philadelphia, 1512 Chestnut St.; Cincinnati, 176 Elm St.; San Francisco, 735 Market St.

PAINLESS BEECHAM'S PILLS EFFECTUAL

THE GREAT ENGLISH MEDICINE WORTH A GUINEA A BOX

For Weak Stomach—Impaired Digestion—Disordered Liver

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

PRICE 25 CENTS PER BOX.

Prepared only by THOS. BEECHAM, St. Helens, Lancashire, England.

B. F. ALLEN & CO., Sole Agents

FOR UNITED STATES, 365 & 367 CANAL ST., NEW YORK.

Who (if your druggist does not keep them) will mail Beecham's Pills on receipt of price—but inquire first. (Please mention this paper.)

3rd Edition Just Published.

Mr. Spurgeon's New Book.

WITH A PAGE OF PRECIOUS PROMISES

FOR EVERY DAY OF THE YEAR.

THE CHEQUE BOOK OF THE BANK OF FAITH. BEING PRECIOUS PROMISES ARRANGED FOR DAILY USE. With Brief Experimental Comments. Nearly 400 pages. 12mo. Price $1.50.

In Mr. Spurgeon's Preface he says: "I believe all the promises of God,—but many of them I have personally tried and proved, I have seen that they are true, for they have been fulfilled to me. I commenced these daily portions when I was wading in the Surf of Controversy. Since then I have been cast into 'waters to swim,' which, but for God's upholding hand, would have proved waters to drown in. The waters rolled in continually, wave upon wave. I do not mention this to exact sympathy, but simply to let the reader see that I am no dry-land sailor—I know the roll of the billows, and the rush of the winds. Never were the promises of Jehovah so precious to me as at this hour."

N. Y. Christian Intelligencer: "When it is stated that this well named book contains a SCRIPTURE PROMISE FOR EACH DAY IN THE YEAR, commented on, in his best vein, by the prince of practical and experimental preachers, enough has been said to commend it first in its class. It is most admirably adapted for daily reading either in the family or the closet, and wherever used will be found spiritually stimulative."

N. Y. Independent: "The book is done in the great preacher's inimitable style and speaks home on every page to the heart and need of the believer."

"Mr. Spurgeon's words are so plain, his style so sparkling, and his spirit so devout, that the reading of his productions is almost sure to excite a mental glow and awaken holy aspirations. This book is brimful of quickening, soothing, soul-lifting power, and is admirably adapted to the end in view."—N. Y. Witness.

N. Y. Observer: "As there are three hundred and sixty-five cheques in this book, the man who makes right use of them is rich indeed."

National Baptist: "One is inclined to place 'The Cheque Book' above any book of its class, a companion to one's daily devotions, because of its being written in the great preacher's very heart-blood."

* Sent post paid on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York.

IF YOU WANT ANY BOOKS,

It makes no difference where you see them advertised, or by whom or where they are published or sold, send your orders to me, and I will attend to them promptly, send all books to you prepaid, and guarantee that they reach you safely. Postage stamps received for fractional parts of a dollar.

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

OUR 75 CENT COLORED S.

We have had unusual success this line of Gros Grains.

They are 19 1-2 inches wide, fine cord weave, and are in 40 different shades. Under ordinary circumstances they would sell for per yard.

Send for samples; they will please you.

JAMES MCCREERY & Broadway & Eleventh New York.

Heaven: My Father's House

252 Pages. Cloth. Price 75 Cents

"Heaven.—I have seen nothing on the subject pleased me so much. The views are original, think not. Some of them I do not remember seen presented at all; and others not so well."—Dr. Mark Hopkins, Williams College, Mass. "I like his way of approaching the subject book develops in a very pleasing manner a thought peculiar and untouched by any of the who have written on it."—Rev. Prof. Samuel Yale College, Conn.

"Death, as seen from Mr. K's point of view, natural event in the order of the Christian's life, instead of recoiling from inevitable destiny, we by this more familiar view to look upon the without fear, yea, with cheerfulness."—Rev. Dr. Harkett, Newton Theological Seminary.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY COOD NE TO LADIES

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our Teas, Coffees, and Powders, and secure a Gold Band or Moss Rose Set, Dinner Set, Gold Band Moss Rose Tea Set, Brass Lamp, Caster, or Webster's Dictionary. Get Premium No. 27. For particulars ad 66 AND 68 CHURCH STREET, N. Y. P. O.

IF YOU WANT AN "OXFORD" TEACHER'S BIBLE OR BAGSTER BIBLE,

send for complete Bible Catalogue giving full description of styles, sample of type, and price, to

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York.

SEATTLE No blizzards, heavy snows or zero. Average winter temperature 45° zero. Seattle, largest city in Washington Territory, population 25,000. Commercial, educational and financial center of Puget Sound Country. Full information Queen CHAS. H. KITTLE CITY. SEATTLE, Wash. Ter.

AGENTS for E. B. TREAT'S Catalogue of new books. Shoe at $1.25. Also, Mo Home & He 400 best authors by T. L. Cuyler 192,000 sold.

GIA-LOC Curiousities of Bible $2. By Mail, E. B. TREAT.

SAMPLE PAGES FROM THE LATEST SUNDAY SCHOOL SONG BOOKS THE ECHO MUSIC CO., La Fayette, Ind.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1889, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. XII., No. 25. Office, 71 Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 19, 1889.

Price, 3 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PICTURE OF SCENES IN THE CATASTROPHE AT JOHNSTOWN. with Narratives of Survivors.
PEOPLE WHO HAVE LOST THEIR WAY. Dr. Talmage's Sermon last Sunday Morning.
 The Work in the Indian Territory—Dr. George Post's Labors at Beirut—Christ's Patients and Physicians' Patients—Bishop Taylor's Palaver with a King, etc.

A PROPHETIC BOOK: Recommended by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF MISS CLARA BARTON, The Heroine of the Red Cross Order.
THE SIGN OF EXPECTATION: A Prophetic Article.
PORTRAIT OF THE LATE DR. ASA MAHAN, and Picture of One of His Meetings.
THE DEAD CLERGYMAN'S TREASURES. (Illus.)

THE DOWN GRADE. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
 Gems from New Books: A Governor Turned Bishop—The Ascetic Jerome—The Famous Ambrose.
ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS. An Autobiographical Story by Mrs. Stenhouse. (Continued.)
GOD'S WILL IN SANCTIFICATION. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

The Catastrophe at Johnstown: The Holocaust at the Bridge—A Mother Trying to Save Her Child—The Torrent from the Gap.

THE JOHNSTOWN DISASTER.

Johnstown as it Was—The Mountain Stream—The Pleasure-Seekers' Dam—The Story of an Eye-Witness—The Awful Holocaust at the Bridge—A Mother's Pathetic Story—Two Heroines in the Telegraph Office—Some Remarkable Escapes—A Providential Opening in a Roof—A Golden-Haired Praying Child—A Boy Rescued from a Roof—Mrs. Little's Thrilling Story—A Brave Little Newsboy—The Wrecked Churches—The Fate of the Pastors.

FURTHER details of the appalling disaster at Johnstown, as they have come in from day to day since the calamity, have in nowise diminished the gravity of the catastrophe, though, to the relief of a sympathetic public, they have not confirmed the fears which were at one time entertained. By actual figures, about two thousand bodies have been recovered, and allowing for those that were burned, those still under the mud and wreckage, and those carried by the torrent into undiscovered places, it would appear that the estimate of five to six thousand, arrived at from other data, may be accepted as the true proportions of the loss of life. Even that figure is appalling, and may well sadden our hearts and awaken our sympathies. It is gratifying to observe how liberal has been the help sent to the ruined and bereaved survivors from all quarters, and how nobly Miss Clara Barton and her helpers of the Red Cross Society, ministers, physicians, and others, are laboring to relieve suffering and alleviate sorrow. Amid so much that is distressing this effect of the calamity is a bright and pleasant feature.

Johnstown As It Was.

The wrecked city was in the southwest part of Cambria County, Pennsylvania. A correspondent of the New York Sun, who was well acquainted with the district, says that the city stood at the place where Stony Creek and Conemaugh Creek form the Conemaugh River. It was on the Pennsylvania Railroad, thirty-nine miles southwest of Altoona and seventy-eight miles east of Pittsburgh. The people of the town were the employees of the Cambria Iron and Steel Company, their families, and small storekeepers. Three-quarters of the 28,000 people lived in small frame tenement houses on the flats by the river around the works of the Cambria Company. The creeks become the Conemaugh River right at the end of the town, near where the big stone Pennsylvania Railroad bridge crosses the river.

The Villages.

The borough of Johnstown was on the south bank of Conemaugh Creek and the east bank of Stony Creek, right in the fork. It had only about a third of the population of the place. It had Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, Lutheran, and Catholic churches. It had several daily and weekly papers. The chief were the Tribune, the Democrat, and the Freie Presse. Several villages lay in a string along Conemaugh Creek, which flows from the reservoir, or Conemaugh Lake. The first from the reservoir was South Fork. It was ten miles above Johnstown borough, and on the flats made by the junction of a small creek with Conemaugh Creek. This village was occupied entirely by workingmen who lived on the flats in tenements. It had a population of about 1,400. Three miles below South Fork was Mineral Point, a cluster of workingmen's houses about half the size. Neither of these towns was municipally incorporated with Johnstown.

Conemaugh was the largest village on the creek between the river and Johnstown. The streets of the two towns ran into each other, and the space between the two stations is well built up along the creek. Part of the Cambria Iron and Steel Company's works are at Conemaugh, and five or six thousand of the workingmen and their families lived there. The business was done in Johnstown borough. Further down, below the junction of the two creeks, along both banks of the Conemaugh River, were about four thousand employees of the Cambria Company and their families. The place where they lived was called Cambria, or Cambria City. All these villages and boroughs made up what is known as the city of Johnstown.

The River.

In normal times, is but a few hundred feet wide. The bottom is stony. The current is so fast that there is little deposit along the bank. It is navigable at no time except for a light canoe in the winter, and a boy in rubber boots could wade across it in the summer. Below Johnstown, after Stony Creek has joined the Conemaugh Creek, the volume of water increases, and runs down into the Kiskiminitas River, and into the Allegheny River, and then on to Pittsburgh. About fifteen miles above the town, at the source of the South Fork, lies the Conemaugh Lake and Reservoir, whose pent-up waters, breaking loose, have made of the long valley one long stretch of desolation, ruin, and death. The lake was originally a small one, but many years ago the gap in the hills, from which its outlet flowed, was dammed by a stupendous structure 1,000 feet wide, about 110 feet high, and narrowing from 300 to 35 feet in thickness. By it the lake became a body of water three miles long, over half a mile wide, and having a depth of 80 feet in ordinary times.

The Fatal Dam.

The dam was built many years ago to create a reservoir for use as a feeder to the Pennsylvania Canal. It had huge sluice-gates worked by machinery in a tower in the centre of the reservoir. When the Canal was abandoned the dam became useless, and was neglected. The tower in which the machinery for managing the waste gates was located is said to have fallen into ruin. The lake was leased by the South Fork Hunting and Fishing Club in 1879. A high retaining wall had been built across the lower end of the basin, and the water from a number of small streams soon filled it up. Around the edges of this lake a number of Pittsburghers built cottages, where they spent the summer with their families. A large hotel was also erected, and during the warm season it accommodates a number of tourists. The association set out to improve and strengthen the wall; but either because the waste gates were so damaged that to repair them would have been an expensive job, or for fear that the fish would escape by the waste gates, every one who lives near says the gates were permanently stopped up. Besides this, the dam, say these witnesses, was built of clay, and on May 31, the fatal day when the water flowed over the top, it washed away its outer face, and weakened it so much that the pressure from within made a huge break. The break occurred at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and within one hour the lake was dry. All that immense volume of water had poured into the valley below, sweeping all before it. Trees that stood fully seventy-five feet in height and four feet through were snapped off like pipe-stems. "Just think of it," says

A Witness of the Disaster.

"Thousands of people—men, women, and children—struggling and weeping and wailing as they were being carried suddenly away in the raging current. Houses were picked up as if they were but a feather, and their inmates were all carried away with them, while cries of 'God help me!' 'Save me!' 'I am drowning!' 'My child!' and the like were heard on all sides. Those who were able to escape went to the mountains, and there they beheld the poor unfortunates being crushed among the debris to death without any chance of being rescued. The water seemed to leap, hardly touching the ground. It bounded down the valley, crashing and roaring, carrying everything before it. For a mile its front seemed like a solid wall twenty feet high. At first it looked like dust. That must have been the spray. I could see houses going down before it like a child's play blocks set on edge in a row. As it came nearer I could see houses totter for a moment, then rise, and the next moment be crushed like egg-shells against each other. In the gap above Johnstown the water picked up a four-track railroad covered with trains, freight, and passengers, and with machine shops, a round-house, and other heavy buildings with heavy contents, and it tore the track to pieces, twisted, turned, and crossed it as fire never could. It tossed huge freight locomotives about like barrels, and cars like packing-boxes, tore them to pieces, and scattered them over miles of territory."

The Holocaust

at the bridge was, however, the most awful scene. Just where the low stone arches of the railroad bridge span the river the floating houses struck, and were jammed together. (See Illustration on the first page.) A correspondent of the New York Herald says: The stone-arch bridge acted as a dam to the flood, and five towns were crushing each other against it. A thousand houses came down on the great wave of water, and were held there a solid mass in the jaws of a Cyclopean vise. A kitchen stove upset. The mass took fire. Hundreds of people were imprisoned in these houses. A thousand more were on the roofs. For most of them there was no escape. The fire swept on from house to house. The prisoners saw it coming, and shrieked and screamed with terror, and ran up and down their narrow quarters in an agony of fear. Thousands of people stood upon the river-bank and saw and heard it all, and still were powerless to help. They saw people kneeling in the flames and praying. They saw families gathered together with their arms around each other, and waiting for death. Some saw their friends, and some their wives and children, perishing before them.

Powerless Spectators.

All that night and all the next day and far into the morning of Monday these dreadful shrieks resounded from that place of doom. The fire burned on, aided by the water underneath, added to by fresh fuel coming down the river. All that time the people stood helpless on the bank and heard those heartrending sounds. What could they do? They could not fight the fire. Every fire engine in the town lay in that mass of rubbish smashed to bits. For hours they had to wait until they could get telegraph word to surrounding towns, and hours more until the fire engines arrived at noon on Monday. The shrieks ceased early in the morning. Men had begun to search the ruins and had taken out the few that still lived. The fire engines began to play on the still smouldering fire. Other workmen began to remove the bodies. The fire had swept over the whole mass from shore to shore, and burned it to the water.

Shocking Fragments.

In this tangled heap and crush of matter were the twisted wrecks of five iron bridges, smashed locomotives, splintered dwellings and all their contents, human beings and domestic animals, hay and factory machinery, the rich contents of stores, and brick walls ground to powder—all the products of human industry, all the elements of human interests, twisted, turned, broken in a mighty mill and all thrown together. I walked over this extraordinary mass and saw the fragments of thousands of articles. In one place the roofs of forty frame houses were packed in together just as you would place forty banded cards one on top of another. The iron rods of a bridge were twisted into a perfect spiral six times around one of the girders. Just beneath it was a woman's trunk, broken up and half filled with sand, with silk dresses and a veil streaming out of it. From under the trunk men were lifting the body of its owner perhaps, so burned, so horribly mutilated, so torn limb from limb, that even the workmen, who have seen so many of these frightful sights that they have begun to get used to them, turned away sick at heart. In another place was a halter, with part of a horse's head tied to a bit of a manger, and a mass of hay and straw about, but no other signs of the stable in which the horse was burned.

A Mother's Story.

told to the reporters, gives one of the most thrilling and pathetic lights on the disaster. She and her husband had a prosperous little home

Johnstown, and their seven children were all well brought up, nicely dressed, and were being educated. On the afternoon of the flood the husband went to the butcher's, and was swept away with the torrent in the streets. The wife, knowing nothing of his death, gathered her children together and encouraged them to be brave. She took them to the highest story of the house and knelt there with them and besought God's protection. Soon the water was above the floor. It was clear that they would be drowned if they stayed, while floating on the wreckage outside there might be hope of being saved. The mother fought her own and her children's way to the window and opened it. She caught a piece of plank, and on it put the eldest child, with a hasty kiss and a "God bless you!" Then she let it float away into the darkness and the roar of the waves. Six times were these frail barks freighted with precious cargoes. Now came the turn of the last child, Bessie the four-year-old. One can fancy what it meant—the last and dearest. There was scarce breathing space in the room now, and if haste was not used, death would come there at once. To a road plank Bessie was fastened securely, and as blessed as had been the others. (See Illustration on first page.)

"I loved all, oh, I loved them all," said the mother; "but I had two kisses for Bessie, for he was Tom's favorite and was such a good child. She put her arms about my neck and said: 'You know you said God would take care of me always, mamma; will He take care of me now?' I told her He would and she need not fear, and then she was carried away. 'I'm not afraid, mamma,' she called out, and I heard her, although I could not see her; and that's all, except that the roof was torn off and I floated off in it, and some Italians saved me at Kernville, sixteen miles from here. We found two of the children dead—Bessie and George—and there was not a mark on Bessie's face. They're all gone—every one."

Two Heroines

These were the employees of the Western Union Telegraph Company in Johnstown. "This is my last message," was the telegram which Mrs. H. I. Ogle, manager of the Johnstown telegraph office, sent just before she was swallowed up in the flood. Long after the danger was imminent, and longer after death was almost certain, Mrs. Ogle sat in the Johnstown telegraph office, over which she had presided for nearly a quarter of a century, and sent warning telegrams down the great valley to the towns and villages below. The warnings were little noticed, but Mrs. Ogle did her duty to the last. Mrs. Ogle was the widow of a soldier who was killed in the war of the rebellion, and her daughter was her assistant. Both could have escaped, had she selfishly minded the first warnings that came over the wire, but she ordered that no one leave the office until the valley was warned. In the last message received from her, she said that the flood had driven them all from their office on the ground-floor, and that she had removed the instruments to the top floor of the building. The four operators and the three messengers were with her. This was the last authentic word received from Mrs. Ogle. Before her dispatch was fairly received in Pittsburgh, it is thought, the telegraph office went on the crest of the flood, and mother and daughter, faithful to the last, perished together.

Remarkable Escapes.

Mr. Fulton, the manager of the Cambria Iron Works, speaking at a Methodist service on June 9, referring to the experiences of his own family, said that they, with several visitors, were in their house when the wave came. "They had reached the third story beneath the mansard roof, and crept up on the roof as the house was swept away. On the roof they drifted against Elmer Hall, and climbed upon the roof of that. The last one had not left the roof a second when it swung away, and was dashed to pieces. A little girl who was visiting us had been cared for by my little daughter Nannie. They told the child to climb upon the roof, but she drew back, and said, 'I won't go until Nannie Fulton has gone.' She would have died rather than have left Nannie behind. Talk about miracles! Why, we had them right here. There was one of our elders. He and a number of others were imprisoned beneath a mansard roof in which there was no opening. Another building washed against it, and it cracked open. They crept out, and the next moment something else came along and crashed into the roofing, closing the crack again, but they were all safe."

A Praying Child.

Among the miraculous escapes to be recorded in connection with the great disaster is that of Geo. J. Leas and his family. He resided on Iron Street. When the rush of water came there were eight people on the roof. The little house swung around off its moorings and floated about for nearly half an hour before it came up against the bank of drift above the stone bridge. A three-year-old girl with sunny golden hair and dimpled cheeks prayed all the while that God would save them, and it seemed that God really answered the prayer of this innocent little girl and directed the house against the drift, enabling every one of the eight to get off. Mrs. Leas carried the little girl in her arms, and how she got off she doesn't know. Every house around them, she said, was crushed, and the people either killed or drowned.

A boy who was saved gives this account of his escape: Shortly after 5 o'clock there was a noise of roaring waters and screams of people. We looked out the door and saw persons running. My father told us to never mind, as the waters would not rise further. But soon we saw houses swept by, and then we ran up to the floor above. The house was three stories, and we were at last forced to the top one. In my fright I jumped on the bed. It was an old-fashioned one, with heavy posts. The water kept rising, and my bed was soon afloat. Gradually it was lifted up. The air in the room grew close, and the house was moving. Still the bed kept rising and pressed the ceiling. At last the posts pushed the plaster. It yielded, and a section of the roof gave way. Then I suddenly found myself on the roof, and was being carried down-stream. After a little this roof commenced to part, and I was afraid I was going to be drowned, but just then another house with a shingle roof floated by, and I managed to crawl on it and floated down until nearly dead with cold, when I was saved.

Miss Lizzie Little tells

A Thrilling Story

of escape from death. In the house with her were her father, mother, Francis Murphy's son, Robert S. Murphy and wife, Mrs. S. H. McClay, and two domestics. The water came up before they had time to get out. With a noise like thunder the chimney fell, making a big hole in the roof, and just missing them. They stood in the room with the water up to their shoulders. Finally they got up through the hole on to the roof. There was a quiver and a whirl, and the house was swept down-stream. The house passed down the street, but was caught in the return current and swept back up to Kernsville, nearly a mile, and lodged in a jam with other houses. A rope was passed to shore, and those in the other houses fought to get to shore by it, but the family was finally saved, though all their possessions were gone. Just before the water had risen high enough to take the house away, a Jew threw two babies into the door, pleading with them to take care of them until he found his wife. The babes were saved, but of the father and mother nothing is known.

Joe the Newsboy.

A little newsboy, a few days before the flood, purchased a news-stand of his own for $1.50, and thought his fortune already made. A stout friend picked him up and carried him to a place of safety when the wave swept over the town. From where he stood he could see his $1.50 business going up into the air, stock and all.

His father was drowned, his mother badly injured, and all that the family owned was destroyed. Their sole dependence now is upon little Joe, who is already trudging about peddling papers as contentedly as though he had never tasted the sweets of being an independent proprietor. He is actively at work, however, disputing for a share of the business with the only firm of regular newsdealers that survived the flood, and expects to be ready to set up a store of his own as soon as the town is rebuilt. He is short and stout, wears knickerbockers yet, looks about twelve years old, and talks business with the dignity and ease of a man of mature years. He laughs about the way his $1.50 flew up in the air when the water struck it, but adds, more soberly: "I've got to fix it, somehow, to do more business than I used to—father being dead and they all depending on me, you know."

The Churches

are nearly all swept away. Of the Episcopal Church not a vestige remains. Where it once stood there is now a placid lake. The parsonage is swept away, and the rector of the church, the Rev. Mr. Dillon, was drowned. The church was one of the first buildings to fall. It carried with it several of the surrounding houses. Many of them were occupied. The victims were swept into the comparatively still waters at the bridge, and there met death either by fire or water. The Rev. William Chapman's Methodist Church was one of the most prosperous in the city. Its building was a fine stone structure in the centre of the town, beautifully finished inside. There were one thousand active members. The walls and roof of the building still stand, and they protected the parsonage beside them, but the interior of the church is a complete wreck—the floors torn to pieces, the walls ruined, and the whole place heaped with all manner of debris. The wreck of the congregation is even more complete than that of the building. Of the 1,000 members not 500 remain.

The Pastors.

The plight of the other churches can be imagined. Many are completely wiped out, pastors and officers lost, buildings destroyed, even the sites obliterated, and of the members only a handful left alive. Among the pastors who went down were the Rev. Mr. Jones of the Welsh Congregational Church, and the Rev. Mr. Lichtenberg of the German Reformed Church. Mr. Lichtenberg was a new pastor, having just moved here. He had preached his first sermon the Sunday before the flood. Himself and all his family went down. Of all the churches in Johnstown, the only ones whose sites can now be discovered by a stranger are, besides the Methodist, the Roman Catholic, which was burned and wrecked at the same time, the German Catholic, which has a hole in its wall as though a freight car end up had smashed into it, and which is totally ruined inside, and two others, a Presbyterian and Baptist, both of which are badly damaged, if not ruined. The Rev. David Beale, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, is one of the hardest-working men in the town, and his mud-spattered clothes, although they appear unlike the garb of a clergyman, are never considered where a word of spiritual comfort is needed. He is now chairman of the Committee on Morgues, and is one of the few men whom the entire community have confidence in, regardless of color or creed.

NEW EDITION OF REV. M. BAXTER'S PAMPHLETS.

THREE PAMPHLETS IN ONE

1. Coming Wars from 1888 to 1891, and Translation of 144,000 living Christians on March 5, 1896, before the 3½ years' persecution by Napoleon, etc.
2. Twenty Predictions about Coming Wars, by Twenty Learned Expositors.

3. End of this Age by the Descent of Christ in Passover Week, April, 1901, being 45 years from the Crimean War Treaty of Peace in Passover Week, April, 1856, and 2,345 years from Passover Week, April, B. C. 444-5, as shown by Daniel's Dates

The Three Pamphlets in an Illuminated Cover, 144 Pages, postage included,

Price Twenty Cents.

For sale at this office, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

PEOPLE WHO HAVE LOST THEIR WAY.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday Morning, June 16, 1889.

"And God opened her eyes, and she saw a well of water; and she went and filled the bottle with water, and gave the lad drink." Gen. 21: 19.

Trouble in the Beer-sheba Household—Hagar and her Son Expelled—Their Journey in the Desert—The Dying Boy—Intervention from the Skies—Lessons of the Incident—I. Trouble the Offspring of Ambition—A Place for Every One—God-Appointed—Honor for the Lowly—Misplaced People—An Injury to Themselves and the World—II. Sympathy for Woman—The Woman Conscript in the Battle for Bread—III. The Momentous Destinies that Women Guide—The Nation that Sprang from Ishmael—What Kitto Did—A Look into Futurity—IV. No Wilderness Without a Well—The Search for the Elixir of Life—A New Astrology—Death of a Converted Hindu.

MORNING breaks upon Beer-sheba. There is an early stir in the house of old Abraham. There has been trouble among the domestics. Hagar, an assistant in the household, and her son, a brisk lad of sixteen years, have become impudent and insolent, and Sarah, the mistress of the household, puts her foot down very hard, and says that they will have to leave. They are packing up now. Abraham knowing that before his servant and her son will be very long and across desolate places, in the kindness of his heart sets about putting up some bread and a bottle with water in it. It is a very plain lunch that Abraham provides, but I warrant you there would have been enough of it had they not lost their way. "God be with you!" said old Abraham as he gave the lunch to Hagar, and a good many charges as to how she should conduct the journey. Ishmael, the boy, I suppose bounded away in the morning light. Boys always like a change. Poor Ishmael! He has no idea of the disasters that are ahead of him. Hagar gives one long, lingering look on the familiar place where she had spent so many happy days, each scene associated with the pride and joy of her heart—young Ishmael.

The Journey

The scorching noon comes on. The air is stifling and moves across the desert with insufferable suffocation. Ishmael, the boy, begins to complain, and lies down, but Hagar rouses him up, saying nothing about her own weariness or the sweltering heat; for mothers can endure anything. Trudge, trudge, trudge. Crossing the dead level of the desert, how wearily and slowly the miles slip. A tamarind that seemed hours ago to stand only just a little ahead, inviting the travelers to come under its shadow, now is as far off as ever, or seemingly so. Night drops upon the desert, and the travelers are pillowless. Ishmael, very weary, I suppose, instantly falls asleep. Hagar, as the shadows of the night begin to lap over each other—Hagar hugs her weary boy to her bosom and thinks of the fact that it is her fault that they are

In the Desert.

A star looks out, and every falling tear it kisses with a sparkle. A wing of wind comes over the hot earth and lifts the locks from the fevered brow of the boy. Hagar sleeps fitfully, and in her dreams travels over the weary day, and half awakes her son by crying out in her sleep, "Ishmael! Ishmael!" And so they go on, day after day, and night after night, for they have lost their way. No path in the shifting sands, no sign in the burning sky. The sack empty of the flour, the water gone from the bottle. What shall she do? As she puts her fainting Ishmael under a stunted shrub of the arid plain, she sees the blood-shot eye, and feels the hot hand, and watches the blood bursting from the cracked tongue, and there is a shriek in the desert of Beer-sheba: "We shall die! we shall die!"

Now, no mother was ever made strong enough to hear her son cry in vain for a drink. Heretofore she had cheered her boy by promising a speedy end of the journey, even smiled upon him when he felt desperately enough. Now there is nothing to do but place him under a shrub and let him die. She had thought that she would sit there and watch until the spirit of her boy would go away forever, and then she would breathe out her own life on his silent heart; but as the boy begins to claw his tongue in agony of thirst, and struggle in distortion, and beg his mother to slay him, she cannot endure the spectacle. She puts him under a shrub and goes off a bow-shot, and begins to weep, until all the desert seems sobbing, and her cry strikes clear through the heavens; and an angel of God comes out on a cloud and looks down upon the appalling grief and cries: "Hagar, what aileth thee?" She looks up and she sees the angel pointing to a well of water, where she fills the bottle for the lad. Thank God!

I learn from this Oriental scene, in the first place, what a sad thing it is when people do not know their place, and get Too Proud For Their Business.

Hagar was an assistant in that household, but she wanted to rule there. She ridiculed and jeered until her son, Ishmael, got the same tricks. She dashed out her own happiness and threw Sarah into a great fret; and if she had stayed much longer in that household she would have upset calm Abraham's equilibrium. My friends, one-half of the trouble in the world to-day comes from the fact that people do not know their place; or, finding their place, will not stay in it. When we come into the world, there is always a place ready for us. A place for Abraham. A place for Sarah. A place for Hagar. A place for Ishmael. A place for you, and a place for me.

Our First Duty

is to find our sphere; our second is to keep it. We may be born in a sphere far off from the one for which God finally intends us. Sextus V. was born on the low ground, and was a swineherd; God called him up to wave a sceptre. Ferguson spent his early days in looking after the sheep; God called him up to look after stars, and be a shepherd watching the flocks of light on the hillsides of heaven. Hogarth began by engraving pewter pots; God raised him to stand in the enchanted realm of a painter. The shoemaker's bench held Bloomfield for a little while; but God called him to sit in the chair of a philosopher and Christian scholar. The soap boiler of London could not keep his son in that business, for God had decided that Hawley was to be one of the greatest astronomers of England.

On the other hand, we may be born in a sphere a little higher than that for which God intends us. We may be born in a castle, and play in a costly conservatory, and feed high-bred pointers, and angle for gold fish in artificial ponds, and be familiar with princes; yet God may have fitted us for a carpenter's shop, or a dentist's forceps, or a weaver's shuttle, or a blacksmith's forge. The great thing is to find just the sphere for which God intended us, and then to occupy that sphere, and occupy it forever. Here is man God fashioned to make a plough. There is a man God fashioned to make a constitution. The man who makes the plough is just as honorable as the man who makes the constitution, provided he makes the plough as well as the other man makes the constitution. There is a woman who was made to fashion a robe, and yonder is one intended to be a queen and wear it. It seems to me that in the one case as in the other and the needle is just as respectable in His sight as the sceptre. I do not know but that the world would long ago have been saved if some of the men out of the ministry were in it, and some of those who are in it were out of it. I really think that one-half of the world may be divided into two quarters—those who have not found their sphere, and those who, having found it, are not willing to stay there. How many are struggling for a position a little higher than that for which God intended them. The bondswoman wants to be mistress. Hagar keeps crowding Sarah. The small wheel of a watch, which beautifully went treading its golden pathway, wants to be the balance-wheel, and the sparrow, with chagrin, drops into the brook, cause it cannot, like the eagle, cut a circle der the sun. In the Lord's army we all want be brigadier-generals. The sloop says: "More mast; more tonnage; more canvas. Oh! we were a topsail schooner, or a full-rigged brig, a Cunard steamer!" And so the world is filled with cries of discontent, because we are in the place where God put us, and intended to be. My friends, be not too proud to do a thing God tells you to do. For the lack of right disposition in this respect the world strewn with wandering Hagars and Ishmaels. God has given each one of us a work to do. You carry a scuttle of coal up that dark alley. You distribute that Christian tract. You give ten thousand dollars to the missionary cause. You, for fifteen years, sit with chronic rheumatism, displaying the beauty of Christian submission. Whatever God calls you to, whether win hissing or huzzas; whether to walk under triumphal arch or lift the sot out of the ditch, whether it be to preach on a Pentecost, or to some wanderer of the street of the mercy of the Christ of Mary Magdalene; whether it be to weave a garland for a laughing child on a spring morning, and call her a May queen, or to comb out the tangled locks of a waif of the street, or cut up one of your old dresses to fit her out for the sanctuary—do it, and do it right away. Whether it be a crown or a yoke, do not fidget. Everlasting honors upon those who do the work, and do their whole work, and are contented in the sphere in which God has put them; while there is only wandering and exile and desolation and wilderness for discontented Hagar and Ishmael.

God Appoints the Sphere,

Not Willing to Stay

Again: I find in this scene a lesson of Sympathy With Woman

when she goes forth trudging in the desert. What a great change it was for this Hagar. There was the tent, and all the surroundings of Abraham's house, beautiful and luxurious, no doubt. Now she is going out into the hot sand of the desert. Oh what a change it was! And in our day we often see the wheel of fortune turn. Here is some one who lived in the very bright home of her father. She had everything possible to administer to her happiness. Plenty at the table. Music in the drawing-room. Welcome at the door. She is led forth into life by some one who cannot appreciate her. A dissipated soul comes, and takes her out in the desert. Iniquities blot out all the lights of the home circle. Harsh words wear out her spirits. The high hope that shone out over the marriage altar while the ring was being set, and the vows given, and the benediction pronounced, have all faded with the orange blossoms, and there she is to-day, broken-hearted, thinking of past joy and present desolation and coming anguish. Hagar in the wilderness! Here is A Beautiful Home.

You cannot think of anything that can be added to it. For years there has not been the suggestion of a single trouble. Bright and happy children fill the house with laughter and song. Books to read. Pictures to look at. Lounges to rest on. Cup of domestic joy full, and running over. Dark night drops. Pillow hot. Pulses flutter. Eyes close. And the foot whose well-known steps on the door-sill brought the whole household out at eventide, crying: "Father's coming!" will never sound on the door-sill again. A long, deep grief ploughed through all that lightness of domestic life. Paradise lost! Hagar in the wilderness!

How often it is we see the weak arm of woman conscripted for this battle with the rough world! Who is she, going down the street in the early light of the morning, pale with exhausting work, not half slept out with the slumbers of last night, tragedies of suffering written all over her face, her lustreless eyes looking far ahead, as though for the coming of some other trouble? Her parents called her Mary, or Bertha, or Agnes on the day when they held her up to the font, and the Christian minister sprinkled on infant's face the washings of a holy baptism. The name is changed now. I hear it in the rattle of the worn-out shoes. I see it in the creases of the faded calico. I find it in the lineaments of the woe-begone countenance. Not Mary, nor Bertha, nor Agnes, but Hagar in the wilderness. May God have mercy upon woman in her toils, her struggles, her hardships, her loneliness, and may the great heart of Divine sympathy inclose her forever.

Again: I find in this Oriental scene the fact that every mother leads forth tremendous desires. You say: "That isn't an unusual scene, the hand." Who is it that she is leading? Ishmael, you say. Who is Ishmael? A great nation is to be founded; a nation so strong that it is to stand for thousands of years against the armies of the world. Egypt and Assyria under against it; but in vain. Gaulus brings his army, and his army is smitten. Alexander decides upon a campaign, brings up his hosts, and dies. For a long while that nation monopolizes the learning of the world. It is the nation of the Arabs. Who founded it? Ishmael, the lad that Hagar led into the wilderness. She had no idea she was leading forth such destinies. Neither does any mother, as she passes along the street, and sees pass boys and girls who will yet make the earth quake by their influence.

A Mother Leading Her Child

Who is that boy at Sutton Pool, Plymouth, England, barefooted, wading down into the slush and slime, until his bare foot comes upon a piece of glass, and he lifts it, bleeding and in pain? That wound in the foot decides that he be sedentary in his life, decides that he be a student, that he shall be John Kitto, who will provide the best religious encyclopædia the world has ever had provided, and, with his own writings as well, throwing a light upon the word of God such as has come from no other man in this century. O mother, mother! that little hand that wanders over your face may yet be lifted to hurl thunderbolts of war, or drop benedictions. That little voice may blaspheme in the grog shop, or cry: "Forward!" to the Lord's hosts, as they go out for their last victory. My mind to-day leaps

Thirty Years Ahead,

I see a merchant prince of New York. One stroke of his pen brings a ship out of Canton. Another stroke of his pen brings a ship into the harbor. He is mighty in all the money markets of the world. Who is he? He sits to-day before you in the Tabernacle. My mind leaps thirty years forward from this time, and I find myself in a relief association. A great multitude of Christian women have met together for a generous purpose. There is one woman in the crowd who seems to have the confidence of all the others, and they all look up to her for counsel and for her prayers. Who is she? To-day you will find her in the Sabbath-school, while the teacher tells her of that Christ who clothed the naked, and fed the hungry, and healed the sick. My mind leaps forward thirty years from now, and I find myself in an African jungle; and there is a missionary of the cross addressing the natives, and their dusky countenances are irradiated with the glad tidings of joy and salvation. Who is he? Did you ever hear his voice in the first song of the service? My mind leaps forward thirty years from now, and I find myself looking through the wickets of prison. I see a face scarred with every crime. A chain on his open palm, his elbow on his knee—a picture of despair. As I open the door, he starts, and I hear his chain clank. The jail keeper tells me that he has been in there now three times. First for theft, then for murder, now for murder. He steps upon the trap, the rope is fastened to his neck, the plank falls, his body swings into the air, his soul swings off into eternity. Who is he, and where is he? To-day playing kite on the city commons. Mother, you are to-day hoisting a throne of forging a chain—you are kindling a star or kindling a dungeon.

A good many years ago a Christian mother sat teaching lessons of religion to her child, and he drank in those lessons. She never knew that Lanphier would come forth and establish the Fulton Street Prayer-Meeting, and by one meeting revolutionize the devotions of the whole earth, and thrill the eternities with his Christian influence. Lanphier said it was to Jesus Christ. She never had an idea that she was leading forth such destinies. But oh, when I see a mother reckless of her influence, rattling on towards destruction, garlanded for the sacrifice with unseemly mirth and godlessness, gaily tripping on down to ruin, taking her children in the same direction, I cannot help but say: "There they go, there they go—Hagar and Ishmael!" I tell you there are wilder deserts than Beer-sheba in many of the domestic circles of this day. Dissipated parents leading dissipated children. Avaricious parents leading avaricious children. Prayerless parents leading prayerless children. They go through every street, up every dark alley, into every cellar, along every highway. Hagar and Ishmael! and while I pronounce their names it seems like the moaning of the death wind—Hagar and Ishmael!

His Mother Brought Him

I learn one more lesson from this Oriental scene, and that is, that

Every Wilderness Has a Well

in it. Hagar and Ishmael gave up to die. Hagar's heart sank within her as she heard her child crying: "Water! water! water!" "Ah," she says, "my darling, there is no water. This is a desert." And then God's angel said from the cloud: "What aileth thee, Hagar?" And she looked up and saw him pointing to a well of water, where she filled the bottle for the lad. Blessed be God that there is in every wilderness a well, if you only know how to find it—fountains for all these thirsty souls to-day. "On that last day, on that great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried: If any man thirst, let him come to Me and drink." All these other fountains you find are mere mirages of the desert. Paracelsus, you know, spent his time in trying to find out the elixir of life—a liquid which, if taken, would keep one perpetually young in this world, and would change the aged back again to youth. Of course he was disappointed—he found not the elixir. But here I tell you to-day of the elixir of everlasting life bursting from the "Rock of Ages," and that drinking that water you shall never get old, and you will never be sick, and you will never die. "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters." Ah, here is a man who says: "I have been looking for that fountain a great while, but can't find it." And here is some one else who says: "I believe all you say, but I have been trudging along in the wilderness, and Can't Find the Fountain.

Do you know the reason? I will tell you. You never looked in the right direction. "Oh," you say, "I have looked everywhere. I have looked north, south, east, and west, and I haven't found the fountain." Why, you are not looking in the right direction at all. Look up, where Hagar looked. She never would have found the fountain at all, but when she heard the voice of the angel she looked up, and she saw the finger pointing to the supply. And, oh soul, if to-day, with one earnest, intense, prayer you would only look up to Christ, He would point you down to the supply in the wilderness. "Look unto me, all ye ends of the earth, and be ye saved; for I am God, and there is none else." Look! look! as Hagar did.

Yes, there is a well for every desert of bereavement. Looking over the audience to-day, I notice signs of mourning. Have you found consolation? Oh man bereft, oh woman bereft, have you found consolation? Hearse after hearse. We step from one grave hillock to another grave hillock. We follow corpses, ourselves soon to be like them. The world is in mourning for its dead. Every heart has become the sepulchre of some buried joy. But sing ye to God, every wilderness has a well in it; and I come to that well to-day, and I begin to draw water from that well. If you have lived in the country, you have sometimes taken hold of the rope of the old well-sweep, and you know how the bucket came up dripping with bright, cool water. And I lay hold of the rope of God's mercy to-day, and I begin to draw on and I see the buckets coming up. Thirsty soul! here is one bucket of life! come and drink of it: "Whosoever will, let him come and take of the water of life freely." I pull away again at the rope, and another bucket comes up. It is this promise: "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." I lay hold of the rope again, and I pull away with all my strength, and the bucket comes up bright and beautiful and cool. Here is the promise: "Come unto me, all ye who are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

That Gospel Well-Sweep,

The old astrologers used to cheat the people with the idea that they could tell from the position of the stars what would occur in the future, and if a cluster of stars stood in one relation, that would be a prophecy of evil; if a cluster of stars stood in another relation, that would be a prophecy of good. Superstition! But here is in which I put all my faith. By looking up to the Star of Jacob, the morning-star of the Redeemer, I can make this prophecy in regard to those who put their trust in God: "All things work together for good to those who love God." I read it out on the sky. I read it out in the Bible. I read it out in all things: "All things work together for good to those who love God." Do you love Him? Have you seen the Nye-tanthes? It is a beautiful flower, but it gives very little fragrance until after sunset. Then it pours its richness on the air. And this grace of the Gospel that I commend to you this day, while it may be very sweet during the day of prosperity, it pours forth its richest aroma after sundown, and it will be sundown with you and me after a while. When you come to go out of this world, will it be a desert march, or will it be a fountain for your soul?

A New Astrology,

A Christian Hindoo

was dying, and his heathen comrades came around him and tried to comfort him by reading some of the pages of their theology, but he waved his hand, as much as to say: "I don't want to hear it." Then they called in a heathen priest, and he said: "If you will only recite the Numtra it will deliver you." He waved his hand, as much as to say: "I don't want to hear that." Then they said: "Call on Juggernaut." He shook his head, as much as to say: "I can't do that." Then they thought perhaps he was too weary to speak, and they said: "Now, if you can't say 'Juggernaut,' think of that god." He shook his head again, as much as to say: "No, no, no." They then bent down to his pillow, and they said: "In what will you trust?" His face lighted up with the very glories of the celestial sphere as he cried out, rallying all his dying energies: "Jesus." Oh come to-day to the fountain—the fountain open for sin and uncleanness. I will tell you the whole story in two or three sentences: Pardon for all sin. Comfort for all trouble. Light for all darkness. And every wilderness has a well in it.

Volume XI., of the Christian Herald, containing the numbers for 1888, with complete index, bound in cloth, may be had from this office; price, $2.50, including postage. A few volumes of 1884, 1885, and 1887 are also for sale. We can also furnish complete volumes for 1884, 1885, and 1888, unbound, price $1.00, including postage.

An Invaluable Work on Prophecy by G. H. Pember, M. A., entitled "The Great Prophecies concerning the Jews the Gentiles, and the Church of God," is for sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York. It is written in a most popular and eloquent style, and describes the impending fulfilment of Revelation and Daniel, and is illustrated by a colored chart. 458 pages. Price, including postage, $1.

Prophetic Studies. A Report of the Address delivered at the Prophetic Conference at Chicago, with portraits of some of the speakers. It contains 216 pages. Fifty cents in paper covers, including postage. Address Manager, 63 Bible House, New York.

THE WORK IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

EFFORTS to make the best use of the better weather for gospel work have prevented the Rev. W. F. Re Qua writing a report of his labors for some time, but last week a letter reached us from him and we now lay it before our readers. As this work is mainly supported by the subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD they will be pleased to learn how God is owning and blessing it. Mr. Re Qua says:

My absence from home on mission work at a distance from any post office is the reason I have not written you for so long a time. One meeting I attended a short time since was a blessed one; some professed faith in our Lord and Saviour, and now we are to have a monthly appointment for preaching out there: it is about fifty miles west of here, where no meetings had been held before. One man came to me and wanted me to go out to his settlement, saying: "We have heard of you, and want you to come and preach for us, and start a school among us." Two nights the meeting held all night, and many were blessed of the Lord. I expect to furnish them a teacher this fall.

I was among the Muscogee Indians last Sunday, to dedicate a neat little chapel 35 x 20; all that were in attendance could not get in; about 350 were present, I should think. The Lord was with us. The Muscogeas, or Creeks, are one of the five tribes, and are doing good work for Christ among themselves. I start this week for another long journey, to be gone four or five weeks if health admits, out among the Blanket Indians, and will write you while out mailing at Gov. posts. "In due time we shall reap if we faint not." We have been permitted to reap some, for which we are thankful. I expect to find a number of orphan children among the wild tribes, that we can take and care for and educate, as the Lord may open the way. Oh how rejoiced we would be if we could have a good, comfortable home by fall! Well, God's promises are true, and He will fulfil. God bless all the friends who have been led of the Lord to minister to us in temporal things while we have tried to minister in spiritual things to others. Indeed the dear Lord will reward them all. This is the Master's work, and He will care for us.

DR. POST'S WORK AT BEIRUT.

AN excellent work is being done by our devoted fellow-countryman, Dr. George E. Post, in the hospital established by the Knights of St. John at Beirut, Syria. In a recent letter he thus describes his patients, and the results of his labors: "What do you see?" he asks. "Who are the patients? A young Jew who has forgotten his fear of uncanonical food in his eagerness for healing. A lineal descendant of Saladin, who still remembers how his ancestor defeated ours on the plains of Palestine—and did they not deserve to be conquered when they carried the Cross of Christ behind the sword? He came blind, and now he sees. His ears have been opened too, and he listens eagerly to the wonderful words of life. On the opposite side of the room, with one eye covered with her veil, is a Druse woman. What brings her here? Warming her hands at a fire in the centre of her chimneyless, windowless house, part of the roof suddenly fell in and pinioned her on the top of the fire, where her hands were burned crisp, and both had to be amputated, 'Go home,' said her husband; and with those customary words of divorce the poor creature was cast maimed and homeless upon the world. There again, denoted by his green turban, is a descendant of Mohammed, the bigoted guardian of the cave of Machpelah, who, forgetting his former hatred, now gratefully kisses the Christian doctor's hand, for, says he, 'You have given me my eyes.' Near by is an Armenian priest in his conical hat, proud of the antiquity of a religion derived, he tells you, not from apostles, but through the letter to the King of Abgarus from Christ Himself.

"And these are not all. There are men from the Soudan and the Sahara, from Cyprus and the Hauran, and moving quietly are the sweet Kaiserswerth deaconesses, while an English pastor and American doctor proclaim the Gospel to attentive hearers. Do you wonder that they listen? Healing has prepared the way, and if we present the Gospel as Jesus gave it, it will be sure to go home to every heart. We never talk about the false prophet if we can help it; we preach Christ."

"Sometimes the medical missionary is called further afield. In 1865 he was suddenly summoned from a brief rest in the mountain sanitarium to a city some days north, by the message, 'The cholera is here, and the devil is with us too, for there are quarrels among us.' And he hastened away with his native helper. They paused one night not far from the cholera-smitten town. 'Will you think me cowardly,' asked the helper, 'if I confess that I am afraid to go on without spending the night in prayer?' I was not afraid, said the missionary, so I slept, for I needed it, and when morning came my helper's face shone like an angel's, as with firm step he accompanied me to the town. The cholera was stayed, the quarrels were settled, the church was left rejoicing. What are these but further miracles of the grace of God?"

CHRIST'S PATIENTS AND PHYSICIANS' PATIENTS.

IN the course of a testimony recently given at Bethshan, and published in Thy Healer,* Miss Thornley Smith drew a distinction worthy of notice between those sufferers whom physicians could sometimes heal, and those whom they could not. She said: It is two years ago since I came here to be anointed, because I was out of health at the time. I thought I had taken the Lord as my Healer, but it was more an intellectual belief than anything else. I did not come into direct contact with Him, or I would have been healed long ago. It was not I waiting for Him, but He waiting for me. He was willing to heal me then, but I had to learn a lesson, and for two years I have been learning it. I have been suffering from rush of blood to the head, hysteria, and other things. I have not been able to do my work in school, and have suffered very much. I have consulted four doctors, and have tried all kinds of remedies; but the Lord wanted to heal me Himself, and so He would not let any one else do it, because He wanted me—He wanted me to come to Him, not only for healing, but for sanctification as well.

Oh, Jesus would have done long ago what He has done now if I had let Him, but I would not be obedient and follow the Holy Spirit's teaching. He taught me lessons two years ago, but I did not obey Him, and so I thought it was all a hoax, and told others the people at Bethshan had made a mistake, and went too far. I thought a lot about my ideas of things. I went to doctors again, but the Lord did not let them do the work. He does let them when His people do not know Him, but He did not let them heal me. But I have come here to day to testify that He has healed me.

AN AFRICAN REVOLUTION.

THE primitive method of conducting a dynastic revolution in Africa is described by Mr. Fay, a missionary of the American Board in West Central Africa, in a letter to the Missionary Herald. The good missionary is evidently deeply concerned about the result of the plot which may embarrass him in his work. The fact, however, that God controls all political movements as well in savage as in civilized countries keeps him in peace.

It appears that on the death of Ciponge, the osoma, or King of Bihe, his successor, was an elderly man, and did not give satisfaction to the younger men of the nation, who wanted Cik-unyu, a young man, to be their king. As is not uncommon, there as in civilized lands, the osoma desired of the people was not unwilling to gratify them. Had he been an American he would have made speeches, and prompted his friends on the press to write editorials, and made another effort in four years' time Cikunyu used a more direct method. He proposed to wait on the new king to swear allegiance, and to take with him so many of his friends that he could overpower the king and seize the throne. The new king, however, suspecting his intention, called his friends around him, and when the aspirant presented himself he found his party outnumbered. He therefore tendered his allegiance and withdrew. Another and more wily plot was then laid. The nation had decided on a war over beyond the Kuanza River. According to custom, the king should start out first, and sit in the camp gathering. This would be some miles from the ombala, and in such a direction that the aspirant to the throne would pass near the ombala on coming to the war-camp. Instead of going to the camp he was to enter and hold the ombala, when all the headmen in the plot would leave the osoma and come to the new man. It was nicely planned, but the king refused to follow the old custom, and would not leave the ombala. The war was delayed more than a month to persuade him to go out. At last they gave up this plot and all the chiefs and old men met at the ombala and told the king he must leave or they would kill him. It seemed that this move was a surprise, for few or none of his friends were about him, so he was compelled to leave. But instead of returning to his old village, he went over to his friends across the Kuito. Mr. Fay fears there will be a civil war, or the nation will split in two, and there will be two rival kings where only one reigned.

BISHOP TAYLOR'S PALAVER WITH A KING.

IN the course of an interesting letter which Bishop William Taylor wrote from Sas Town in West Central Africa, on March 19, which is printed in the African News, is the following account of a palaver with the King:

"Sas Town is the largest native town on the Kroo coast, about fifty miles northwest of Cap Palmas. We landed there on February 21, 1889, and anchored our boat on the beach. A large number of the people shook hands with us, and escorted us through the town, and accompanied us to our mission house, a mile north of Sas Town. It is an iron building, 22 x 36 feet, with the addition of a veranda fronting the Atlantic with an open sea view of many miles.

"A messenger from the king came to say that he and the chiefs would come up for a 'palaver' to-morrow morning. Friday, 22d, at 9 A.M. the king and chiefs and old men arrived, numbering, all told, about forty. Bro. Gunnison glued up our dozen chairs and a big rocker last evening; so we furnished sittings for a portion of them, and the others spread the goat-skins which they carry for the purpose, and seated themselves on the floor.

"The interpreter was a tall, fine-looking fellow and very fluent in speech. We had none of the screaming, shouting, and clamorous debating that we had here twenty-two moons ago, when I negotiated for the founding of Sas Town Mission. This house has stood here empty and silent for a year and a half, and a manifest change for the better has come over this people. When the palaver was set, I expressed my pleasure in being permitted, by the kindness of our God and King, to visit them again, and after so long a delay, had brought them two missionaries. I had no changes to propose in our articles of agreement, but to refresh their memory of what we had written at the beginning, and bow far on each side they had been carried into effect, and the work now demanding our immediate and constant attention. One of the first things in order was to build a Sas Town church down near the big town—a house larger than this, and suitable for school through the week and the worship of God on Sunday. By our articles of agreement, they were bound to build it themselves, without pay, but, to secure a better house than they could build, I now proposed to build the walls and put in doors and windows, and have them put on the roof of thatch and make the floor of cement and gravel. The king and chiefs agreed to all my proposals. The two missionaries were formally presented to the king, who received them, and pledged the protection and co-operation of the government, and after a general shaking of hands, the king and his party retired.

* Thy Healer and Faith Witness, a monthly Magazine, edited by Mrs. M. Baxter, contains original articles on Holiness and Healing, Authentic Testimonies of Divine Healing, and Items of Intelligence from Heathen Lands where missionaries are laboring in faith, soliciting no help from man, but relying solely on God for support. Annual Subscription, 50 cents, may be sent to Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD, 71 Bible House, New York.

Contributions toward the support of Bishop Taylor's grand work in Africa may be sent to Mr. Richard Grant, 181 Hudson Street, N. Y.

A PROPHETIC BOOK RECOMMENDED BY THE REV. C. H. SPURGEON.

IN his monthly magazine, The Sword and Trowel, Mr. Spurgeon, reviewing a new book, "Comments on the Book of the Prophet Daniel," says of it: "In this book we have come across many passages containing excellent teaching. The book is well condensed in its historic portions, and useful lessons are drawn from the prophet, which thoughtful men and devout students of the sacred Word will know how to estimate. We commend to our readers the prayerful study of Daniel's own book, together with all the other prophetic books, each of which exhibits some special side of the truth which the Holy Spirit has revealed for our benefit. All Scripture is given for our instruction, and therefore all should be studied. We should not neglect any part of the Divine Word."

This prophetic book explains on its pages 184 to 187 that the Seventy Weeks of years in Daniel 9: 24, 25 commenced with "the going forth of the command to rebuild Jerusalem," given by Artaxerxes, as recorded in Nehemiah 2, and sixty-nine of the weeks ended with the cutting off or crucifixion of Christ. Then after a long intervallum, or break, the future Antichrist will ratify a covenant with the many in Jerusalem, for the final seven years of this Age—the remaining week of those Seventy Weeks. This explanation agrees with that of 150 other expositors. As regards the 2,300 days in Daniel 8: 14, the book says: "Antichrist will not rise (as a political sovereign) until after the ten kingdoms of the Roman earth shall be formed and consolidated. Then he will rise as a petty chieftain over some part of the four kingdoms ruled by Alexander the Great's successors—Greece, Egypt, Syria, or Thrace. He will announce himself as the Messiah of a glorious humanity, and will be accepted by statesmen, economists, socialists, 'leaders of thought.'"

"Daniel 8: 13 states that, while one saint was speaking, another said unto him, 'For how long does the vision apply to the daily sacrifice and to the desolating transgression? to give the sanctuary and the host to be trodden upon?'"

"The reply was numerically definite: 'Unto 2,300 days, then shall the sanctuary be cleansed.' As is stated in the next chapter, the Antichrist will ratify a seven years' treaty with the Hebrews at Jerusalem. The general scope of the treaty or covenant will be to vouchsafe unto them an autonomy—a separate municipal status of their own, that will accord with their customs and hopes; hopes based on their blindness and unbelief, and on his flattery and falsehoods."

"A few months after the seven years' treaty, when, that is, the last two thousand three hundred days of the seven years begin, the Jews are permitted to offer a daily sacrifice unto Jehovah. This the Antichrist allows to go on until the last half of the seven years begins. Then he ignores the covenant, magnifies himself even unto the prince of the host, causes the daily burnt-offerings to cease, pulls down the place or altar whereon it hath hitherto been offered, casts all revealed truth to the ground, practices, and prospers. He can now do all this because the iniquity that abounds is not only able to bear it, but to approve and support the destroyer (verse 12). Thus the period of time during which a daily sacrifice is offered, and then the sanctuary and host are trodden under foot, will begin and end with the two thousand three hundred days. The last three and a half years—forty-two months—or twelve hundred and sixty days are the last portion of the two thousand three hundred days. Then, it is written, shall the sanctuary be cleansed."

"The events seen in the vision recorded in the seventh chapter clearly reveal Antichrist's practice and policy among the Gentiles, and especially in accord with the ten confederate kings of the Roman world. Among them also he speaks great words against the Most High, wears out the saints of the Most High, and thinks to change times and laws; all shall be given into his hands for three years and a half, or exactly forty-two months. All these things are done and continue until the Ancient of Days sits in judgment on the Man of Sin, and on the general apostasy that shall prevail among all nations, peoples, and languages within the regions that once constituted the undivided, but now divided, Roman empire. All will willingly rejoice in buying and selling by means of a mark or circulating medium bearing his image; without which no commercial transaction will be done; nor the necessities of life procurable."

"The 1,290 days mentioned in Daniel 12: 11 extend thirty days beyond the forty-two months or 1,260 days. The 1,335 days in Daniel 12: 12 reach seventy-five days beyond the forty-two months, and during these seventy-five days there will be a thorough refining, testing, and trying of the remaining Jews, but they shall finally rejoice and exclaim, 'Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.' (Matt. 23: 39.) And blessed indeed, then, shall he be who, having waited, shall have come to the End of the 1,335 days—when Christ will descend on the earth."

THE SIGN OF EXPECTATION.

AMONG the signs of the times one of the most notable, and one often overlooked, is the increasing expectation of our Lord's speedy second advent. As compared with the last century, or even with the middle of this century, the number of preachers and evangelists who are looking forward confidently to Christ's speedy coming, and seeking, like Daniel, "to understand by books the number of the years whereof the Lord spake unto the prophets" (Daniel 9: 2), is now immensely increased. Moody, Munhall, Pentecost, Whipple, Needham, C. H. Spurgeon, A. J. Gordon, and almost every man whom God is using pre-eminently to bring in large numbers of souls into His kingdom, are avowing their expectation of the speedy coming of Christ to reign personally over the earth. Other clergymen of eminence, too, like Dr. Lyman Abbott, whose frank confession of a change of views was published in this journal on May 8, are discovering that the literal interpretation of the prophecies is the only consistent one. There has never been a time when the Bible has been more earnestly and prayerfully studied by so large a number of men, learned and unlearned, as this, and the result is the conviction that the day of the Lord draweth nigh.

In itself this is a significant sign. History shows that before every great and momentous event, religious and secular, there have been some who have been impressed with an expectation of its coming. Sensitive natures, men of keen mental vision, have been aware that change was coming, and how much more likely is this prescience to occur when the Holy Spirit's guidance and enlightenment is being earnestly sought by God's servants!

Before the French Revolution, when to ordinary minds the power of despotic government was never so firmly fixed, more than one statesman predicted the gigantic upheaval that came a few years later. But especially was this phenomenon noticeable near the close of the fifteenth century. It was a time of thick darkness—a very spiritual midnight; yet there were men of God and of faith who were convinced that a great awakening was at hand. They were not surprised when, a few years later, Luther arose, and, by the power of God, shook all Christendom. A writer in the Watchword calls attention to the resemblance between the spiritual atmosphere of the two periods. She says: When Archbishop Crayn, in 1482, endeavored to assemble a council in Basle, he was thrown into prison, and the inquisitor, Henry Institores, uttered these words, "All the world cries out and demands a council, but there is no human power that can reform the Church by a council. The Most High will find other means that are at present unknown to us, although they may be at our very doors, to bring back the Church to its pristine condition." And these words were uttered about the time of Luther's birth. It was as when the high priest prophesied (John 11: 49) that one man should die for the people—a prophecy not his own.

"The Church," says D'Aubigné, "already had a presentiment that the hour of combat was approaching." Andrew Proles, Provincial of the Augustines, in his convent of Himmelspforte, used to say, "Oh my brethren, Christianity needs a bold and great reformation and I think I see it approaching." Then would the monks cry out, "Why do you not begin this reform yourself and oppose such a cloud of errors?" But the aged Provincial replied: "I am bent with years, and I have not the learning, ability, and eloquence that such an undertaking requires; but God will raise up a hero, who by his age, strength, and talents shall hold the foremost place. He will oppose error, and God will give him boldness to resist the mighty ones of the earth."

Such are the utterances recorded before the dawn of the Reformation, and now in the present time what are we looking for—faithful men in the Church—Christians who are exercised as were Andrew Proles and Crayn and Huss, and may we not say, as were Simeon and Anna? What are such hearts looking for, as those of old looked for a work of God—is it not clearly the second coming of the Lord and the rapture of the Church?

It is familiar to many that those whom God has specially used in the present century to lead the way in separation from the corruptions of the Church, and to continue patiently in well-doing have discarded the expectation of a general reformation. What they have had laid upon their hearts has been the patient waiting for Christ—content to be few and little accounted of—looking for deliverance out of a scene where the Church has sadly failed to continue in the goodness of God.

This has characterized the yearning of the heart and the teaching of many devoted men in the last half-century, however little it may have been responded to and reflected in the daily life of those who have enjoyed such a ministry.

If the expectation of the Reformation was answered, let at least the hope now as taught of God give increased power and brightness to the hope of His coming. If the Church sank lower and lower till all was darkness, has not the Lord in mercy by degrees brought back a few to the light, bringing out by one and another recovered truth, until the proper hope of the Church is preached far and wide?

What if His coming is near? It should make the heart leap. May such be our attitude. It is the one we should never forsake. May all we think and do be consistent with the word, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION—1888.

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God.

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICES, 71 AND 73 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK
ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 3 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

Remittances by Mail should be by Post-office money order, bank cheque, draft, or express money order, whenever possible, and should always be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Letters containing money sent in this way need not be registered, as, when lost, duplicates can always be obtained.

If a Postal Note or currency is sent, it should always be in a registered letter. Letters can be registered at any office. Subscribers sending money of this kind, and not registering, do it at their own risk. Postage stamps should never be sent if it is possible to remit in any other way.

Notice of Expiration of subscription is always sent in addition to the date being given on the address label. When not renewed by date of expiration, the paper is stopped; no notice from the subscriber being required.

Receipts are not sent; the receipt of the paper by a subscriber is a sufficient proof that the remittance has been received. If the paper does not arrive promptly, please notify us, that we may see if the address is correctly entered.

Change of Address. Name of Post-office and State, of both old and new address, should always be given in case of removal, as without the previous address it is difficult to find the name on our list.

Money should always accompany each order, and the order and remittance should be for the same amount. We keep no books for unpaid subscriptions, and cannot, therefore, enter any names without payment.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Concern for the Safety of the People of Johnstown has at length resulted in radical measures being adopted to break up the sickening drift by the bridge. The lumber was so saturated with water, and so firmly cemented together by the decomposing animal and vegetable matter, that it resisted all efforts to break it up. General Hastings on June 13 ordered oil to be poured over it, and the whole to be set on fire. The flames burned fiercely, but it is feared that even this will not suffice to remove the drift. Plans are now being devised to run pipes of natural gas into the centre of it, and so float it in sections. There was at first strong objection to burning the mass, as hundreds of bodies are believed to be in, and beneath it. There are, however, four cases of the most malignant type of diphtheria and two of typhoid fever in the town, and the authorities therefore realize that heroic measures must be taken without delay, or there will be an epidemic. The State Board of Health is urging the people to quit the damp houses, especially those of which the cellars have not yet been cleared of mud and refuse. If they have nowhere to go or no means of travelling, the Board advises them to live in tents on the hills until the city has been cleared.

The Work of Relief in Johnstown Now Proceeds satisfactorily, according to the reports. At a meeting called by General Hastings on June 13, he urged the merchants to set about the task of restoring the business section immediately. He said that several lumbermen down East had undertaken to send all the lumber needed, and he proposed to wire them to send it on at once, if the merchants would open stores for the necessities of life. The response was prompt and spirited, and the order was sent. Sad scenes are witnessed at the places where clothing and food are distributed. One young lady, the daughter of a leading lawyer, applied to the Red Cross Society for a cast-off dress. Her father, who is sick in hospital, was worth $200,000 in real estate before the catastrophe, and his daughter was noted for her benevolence and for her kindly sympathy with the poor. The ladies of the Red Cross found on Friday last that the family of Dr. Conway, one of the most active physicians of the town, were in sore need, though they had made no application for help. Money was offered to the good doctor, but he declined it. "You are very kind," he said, "but others are needing it more than I. All I need is some clothing to cover my children." Contributions to the Relief Fund flow in liberally. On Friday the fund in New York, Brooklyn, and the neighborhood was $798,000, and it is expected to reach a million. About three million dollars in all had been contributed by the country generally by the end of last week. In other lands, too, the story of the calamity and the suffering has met with a response. On June 10 Queen Victoria cabled a message expressing her "deep sympathy with the sufferers." The Lord Mayor of Dublin cabled $5,000 for them.

The New Commissioner of Indian Affairs is Colonel Thomas J. Morgan, of Rhode Island. The President nominated him on June 10. His reasons are, Colonel Morgan's ability as an organizer and administrator as shown during the war, and of his wide indorsement by organizations for the advancement of the Indians. He is between fifty and fifty-five years of age, and is said to be a man of ability and culture. When the war broke out he resigned his chair as a professor in Franklin College, near Indianapolis, and was made First Lieutenant of the Seventieth Indiana Volunteers, General Harrison's old regiment. When it was decided to organize colored troops in separate regiments he was made colonel of the Fourteenth United States colored regiment, which became one of the crack colored commands. He was subsequently made a brevet brigadier-general, and commanded a brigade of colored troops. Soon after the war he became President of the State Normal School at Providence, R. I. He was indorsed for office by the Indian Rights Association.

News of an Indian Outbreak and the Massacre of seven white men comes from Mora, Minn. This time the trouble is with the Mille Lacs, of the Chippewa nation. It is easy to infer, from the brief dispatches sent, that the Indians had a substantial grievance, and apprehended a still more serious one. The whites have been encroaching on the reservation, and for some time past the Indians have been showing signs of resentment. Recently the settlers gave a contract to a firm at St. Paul to cut a ditch from Mille Lacs Lake to a point on Smoke River, near Mora. It was for irrigation purposes, but the Indians thought it was to drain the lake and destroy their fishing. On June 13 the contractors set to work with a force of three hundred men. The Indians warned them that if they persisted in the work they would be put to death, but the workmen paid no heed. Suddenly, about noon, over four hundred Indians, in full war paint, and armed with Winchesters, descended on the gang. There was a general stampede, but the Indians killed seven men and scalped them. It appears that three commissioners had been appointed by the President to negotiate with the Chippewas. If the settlers had postponed the digging of the irrigating ditch until after the negotiations, this sad fatality might not have occurred.

Further News of Mr. H. M. Stanley was received by telegram from Zanzibar last week. The latest news we had of him prior to this telegram was that on Sept. 1 he was about setting out from the Aruwimi River with his stores, to rejoin Emin. This telegram says that a letter dated December 2, 1888, had arrived at Zanzibar, stating that Stanley had reached Usuri, had stayed there for a short time, and then returned to Victoria Nyanza. He left behind him fifty-six men, owing to sickness, and forty-six rifles. Most of the sick eventually died. A short time after, Mr. Mitchell arrived there and took away the rifles. It was shortly after reported that Mr. Stanley had sustained a heavy loss of men, owing to sickness and the lack of provisions. Finally Mr. Stanley arrived and said that Emin Pacha is at Unyara, fifteen days distant. Mr. Stanley took away everything and returned to Emin Pacha, giving the writer a letter to take personally to the agent, General Sir Francis de Winton. The date of this letter is believed to be incorrect. Stanley could not have crossed from the Aruwimi to the Victoria Nyanza and travelled thence southward as far as Usuri by December 2, and if he could have done so the news would have reached us long before this. It is thought that the date must be February. From this telegram it would appear that Emin has abandoned his province.

News of an Appalling Fire was received from China last week. The steamer City of Sydney, which arrived at San Francisco on June 12, brought the intelligence. It appears that the Shanghai Mercury had received, on what it considers good authority, news that three-fourths of Suchow were destroyed by fire April 8, and that the town burned for two days. Over ten thousand people perished, and the survivors are in destitution. The news came to Chun King May 8. The Mercury, commenting on the news, says: "In case this startling news is true it is a remarkable fact that it has not reached Shanghai before now, as it is just a month since the fire was reported to have occurred. Still, this is not conclusive proof that a great disaster has not happened, as a month is not too long a time for a letter to reach Chun King. We met a gentleman in Shanghai to-day who was in Penang less than a month ago, and he informed us that a mandarin was a fellow-passenger with him as far as Hankow, and told him about the fire, mentioning that three-fourths of the people of Suchow had been destroyed."

A Distressing Railroad Catastrophe is Reported from Ireland. A large excursion party of Methodist Sunday-school children, teachers, and friends, to the number of 1,200, left Armagh on June 12 for Warren Point, a watering-place in County Down. The excursionists filled two trains. As they were ascending a steep grade fifty feet high the weight of the second train proved too great for the engine. Several cars were detached, and the wheels blocked with stones to prevent them going down the hill. But the stones failed to hold, and the cars ran back toward the level track, but before they reached it they came in collision with an ordinary train from Armagh, which was proceeding at a good rate of speed. The excursion cars were completely wrecked. The scene which ensued was heartrending. Seventy-two of the excursionists—among them twelve children—were killed outright, and over a hundred were dangerously injured.

The Apprehension of Trouble in Servia Increases. The ominous remark of the Czar, that the Prince of Montenegro, who aspires to the Servian throne, is the only sincere friend he has, is still causing discussion both in Germany and Austria. It is accepted as an intimation that the Czar proposes to espouse his friend's cause, and other movements confirm the opinion. The Austrian official journal goes so far as to say that the repetition of such a speech "would banish all hope of maintaining peace, and points to the continued strengthening of the Russian armaments on the western frontier as an indication of Russia's hostile intentions." An American journalist, now in Europe, cables, "I believe, as a matter of fact, that there will be trouble in the Danubian principalities before the summer is over, and that Europe is within measurable distance of that fight for which everybody has been preparing these eighteen years. The approach of this tremendous conflict has been speculated upon so long, and been so often anticipated and so often postponed, that such feelings have taken root among the threatened peoples as to make them accustomed to danger, just as the poor Johnstown citizens were; but the danger is real, all the same, and just now the huge dam which holds back Europe's war flood is daily leaking in new and most perilous spots."

Any Subscriber Interested in this Journal, and desiring to promote its circulation, may have sample copies sent them postage-paid and free of charge, for distribution at camp-meetings or other places where such distribution will introduce the paper, and lead to increased sales. Send postal card stating number required to The Manager, 71 Bible House, New York.

The Famous Dr. P. Waldenstrom, of Gefle, Sweden, is on a visit to this country. He is the eminent theological professor of the State College, and is also a member of the Swedish Parliament. By express permission of King Oscar, he is come to America to study the church and school system here. On June 9 he preached in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association in New York, and on the following day at the Brooklyn Young Men's Christian Association. At both places there were large congregations of Scandinavians, attracted by the fame of the distinguished preacher, about whom so much has been said of late years. Among the visitors who met and welcomed him were Professor K. Erixon, pastor of the Swedish Evangelical Bethesda Church in New York; Rev. C. R. Jork, of Chicago, President of the Swedish Mission Association; and Mr. O. A. Sjostrom. Dr. Waldenstrom brings a considerable sum of money for the Swedish Immigrants' Mission home in New York, which he has collected.

An Effort to Extend the Facilities of Hampton Institute, Va., is being made. The Institute already boards and educates six hundred Indian and colored children, and it could do more with better accommodation. There is no limit to the number who would be glad to enjoy its advantages. It has an annual income of $8,000, but as each child costs nearly $150 a year, the chief dependence of the institution is on voluntary contributions. To the same source the institution looks for the realization of its new plans. The pressing need is for a new building in addition to the one now in use, to contain a large room for the teaching of natural science, recitation-rooms, and more dormitories. A prominent feature of it, if it can be realized, will be a theological class, of which Vice-Principal Frissell will have charge, and which he hopes to make useful as a preparation for such of the children and young men who may show capacity and predilection for ministerial work among their respective races. The plans for such a building as the institute needs have been drawn, and it is hoped that the necessary funds will soon be contributed. Wealthy Christian men concerned for the improvement and development of the races which make up so large a proportion of our population, could find no better use for their money than in helping Hampton to the building she needs.

Robbing the Pillars in a Coal Mine at Plymouth, Penn., caused the death of three miners on June 10. The men had been sent into a portion of the mine which is about worked out to rob the pillars—that is, to cut coal from the pillars formerly left to support the roof. The gang were at work loosening the coal by blasting, when a mass of top rock and coal weighing fully ten tons fell on them without the slightest warning, killing three instantly, and mangle their bodies in a terrible manner. So extensively has this practice of robbing the pillars been carried on, especially under Wilkesbarre, that in some parts of the city huge cracks have appeared in the streets, and there are grave fears of a large cave-in. The practice shows a lamentable carelessness of the safety of others. It has its parallel in the spiritual world. Learned men, some of whom profess to be Christians, by their criticism of the Bible are weakening the foundations of faith, and imperiling the eternal safety of multitudes. (1 Cor. 8: 11.)

A Child's Adventures in the Mountain Woods of Connecticut have amazed a whole community. In the heart of the dense forest on Salisbury Mountain a party of charcoal-burners are encamped. On June 6 a little boy three years old was missed from one of the huts. The parents left their work immediately and went in search of him. They were unsuccessful, and by nightfall the anxiety about his fate extended to the whole party, and nearly a hundred men with flaming torches were scouring the woods looking for the little waif. No sign could be found, and the search was continued all the next day. A second night fell, and still the boy was missing. The searchers were about giving up looking, in despair, when shortly after midnight a loud shout proclaimed that the boy was found. He was sleeping soundly, worn out with fatigue and fasting, in a little sheltered hollow in a glen. He was unhurt, though nearly every shred of clothing had been torn from his body in creeping through the undergrowth. When all the men were returned to camp, the rough fellows were so interested in the child that the whole camp held festival. It ranged itself in line, and the child having been fed, was passed along the line to be kissed and admired for the stamina that had undergone thirty-six hours' exposure and lived. Christ tells us that the recovery of one sinner from his wandering produces similar emotions in Heaven. "There is joy among the angels" over his rescue. (Luke 15: 10.)

A Wrecked Ship, Still Floating, was Towed into New York Harbor last week. She was the schooner Arabella, freighted with lumber. During her voyage from Chincoteague, Va., to New York she struck on a sunken reef and stove a hole in her keel. The vessel filled with water, and the captain and crew, believing that she would sink in a few moments, took to their only boat, and after a few hours were picked up by a passing ship. The next day they saw from their refuge their wrecked vessel, her deck level with the water, and the waves washing clear over her. Still, she was floating, and on their arrival in New York, they hired a tug and went in search of her. She was still in the condition in which they last saw her. The tug was attached by a stout line, and the wrecked vessel was towed into port, where she has been docked for repairs. The safety of the vessel is due to the buoyancy of her cargo. Had she carried anything heavier than lumber, she must have gone to the bottom. The usual conditions were thus reversed; the cargo saved the ship when the ship could not save the cargo. That is often so in the voyage of life. The body may be so marred and crippled that a life of misery seems inevitable; but through the buoyancy of spirit that faith in Jesus imparts, the sufferer's days are full of patience, peace, and joy. (Ps. 145: 14.)

A Contract of Matrimonial Peace was Produced in an Iowa court last week by a wife, who sued for the recovery of money under its provisions. It appears that four years ago, for reasons which it is not difficult to infer, a husband and wife drew up and signed a contract, promising each other that "All past subjects and causes of dispute, disagreement, and complaints of whatever kind, shall be absolutely ignored and buried, and no allusion thereto, by word or talk to each other, or any one else, shall ever be made. Each party agrees to refrain from scolding, fault-finding, and anger in so far as relates to the future, and to use every means within their power to promote peace and harmony. They agree that each shall behave respectfully and fairly to the other; the wife to keep the home and family in comfortable condition, and the husband to provide the necessary expenses." The husband further undertook to pay the wife $200 a year for her personal use so long as she observed the terms of the contract. He has ceased to pay the $200, and the wife sued him for it in the Des Moines court. The court declared the contract void as against public policy, as it merely bound them to do what the marriage contract called for, and such contracts involving litigation would be productive of evil. The judge appeared to think that love, not law, should govern the home, and that it would do all and more than all that the law could enforce. That was the essence of Christ's legislation, and He wished it not to be limited to the home. (Mark 12: 33.)

A Dispute About a Lady's Letter Caused much amusement in a hotel of an Ohio town recently. Two Connecticut business men were among the guests. They were total strangers to each other, yet each had the same surname and initials. One represented an electric company of Birmingham, and the other a varnish firm of Bridgeport. Both happened to be at the clerk's desk when he handed out a lady's letter, the address on which was common to them both. Each claimed it as coming from his wife, and declared he knew the writing. The postmark was indistinct. Only the letter B showed clearly; as that might be for Birmingham or Bridgeport, it did not furnish means of identity. At last it was agreed to open the letter and refer to the date. This was done, but the writer had simply put at the head of the letter the day of the month and not her address. She had written to her "dear husband." Reference to the signature afforded no clue, for it was signed "Mary," and that was the name of the wife of each gentleman. Then they agreed to read it together, feeling sure that the contents of the letter would settle the ownership. But the writer had not mentioned any names or written about any local affairs that could identify her. It was simply an affectionate letter, such as any wife might write to her absent husband. The dispute grew amusing, and finally, on the suggestion of a bystander, it was agreed to leave the letter in the clerk's hands until each gentleman has ascertained from his wife if she was the writer. The difficulty is often reversed in the case of God's communication to men. Awakened sinners will admit that they know the Author of the gracious promises of the Bible, but will not claim them nor believe that they are intended for them. (Acts 2: 39.)

BRIEF NOTES.

The American Baptist Home Mission Society voted on June 10 to appropriate $500 to aid in repairing the damage done to Baptist churches in Johnstown.

The Rev. Dr. Thomas F. Davies, for twenty-one years pastor of St. Peter's Church, Philadelphia, has been elected Protestant Episcopal Bishop of Michigan.

A temperance temple has been built in San Diego County, Cal., at an expense of $6,000. Saloons within three miles of the building have been prohibited by the City Council.

The Congregational Ministers' Meeting in Boston recently discussed the Christian Endeavor Society, and every speaker most heartily and enthusiastically endorsed the movement.

During Rev. C. H. Yatman's four weeks' services in Lockport, N. Y., over seven hundred persons made profession of faith, and among them several young men, who have offered themselves for the Foreign Mission field.

The physicians who performed the autopsy on the body of Washington Irving Bishop, and the physician who ordered it, were arraigned before Judge Cowing last week for unlawful dissection of a human body. They were held in bail to answer.

The bill recently passed by the New York Legislature, and signed by the Governor, that no day-laborer in State employ shall receive less than two dollars a day for eight hours' work, will increase the expenditure in digging the canal extensions by $300,000.

A Deaconess Convention will be held at Ocean Grove, N. J., August 7 and 8, at which different phases of the work, past, present, and future, will be presented by able speakers. All in any way interested in "the Deaconess movement" are earnestly invited to attend.

The annual convention of the New York Sunday-school Association was held in Albany, N. Y., on June 11. About 500 delegates were present. A large map hung from the choir gallery, and on it were painted the following figures: 7,195 Sunday-schools; 108,272 teachers and officers; 949,415 scholars.

A constitutional Prohibition organization for South Dakota has been formed. An earnest appeal for funds to aid in putting a prohibition plank in the Constitution has been issued. Pastors who sympathize with the movement are asked to take up collections in their churches on June 30, and forward the proceeds to Mr. F. H. Hagerty, treasurer, Aberdeen, Dak.

A noble charity commenced operations in New York on June 10. The Summer Home for Poor Children, at Bath, Long Island, presented by Mr. A. B. Stone to the Children's Aid Society, was filled with 234 little girls out of the tenement districts. They stayed for a week, and on June 17 another company went for a week. These relays will be continued for three months.

Nearly 65,000 children took part in the Brooklyn Sunday-school parade on June 5. They were divided into ten bodies of from 1,300 to 14,000 in number, and, after appropriate exercises in the churches appointed as their several places of meeting, marched to the various parks and avenues assigned. This number does not include the schools of the Eastern District, which paraded the next day.

THE DOWN GRADE.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"Rejoice for joy with her, all ye that mourn for her."
Isa. 66: 10.

The Highest Style of Mourner—A Call to Joy—I. Who the Mourners with Zion are—Numerous Causes for Present Depression—The Absence of the Gospel from the Pulpit—The Common Errors of the Day—The Latter-Day Pantheism—The Beclouded Holiness of the Church—Church-Fair Gambling—Abandoned Prayer-Meetings—Sabbath Desecration—Unconcerned About the Unsaved II. Some Reasons for Rejoicing with Zion—God has not Changed—He will Appear—The Church Will be Aroused—Men Raised Up for the Work—III. Personal Examination.

A MOURNER is always an interesting person. We pass by joyful people without a thought; but when we see the ensigns of woe we pause, and sympathize even if we dare not inquire. The new-made widow, the fatherless child, the bereaved husband, these have a history in which our common humanity is interested. "One touch of nature makes the whole world kin;" and when that natural touch comes from the hand of sorrow, kinship is quick to show itself.

The highest style of mourner is one whose griefs are neither selfish nor grovelling. He who bears spiritual sorrow on account of others is of a nobler order than the man who laments his personal woes. This man has not only bowed his shoulder to the inevitable load of personal trouble, but he is obeying the command, "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ." The most excellent style of mourner is the mourner in Zion, the mourner for Zion, the mourner with Zion. If you love the Church of God, you will share her joys; but when she passes through the dark defiles of persecution, or the rushing waters of discord, you will mourn with her. Whenever the ways of God languish, and we languish also, it is a mark that grace is in active exercise. Those who have learned this heavenly mourning are called to rejoice: "Rejoice with her, all ye that mourn for her."

I. Who are those that mourn with Jerusalem? Those that love the Church of God, and desire her prosperity; and when they do not see that prosperity, they are depressed in spirit. At this present time the

Causes for Depression

are exceedingly numerous. Nothing can make the heart of the people of God more heavy than to think that the gospel glory of the Church is declining. There was a time when the gospel of the free grace of God sounded forth from our pulpits as from a trumpet; but that time is past.

In former times good men differed, as they always will, as to the form of their doctrinal system; but with regard to fundamental points, they were at one: it is not so now. The Deity of our Lord and His great atoning sacrifice, His resurrection, and His judgment of the wicked, never were moot points in the Church; but they are questioned at this time. The work of the Holy Spirit may be honored in words; but what faith can be placed in those to whom He is not a person, but a mere influence? God Himself is by some made into an impersonal being, or the soul of all things, which is much the same as nothing. Pantheism is Atheism in a Mask.

The plenary inspiration of Holy Scripture, as we have understood it from our childhood, is assailed in a thousand insidious ways. The fall of Adam is treated as a fable; and original sin and imputed righteousness are both denounced. As for the doctrines of grace, they are ridiculed as altogether out of vogue.

For many a year, by the grand old truths of the gospel, sinners were converted, and saints were edified, and the world was made to know that there is a God in Israel; but these are too antiquated for the present cultured race of superior beings. They are going to regenerate the world by democratic socialism, and set up a kingdom for Christ without the new birth or the pardon of sin. In fact, men are not now to be saved by faith, but by doubt. Those who love the Church of God feel heavy at heart, because the teachers of the people cause them to err. Even from a national point of view, men of foresight see cause for grave concern. Cowper sang, in his day, words worthy to be remembered now:—

"When nations are to perish in their sins,
'Tis in the church the leprosy begins:
The priest, whose office is, with zeal sincere,
To watch the fountain, and preserve it clear,
Carelessly nods and sleeps upon the brink,
While others poison what the flock must drink.
His unsuspecting sheep believe it pure,
And, tainted by the very means of cure,
Catch from each other a contagious spot,
The foul forerunner of a general rot.
Then Truth is hushed, that Heresy may preach,
And all is trash that Reason cannot reach."

The old motto of the city of Glasgow was, "Let Glasgow flourish by the preaching of the Word." Our country has flourished by the preaching of the Word; and, under God, she has been raised to eminence, because of her Protestant Christianity; and when she departs from this, the reason for maintaining her greatness will have ceased. This makes us mourn.

Another cause of mourning is when we see the holiness of the visible Church beclouded. I trust I am not given to finding fault where fault there is not; but I cannot open my eyes without seeing things done in our churches which thirty years ago were not so much as dreamed of. In the matter of amusements, professors have gone far in

The Way of Laxity.

What is worse, the churches have now conceived the idea that it is their duty to amuse the people. Christians who used to protest against going to the theatre, now cause the theatre to come to them. Ought not many school-rooms to be licensed for stage-plays? If some one were to see to the rigid carrying out of the law, would they not be required to take out a license for theatricals? I dare not touch upon what has been done at bazaars and fancy fairs. Think of those who enjoy communion with God playing the fool in costume! They talk of wrestling with the Lord in secret prayer, but they juggle with the world in unconcealed gambling. Can this be right? Have right and wrong shifted places? Ah, sirs! there may have been a time when Christians were too precise, but it has not been in my day. There may have been such a dreadful thing as Puritanic rigidity, but I have never seen it. We are quite free from that evil now, if it ever existed. We have gone from liberty to libertinism. We have passed beyond the dubious into the dangerous, and none can prophesy where we shall stop.

Moreover, we see in the Church that her sacred ardor is cooling. There is still fervor in certain believers, and fervor of the best kind, for the divine Spirit has not utterly departed from us. We have around us Christian men and women who will do and dare anything for Jesus, and bear witness for Him in the open street. Thank God for such! They are a standing protest against

A Lukewarm Age.

And we have still our gracious young men who will give their lives to bear the name of Christ among the heathen, amid the fevers of the Congo River. Still, things are not in Israel as we could desire. Very seldom are believers nowadays charged with being fanatical, nor even with being too enthusiastic; and this is a sign that we are below the right heat. There is cause to grieve over many churches and individuals, that they are neither cold nor hot. Let us be personal and practical, and see whether we have not cause to grieve over ourselves in that respect.

There is grave cause for mourning in Zion, because the services of God's house are neglected. In certain large places of worship which once were crowded to the door, I hear that there are more pews than people. Where the gospel is gone from the pulpit, listeners soon go from the pews. "I do not know where to send my converts with the hope that they will hear the gospel," said a soul-winner to me, the other day, concerning a certain London district. cannot conceal from myself the gloomy fact that the habit of going to a place of worship is being altogether lost in this city. There are streets upon streets where only one or two persons are in the habit of attending the house of God. Alas! time was when it was thought to be a duty to observe the Sabbath; but it is now a day for lying late in bed, loafing about in shirt-sleeves, or mending rabbit-hutches and pigeon-houses! Do not think that I am exaggerating. I am speaking in sober seriousness the sad truth, which has been reported to me by city missionaries, district visitors, and working men who live among it. This is lamentable! How has it come about? I fear that it is very much the case, because if the people did go to many places of worship they could not understand what they would hear; and, what is worse, if they did understand it, it would not be of much use to them. The

Criticisms of Modern Thought

are of no value to the workingman. If the old gospel is brought to the front in all its simplicity, and preached with fervor, we may hope to see the people back again to hear it; but the task of calling them back is not a easy one. Coincident with the prevalence of a questioning theology comes this religious indifference. Under the prevailing form of doctrine, our city is becoming more heathenish than Christian. Between the childishness of superstitious sacramentarianism and the wilful wickedness of doubt, the masses are sliding into an utter disregard of holy things. Reverence is dying out; and as surely as it dies we shall see a fierce attempt at anarchy.

The evil over which I now mourn is not only prevalent among the outlying masses, but taints Christians themselves. Look at you half-Sunday professors, content with only one service, and weary of that! How is it with many Christian people, as to meetings for prayer? Prayer-meetings are the very soul of Church work, and they bring down the blessing upon all our spiritual agencies; yet they are despised by our high-fliers. This is not only bad in itself, but it is a sign of something worse. Men who can pray to edification are in some directions becoming rare. One pastor told me the other day, that out of a considerable congregation he found it hard to make up a prayer meeting at all, because he had so

Few Praying Men.

It is a dreadful impeachment against the churches, but faithfulness compels me to state it, before things grow still worse. You can get a crowd to a concert, but hardly a dozen to prayer! If there had been a magic-lantern, a penny reading, or a recitation with comic songs, the pious people would have strained point to be there; but to pray is much too dull for novel-reading, theatre-haunting professors.

Another very great and grave cause for mourning to all true Christians, is the multitude of sinners that remain unsaved. We do not dispute the fact, neither do we feel its sadness. Look at the many round about us who are living in open evil, going after their lusts, plunging deeper and deeper into what must be their destruction. Look at the many that are blind though they have eyes; that hear not, though they have ears; that feel not, though they are rational beings! How can we bear it? How can we bear it, that there should be any among us who know not God, who love not the Lord Jesus Christ, who are yet in their sins? An unsaved soul is a sight that might well transform us into Niobes, and cause us to weep perpetual showers of pitying grief, until the arm of mercy should interpose to work salvation.

The darkest thought for a true heart is that while souls are lost even now, the evil does not end here; but they are passing away into that hopeless state in the next world which our Lord speaks of as the place of the worm which dieth not, and the fire which is not quenched. They are going from this place, where mercy is proclaimed, to that dread tribunal where the voice of judgment cries, "Depart, ye cursed." They are hastening away to appear before the great white throne, unsaved, unrenewed, unforgiven! He who can see a soul lost, and yet is not distressed, how dwelleth the love of God in him? We ought to be filled with sorrow when men perish wilfully under the gospel.

Reasons for Joy.

II. I have, at least, shown you that we are not without overflowing fountains of grief; but I say, in the second place, that we may yet rejoice with Jerusalem. Why may we do so amid such reasons for mourning?

We may rejoice with the chosen of the Lord when we remember, first of all, that God has not changed, either in nature, or in love to His people, or in the purpose of His grace. When His church was faithful, His divine decree was carried out; and if His church be unfaithful, He is still omnipotent, and can, therefore, work out His great designs. He has not changed His system of working. He intends still to bless the world through the Church: He means to use His saved ones for the saving of others.

A further joy is this—we may expect the Lord to appear. In the Middle Ages the darkness deepened into seven-fold night; but, as in a moment, God said "Let there be light," and Luther, and Calvin, and Zwingle, and other stars shone forth in the midnight sky, and made the gloom to disappear right speedily. Our glorious God can do so at this present crisis. Oh for a word from the throne! The battle is not ours, but the Lord's. God knows no difficulty. Omnipotence has servants everywhere, and power to create as many more agents of its purpose as there are sands on the sea-shore. Sitting in the chimney-side, to-night, a young Luther is preparing, as he looks in the fire, to burn the bulls of the philosophic hierarchy.

When the Lord shall put on strength, then shall His Church be aroused. I hope to see holding truthful doctrine, agonizing over lost souls, and blessed with hosts of converts. Glory be to the name of the Lord! where all is as a desert He can make a garden. Once more He will shake, not only earth, but also heaven. Wherefore let us rest in the Lord, and sing with joyful confidence, since no good thing will He withhold from His Church, and no evil thing will He long permit to do her damage.

A Revived Church

Oh that the days of refreshing were come! Then shall the Church have many converts, proving her power, and increasing her influence. Thousands shall turn to Jesus at the expected Pentecost. Then shall she nourish them well, and feed them with knowledge and understanding. I fear that if, in certain churches, there were to be many converts, they would not know what to do with them; but when the Holy Spirit comes into her midst, then the Church shall be a nursing mother. I pray that it may be so among us. We have added to us, during the last two months, first seventy, and then ninety, fresh members, for which I thank God. It is a little church in itself; but unless you all look after them, and try to help them on, we shall be embarrassed by such large additions to our number. Oh that this church may carefully see to all the children that the Lord gives her; and if so, we shall indeed have the fullest reason for rejoicing with her!

Nor is this all: God will raise up men fitted to do His work. Read the twenty-first verse: "I will also take of them for priests, and for Levites, saith the Lord." When the Holy Spirit visits a church, He is sure to bestow special gifts, and give special calls. As the Holy Ghost said, "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them," so will He say in our churches, to our great delight. When God sent to Hermansberg, it was a mere heath, and there were few on that heath that knew the Lord: but under his zealous preaching the whole village was turned into a missionary society. Oh that we could do anything like it! Farmers and laborers, men and women, became missionaries for Christ to Africa; and a large proportion of the population went abroad, either to preach the gospel, or to form little colonies to work with the missionary and support him. They sold house and land and everything, and thus made Hermansberg the starting-place of a great evangelizing enterprise. My beloved people, I hardly dare be so ambitious as to hope that you will ever reach such consecration! See how it was among the Moravians; every man becoming a member of their Church became himself a teacher of the Word: every man, woman, and child among them sought to bring souls to Christ. Would God that the power of the Lord would come in that way upon all our Churches! And we may expect it, if it be the true gospel which we preach, if it be the gospel which we love, if it be in the power of the gospel that we live.

Pastor Harms

The Personal Question.

III. But now my time has nearly gone, and so I must finish by asking, Why should we personally be of the number that mourn with the Church, and that rejoice with her? Perhaps some of you do not belong to that honorable company. I pray the Holy Spirit to make you of that host at once.

For, first, there is our own sin and ruin to mourn over. I spoke, just now, of how we ought to feel for a lost soul; but how ought that lost soul to feel for itself? Poor soul, if we ought to mourn for you, how much more should you mourn for yourself! If you should be lost, if I have been faithful to you, I shall be no loser. What if you go down to hell, your mother's pleadings being in vain? your mother will not be robbed of her glory because you refuse the Saviour. It is your soul, your own soul, your only soul, that is in jeopardy. The Lord have mercy upon you! The Lord make you at once a mourner in the church of God, that you may, ere long, rejoice in her Saviour!

Next, I may be speaking to some one who has been a backslider, and is a backslider even now. By your wretched wandering you have disgraced the name of Christ, and you have dishonored the cause which you professed to love. You have made the enemy blaspheme, and you cannot wonder that your rest is broken. If anybody ought to be a mourner, you should be. You should take front rank among those who lament for the Church of Christ, seeing that you have done her so much damage that you will never be able to undo it even by a long life of usefulness.

Brethren, do you not think that we

Might All Become Mourners

when we think of our own want of zeal, and want of care for the souls of others? The preacher would smite upon his breast; and he invites you to do the same. Who among us spends half the thought that he should spend upon the conversion of his fellow-men? We all think of them a little; I hope the most of you are doing something for Jesus and His cause.

May we not add to this our own failures in the matter of holiness? It is easy enough to drag the whole Church up, as I did just now, and scourge her as she well deserves; but it is not so easy for each guilty person to flagellate himself. Yet this is what is needed. Ask—Have I been as holy I should be? Has my house been ordered aright? Is there family prayer observed, not as a matter of form, but in life and power? Am I towards my children, towards my husband, towards my wife, towards my servants, as I ought to be? Are we as upright and generous as we should be in our business, and in our connection with common daily life? O sirs, we may each of us become mourners with the Church of God if we examine ourselves with care!

Let me add that we have all a great concern in this matter, and we ought, therefore, to join with the Church in all her griefs. If the ministry of our pastors be not successful, we shall lose by its want of power. None of us will be able to escape scot-free from the terrible damage which evil is working all around. When false doctrine breaks forth like the water floods, it will surge around all our houses. Let us, therefore, cry mightily unto God, not for ourselves only, but for the one great universal Church, and for this great city, and for this wicked world. O Lord our God, arise for Thy cause and crown! Take hold on sword and buckler, and plead Thine own case, for Jesus' sake! Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS. A GOVERNOR TURNED BISHOP.*

AMBROSE, Bishop of Milan, sprang from a prominent Roman family, and was Governor of Milan. After the death of Auxentius, in A. D. 374, violent quarrels broke out over the choice of a successor. Then a child is said to have cried from the midst of the crowd, "Ambrose is Bishop!" and all the people, Arians as well as Catholics, agreed. All objection was vain. Up to this time Ambrose was only a catechumen, now he received baptism, distributed his property among the poor, and, eight days after, mounted the episcopal chair. His new office he administered with truly apostolic zeal, a father of the poor, a protector of the oppressed, an unweariedly active pastor, and a powerful opponent of heresy and heathenism. His eloquence, which had won him a high reputation in the forum, was yet more conspicuous in the service of the Church. To ransom prisoners, he did not spare even the church furniture. To a peculiar winning friendliness and gentleness he added great strength of character, which prevented him being checked in his course by any respect of persons, or by any threatening or danger. He so decidedly opposed the intrigues of the Empress Justina during the minority of her son Valentinian II., that she, powerless to execute her wrath, was obliged to desist from her endeavors. All his writings are distinguished by their noble, powerful, and popular eloquence.

The Ascetic Jerome.

Jerome received his classical training under the grammarian Donatus, in Rome. In A. D. 360 he was baptized by Bishop Liberius, but afterward fell into sensual excesses, for which he condemned himself to atone by penitential pilgrimages in the catacombs. During a journey through Gaul and the provinces of the Rhine and Moselle, he seems to have formed the fixed resolve to devote himself to theology and an ascetic life. Then for more than a year he stayed at Aquileia, A. D. 372, where he formed an intimate friendship with Rufinus. He next undertook a journey to the East. At Antioch, in a vision, during a violent fever, placed before the throne of the Judge of all, having answered the question, "Who art thou?" by the confession that he was a Christian, he heard the words distinctly uttered, "Thou liest! thou art a Ciceronian, and no Christian!" He then sentenced himself to severe castigation, and promised with an oath to give up the reading of the heathen classics, which he had so much enjoyed. He afterward, indeed, excused himself from the fulfilment of this obligation; but this had sealed his devotion to an ascetic life; and the desert of Chalcis, the Syrian Thebaid, became for him during many years the school of ascetic discipline. Worn out with privations, penances, and sensual temptations, he returned in A. D. 379 to Antioch, where he was ordained presbyter, but without any official district being assigned to him. He returned to the East, visited all the holy places in Palestine, and made an excursion to Alexandria, where he stayed for four weeks in the school of the blind Didymus. His style is pure, flowing, and elegant, but in polemic, often reckless and coarse, even to vulgarity. In

* From "Church History." By Professor Kurtz. Translated from the German, with the author's approval, by Rev. John MacPherson, A. M. This work has had an enormous circulation in Germany, where it has run through nine editions, and is accepted as a standard work. The translation has been done accurately and gracefully, and it is likely to become as popular here as in Germany. It is in three volumes, of which the first is now issued. Pp. 574. Price $3 per vol. Published by Funk & Wagnalls, New York.

Miss Clara Barton.

Dr. Mahan's Invalid Services.

The Late Dr. Asa Mahan.

the department of exegesis the first place belongs to his translation of the Bible,

The Famous Augustine.

Augustine was born in A. D. 354, at Tagaste, in Numidia. From his pious mother Monica he early received Christian religious impressions, which, however, were again in great measure effaced by his pagan father, the Decurio Patricius. While he studied in Carthage he gave way to sensuality and worldly pleasure. Cicero's Hortensius first again awakened within him a longing after higher things. He now began diligently to search the Scriptures. At last the hour arrived of his complete renewal of heart and life. After an earnest conversation with his friend Alypius, he hastened into the solitude of his garden. While agonizing in prayer he heard the words thrice repeated: "Tolle, lege!" [Take, read.] He took up the Scriptures, and his eye fell upon the passage, "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make not provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof." (Rom. 13:14.) This utterance of stern Christian morality seemed as if written for himself alone, and from that moment he received into his wounded spirit a peace such as he had never known before.

MISS CLARA BARTON.

No news is more encouraging to the sympathizers with the poor afflicted people at Johnstown, than the fact announced last week that Clara Barton, with her corps of Red Cross workers, had arrived there, and meant to stay. Sickness, sorrow, and destitution, in the proportions existing there, can be alleviated only by systematic, well-organized effort; and this is precisely what Miss Barton's experience fits her to supply. Her courage, her patience, and her skill have been developed in many a heart-rending scene, and in Johnstown there is sorrowful need of their exercise.

Clara Barton is fifty-one years of age—having been born at Oxford, Mass., in 1838. She had a thorough education in the public schools of that city, supplemented by a course of study at Clinton, N. Y. For some time she was a teacher in the public schools of Oxford, and subsequently was principal of the first public school at Bordentown, N. J. A painful affection of the throat incapacitated her for this occupation, and she was glad to accept an offer of a clerkship in the Patent Office at Washington, D. C. She was engaged there in 1861, when the outbreak of the war introduced her to the work that has made her name famous in all lands.

A company of wounded soldiers from her own native town arrived in Washington, and Miss Barton applied for permission to go to the hospital and nurse them. Her services were so thoroughly appreciated by the surgeons, that she was solicited to remain permanently, and she consented. Resigning her position in the Patent Office, she devoted herself exclusively to hospital work. As the need increased, she hired a vehicle and went to the scenes of slaughter—Culpepper Court House being her first destination. She was on the battle-fields of Cedar Mountain, Chantilly, Fredericksburg, Falmouth, and at the siege of Charleston. How many lives were saved in those scenes of slaughter through her prompt ministrations none can estimate. With her band of trained nurses, she did noble service, and continued in it to the end of the war.

With a frame exhausted by continuous labor, she went, by the advice of her physicians, to Europe to recuperate. She was there when the Franco-Prussian war broke out, and she immediately offered her services. At Metz, in Paris, and in other scenes of conflict, she ministered to the wounded and comforted the dying. The Emperor of Germany acknowledged her services by the presentation of the Order of the Iron Cross, and other distinguished personages gave her tangible proofs of grateful esteem.

Since then, as President of the American Red Cross Society, she has rendered beneficent service in the Ohio floods, the Michigan fires, the Charleston earthquake, and the Mount Vernon tornado. Now she has gone to Johnstown to relieve the sufferers there, and she proposes to stay until the danger of an epidemic, which menaces the afflicted district, has passed.

THE LATE DR. ASA MAHAN.

The distinguished American preacher whose portrait is given on this page died in April last while visiting England. He was in his ninety-fourth year. He was converted at the age of seventeen, and, while teaching school for some years afterward, he used every opportunity for Christian work among the pupils. Friends who witnessed the success of his labors urged him to enter the ministry. After a course of study, he was appointed pastor of a church at Cincinnati, O. After a period of service there, he removed to Pittsford, N. Y., where he was successful in arousing a widespread revival of religion. Subsequently he became President of Oberlin College, where he first promulgated the doctrines now known as those of "the Higher Life," with which his name has since that time been most closely identified. He afterward became President of Adrian College, Mich., which position he occupied for fifteen years. After the infirmities of age came upon him, he spent much of his time in England, but contributed extensively to the press of his native country during his absence. To the last, however, he availed himself of every opportunity for preaching, and when unable to stand to declare the message of salvation, he would sit in his chair, a wrap over his knees, and read and expound the Bible to the friends who crowded his room. (See Illustration.) His best-known works are, "Christian Perfection," "The Hidden Life Made Manifest," and "Baptism of the Holy Ghost."

THE CLERGYMAN'S TREASURES.

(See Illustration on page 397.)

Two young men, whose garb denoted a recent bereavement, sat one evening in a small cottage. The place was completely hidden from view from the roadway by dense masses of foliage. It had evidently been the abode of a retiring, cultured person. Choice pictures hung upon the walls, and the dwarf book-cases around the room were filled with beautifully bound books in many languages.

"Seems strange to be sitting here at our ease," said one of the young men; "almost like sacrilege. I never entered this room without a feeling of awe, even after I grew up."

"Nor I," said the other. "Grandfather always kept it sacred. I doubt if I ever was in it more than two or three times. Father used to say it was a solemn place to him, too. The old gentleman used it as a studio before his sight failed him. He was quite a famous artist in his youth, you know; and even after he became a clergyman he used to paint for some years in his intervals of labor. They were few and brief of late years, and when his eyes grew dim he laid the palette aside altogether."

"What a good, gentle old man he was! I could not imagine his committing a sin. He surely began his heavenly life here. I wonder what his early life was! Even father never knew anything of that."

"No, I remember father saying he thought some dreadful sorrow had crushed him, most probably the death of his wife. She died when father was born, did she not?"

"Yes, and that is very likely the explanation of grandfather's silence about the past, and his special interest in all whom death had robbed of dear ones. Well, perhaps we shall get some light on his story now. I scarcely like to turn over his papers, but we must do that, now that he is gone."

"Nor I; it seems almost like opening a grave."

The elder of the young men took from a drawer a bunch of keys, and he and his brother drew their chairs to an ebony cabinet, beautifully inlaid with silver, which stood in a recess. They unlocked it, and as they reverently opened its doors both uttered an exclamation of pleased surprise. In the back of the cabinet was an exquisite picture of a lady standing on a hill-side, the light of the new moon throwing her graceful figure into strong relief against ground and sky. The lady was young and very beautiful, with a sweet, pensive expression on her face, as she gazed into the valley below. The young men looked at it long in admiration.

"That is grandfather's own work," said one of them. "See, there are his initials in the corner."

On each side of the picture was a row of pigeon-holes full of papers, tied and labelled methodically. The inscriptions showed that many of them related to the dead clergyman's church-work. Others were records of transactions connected with duties he had undertaken as the guardian of widows and orphans, which must have involved infinite anxiety and trouble. Beneath the picture, laid carefully by themselves, were a number of letters all in one handwriting. They were evidently some peculiarly treasured relics, and these the young men examined first. They were dated more than fifty years back, and revealed the story which the old man could never bear to speak of. They were signed "Alice," and it was not difficult to see that more than ordinary love subsisted between the writer and the person to whom they were addressed.

Almost the first letter the young men read told the story of the picture. "So you have been painting another picture of me," said the writer; "were you not satisfied with the one I sat for? And why did you choose that particular scene? I must have looked like an elfin-sprite in my white dress in the moonlight watching you climb the hill. You say I seemed your good angel, calling you to leave the world for the higher life. That is what I want to be. I do not wish to discourage your love of art; but it is not the highest life possible to you. There is so much sorrow and sin and misery in the world that I can imagine no higher work for you than that of spending your life in trying to alleviate it." Then the girl passed on to describe her life since parting with her lover—visits to the sick, news of friends, and other matters of common interest.

Another letter reverted to the subject that was evidently the ruling principle of her life. "You can conquer," she wrote. "I do not underestimate the difficulty. I have seen the signs of the fierce anger you speak of in your nature, and they have terrified me. I know that what you say of other faults is true. I have studied you since I began to love you, and I am aware of your weaknesses; but I know, too, what Christ can do with such a nature. Give yourself wholly to Him, dear, and He will transform your nature into His likeness. You need not abandon your art, but I think you may choose to do so as you aspire to higher service. For there is a higher. When you are pointing the weary and heavy-laden to the Saviour; when you are showing them the way out of sin and degradation, as one day I hope to see you doing, you will experience a joy far beyond any other this world can give. Your life will be blessed, and a blessing."

"That is just what it was," said one of the young men, as they read the letter yellow and faded with age. "If she was permitted to look down from heaven, and could see that angelic old man-whom she had loved and helped in his youth going about his Master's business right up to the verge of the grave, her heaven must have been the happier for the sight."

The Treasured Picture.

ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS.

A Life Story: By Mrs. Stenhouse.

For More than Twenty-five Years the Wife of a Mormon Missionary and Elder.

(Continued from page 382.)

Woman's Place in Mormonism.

BRIGHAM YOUNG usually dined in the Lion House at 3 in the afternoon. Mrs. Twiss Young acted the part of housekeeper. Each mother had her children around her. Brigham sat at the head of the table, with his favorite—when at home—vis-à-vis, or on his left, and if a visitor was present he sat at the Prophet's right hand. This was the first time he saw his family. In the evening at 7 o'clock the bell again rang. When all the members of the family were assembled, the door was closed. All knelt down and the Prophet prayed, invoking special blessings upon Zion and "the kingdom."

With his family, Brother Brigham is said to have been kind; but it was supposed to be more the awe which his position as Prophet inspired than the love which they bore him as a man which rendered him successful in managing them. At the same time, the sweet familiarity was destroyed which should exist between husband and wife, father and children. With such a number of wives, he could not possibly wait upon them in visiting. With the exception of his reigning favorite, whoever for the time she may have happened to be, no one expected his attentions. At the theatre a full number of seats were reserved, and his wives attended or remained at home, as they pleased. They sat in the body of the parquet, among the rest of the people; but one of the two procenium boxes was reserved for him, and beside him was a chair for the favorite Amelia.

When he went to the ball, the same special attention was shown. He danced first with the favorite, and, if half-a-dozen more of his wives accompanied them, he would dance with each of them once in the course of the evening; but with the favorite he danced as frequently as any youth with his first maiden love. The Apostles and leading men of the community who bestowed attendance on him and desired his favor were sure to seek the pleasure of her hand and place her in the same cotillon with Brigham, who was thus able all the evening to favor her with his company.

I feel it desirable to mention these particulars to show the true nature and history of the great delusion of Mormonism, which even now is ensnaring a certain number of English and other European people in its meshes, by inveigling them to emigrate to Utah. Even now the Mormon leaders are said to be proposing to purchase a large tract of land in Mexico, so as to establish their polygamous institutions afresh in a country beyond the prohibitive control of the United States Government.

When I arrived in Utah I found that nearly all the elders with whom I had formerly been acquainted had more than one wife there. Many of these brethren called to see me, and kindly insisted that I should visit their families; but this I felt was most uncongenial.

My whole nature rebelled at the thought of visiting where there were several wives; for, in defiance of all the teaching that I had listened to, and the tyranny to which we had submitted, human nature would assert itself, and my womanly instincts revolted against the system. I could not endure the thought of visiting those families in company with my husband. I thought that perhaps sometimes I might venture alone, but not with him. It was bad enough and humiliating enough for me to witness by myself the degradation of my sex; but to do so in the presence of my husband was more than I could calmly contemplate. I knew that I should not be able to control myself, and might probably say some very unpleasant things; for I so thoroughly loathed even the idea of plurality of wives at that time that I was filled with a desire to let everyone know and understand just what my feelings were on that subject.

I had left New York against my will, although I had not openly rebelled. I had never reproached my husband about it, for I felt that his lot was irrevocably cast with the Mormons; I knew that when I married him, and it was of no use now for me to repine. I must go on to the end—there was no help for me. The journey across the Plains, and all the discoveries which I had made, had not tended to soothe my rebellious heart, and I am not quite sure that I did not sow by the way a little discontent among the sisters. The idea, however, that such was the case did not fill me with much repentance. To my husband I had said very little, but I think he would bear me witness that what I did say was said effectively. Now when I was brought face to face with the Mormon institutions and could observe them in their most repulsive phases, I hated them more than ever.

One day, not long after our arrival, as we were taking a walk together, I saw across the road a man gesticulating after an eccentric fashion, and beckoning to us. Mr. Stenhouse gravely said, "That is Brother Heber C. Kimball;" and I looked again with interest to see what that celebrated Apostle was like. I had both heard and read a great deal about Heber Kimball, and what I had learned was not at all of a character to impress me favorably—he had been so severe in his denunciation of every woman who dared to oppose the doctrine of the plurality of wives. On the present occasion his gesticulations were, I thought, grotesque and uncouth; and when we crossed the road to him—which on account of his position in the Church, next to Brigham himself, we, of course, were compelled to do—my face must have betrayed my feelings, I am sure, for almost his first words after shaking hands were, "Have you got the blues?"

My answer was ready in a moment, "I have had nothing else ever since I came here."

"Well," he replied, "it is time that you should get rid of them, and I am going to talk to you some day soon, for I like your looks."

I did not like his looks much, however, nor was I at all pleased with his manner. I do not say that I was altogether without blame in feeling thus, for I was prejudiced. From the first moment when I heard fully of the doctrines of the Church, I was predisposed to be dissatisfied with everything; I was henceforth not myself, for the terrible apprehension of my own fate in the "Celestial Order" had changed my whole nature, and that change of itself was a great source of relief to me. I keenly realized that I was no longer the light-hearted, pleasant companion to my husband that I had been, and many a time and oft I wished for his sake that I could die, for I felt that I never could be happy in Mormonism.

How many times have I knelt by my husband's couch when he was unconscious of it, and have wept bitter tears of sorrow, earnestly praying to the Lord to subdue my rebellious heart, and, if it were necessary, rather than I should be a continual annoyance to my husband, whom I loved with all my soul, that every particle of love in my heart should be withered, so that I might perchance, if without love, be able at least to do my duty. I fully realized that in the Mormon social system there could be no real love; and while my affections were still placed upon my husband, it was torture to live in a community where I was compelled to listen to the "counsels" which were given to him, day after day regardless of my presence, to take another wife. I was too proud to notice any ordinary allusion that was made to the subject before me; but when the conversation was turned in that direction by those who professed to be sincere friends, and to entertain a kindly interest in my welfare, I was compelled to listen and reply.

In my unhappy condition I thought that perhaps I might derive some consolation from the sermons in the Tabernacle—something that might shed a softer light upon my rugged pathway. But instead of obtaining consolation, I heard that which aroused every feeling of my soul to rebellion, and kindled again within me the indignation which I had been so long struggling to conquer. I there heard a woman described as an inferior being, designed by the Lord for the special glory and exaltation of man; that she was a creature that should feel herself honored if he would only make her the mother of his children—a creature who, if very obedient and faithful through all the trials and tribulations in life, might some day be rewarded by becoming one of her husband's queens, but would even then shine only by virtue of the reflected light derived from the glory of her spouse and lord.

He was to be her "saviour," for he was all in all to her; and it was through him alone, and at his will, that she could obtain salvation. We were informed that man was the crowning glory of creation, for whom all things—women included—were brought into being, and that the chief object of women's existence was to help man to his great destiny. The great object of marriage, we were told, was the increase of children. Those diviner objects—the companionship of soul, the devotion of a refined and pure affection, the indissoluble union of two existences—were never presented to the yearning hearts of those poor women who listened to the miserable harangues of the Tabernacle. Neither did we hear the Apostolic doctrine of St. Paul in Galatians 3:28: "There is neither Jew nor Greek, neither bond nor free, neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus."

Seldom, indeed, were the women of Utah taught anything better, but frequently much that was worse. If nature, asserting its right to a full return of love, should manifest itself, and inspire some of these poor wives to rebel against the lives which they were compelled to lead, then it would be said, in the language of the Tabernacle, that the women were "filled with the devil," and that unless they repented speedily, they would "apostatize and go to hell;" an assurance which was scarcely necessary, for many of those poor souls were already enduring it to some extent.

I found, therefore, that the sermons in the Tabernacle were not calculated to help me much spiritually. I had neither friend nor counsellor on earth to whom I could turn for help—my God alone remained to me. But, ah, how different were my ideas of God then, from those which I entertained before and since. Once I could look upon the beauties of nature and the varied experiences of human life, and while my soul was lifted up with devotion and gratitude, I could see the loving hand of my Heavenly Father in everything around me. Now there was neither light nor beauty before my eyes—all was dark and dreary; there was nothing to draw away my heart from such sad thoughts as these. It was painfully clear to my understanding, then as now, that in Mormonism woman was to lose her personal identity. All that Christianity had done to elevate her was to be ruthlessly set aside and trampled under foot, and she was instantly to return to the position which she occupied in the darkest ages of the world's existence.

I had at that time the daily and hourly cares of a family devolving upon me, and had not therefore much leisure to spend in visiting my friends even if I had desired to do so. Notwithstanding that, however, I had abundant opportunities of observation; and thus my experience of Mormonism in Utah is much the same as that of any Mormon woman of ordinary sense.

During the winter, although I visited very little, I attended a good many parties at the Social Hall; but I did so more from a wish to be agreeable to my husband than from any pleasure that they afforded me, for life had long since been losing almost all its charms for me. How many times have I gazed wistfully at those lofty mountains which surround the city, and felt they were my prison walls. How bitterly have I realized that I should never be able to go beyond them. But in a new country, with a family to provide for, a mother has not much time for pining, even for liberty itself.

As my husband had been on mission for so many years, and had spent all his time in the service of the Church with the exception of a few brief months before we left New York—when he was engaged on the staff of the New York Herald—I naturally enough thought that when we reached Salt Lake City his occupation would be gone. There would be no need of preaching to the Saints—on the contrary, they would be able to teach us; and we should have to find out what we could do in this new country to support ourselves and our children. In this I was not mistaken.

Now among the "absolutely necessary" things which I had brought with me from New York were about $300 worth of millinery goods, which I had secreted among our other properties, thinking that they would very probably come in useful to the fair daughters of the Mormon city—notwithstanding that the elders had told me of fiery sermons, delivered by the Prophet himself, condemning all feminine display, and that the sisters would scorn to wear Gentile fashions. I knew my own sex too well to believe that all this was strictly true, and I felt certain that I should find, even among the Saints, some weak sisters who would appreciate my thoughtfulness in bringing such articles for their use. I had also noticed that the American elders themselves would frequently inquire where they could buy the best gloves and the prettiest ribbons and laces, and that looked a little suspicious.

Quite a number of such articles, therefore, found their way into my list of "absolute necessities," and I know that my husband was quite at a loss to know what had become of a certain sum of money which he was aware I had obtained from the sale of some of our things in New York, but my foresight was very useful to us when we arrived in Salt Lake City. One day when Mr. Stenhouse was absent seeking employment, I thought I would make a display of my treasures and surprise him on his return. Accordingly, with the assistance of our faithful domestic, whom I had brought with me across the Plains, and who had also lived with me in Switzerland, we contrived to place two or three planks in such a way as to make a rough table on which to display the goods. I had been secretly at work for about two weeks, trimming the bonnets and hats, and making a number of head-dresses, such as were worn in New York when we left; and, although we had been three months on the Plains, and quite a month in Utah, yet those bonnets and head-dresses were of the very latest style to the ladies of Salt Lake.

My Swiss girl was quite a carpenter, and when my temporary table was arranged, I placed a pretty-looking cloth over it to hide its defects, and then began to arrange the various articles. I found that I had a much finer assortment than I had imagined, for I had bought them at different times, and had packed them away hurriedly, lest Mr. Stenhouse or some of the other elders—for there were generally one or two in the house—should object to my taking them. When my table was filled, and I found that I had still more to display, I was very much pleased, for I saw in my hats and bonnets, flour, meat, and potatoes for my children, and I felt hopeful, for one of the sisters had assured me that I should be certain to sell them.

The next thing to do was to advertise my stock. After some reflection I remembered another of the sisters, who was quite a good talker, and who felt very kindly toward me. I had known her in England—she had been in Utah about three years. This good sister, besides being an excellent talker, had really nothing else to do except visiting her neighbors. So I made her a present of a new bonnet, as I knew that then in two days my goods would be quite sufficiently advertised; and in this I was not mistaken.

(To be Continued).

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman

(London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 71 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles, among others, are contained in the number for June:

- The Future Ten Kingdoms and Antichrist's Week. Stars and Prophecy. By W. Appleford.
- Historical Fulfilment of the Fourth Trumpet.
- Overpopulation, One of the Darkest Clouds in the Future. By D. T. Taylor.
- Order of the Events of the Revelation. By the late Lieut.-Col. White.
- Spiritualism Unveiled. By Lieut.-Gen. Sir Robert Phayre.
- The 144,000. By the late Rev. R. A. Purdon.
- Antichrist's Future Acting; Described in Dan. 11:21-45.
- What the Jewish Papers are Saying.
- Passing Events Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

GOD'S WILL IN SANCTIFICATION.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.*

"This is the will of God, even your sanctification." 1 Thess. 4:3.

The Wrong Way of Praying for Holiness—A Fact Overlooked—God Working With the Aspirant—What God Wants For—The Inspiring Consideration—Enemies Overmatched—How Impatience May be Overcome—The Young Ruler's Mistake—The One Thing Lacking—Christ's Throne in the Self-Empty Heart—A Work of a Lifetime.

"THIS is the will of God, even your sanctification;" not only your will, but God's will before it ever became yours. It is not uncommon to meet with Christians who say: "I do long to be holy, to have a true spirit of prayer, to be free from impatience and vanity, pride and jealousy, bad temper, unkind thoughts and words, heartburning and bitterness, and all which grieves God." And these dear people pray for sanctification in a despairing voice, which, in itself, says to all who hear it, "I stand every little chance of getting what I ask." They seek God to make them holy, but seem to think He will not. They have done so hundreds of times before; but it is heartless and hopeless work; nothing happens, and they come to the conclusion that it is impossible for them to be different; their case is unlike any other, and because they get no answer to their prayer they get discouraged, and feel very much like giving up in despair.

Let us look at the other side for a moment.

You want to be holy;

What Does God Want?

Can He desire that you should be unholy? You want to be patient; does He want you to continue impatient? You want to be humble; can God desire to keep you proud? "Be ye not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is." (Eph. 4:17.) What is the will of the Lord? "This is the will of God; even your sanctification."

What! God wants me to be holy, patient, humble, prayerful? God, who made the world, is on my side! Then "who can be against me?" What power in earth or hell can stand against God? Surely it is victory before the battle, if the Almighty is on my side, practically prayed against the foes which trouble me. But are you sure it is so? Do you, from your heart, believe that the Almighty God, who has all resources at His command to make you holy, is really on your side? Then why your anxiety?

You answer, "I do not find any real change in myself. I pray, and try, and agonize, but nothing happens." Dear friend, do you not really at heart believe that you are more in earnest about it than God is: that you are thirsting for holiness, but that you have to urge and persuade God to undertake your case; and that, because your prayer is not heard, He is indifferent to it? Are you not thinking, "I am working hard, Satan is against me, the world is against me, and my own natural disposition too, and I am not certain which side God takes: I feel as though He ought to have rewarded me for all my earnest efforts and struggles"? But don't you see that this very thought is a proof that you are not really dealing with God at all? You are expecting a great deal from your own fervency and earnestness, and while you do so, until your expectation is only from Him, apart from what you are, what you do, and what you feel. If ever He makes you holy, it will not be as a reward for your earnestness, but because He has chosen you in Christ before the foundation of the world, that you should be holy and without blame before Him. (Eph. 1:4.) It is of His grace and because He wills it; and not of your works and because you will it. And therefore when you pray, do not bring to bear upon

God is Obligated to Wait

God your great desire to be holy, but unite your will to the will of God, which is your sanctification. "Hallowed be Thy name" in making me holy, "Thy kingdom come" in me, "Thy will be done" in me.

"The Lord is on my side." (Psalm 118:6.) This is the inspiring fact which gives faith to prayer. "If God be for us, who can be against us?" (Rom. 8:31.) Let the enemy be strong against me, let circumstances, constitutional temperament, the experience of the past, added to all the powers of hell, be against me, yet if the Lord is on my side, He is more than a match for them. Suppose impatience, for instance, has become such a settled habit that I have never been able to count on my patience in any moment of my life, yet if God is for me against my impatience, can I expect anything else than victory? I read it thus, "This is the will of God, even your patience," and He who created all the host of heaven by the breath of His mouth (Ps. 33:6) will create patience in me because it is His will, and I trust His will. Satan can make us pray agonizing prayers when we look at the hopelessness of all our struggles and efforts, but this brings no progress at all. Prayer in the name of our need, or in the name of our fervency, or in the name of our perseverance, will not prevail; but only prayer in the name of Jesus. It is not by ours (Heb. 10:10); it is by His intercession we prevail, not ours; it is His holiness which makes us holy, not some superiority of ours to other men. He of God is made unto us sanctification (1 Cor. 1:30), and then Christ in us, dwelling in us, fulfils the righteousness of the law, and thus makes us holy like Himself.

By His Will we are Sanctified,

But if God of His own will sanctifies us, will He not do it in spite of us, whether we will or no? God forbid! Just as "of His own will begat He us with the word of truth," but everyone of us must nevertheless of our own will come to Him and believe on Him, so is it in sanctification. Our will must be on God's side, but He must do the work. We co-operate with Him only as we trust and obey Him: thus no credit can accrue to us, and "boasting is excluded," for sanctification as for justification. (Rom 3:27.)

In order that God may make us holy we must be entirely given up to God, so completely that we do not possess ourselves to give again, and we are no longer in a position to bestow anything whatsoever. "Good Master," said the young ruler, "what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" (Mark 10:17.) What shall I do? He thought it lay in his power to do a great deal of good. He was rich; he might build a synagogue, endow schools, give largely to the poor; in fact he may have thought that he was in a position to put God and His people under an obligation to him. How many speak and pray in the same spirit! "Lord, I am ready to do anything for Thee, go anywhere for Thee, suffer anything for Thy sake, renounce all that costs me most dear," and they feel their hearts glow with a conscious devotion. But, after all, anything we can give is His already. "Of Thine own have we given Thee." (1 Chron. 29:14), and it is grace in God to accept His own at our hands. We are but He ours, and the obligation is always on our side. Tested by the commandments of the second table, his duty to man, the young ruler said, with conscious integrity, "Master, all these have I observed from my youth." Jesus did not examine him as to his duty to God, but looking upon him, loved him, and said, "One thing thou lackest." Oh friends who are seeking after holiness, Jesus loves you while you lack. God's will is your sanctification while you are lacking. What was the one thing? It included everything—all that made the young man what he was, all that put it in his power to do good in his own way, "Go thy way, sell what thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in Heaven, and come and follow me." God wanted the man, not his riches; they would do for the poor, but were no object to Jesus. He must have himself or nothing. Many testify, "I have given up all for God—the drink, my cigar, my amusements, my worldly dress, my gay friends—I have renounced them all," as though to claim the admiration of others. But if we have given ourselves, all these things are simply included, and are nothing more than a proof that we are wholly the Lord's; this deserves no credit, we are new creatures and have new tastes. "Old things have passed away, all things are become new." (11 Cor. 5:16.) So long as we claim any credit, it is evident that we lack the "one thing." God cuts the ground from under our feet. Don't be afraid if He makes you feel ashamed of yourself. He gives in a divine manner when He gives Himself, and nothing less than our whole selves is a consistent or reasonable gift for us to give to God.

Never God's Benefactors,

When we have given all, and have nothing left to give, we can do Nothing but Receive.

This Jesus did when on earth. "He emptied Himself and took on Him the form of a servant." (Phil. 2:5.) He received of His Father all which He gave to us. "The words which I speak, I speak not of myself;" "the Father that dwelleth within me, He doeth the works." Thus He never took glory to Himself, but always glorified His Father.

It is into a self-empty heart that Jesus comes to dwell and carry out His own will, by making it holy with His presence. He comes in on the ruins of what we are, not to bargain with us, but to supersede us, and live His own life out in us. His blood cleanseth us from all sin as we trust Him, in order that Christ may dwell in us. Thus He conforms us to Himself, and changes our whole life, conforming it to His will, which is our sanctification. Then when we pray, it is not a prayer which we give to God, but one which God by His spirit gives to us. If we love God, it is not a love which is indigenous in our hearts, and which we give out of our hearts to God, but it is shedding abroad the love of God in our hearts. If we are patient, it is of His grace received, "Christ in us," who is patient. And thus we can take no glory to ourselves. We cease to be God's benefactors, and become simple recipients; willing, loving, adoring channels of His grace, receiving that we may give.

Christ in Us,

Are you willing to be so empty as to give up to God, once for all, yourself and all you are and have? The young ruler thought the sacrifice too great, and yet it was but reasonable. Jesus only asked for a fair exchange. "Present your bodies a living sacrifice . . . which is your reasonable service;" anything less would be unreasonable. Should Christ give all, and man give only part? We can never be in a position to give God more than what is simply reasonable.

And when this is a settled matter, and we have signed ourselves over absolutely to the Lord, and hold the ownership and have the care of ourselves no more—then is the time to look away from ourselves to Him who understands the work of our sanctification, which is not simply purifying us from sin, but at the same time conforming us to the image of our Lord, for to be holy is to be like God. He utilizes every event of life to empty us, and wean us from our self-life that He may fill us with His life and so turn us, in the circumstances as they arise, as well as in the whole bent of our mind and heart, from self to God. It may take but a moment to make the surrender of our wills and selves to God, but it takes a lifetime for Him to work out fully His will in us which is our sanctification. As He does so the opaqueness of our own nature, which manifests ourselves, gives way before the transparency of a life which manifests Jesus dwelling in us. Let us give up our self-made plans of holiness and yield ourselves to Him, the Holy One, who can make us holy as He makes us will with Him.

* This article has been sent by Mrs. Baxter instead of her usual article on the Sunday-school lesson. We suppose she thought that June 30 being the thirteenth Sunday of the quarter the choice of a subject was optional with teachers. The lesson appointed for the day is "Foreign Missions," Acts 13:46-48; Golden Text, Mark 16:15.

THE LOVE OF CHRIST.

Strange matchless love, past all our comprehension,
Deeper and higher than the sea and sky.
Broader than all the boundless space around us,
Stronger than death, long as eternity.

We ne'er can measure with our finite senses,
A grace so infinite. We only know
That with a love surpassing understanding,
Christ watches o'er His children's steps below.

We know He holds us in His tender keeping,
And giveth His beloved rest and sleep,
And daily showers upon us countless blessings,
Gives joy for sadness, balm for eyes that weep.

No place so dark but He can walk beside us,
No path so rough but He can smooth the way,
No cross too heavy that He bids us carry,
No heart so troubled that it cannot pray.

And when we come to that strange shadowy valley,
Through which the river flows that chills the heart,
Then will His love be more than earthly lover's,
No change can serve Him and His own apart.

And when beyond all fear and pain forever,
We scan the past illumed with sudden light,
We then shall recognize His loving leading,
And humbly say we have been led aright.

And ever through the calm, long, glorious ages,
We still shall hold this gift of love unpriced,
And ne'er shall find among Heaven's countless wonders,
So great a wonder as the love of Christ.

—Lillian Grey.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher: 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets
assorted (no two alike) will be sent, post-paid, for 10
cts., or 100 for 20 cts. Postage stamps taken.

St. Louis, Mo., March 23, 1899.
BAILEY REFLECTOR COMPANY.
Gentlemen: We have now used your Reflector about three months. It is very satisfactory. Our audience room is 50x60 ft., with ceiling 32 ft. Your 60-inch Reflector lights it admirably.

Very respectfully,
J. H. HOLMES,
Chn. Bldg. Com. 3d Cong'l Church.
(Letter from the Pastor.)

Dear Sirs:—The Bailey Reflector which you placed in our church gives entire satisfaction. It is ornamental, and gives a brilliant light. It is really a marvel of cheapness, neatness and brightness.

Very sincerely yours,
G. H. GRANNIS,
Pastor of 3d Cong'l Church, of St. Louis, Mo.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico
are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to
the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH
43 Bible House, New York.

THE GREAT FLOOD!

ATTENTION, AGENTS!

The first in the field. A complete history of this terrible calamity at Johnstown, has just been issued. 300 pages, 25 full-page illustrations, handsomer than any other, price $1.00. Discount to agents, 50 per cent. Send 25 cents for Prospectus Book and package of circulars, and go to work.
Address J. S. OGILVIE, Publisher, 57 Rose Street,
New York.

WANTED Christian Men and Women to sell REPORTS: "The CHRISTIAN'S LEGACY."
By CHARLES F. LEWIS, D.D., LL.D.
"Yesterday I started out about 8 o'clock and at noon had 8 new names." "Monday
I worked 54 hours and took 9 orders." "Tuesday 7 hours and added 12 good names."—Circulars and recommendations free.
W. J. HOLLAND, 150 Nassau St., New York.
E. E. HOLLAND, 40 Dearborn St., Chicago.

1789-1889—OUR PRESIDENTS.

A beautiful souvenir Album 5x7 inches containing the very best portraits of our 23 presidents with Autograph, dates of birth, inauguration and death. In neat box, 50c., post-paid. W. D. Rowland, 37 Reade St., New York.

304th THOUSAND.

"The Story of a Church Bonnet."
By CHARLES F. LEWIS, D.D., LL.D.
5 cents each, post paid. 50 cents per dozen.
William B. Ketchum, Publisher, 18 Cooper Avenue, N.Y.

DOMESTIC INFELICITY.

A great deal is said about domestic in-felicity and the frailties of resolutions that is absurd. We know that a good resolution is worth a great deal to anyone;
and we know that when a lady resolves to be economical, she is sure to go at it in the most sensible manner in the world. It is well known in a great many neighborhoods that J. D. Lar-ken & Co. Buffalo, N. Y., sell "Sweet Home" Soap which is the finest Soap made for family use, for six dollars per box of 100 cakes and with each box sold they make a present of half a dozen boxes of different varieties of fine Toilet Soaps, a Shaving Stick, Tooth Powder, Perfumery, Boraxine, and a large lot of extras, premiums, presents, etc., etc.

By selling direct from factory to consumer, they save all expenses of traveling men, wholesale and retail dealers' profits, and are thus able to give you better and finer goods, and more of them, than you can possibly procure elsewhere. If you are a subscriber to this paper, they have confidence in your honesty and do not ask you to remit in advance, nor take any risk, nor run any chances. They merely ask permission to deliver (all freight charges prepaid) one of these GREAT BARGAIN BOX-ES at your door, and if, after a thirty days' trial, you are fully convinced that the Soap is all they claim and the extras, etc., all that are advertised you can pay the price, which is $6.00. But if you are not satisfied in every way, no charge will be made for what you have used. How can they do more?
If you are willing to accept a box on trial, send a postal card to the advertising manager of this paper, Mr. J. E. Jewett, 77 Bible House, New York.

For the Sunday-School Lessons.

FROM SAMUEL TO SOLOMON. By Rev. C.
S. Robinson, D. D., LL. D., 12mo. 310 pp. Cloth, $1.25. Stout paper with cloth back, 50 cts. Covering week by week the International Lessons from July, 1889, to January, 1890.

A bright, fresh, suggestive book; full of apt illustrations. A timely aid to Sabbath-School Teachers.

The Star Library.

A new and attractive Sunday-School library of ONE HUNDRED 16mo VOLUMES.

Each volume illustrated and strongly bound in red cloth, with gilt back. Over 15,000 pages of reading, in large, legible type. In handsome chestnut case.

Every Sunday-School, before looking elsewhere, should examine this large set of excellent books, which is offered at an extremely low price.

ONLY TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, NET.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY,

150 Nassau St. & 304 Fourth Ave., New York.

Boston, 54 Bromfield St.; Rochester, N. Y., 98 State St.; Chicago, 122 Wabash Av.; Philadelphia, 1512 Chestnut St.; Cincinnati, 176 Elm St.; San Francisco, 735 Market St.

BEECHAM'S PILLS
ACT LIKE MAGIC
ON A WEAK STOMACH.
25cts. a BOX
OF ALL DRUGGISTS.

3000 ROLLS CHINA MATTINGS.
Red Check, Fancy and White, from $3.75 per roll, 30 yards; special sale of fine white mattings, last season's stock, at $5.00, worth $8.00. Special:
—Finest Moquette Rug, 27x64, at $2.25; Tapestry Brussels Rugs, 22x50, 80 cts.; 27x51, $1.15; 30x63, $1.45; figured and floral designs. 500 Hassocks, 25 cts. each.
Correspondence invited. Mail orders promptly filled.
ANDREW LESTER & SONS,
739 & 741 Broadway, New York.

SAMPLE PAGES FROM THE LATEST
SUNDAY SCHOOL SONG BOOKS FREE,
THE ECHO MUSIC CO., La Fayette, Indiana.

BEECHAM'S PILLS cure bilious and nervous ill.
BEECHAM'S PILLS cure sick-headache.

BLACK GOODS.

We are now offering the balance of our Brocade and Striped Black Grenadines from $1.25 to $3 per yard.

Especial attention is directed to a line of Mexican Granadines, all silk, at 75 cents per yard; formerly $1.50.

Also to Embroidered and Striped Black Crape de Chine, from $3 to $6 per yard, and to a lot of Black Bro-cated Mohairs, which we are closing out at 50 cents per yard.

All the above goods are of the best quality and in most desirable styles.

JAMES MCCREERY & CO.,
Broadway & Eleventh St.
New York.

HIRES

Root Beer

The most APPETIZING and WHOLESOME
TEMPERANCE DRINK in the world. TRY IT.

Ask your Druggist or Grocer for it.

C. E. HIRES, PHILADELPHIA.

SAFE INVESTMENT
FARRAND & VOTY
ORGANS
DETROIT MICH. U.S.A.

Send 6 Cents for samples of the famous custom-made Plymouth Rock $3 Pants. Rules for self-measurement and a cloth tape measure included.
Every pair guaranteed or money refunded. Plymouth Rock Pants Co., 11 to 17 Elliot St., Boston, Mass.

The Most Reliable Food
For Infants & Invalids.
Not a medicine, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the Weakest stomach. 4 sizes cans.
 pamphlet free. Wholesale & Co.
(on every label), Palmer, Mass.

"THE WORD FOR THE DAY."

Text, Hymn and Prayer for every day in the year. Compiled by A. J. A. R.

"The word for the day" has been compiled with reference to real every-day needs, not fictitious or sentimental ones. Its thoughts are very well selected, and its brief prayers are prayers indeed; for devoutness it is admirable.—New York Evangelist.
"The word for the day" is one of those strong helps to a true Christian life.
16mo, Cloth, plain, 75c.; Gilt, $1.00; American Seal,
$1.75; Calif. Box, $2.50.

Send by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price.
J. E. JEWETT, Publisher,
77 Bible House, New York.

Six Remarkable B

By REV. ANDREW MURRA

1. "ABIDE IN CHRIST."— on the Blessed Life of Fellowship Son of God. Forty-four Thousand cloth. Price $1.00.

"The stamp of experimental knowledge seen from the beginning to the end of the cannot fail to stimulate, to cheer, and to higher service."—Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

"Read with an inquiring and docile confirm the faith, brighten the hopes, and in-joys of the Christian, by leading to a more realization of the closeness of the union, the of the fellowship, and the oneness of life, a which are the exalted privileges of those this injunction and abide in Christ."—Inter

2. "LIKE CHRIST."—Thoughts
Blessed Life of Conformity to the Son Twenty-four Thousand. 16mo, cloth. P

"Richly experimental, and no reader e-without having gained a clearer conception that there is no beauty or blessedness like Christian life."—Christian Leader.

"Everywhere may be felt a depth of devo-Scriptural earnestness, together with an simplicity. The high standard is commu-winning way, and even beginners or inquire themselves helped onward and encouraged."

3. "WITH CHRIST in the SO-OF PRAYER."—Thoughts on c-ing for the Ministry of Intercession teenth Thousand. 16mo, cloth. Pri

"It is under the impression that the place of prayer in the Christian life is too little that this book has been written. I feel so long as we look on prayer chiefly as the maintaining our own Christian life, we shall fully what it is meant to be. But when we regard it as the highest part of the work in us, the root and strength of all other work see that there is nothing that we so need to practice as the art of praying aright. It teaches us to pray, not only by example, b-tion, by command, by promises, but by sh-Himself, the ever-living Intercessor, as ou-Extract from the Preface.

4. "THE CHILDREN for CHI-Thoughts for Christian Parents on theration of the Home Life. 16mo, clot $1.25.

"The author seems to have had a divine vi-writing this book, and thousands of parents derive blessings from it for their children.
gelist.

5. "HOLY IN CHRIST."—Tho-the Calling of God's Children to be Hois Holy. 16mo, cloth. Price $1.00.

"There is not a word in Scripture more Divine in its origin and meaning than the wo-There is not a word that leads us higher into of Deity, nor deeper into the privileges of children, and yet, it is a word that many a has never studied or understood. In writing my object has been to discover in what se-used the word, that so it may mean to us means to Him. I have sought to trace it through the most important passages of He-ture where it occurs, there to learn what Go-ness is, what ours is to be, and what the way we attain it. I have been specially anxious out how many and various the elements are make up true holiness as the Divine expressi-Christian life in all its fulness and perfection also striven continually to keep in mind the full unity and simplicity there is in it, as centr-person of Jesus. There is such a thing as cost still to the disciples of Jesus; but it is him who has forsaken all to follow Jesus on-following fully has allowed the Master to rep-instruct him."—From the Introduction.

6. "THE SPIRIT OF CHRIS-Thoughts on the Inwardness of the Ho-in the Believer and the Church. 16m
Price $1.25.

No one can read Dr. Murray's works withobrought into a closer personal fellowship a union with our blessed Lord. The reader that this is the aim of all his writings.
"There are tens of thousands of God's dear whose surroundings are not favorable to the of the spiritual life. There is many an hour longing to live more according to the will of the prospect of its being really possible to w-please God, worthy of the Lord to all well-pl-hardly dawned upon them. To the best part birthright as God's children, to the most preci-of the Father's love in Christ, the gift of t-Spirit, to dwell in them, and to lead them, i-practically strangers."

"I would, if I might, show them what it is hitherto hindered that Spirit from doing His work, and how divinely simple the path is teach upright soul can enter into the joy of al-has been given to work within us, even the ful-tion of the presence of the Indwelling Jesus."

"* Either of the above books sent by mail on receipt of the price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookse-
77 Bible House, New York

GOOD NE TO LADIES

Greatest offer. Now's y-
to get orders for our c-Teas, Coffees, and Powder, and secure a
Gold Band or Moss Rose c-
Set, Mamer Set, Gold Band Moss Rose P-Brass Lamp, Castor, or Vase, or Get Premium No. 27. For particulars ad-
66 AND 68 CHURCH STREET, N. Y. P. O.

T. DeWitt Talmage's New Book, Pen, Pulpit and

SHOTS SUNDRY TARGET

Aimed at Wrongs 2 B Righted, Follies 2 B shun-gers 2 B Avoided, Sorrows 2 B Mitigated, Victories
A treasury of his best thought, beautiful, 11 700 pages, $2.75. E. E. TREAT, NEW

THE CHRISTIAN FERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1889, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. XII., No. 24. Office, 71 Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 12, 1889.

Price, 3 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

DR. W. C. ROBERTS.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAITS AND LIVES OF DRS. W. C. ROBERTS AND H. G. HILL, MODERATORS OF THE TWO GENERAL ASSEMBLIES OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

CHRIST THE VILLAGE LAD. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday Morning.

INCIDENTS OF THE JOHNSTOWN HORROR: The Warning—The Sudden Deluge—Heroism and Death—The Story of a Rescued Man—Piteous Sights from a Tower—The Annihilated Town.

THE FUTURE TEN KINGDOMS.

A Contrast in the Indian Territory—Idols Punished for Incapacity—The Skeleton of Miles Standish.

THE LIGHT OF THE GOSPEL. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

Gems from New Books: Misdirected Envelopes, Etc. PORTRAIT OF REV. HOWARD CROSBY, D. D., and Picture of His Church in New York.

AMBULANCE SERVICE IN BURMAH. (Illustr'd) MRS. SPAULDING'S CHARGE. (With Illustration.)

ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS. (Continued.) JESUS RISEN. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

DR. H. G. HILL.

The Moderators of the Presbyterian General Assemblies—The Fourth Avenue Church, New York.

REV. WILLIAM C. ROBERTS, D. D., LL. D.
Moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (North).

BRIEF mention has been made in our news columns from week to week of the most important proceedings of the Northern General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, recently in session in New York. We now publish a portrait of its Moderator, a picture of the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian Church, in which its sessions were held, a portrait of the pastor of the church, Dr. Howard Crosby (on page 380), and a portrait of the Moderator of the Southern General Assembly, which held its sessions at the same time at Chattanooga, Tenn.

A Strange History

is that of Dr. William C. Roberts, upon whom his church has conferred its highest honor. He is a Welshman, and it is a singular coincidence that this is the ninth time that the Presbyterian Assembly, which might have been expected to have had a predilection for Scotchmen, has chosen a moderator either born in Wales or of Welsh extraction. He is in his fifty-seventh year, having been born at Galltmai, near Aberystwith, in Cardiganshire, South Wales, on September 23, 1832. When he was fifteen years of age, and was preparing to enter college, his father came to this country, having secured the contract to build the Erie Railroad, the famous "broad-gauge" running from Piermont on the Hudson to Buffalo. His family followed him. It consisted of the mother and six children, of whom William was the eldest.

A Series of Bereavements

so sudden that they would have paralyzed the energies of most lads of his age fell upon the boy a few days after his landing in New York. Speaking on May 24 last, at a meeting of Welshmen in New York, held to congratulate Dr. Roberts on his election to the chair of the Assembly, he said: "Forty years ago this week I sailed up the Narrows in the Guy Mannering—then the marvel of shipbuilding. I was fifteen years old, the eldest of six children, and when we reached the shore my mother saw the spire of Trinity Church, and said to me: 'The God of your father is worshipped here,' and bade me kneel down and pray. Almost at that moment she was stricken with cholera—it was on a Friday, just forty years ago this night—and she died in a week. She was followed by my father, sister, and brother, all of whom were buried within a few days. My father had left me some money, and with this I managed to support the others. In the fall my uncle sent a ship for me to take me home to Wales, but I had made many friends here, and I decided to remain. I thought it was to be the greatest cross of my life to come to America, where I thought there were no educational institutions. It was only at the solicitation of my mother that I came at all. But I learned that it was well.

"I studied and went to college and worked my way through without help from anybody. Then I studied law, and Judge Patten, with whom I studied, said I was the biggest fool he ever saw. I then studied for the ministry, and twenty-five years after, when I was established in a church, the old Judge admitted that he had been wrong in his judgment. I have been in the Presbytery twenty-three years, and have now the pleasure to preside over a grand university. And it now affords me much pleasure to have the honor to preside over the highest court of the Presbyterian denomination."

The Ministry

was scarcely the issue which one would have expected from a young man so circumstanced. The Moderator touched lightly upon his trials, but they must have been very heavy ones. It is difficult to imagine a position of graver responsibility than that of the boy fifteen years old, in a strange land, undertaking to bring up three orphan children. He must have possessed a degree of courage and devotion far beyond his years, and the little incident he mentions of his mother causing him to kneel down on board ship, suggests whence they were derived.

It was in 1855, when he was twenty-three years old, that the future Moderator graduated from Princeton College, and three years later that he graduated from the Theological Seminary. There is abundant evidence that even then Judge Patten's uncomplimentary estimate of him had been proved incorrect. His first occupation was of a temporary character. He became instructor in Greek in Delaware College, Newark, Del., but that was for one session only. In 1859 he received and accepted a call to the First Presbyterian Church, Wilmington, Del., and was ordained and installed pastor by the Presbytery of New Castle in 1859. While at Wilmington he was appointed by the Synod of Philadelphia a trustee in Lafayette College. In 1861 he accepted a unanimous call to the First Presbyterian Church of Columbus, Ohio. While there he acted as chaplain of the State Senate, and was a member of the Committee of Synod to found a State College, which later became Wooster University. In 1864 he was elected Moderator of the Synod of Ohio. In 1864 he became a co-pastor with the Rev. Dr. Magie, of the Second Presbyterian Church of Elizabeth, N. J., and when the new church colonized from the Second Church and became the Westminster Church, he became pastor of the new enterprise.

Several Honorable Offices

have before this fallen to Dr. Roberts. He was appointed by the First General Assembly of the reunited church one of the original members of the Board of Home Missions in May, 1869; chairman of the deputation sent to the Free Church of Scotland for the year 1874; a member of the Assembly's Committee to consider the propriety of holding a general Presbyterian council; the Moderator of the Synod of New Jersey; a member of the First Pan-Presbyterian Council that met in Edinburgh, in 1877; and was appointed corresponding secretary of the Board of Home Missions of the Presbyterian Church in June, 1881. He is now the president of the Lake Forest University, near Chicago.

Dr. Roberts has long been recognized as a faithful and conscientious worker. His sympathy with young men desiring an education, with weak churches needing help, and with destitute places needing the Gospel is widely known. When his name was first mentioned it was generally felt that, besides being eminently fitted for the position, he would be, if elected, receiving a just recognition of his many years of hard work for the church.

An Interesting Gavel

was handed to the moderator on his assuming office. Its associations were sketched, in presenting it, by Elder Van Norden, who said: "Mr. Moderator: I hold in my hand a little mallet of oak. If it could talk it would utter sentiments worthy of its noble history. It has had an illustrious past, and it aspires to a yet more illustrious future. This was a part of the old Middle Dutch Church of this city. Associated with the whole history of Presbyterianism, it now aspires to be the exponent of the Assembly and the instrument of order in this high judicatory of Presbyterianism of to-day. On behalf of the committee on arrangements, Mr. Moderator, we beg to present you with this venerable gavel, merely asking you that it may be used in the suppression of ecclesiastical tumult and the maintenance of sound doctrine."

In the course of his address accepting the office Dr. Roberts said: "Fathers and Brethren: No words will adequately express the appreciation I have for this honor which you have conferred upon me. When any distinction comes down by heredity, it gives but little satisfaction; but when it can be looked upon in the sense as the acknowledgment of a service or faithfulness, then it is very pleasing. I have not the vanity to think that this honor is conferred upon me exclusively as an acknowledgment for any service or faithfulness on my part; in fact, I know it cannot be so, and that it is due to a chain of fortuitous circumstances. As I am not a born Moderator, like some of my predecessors, I hope you will all deal kindly with me, and I shall ever earnestly pray that Almighty God may give me that wisdom which cometh from above alone."

A Practical Man

is Dr. Roberts, as was shown on more than one occasion during the sessions of the Assembly, when he adroitly guided the meeting away from disputes about the higher criticism and abstruse doctrinal questions to matters of action. Early in the proceedings he related a story which delicately intimated his intentions in that matter. He said: When I was in Washington Territory, one of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the Territory, a good Methodist, said: "We want a little Calvinism in our Church." I said, "I am surprised at your saying that." "Oh, yes," he said, "we want Calvinism. We have flexibility enough out in this country, and we want a little Presbyterian stiffening," and then he told me a story. He said when he was holding court somewhere in his circuit he was asked to decide on the qualifications of a candidate for the pulpit in a new church, and they were going to have the different evangelical denominations preach, and they would select one from those who were to address them. The first man that preached made a great many apologies for Moses' ignorance, and said it was not strange he should not know much. The people asked the judge what he thought of him. "I hold my decision in abeyance," said he. The next man said he could not swallow Jonah, and that the whale had not swallowed Jonah, and could not do anything of the kind, and then he doubted some of the miracles of our Lord. "What do you think of him?" they said: and the judge made the same answer. And the next man came along and told them there were questions here for everybody, and still they reached no decision. And yet another came and said God said so and so, and you have it now in your own consciences. And you could not know what He was doing when he said this and did it for our guidance. "Now," he said, "I have nothing to say about it. Now we will go and get some truths for you, and then hold you to them." That was a Presbyterian, and him they chose.

"You should go out to the gulches of the Rocky Mountains and see these different evangelical denominations engaged in pushing forward the work of spreading the Gospel. In the light of Christ, of righteousness, and of the Cross of Calvary, denominational lines all disappear."

For some time past the Board of Home Missions has desired the return of Dr. Roberts, a third secretary being needed. This is certainly very complimentary to Dr. Roberts, but it is understood that he is pledged to in case its authorities are able to make good their plans for the endowment of that institution, and the prospect just now is that they will do so. The report is that the round sum of $500,000 is now pledged by responsible persons. When Dr. Roberts accepted the Presidency of the University three years ago, it was on condition that the resources of the institution be increased by the sum of $1,000,000, to be paid in five equal annual installments. The first payment of $200,000 was made in 1887. The two payments due since that time were not paid in promptly, and President Roberts informed the trustees recently that if they were longer delayed he would resign. The $400,000 just raised not only meets the conditions pledged when he came, but secures an additional sum of $100,000 offered to the university by a wealthy citizen of Chicago, on condition that $400,000 be previously obtained. Thus in less than three years this university has secured $700,000, the largest amount of money ever subscribed for any educational enterprise in Chicago in the same length of time.

Lake Forest University,

Lake Forest University was founded in 1857, but made little progress till within the last three years. It now comprises two departments—the philosophical, at Lake Forest, Ill., twenty-eight miles north of Chicago, and the medical department, in that city. The philosophical department includes four schools—Lake Forest College; Ferry College, for young ladies; Lake Forest Academy, a preparatory school for boys; and Ferry Hall Seminary, for girls. The medical department includes Rush Medical College and the Northwestern College of Dental Surgery. The catalogue enrolls 700 students.

REV. HALBERT G. HILL, D. D.,

Moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (South).

THE election of a Moderator by the Southern Branch of the Church, which met on May 16 at Chattanooga, Tenn., was an anxious and trying time. The friends of Dr. Woodrow, Ex-President of the Columbia Theological Institute, had determined to put his name in nomination. It was not a wise thing to do, because, apart from the merits of the question with which Dr. Woodrow's name is identified, the nomination could not fail to produce discord at the very commencement of the proceedings. Whatever may be the issue of the controversy in which Dr. Woodrow is prominent, it is certain that at the present time his opponents are numerous and powerful. If, as the believers in the doctrine which Dr. Woodrow advocates tell us, the doctrine will soon be taught by every educated clergyman, then Dr. Woodrow, having toiled and suffered as a pioneer, will be heartily and enthusiastically elected; but now, while it is opposed by men who conscientiously believe it to be contrary to Scripture, the proposal to make its most prominent advocate Moderator of the Assembly was necessarily the signal for battle. Dr. Woodrow himself perceived this, and at his suggestion his name was withdrawn, and the election of Dr. Hill was accomplished.

Dr. Halbert G. Hill is in his fifty-eighth year, having been born at Raleigh, N. C., in November, 1831. He studied at Hampden Sidney College, where he graduated in 1857. Thence he went to Union Seminary, Va., graduating in 1860. The disorganized condition of the country in that unhappy time prevented a speedy settlement, but in 1864 he was solemnly ordained at Hillsborough. Subsequently he became President of a Female Seminary at Oxford, N. C., and there he preached regularly to a large and intelligent congregation. In March, 1868, he received and accepted a call from the church at Fayetteville, N. C. Dr. Hill has done valuable service by his pen as well as in the pulpit. For some time he was editor of the North Carolina Presbyterian, and has been a frequent contributor to the periodical press.

A notable feature of this assembly, and one that will make it memorable in the history of the Church, is the closer relation established at it between it and the Northern Assembly. The time for organic union has not yet arrived, but the two assemblies, having agreed to co-operate in foreign mission work, have now found a basis for co-operation in aggressive home work, which was the great and apparently insuperable obstacle. The suggestion of the Conference Committee appointed to arrange this delicate business was: "(1) That the relation of the colored people in the two churches be allowed to remain in statu quo, the work among them to proceed on the same lines as heretofore; (2) That all proper aid, comfort, and encouragement in a spirit of kindly Christian sympathy, brotherhood, and confidence shall be extended by each church to the educational and evangelizing efforts of the other for the colored race, with a view to the encouragement of every laudable effort to this end on both sides." The detailed report of the committee was adopted by the Southern Church, but the Northern made a few changes, to bring it into accord with its view of the historical facts. The changes were telegraphed to Chattanooga, and examined by a committee, which advised their acceptance. The Assembly thereupon unanimously voted for concurrence, and notified the North Assembly.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Gallant Rescue of Drowning Seamen.—Mr. S. Burrowes, of the Sailors' Rest, Naples, says: "Now and again in the Port of Naples the combined efforts of landsharks and boatmen induce the simplest of the seamen to drink freely. For several weeks lately unusual disorder prevailed among the shipping: drink was provided easily in the harbor. One ship was detained from going to sea for several days through the foolishness of the men. On Saturday, February 2, a number of men were very tipsy; two of them fought in a small boat and fell into the water. James Nichol, a seaman on the S. S. Rossini, who was in bed at the time, came to the rescue, and with others saved the drowning men. On Sunday evening several tipsy men came to the Sailors' Rest and were present at the Gospel service. These men were much impressed, and requested another religious meeting on Monday night. The two men who were saved from drowning came to this meeting, and one of them asked to take the pledge, and said he would never drink again. To see these men on Sunday so stupid and vicious, and on the next homely, courteous, and serious, was most gratifying.

An Unusual Marriage Settlement.—A gentleman engaged in Christian work narrates that a friend of his, happy in the possession of a large family, prosperous in circumstances, a highly placed official in a public company, commenced his married life with an agreement between himself and his wife and their God, "that their future income should be divided into three equal parts; one-third should be saved; one-third they would live upon, and the remaining third should be devoted to the cause of God." This resolution, made more than thirty years ago, has been faithfully kept, with the happiest results. Heaven's smile has rested upon him and his. With a present income of not less than $15,000 they have stuck to the one-third. A friend of his did the same until a large legacy was left, and he did not know what to do. He consulted his friend, who recommended a continuance of the rule, and he gave away one-third of the capital sum thus received. It is testified on all hands that those who adopt the plan of systematic and proportionate giving, especially in early life, find it "more blessed to give than to receive."

Unexpectedly Included in the Will.—Mr. J. H. McEwen relates: "A young man left his father's house, that, unchecked by paternal restraint or wholesome advice, he might indulge in a life of dissipation and sin. For some time he lived in the whirling excitement of pleasurable wickedness, but the day of reckoning came, and he found, like the prodigal of old, that he had wasted his substance, and now that he was in want, no man would aid him. He heard his father was dying. His sinful conduct now appeared in its true light; he saw how he had sinned against that saintly old man, and resolved to hasten to his bedside and implore his forgiveness. With all haste he set out, and arrived only to find that already his father had passed away. He attended the funeral, and returned with the others to hear the will read. He never doubted but that his father had disinherited him; but as he sat there, moody and silent, he was surprised to hear his name mentioned. His father had not disinherited him, but left him his full share. So it was with man; he did not deserve God's bounty; he had wandered far from Him. Is there pardon for him? There is. Hear the will of our Saviour, who calls on all who labor and are heavy laden to come to Him, and share his inheritance.

A French Child's Faith.—Mr. Greig, of the M'All Mission in Paris, stated the following fact at a recent meeting of the Sunday-school Association: "Having heard of the Petit Montrouge as one of the suburbs most in need of the gospel, I resolved to open a Sunday-school there if I could hire a suitable place at a moderate price. I had looked in vain for some months. At last discouraged, I was about to give up all hope, when on my way homeward I was stopped by a poor little hump-backed girl, who said to me: 'Oh, Mr. Greig, have a Sunday-school here! We had such a nice one in Faubourg St. Antoine! I was so sorry to leave it, but my parents left Paris to come here, and I had to come with them.' 'My little girl, there is not a place to be had in Montrouge,' I said. 'I have been several months looking for one without success.' 'Oh, but you will find one,' she replied, 'for I have asked God for it.' Mr. Greig smiled and said: 'May it be so, my child; continue to pray.' Returning to Paris, I thought much on the faith of the little girl. Two days after, I was informed that the owner of a drinking-shop had failed, and that the place was offered at a low rental. I returned to Montrouge, found it was so, hired the shop, and opened a Sunday-school. The prayerful little girl was one of our first scholars. The second Sunday she brought eight other children."

The Infidel Graduate's Mother.—D. George F. Pentecost said: "Why are you not a Christian?" I asked of a young man at an inquiry meeting. The young fellow replied by openly avowing himself an infidel, and sweepingly asserting that all Christians were either hypocrites or fools. 'Is your mother a Christian?' I inquired. He winced at the question, then said, 'Sir, you have nothing to do with my mother. You have no right to ask me such a question.' 'But you said that Christians were either all hypocrites or fools. Is your mother a fool?' 'No,' was the warm response, 'there is not a cleverer woman in all Boston.' 'I have no doubt of it,' I replied. 'Then is she a hypocrite? Is her religion all pretence?' 'Sir,' said the young man, becoming indignant, 'I will not allow you to speak of my mother thus: she is a true Christian.' The young fellow, a graduate in one of our colleges, sat quiet for some time nervously twisting his cane to and fro, and at last said very slowly, 'If my mother be a real Christian why did she never speak to me about Christ?' His mother, who would let him want for no comfort or luxury she could obtain for him, was letting him drift down to a lost eternity, and her silence proved the great stumbling-block to her son's salvation. Let us see that we are not by any means, whether positive or negative, keeping others from coming to Christ."

A Clerk Ruined by Cards.—A Business Man lately abandoned card-playing, and gave his reasons for so doing: "I was made a witness to an incident one night that made me forswear the game for ever. Before that I had been a most enthusiastic player, and I spent the better part of my nights at the game. There was a certain clerk who used to sit with us occasionally. He was a nice fellow, gentlemanly, well educated, and a good story-teller, but his unsuccess was proverbial. He lost every time that he sat down at the table. One night, when his losses were heavier than usual, and all the cheerfulness and affability had deserted him, he became so deeply involved that all his cash was swept away; but instead of leaving the place, he turned to the keeper of the room and requested the loan of $50 on a handsome diamond ring which he wore on a finger of his left hand. The money was handed over to him, and he resumed playing, but he again lost all. 'By heavens! that's the last of it!' he exclaimed, excitedly striking the table with his clenched hands, and then getting up from his chair he dashed out of the room. The next day I was startled to read that he had destroyed himself. In the same account it was stated that his account with his employers was unsatisfactory, in other words, that he was a defaulter. I made up my mind then that I never would indulge in an amusement that would drive men to such straits that would impel them to commit self-murder. That is why I quit playing cards."

Prophetic Studies. A Report of the Address delivered at the Prophetic Conference at Chicago, with portraits of some of the speakers. It contains 216 pages. Fifty cents in paper covers, including postage. Address Manager, 63 Bible House, New York.

CHRIST THE VILLAGE LAD.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon preached Last Sunday Morning, June 9, 1889.

"And the child grew and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom; and the grace of God was upon him." Luke 2: 40.

The Boyhood of Christ an Unknown Period—Materials for Inference—The Brief Bible Account—Temperament the Same in Boyhood as in Manhood—An Apocryphal Gospel—Christ's Mountain Home—Boyhood Scenes Inferred from Similes in His Sermons—Christ Hurt when a Boy is Hurt—Boys Who Made Famous Men—Had to Support His Mother—His Toil in the Carpenter's Shop—The Boy in the Temple—The Search for Him—Found Among the Doctors—A Wonderful Discussion—What Theology Most Wants—Soporific Sermons—A Creed Proposed for All Churches—The Three Essential Articles.

ABOUT Christ as a village lad I speak. There is for the most part a silence more than eighteen centuries long about Christ between infancy and manhood. What kind of a boy was he? Was he a genuine boy at all, or did there settle upon Him from the start all the intensities of martyrdom? We have on this subject only a little guessing, a few surmises, and here and there an unimportant "perhaps." Concerning what bounded that boyhood on both sides we have whole libraries of books and whole galleries of canvas and sculpture. Before the infant Christ in Mary's arms, or taking His first sleep in the rough outhouse, all the painters bow, and we have Paul Veronese's "Holy Family," and Perugino's "Nativity," and Angelico da Fiesole's "Infant Christ," and Rubens's "Adoration of the Magi," and Tintoretto's "Adoration of the Magi," and Chirlandajo's "Adoration of the Magi," and Raphael's "Madonna," and Orcagna's "Madonna," and Murillo's "Madonna," and Madonnas by all the schools of painting, in all lights and shades, and with all styles of attractive feature and impressive surroundings, but pen and pencil and chisel have with few exceptions passed by Christ the village lad. Yet by three conjoined evidences I think we can come to as accurate an idea of what Christ was as a boy as of what Christ was as a man.

First, we have the brief Bible account. Then we have the prolonged account of what Christ was at thirty years of age. Now you have only to minify that account somewhat and you find

What He Was At Ten Years of Age.

Temperaments never change. A sanguine temperament never becomes a phlegmatic temperament. A nervous temperament never becomes a lymphatic temperament. Religion changes one's affections and ambitions, but it is the same old temperament acting in a different direction. As Christ had no religious change, He was as a lad what He was as a man, only on not so large a scale. When all tradition and all art and all history represent Him as a blonde I know He was in boyhood a blonde.

We have, besides, an uninspired book that was for the first three or four centuries after Christ's appearance received by many as inspired, and which gives a prolonged account of Christ's boyhood. Some of it may be true, most of it may be true, none of it may be true. It may be partly built on facts, or, by the passage of the ages, some real facts may have been distorted. But because a book is not divinely inspired we are not therefore to conclude that there are not true things in it. Prescott's "Conquest of Mexico" was not inspired, but we believe it although it may contain mistakes. Macaulay's "History of England" was not inspired, but we believe it although it may have been marred with many errors.

The So-Called Apocryphal Gospel

in which the boyhood of Christ is dwelt upon I do not believe to be divinely inspired, and yet it may present facts worthy of consideration. Because it represents the boy Christ as performing miracles some have overthrown that whole apocryphal book. But what right have you to say that Christ did not perform miracles at ten years of age as well as at thirty? He was in boyhood as certainly divine as in manhood.

Then while a lad He must have had the power to work miracles, whether He did or did not work them. When, having reached manhood, Christ turned water into wine, that was said to be the beginning of miracles. But that may mean that it was the beginning of that series of manhood miracles. In a word, I think that the New Testament is only a small transcript of what Jesus did and said. Indeed, the Bible declares that if all Christ did and said were written the world would not contain the books.

His Mountain Home.

Our Lord's boyhood was passed in a neighborhood twelve hundred feet above the level of the sea, and surrounded by mountains five or six hundred feet still higher. Before it could shine on the village where this boy slept, the sun had to climb far enough up to look over hills that held their heads far aloft. From yonder height His eye at one sweep took in the mighty scoop of the valleys, and with another sweep took in the Mediterranean Sea; and you hear the grandeur of the cliffs and the surge of the great waters in His matchless sermonology. One day I see that divine boy, the wind flurrying His hair over His sun-browned forehead, standing on a hill-top looking off upon Lake Tiberias, on which at one time, according to profane history, are four thousand ships. Authors have taken pains to say that Christ was not affected by these surroundings, and that He from within lived outward and independent of circumstances. So far from that being true, He was the most sensitive being that ever walked the earth, and if a pale invalid's weak finger could not touch His robe without strength going out from Him, these mountains and seas could not have touched His eye without irradiating His entire nature with their magnificence. I warrant that He had mounted and explored all the fifteen hills around Nazareth, among them Hermon, with its crystal coronet of perpetual snow, and Carmel and Tabor and Gilboa, and they all had their sublime echo in after time from

The Olivetic Pulpit.

Through studying the sky between the hills, Christ had noticed the weather signs, and that a crimson sky at night meant dry weather next day, and that a crimson sky in the morning meant wet weather before night. And how beautifully He made use of it in after years as He drove down upon the pestiferous Pharisee and Sadducee, by crying out: "When it is evening ye say it will be fair weather, for the sky is red, and in the morning it will be foul weather to-day, for the sky is red and lowering. O ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky, but can ye not discern the signs of the times?" By day, as every boy has done, He watched the barnyard fowl, at sight of over-swinging hawk, cluck her chickens under wing, and in after years He said: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem! how often would I have gathered thee as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wing!" By night He had noticed His mother by the plain candle-light, which, as ever and anon it was snuffed and the removed wick put down on the candlestick, beamed brightly through all the family sitting-room, as His mother was mending His garments, that had been torn during the day's wanderings among the rocks or bushes, and years afterward of the greatest sermon ever preached: "Neither do men light a candle and put it under a bushel, but in a candlestick, and it giveth light to all who are in the house. Let your light so shine." Some time, when His mother in the autumn took out the clothes that had been put away for the summer, he noticed how the moth miller flew out and the coat dropped apart, ruined and useless, and so, twenty years after, he enjoined: "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust can corrupt." His boyhood spent among birds and flowers, they all caroled and bloomed again fifteen years after, as He cries out: "Behold the fowls of the air." "Consider the lilies."

It Came Out in the Simile

A great storm one day, during Christ's boy-hood, blackened the heavens and angered the rivers. Perhaps, standing in the door of the carpenter's shop, He watched it gathering louder and wilder, until two cyclones, one sweeping down from Mount Tabor and the other from Mount Carmel, met in the valley of Esdraelon, and two houses are caught in the fury, and crash goes the one and triumphant stands the other, and He noticed that one had shifting sand for a foundation and the other an eternal rock for basis; and twenty years after, He built the whole scene into a peroration of flood and whirlwind, that seized His audience and lifted them into the heights of sublimity with the two great arms of pathos and terror.

Yes, from the naturalness, the simplicity, the freshness of his parables and similes and metaphors in discourse, I know that he had been

A Boy of the Fields

and had bathed in the streams, and heard the nightingale's call, and broken through the flowery hedge, and looked out of the embrasures of the fortress, and drank from the wells, and chased the butterflies, which travelers say have always been one of the flitting beauties of that landscape, and talked with the strange people from Damascus and Egypt and Sapphoris and Syria, who in caravans or on foot passed through his neighborhood, the dogs barking at their approach at sundown. As afterward He was a perfect man, in the time of which I speak He was a perfect boy, with the spring of a boy's foot, the sparkle of a boy's eye, the rebound of a boy's life, and just the opposite of those juveniles who sit around morbid and unelastic, old men at ten. I want no further inspired or uninspired information to persuade me that He was a splendid boy, a radiant boy, the grandest, holiest, mightiest boy of all the ages. Hence I commend Him as a boy's Christ. What multitudes between ten and fifteen years have found Him out as the one just suited by His own personal experience to help any boy!

Let the world look out how it treads on a boy, for that very moment

It Treads on Christ.

You strike a boy, you strike Christ; you insult a boy, you insult Christ; you cheat a boy, you cheat Christ. It is an awful and infinite mistake to come as far as manhood without a Christ when here is a boy Christ. That was one reason, I suppose, that Jonathan Edwards, afterwards the greatest American logician and preacher of his time, became a Christian at seven years of age; and Robert Hall, who afterwards shook Christendom with his sacred eloquence, became a Christian at twelve years of age; and Isaac Watts, who divided with Charles Wesley the dominion of holy song, became a Christian at nine years of age; and if in any large religious assemblage it were asked that all the men and women who learned to love Christ before they were fifteen years of age would please lift their right hand, there would be enough hands lifted to wave a coronation. What is true in a religious sense is True in a Secular Sense.

Themistocles amazed his school-fellows with talents which in after years made the world stare. Isaac Newton, the boy, by driving pegs in the side of a house to mark the decline of the sun, evidenced a disposition towards the experiments which afterwards showed the nations how the worlds swing. Robert Stephenson, the boy, with his kite on the commons experimented with electric currents and prophesied work which should yet make him immortal. "Get out of my way!" said a rough man to a boy, "get out of my way! what are you good for, anyhow?" The boy answered: "They make men out of such things as we are." Hear it, fathers, mothers! hear it, philanthropists and patriots: hear it, all the young! The temporal and eternal destiny of the most of the inhabitants of this earth is decided before fourteen years of age. Behold the Nazareth Christ, the country Christ, the boy Christ.

But having shown you the divine lad in the fields, I must show you Him in the mechanic's shop. Joseph, His father, died very early, immediately after the famous trip to the Temple, and this lad had not only to support Himself, but support His mother, and what that is some of you know. There is

A Royal Race of Boys

on earth now doing the same thing. They wear no crown. They have no purple robe adroop from their shoulders. The plain chair on which they sit is as much unlike a throne as anything you can imagine. But God knows what they are doing and through what sacrifices they go, and through all eternity God will keep paying them for their filial behavior. They shall get full measure of reward, the measure pressed down, shaken together and running over. They have their example in this boy Christ taking care of His mother. He had been taught the carpenter's trade by His father. Fortunate was it that the boy had learned the trade, for, when the head of the family dies, it is a grand thing to have the child able to take care of himself and help take care of others. Now that Joseph, His father, is dead and the responsibility of family support comes down on this boy, I hear from morning to night His hammer pounding, His saw vacillating, His axe descending, His gimlets boring, and standing of the shop I find the perspiration gathering on His temples and notice the fatigue of His arms, and as He stops a moment to rest I see Him panting, His hand on His side, from the exhaustion. Now He goes forth in the morning loaded with implements of work heavier than any modern kit of tools. Under the tropical sun He swelters. Lifting, pulling, adjusting, cleaving, splitting, all day long! At nightfall He goes home to the plain supper provided by His mother, and sits down too tired to talk. Work! work! work! You cannot tell Christ anything new about blistered hands or aching ankles or bruised fingers or stiff joints or rising in the morning as tired as when you lay down. While yet a boy He knew it all, He felt it all, He suffered it all. The boy carpenter! The boy wagon maker! The boy house builder! O Christ, we have seen Thee when full grown, in Pilate's police-court room, we have seen Thee when full grown Thou wert assassinated on Golgotha, but, O Christ, let all the weary artisans and mechanics of the earth see Thee while yet undersized, and arms not yet muscularized, and with the undeveloped strength of juvenescence trying to take Thy father's place in gaining the livelihood for the family.

Amid the Dust and Debris

The Boy In The Temple.

But, having seen Christ the boy of the fields and the boy in the mechanic's shop, I show you a more marvelous scene, Christ the smooth-browed lad among the long-bearded, white-haired, high-foreheaded ecclesiastics of the Temple. Hundreds of thousands of strangers had come to Jerusalem to keep a great religious festival. After the hospitable homes were crowded with visitors, the tents were spread all around the city to shelter immense throngs of strangers. It was very easy, among the vast throngs coming and going, to lose a child. More than two million people have been known to gather at Jerusalem for that national feast. You must not think of those regions as sparsely settled. The ancient historian Josephus says there were in Galilee two hundred cities, the smallest of them containing fifteen thousand people. No wonder that amid the crowds at the time spoken of the boy

Jesus Was Lost!

His parents, knowing that He was mature enough and agile enough to take care of Himself, are on their way home without any anxiety, supposing that their boy is coming with some of the groups. But after a while they suspect He is lost, and with flushed cheek and a terrorized look they rush this way and that, saying: "Have you seen anything of my boy? He is twelve years of age, of fair complexion, and has blue eyes and auburn hair. Have you seen Him since we left the city?" Back they go in hot haste, in and out the streets, in and out the private houses, and among the surrounding hills. For three days they search and inquire, wondering if He has been trampled under foot of some of the throngs, or has ventured on the cliffs, or fallen off a precipice. Send through all the streets and lanes of the city and among all the surrounding hills that most dismal sound, "A lost child! A lost child!"

And lo, after three days they discover Him in the great Temple, seated among the mightiest religionists of all the world. The walls of no other building ever looked down on such a scene. A child twelve years old surrounded by septuagenarians, He asking His own questions and answering theirs. Let me introduce you to some of these ecclesiastics. This is the great Rabbin Simeon! This is the venerable Hillel! This is the famous Shammai! These are the sons of the distinguished Betirah. What can this twelve-year lad teach them or what questions can He ask worthy their cogitation? Ah, the first time in all their lives these religionists have found their match, and more than their match. Though so young, He knew all about that Temple under whose roof they held

That Most Wonderful Discussion

of all history. He knew the meaning of every altar, of every sacrifice, of every golden candlestick, of every embroidered curtain, of every crumb of shew bread, of every drop of oil in that sacred edifice. He knew all about God. He knew all about man. He knew all about heaven, for He came from it. He knew all about this world, for He made it. He knew all worlds, for they were only the sparkling morning dewdrops on the lawn in front of His heavenly palace. Put these seven Bible words in a wreath of emphasis: "Both hearing them and asking them questions."

I am not so much interested in the questions they asked Him as in the questions He asked them. He asked the questions not to get information from the doctors, for He knew it already, but to humble them by showing them the height and depth and length and breadth of their own ignorance. The radiant boy with any one of a hundred questions about theology, about philosophy, about astronomy, about time, about eternity, may have balked them, disconcerted them. Behold the boy and listen when your child asks questions. He has the right to ask them. The more He asks the better. Alas for the stupidity of the child without inquisitiveness! It is Christ-like to ask questions. Answer them if you can. Do not say: "I can't be bothered now." It is your place to be bothered with questions. If you are not able to answer, surrender and confess your incapacity, as I have no doubt did Rabbin Simeon, and Hillel, and Shammai, and the sons of Betirah when that splendid boy, sitting or standing there, with a garment reaching from neck to ankle, and girdled at the waist, put them to their very wits' end. It is no disgrace to say, "I don't know." The only being in the universe who never needs to say, "I do not know," is the Lord Almighty. The fact that they did not know sent Keppler, and Cuvier, and Columbus, and Humboldt, and Herschel, and Morse, and Sir William Hamilton, and all the other of the world's mightiest natures into their life-long explorations. Telescope and microscope and stethoscope, and electric battery, and all the scientific apparatus of all the ages, are only questions asked at the door of mystery. Behold this Nazarene lad asking questions, giving dignity to earnest interrogation.

Christ Asking Questions.

But while I see the old theologians standing around the boy Christ I am impressed as never before with the fact that is more of childish simplicity. The world and the Church have built up immense systems of theology. Half of them try to tell what God thought, what God planned, what God did five hundred million years before the small star on which we live was created. I have had many a sound sleep under sermons about the decrees of God and the eternal generation of the Son, and discourses showing who Melchisedec wasn't, and I give a fair warning that if any minister ever begins a sermon on such a subject in my presence I will put my head down on the pew in front, and go into the deepest slumber I can reach. Wicked waste of time, this trying to scale the unscalable and fathom the unfathomable while the nations want the bread of life, and to be told how they can get rid of their sins and their sorrows. Why should you and I perplex ourselves about the decrees of God? Mind your own business, and God will take care of His. In the conduct of the universe I think He will somehow manage to get along without us. If you want to love and serve God, and be good and useful and get to heaven, I warrant that nothing which occurred eight hundred quintillion of years ago will hinder you a minute. It is not the decrees of God that do us any harm, it is our own decrees of sin and folly.

What Theology Most Wants

You need not go any further back in history than about 1,856 years. Something occurred on that day under an eclipsed sun, that sets us all forever free if with our whole heart and life we accept the tremendous proffer. Do not let the Presbyterian Church or the Methodist Church or the Lutheran Church or the Baptist Church or any of the other evangelical Churches spend any time in all of them imperfect, as everything man does is imperfect. I move a new creed for all the evangelical Churches of Christendom, only three articles in the creed, and no need of any more. If I had all the consecrated people of all denominations of the earth on one great plain, and I had voice loud enough to put it to a vote, that creed of three articles would be adopted with a unanimous vote. This is the creed I propose for all Christendom:

Trying to Fix Up Old Creeds,

Article First—"God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life."

Article Second—"This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, even the chief."

Article Third—"Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive blessing and riches and honor and glory and power, world without end."

But you go to tinkering up your old creeds, and patching and splicing and interlining and annexing and subtracting and adding and explaining, and you will lose time and make yourself a target for earth and hell to shoot at. Let us have creeds not fashioned out of human ingenuities but out of scriptural phraseology, and all the guns of bombardment blazing from all the port-holes of infidelity and perdition will not in a thousand years knock off the church of God a splinter as big as a cambric needle.

What is Most Needed Now is that we gather all our theologies around the boy in the Temple, the elaborations around the simplicities, and the profundities around the clarities, the octogenarian of scholastic research around the unwrinkled cheek of twelve-year juvenescence. "Except you become as a little child you can in no wise enter the kingdom;" and except you become as a little child you cannot understand the Christian religion. The best thing that Rabbin Simeon and Hillel and Shammai and the sons of Betirah ever did was, in the Temple, to bend over the lad who, first made ruddy of cheek by the breath of the Judean hills and on his way to the mechanic's shop where he was soon to be the support of his bereaved mother, stopped long enough to grapple with the venerable dialecticians of the Orient "both hearing them and asking them questions." Some referring to Christ have exclaimed, Ecce Deus! Behold the God. Others have exclaimed, Ecce homo! Behold the man. But to-day in conclusion of my subject I cry, Ecce adolescens! Behold the Boy.

THE JOHNSTOWN HORROR.

Incidents of the Inundation.

As stated in part of our edition last week, the destruction of life by the bursting of the reservoir above Johnstown, Penn., on May 31, was far in excess of the estimate contained in the first reports. It is now feared that not less than six thousand persons perished, and it is possible that the awful calamity may have cost ten thousand lives. Next week we hope to publish a full account of the terrible catastrophe, with pictures which our artist has promised to send us, and in the meantime the following characteristic incidents will enable our readers to form some idea of the nature and extent of the appalling visitation.

The Warning

given to the doomed town was brief, but had it been heeded it was in time to save many lives. Early on Friday morning Mr. Parke, who is a young Philadelphian, and an excellent civil engineer, discovered that the fast-increasing waters of the lake would either have to have an additional outlet immediately, or that the dam proper would give way. Hastily securing a force of thirty Italians, he set to work to prepare another sluice. In half an hour his purpose had been accomplished, but still the water continued to rise. Up and up it came, at the rate of six, seven, eight, and ten inches an hour. Something had to be done, and that quickly too. Giving orders to his men to cut another outlet, Mr. Parke jumped on his horse and started at a breakneck speed toward the village below. As he rode he warned the people on every hand of their danger. Soon hundreds of families were fleeing to the hills for safety. Reaching South Fork Station, he telegraphed the warning to Johnstown. Two men there started out on horseback through the city crying: "The dam! the dam is about to burst! flee for your lives!" Some heeded the warning; others laughed at it and said they had heard it before.

The Sudden Deluge,

says the correspondent of the New York Sun, passes all power of description. It is impossible to describe briefly the suddenness with which the disaster came. A warning sound was heard at Conemaugh a few minutes before the rush of water came, but it was attributed to some meteorological disturbance, and no trouble was borrowed because of the thing unseen. As the low, rumbling noise increased in volume, however, and came nearer, a suspicion of danger began to force itself even upon the bravest, which was increased to a certainty a few minutes later, when, with a rush, the mighty stream spread out in width, and when there was no time to do anything to save themselves. Many of the unfortunates were whirled into the middle of the stream before they could turn around; men, women, and children were struggling in the streets. The stream of human beings that was swept before the angry flood was something most pitiful to behold. Men, women, and children were carried along frantically shrieking for help, but their cries availed them nothing. Rescue was impossible. Husbands were swept past their wives, and children were borne rapidly along at a terrible speed, to certain death, before the eyes of their terrorized and frantic parents. Houses, outbuildings, trees, and barns were carried on the angry flood of waters as so much chaff. The railroad tracks converging on the town were washed out, and wires in all directions were prostrated.

Heroism and Death.

An eyewitness at Bolivar Block station tells a story of heroism which occurred at the lower bridge which crosses the Conemaugh at that point. A young man and two women were seen coming down the river on part of a floor. At the upper bridge a rope was thrown down to them. This they all failed to catch. Between the two bridges he was noticed to point toward the elder woman, who, it is supposed, was his mother. He was then seen to instruct the women how to catch the rope which was being lowered from the other bridge. Down came the raft with a rush.

The brave man stood with his arms around the two women. As they swept under the bridge he reached up and seized the rope. He was jerked violently away from the two women, who failed to get a hold on the rope. Seeing that they would not be rescued he dropped the rope, and fell back on the raft, which floated on down the river. The current washed their frail craft in toward the bank. The young man was enabled to seize hold of a branch of a tree. He aided the two women to get up into the tree. He held on with his hands, and rested his feet on a pile of driftwood. A piece of floating debris struck the drift, sweeping it away. The man hung with his body immersed in the water. A pile of drift soon collected, and he was enabled to get another insecure footing. Up the river there was a sudden crash, and a section of the bridge was swept away and floated down the stream, striking the tree and washing it away. All three were thrown into the water, and were drowned before the eyes of the horrified spectators, just opposite the town of Bolivar.

The Story of a Rescued Man.

At Lockport, about eighteen miles from Johnstown, Eliel Benson, an old man, Mrs. Boyle, Paddy Madden, and two Hungarians were rescued. Mr. Benson said:

"I live in Cambria City. I think that not less than 1,500 people were lost. In the house with me, on Chestnut Street, were ten persons besides myself, and I feel sure they were all lost. Up to 4 o'clock the water, which was about seven feet deep in the streets, remained stationary. At about 4 o'clock in the afternoon the great rush came. In fifteen minutes the water rose fully ten feet, and in five minutes more I am sure fifty houses came floating down the streets. There were people in every one of them, and God only knows how many were lost. As they were carried off, the houses were jammed together and against the houses still standing, and in a very few minutes they were all battered to pieces before they had been carried very far. The house I was in was soon smashed to pieces, and I managed to jump on to a cellar door. In a few minutes I was pushed off into the flood, and when I looked back where Cambria City stood there was nothing but a great lake of water. It looked to me as if every house had been razed or covered over. The vast sheet of water was full of floating timbers, roofs of houses, rafts, and other articles. The scene was indescribable. The cries of the men, women, and children were fearful.

Piteous Sight From a Signal Tower.

Just before reaching Sang Hollow, the end of the mail line on the Pennsylvania Railroad, is "S. O." signal tower, and the men in it told piteous stories of what they saw.

A beautiful girl came down on the roof of a building which was swung in near the tower. She screamed to the operators to save her, and one big, brawny, brave fellow walked as far into the river as he could and shouted to her to guide herself in to shore with a bit of plank. She was a plucky girl, full of nerve and energy, and stood upon her frail support in evident obedience to the command of the operator. She made two or three bold strokes, and actually stopped the course of the raft for an instant. Then it swerved and went out from under her. She tried to swim ashore, but in a few seconds she was lost in the swirling water. Something hit her, for she lay quietly on her back with face pallid and expressionless.

Men and women, in dozens and pairs and singly, children, boys, big and little, and wee babies, were there among the awful confusion of water, drowning, gasping, struggling, and fighting desperately for life. Two men on a tiny raft shot into the swiftest part of the current. They crouched stolidly, looking at the shores, while between them dressed in white and kneeling with her face turned heavenward, was a girl six or seven years old. She seemed stricken with paralysis until she came opposite the tower, and then she turned her face to the operator. She was so close they could see big tears on her cheeks, and her pallor was as death. The helpless men on shore shouted to her keep up her courage, and she resumed her devout attitude and disappeared under the tree of a projecting point a short distance below. "We couldn't see her come out again," said the operator, "and that was all of it."

The Town Annihilated.

"I have visited Johnstown a dozen times year for a long time," said a business man on Saturday, June 1, "and I know it thoroughly, but I haven't the least idea now of what part of it this is. I can't even tell the direction the streets used to run." We came on a flat a clean of debris and wreckage as though there had never been a building on it. In reality was the central and busiest part of Johnstown. Buildings, both dwellings and stores, covered thickly. Its streets were paved, and its sidewalks of substantial stone. It had street-car lines, gas and electric lights, and all the other improvements of a substantial city of 15,000 or 20,000 inhabitants. Iron bridges spanned the streams, and the buildings were of substantial character. Not a brick remains, not a stone nor a stick of timber, in all this territory. There are not even hummocks and mounds to show where wreckage might be covered with a layer of mud. They are not there, they are gone—every building, every street, every sidewalk and pavement, the street railways and everything else that covered the surface of the earth has vanished as utterly as though it had never been there. The ground was swept as clean as though some mighty scraper had been dragged over it again and again. Not even the lines of the streets can be even remotely traced.

A CONTRAST.

A DEEPLY interesting account of a convocation among the Indians at the Pine Ridge Agency is published in the Spirit of Mission by the Rev. John J. Gravatt, of Hampton, Va. He says: "About noon Bishop Hare, at the head of a train of more than a hundred wagon filled with delegates and friends, arrived. It was a scene never to be forgotten, reminding one of the journeys of the Israelites from the land of bondage through the wilderness to the land of promise. A large booth had been built, and tables arranged with plates for 600 or more guests, by the Indians of Pine Ridge, who are not a wealthy but a poor people. As one saw the well-ordered meal, with the blessing asked before breaking bread, the civilities extended the after-dinner speeches, he could but contrast this with customs of former years, and yet existing to a great extent about them.

"After strengthening and refreshing the natural man, the convocation assembled in the church for religious services, and for the transaction of business. I shall never cease to be thankful my eyes saw what they saw, and my ears heard what they heard. It was the most inspiring, soul-lifting occasion ever vouchsafed me. Better-conducted services I have never seen anywhere. More hearty responses to the services are nowhere to be found outside of a theological seminary. The people seemed to speak as with one voice; there with one accord they offered up their common supplications, and did the early Christians.

"The clergyman in charge of the mission at Pine Ridge is the Rev. C. S. Cook, an Indian who was taken when fourteen years of age by the Rev. J. W. Cook into his home, trained and taught, sent to St. Paul's School, thence to Trinity College, and thence to Faribault, Minnesota, to study for the sacred ministry. I would seem, in saving and shaping a life for so much good as he can do among his people, the Rev. J. W. Cook has done enough for one man. Contrast the picture of this Christian convocation with the scene of eighteen or twenty years ago. Then it would have been dangerous for the missionary to stand there. The Indians were wild, covered with paint, indulging in all manner of heathen customs. Now the paint the long hair, the blanket, and the tomahawk are disappearing, and citizen's dress, Bibles and Prayer-Books are taking their places. Instead of councils of war, councils in the Name of the 'Prince of Peace' to promote 'peace, goodwill toward all men.' Surely we are ready to say with praise, 'What hath God wrought!'

IDOLS PUNISHED FOR INCAPACITY.

IN a letter from Mr. Hinder, of Santhalistan, India, he gives the following account of a native's vengeance on his idols who had not answered his prayers: "A native came to our mission station for medical treatment; he was a barber by trade. We spoke to him of Jesus, who died to save sinners, and asked him to forsake his heathenism. He told us he had not worshipped idols for several years, and gave the following interesting account why he renounced them. He once had seven gods in his house; these he worshipped and sacrificed to. One of his children became ill, and he besought the idols on his knees to have mercy on the poor child and spare him; he also sacrificed goats and sheep to the idols to appease their wrath, but the child grew worse and died. He was much grieved, but still continued a heathen. A few years afterward another child fell ill. Again he besought the idols to have pity; but this child also grew worse. He sacrificed many goats and sheep, and implored the idols to spare the child. Poor fellow, he knew not God's Word, which says, 'They have mouths, but they speak not; eyes have they, but they see not; they have ears, but they hear not; neither is there any breath in their mouths. They that make them are like unto them, so is every one that trusteth in them.' His pleadings and sacrifices were in vain, for this child also died. The man was so disgusted he took a hammer and smashed all seven gods to atoms, gathered up the fragments and threw them into a ditch. Since then he has abandoned idols entirely, and he is not far from the kingdom of God."

THE SKELETON OF MILES STANDISH.

A DISCOVERY interesting to antiquarians was made recently, and has been practically verified. A short time ago a manuscript describing the last resting-place of Captain Miles Standish, the brave leader of the Mayflower pilgrims, whose love-making by deputy Longfellow immortalized, was found in an old book. It was written by a resident of Duxbury, in his ninety-fifth year, whose father attended the funeral of Miles Standish and afterward pointed out the grave to his son, then a boy ten years old. The memorandum said that the grave was in the old graveyard at South Duxbury, and was marked by two three-cornered stones. The grave thus described was easily found, and permission was obtained to open it. This was done recently by a committee, of which Professor F. B. Knapp, formerly of Harvard University, was chairman. The grave was found to contain a number of bones much decayed, but with the skull perfect. Long hair coiled in a knot at the back showed that the remains were those of a woman who might be from thirty-five to fifty years of age. The excavation was extended, and another grave was found five feet distant. This contained the bones of a man much older than the woman. Only one tooth remained in the skull and that was much worn. The hair had been light but was nearly white when he was buried and was very small in quantity. A rough measurement showed that the height was five feet seven. There is no doubt that those bones were all that remains on earth of the valiant Captain. He was buried in October, 1656, and his will directed that he should be laid "as near as conveniently may be, to my two deare daughters, Lora Standish my daughter, and Mary Standish my daughter-in-law." It is interesting to know the exact spot where so venerated a man was interred, and a monument to his memory will doubtless be raised upon it. That will be a right thing to do, for he deserved all the honor we can pay him. The monument, however, that he would have preferred would be that the doctrines and principles which governed the lives of him, and the colony he led and defended, might guide the nation which has sprung from that little Puritan band. (Luke 6:46.)

THE FUTURE TEN KINGDOMS.

By the Rev. Henry Sturt.

THE fourth monarchy of the four represented by the Great Image in Daniel 2 was the Roman Empire. This monarchy is represented in two stages, by the iron legs in the first, and by the clay-iron feet and toes in its second stage. Its first division was into East and West, corresponding to the two legs of the image. But its final division will be into ten kingdoms—

The Clay-Iron Toes.

"And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, they shall mingle themselves with the seed of men." "The seed of men" must mean the common people, and here we have the blending of the popular voice with the kingly or ruling power to constitute the governmental character of the last stage of the image. In other words, it is a democratic form of government, which is here represented by the clay-iron.

If you take a map of the Roman Empire you will see how it embraces all the countries around the Mediterranean Sea, and stretches from the Euphrates in the East to Britain in the West. According to Daniel 2:42, this will finally fall into ten kingdoms, with Democratic Forms of Government.

Historically, the growth of the image is from the head downward, beginning with absolutism, and ending with democratic monarchies. At this stage the stone strikes the image and grinds it to powder. The stone then takes the place of the image, but far exceeds its dominion, and "fills the whole earth." The forty-fourth verse explains: "In the days of these kings shall the God of Heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed." The kings here mentioned are not the representatives of the four monarchies, for they were successive, and one passed away to give place to another. "These kings" must be the ten kings of the future ten kingdoms denoted by the ten toes, with their clay-iron form of government, and they will be contemporaneous.

The tenfold division of the fourth empire, represented by the ten toes of the Image, is again clearly shown in Daniel 7:24, where the ten horns of the wild beast are said to be "ten kings that shall arise" out of the fourth kingdom. No commentator, living or dead, has yet been able to show the past accomplishment of this tenfold division of the Roman Empire, taking in the whole extent of it in its eastern and western divisions. Several attempts have been made to find them in one half, the western, as if the other half had never existed.

Probably such kingdoms as England, France, Austria, Italy, and Spain will remain much as they are until the tenfold division is complete. A further enlargement of Greece may be expected, and the complete independence of Egypt. There will also doubtless be a separation of Syria from the rest of Turkey, and other changes in the provinces recently separated from the Turkish Empire by the Russo-Turkish War and in the Rhenish provinces now held by Germany.

The chief addition to our information which Daniel's seventh chapter contains is the rise and history of which springs out of one of the ten, and subdues three others, and then, after a career of lawlessness and rebellion against the Most High, and persecution of the saints for three years and a half, as shown in Dan. 7:25, is brought under the judgment of the Ancient of Days, as described in verses 9-11. In verse 26 we see that the career of this evil power runs on to the end, that is, to the close of "the times of the Gentiles," to which the vision of the image reaches. This power, which lifts itself in lawlessness against God, is the great anti-Christian development, which the Scriptures in so many places distinctly show will mark the end of the age.

The Eleventh Horn.

The Great Horn on the He-Goat in Daniel 8:8, 9, was Alexander the Great. When that horn was broken, four came up in its place to represent the fourfold division of his empire, which took place at his death among his four generals. Ptolemy took Egypt, Cyrene, Coele-Syria, and some of the southern parts of Asia Minor; Cassander took Macedon and Greece; Lysimachus took Thrace, Western Bithynia, Lesser Phrygia-Mysia, and Lydia; Seleucus took all the rest, commonly called Syria.

But here again our attention is drawn to springing out of one of the four. It stretches its power "toward the south and east, and toward the pleasant land"—i. e., Palestine. It becomes a great persecutor of the saints, represented in the tenth verse by "the stars and the host of heaven." It destroys the sacrificial worship, and "casts down the truth to the ground." (Verse 12.)

A Little Horn

The four kingdoms into which Alexander's empire fell were swallowed up in the Roman Empire. But this prophecy shows they will reappear in the latter days, which will be "the latter time of their kingdom." In a word, they will be four of the ten into which the Roman Empire will then fall. The little horn is the same in Daniel 7 and 8, rising within the same territory, at the same period, and having the same marks of evil. But this vision shows that this evil power will rise somewhere in the eastern part of the Roman Empire, which has been so strangely overlooked by those who have tried to find the fulfillment in the western half, as if the eastern had never existed.

We see, therefore, that the four divisions of Alexander's Empire will reappear as the "time of the end" draws near. Greece has already done so, though it has not yet attained its full dimensions. Egypt is just on the borders of independence. When in the impending

Rupture of the Turkish Empire

Syria is taken away from it, then the four will once more exist (the remaining portion of Turkey, around Constantinople, being the fourth), and "the latter time of their kingdom" will have come when the "fierce king" will stand up and run a brief career of fearful rebellion against "the Prince of princes." Then will follow the session of "the Ancient of Days," and the judgment, "because of the great words which the horn spake." And then the Son of man will be invested with the sovereignty of the earth, and all the nations shall be ruled and blessed by Him.

In Dan. 9:27 is the history of the last of the 70 heptads, or seven-year periods. It is the history of "a prince that shall come," after the Messiah had been cut off. The "people of this prince" were to "destroy the city." So that in some way he must be a Roman prince. When he comes he is to make a covenant with the Jews for that one remaining heptad. In "the midst" of it, i. e., after three years and a half, he will abolish their worship, and upon the wing, or "pinnacle of abominations, will be that which causeth desolation."

Until the Consummation.

i. e., the close of the remaining half of the heptad. Then "that which is determined will be poured upon the desolator" himself.

This wicked prince is represented by the "little horn with eyes, and a mouth speaking great things," among the ten horns on the head of the Roman beast. Hence he will be a Roman prince; that is clear; and the Book of Revelation shows that he will ultimately become the head of a confederation of the ten kingdoms, into which the Roman Empire will then have fallen.

An Invaluable Work on Prophecy by G. H. Pember, M. A., entitled "The Great Prophecies concerning the Jews the Gentiles, and the Church of God," is for sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York. It is written in a most popular and eloquent style, and describes the impending fulfillment of Revelation and Daniel, and is illustrated by a colored chart. 458 pages. Price, including postage, $1.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICES, 71 AND 73 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 3 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

EVERY NUMBER CONTAINS:

The Portrait and Biography of some eminent person.
The Sermon Dr. Talmage preached the last Sunday morning.
An Exposition of Unfulfilled Prophecy.
A Summary of the Events of the Week, Notes of Religious and Temperance Movements, etc.
A Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, of London, from advance sheets sent by special arrangement.
Pictures of Missionary Life, etc., and Descriptive Articles.
An instalment of a Serial Story.
An Exposition of the International Sunday-School Lesson, by M. Mrs. Baxter.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Overwhelming Calamity at Johnstown, Pa., has been the all-absorbing topic of public interest during the past week. Not since the war has any such destruction of human life occurred in one day in this land. Every day the army of workmen engaged in clearing away the debris of wrecked buildings exhumed more corpses, and many more undoubtedly lie under the stones and mud left by the death-dealing stream. How many actually perished by fire, by drowning, and by being crushed under falling buildings will probably never be known. Some authorities place the number as high as twenty thousand. A registry of the living has been opened, and up to the close of last week the number who had given in their names there, when deducted from the estimated population, shows a loss of twelve thousand. These may not all be lost, as some on the ground have failed to register, and others left the wrecked towns immediately after the disaster without recording their names. On page 374 we publish a number of incidents extracted from the reports of correspondents on the spot, and next week we expect to give pictures of the scene, and further details.

The Homeless Inhabitants of the Valley are now encamped on the mountains in tents kindly furnished by Governor Beaver. They are dependent entirely on the charitable gifts of the country. Public subscriptions have been opened in most of our large cities, collections have been made in the churches and public schools, and money has been given liberally in all sections. There is dire need that the stream of generosity should continue. Fifteen thousand persons have to be fed daily, and a large portion of them need clothing also. Many are utterly ruined, and many widows and children will need support for a long time to come. Every one should contribute to this work of humanity. If any of our readers live in a neighborhood in which no fund has been opened, they may send their money to this office, and we will see that it is duly acknowledged, and promptly forwarded to the committee organized to feed the homeless and starving sufferers.

The Question of the Behring Sea Fisheries promises to prove an embarrassing one for the State Department if it persists in the claim made in the President's proclamation. The contention that the United States acquired control over the whole sea when Alaska was purchased has already evoked a protest in Canada, which England will doubtless support, and which will be approved by other European Powers. How the Department proposes to substantiate the claim does not appear. All the rights our Government possesses were those we acquired from Russia, and before the transfer our Government strenuously insisted that Russia had no right over the whole sea, but only over the league of coast water. If Russia, by our own showing, had not the right to declare the sea a closed sea, she could not transfer the right to us. Another obstacle to the claim is the fact that under the last Administration the State Department suggested to European courts an international agreement for the protection of the seal fisheries in Behring Sea, which was an admission that our Government did not then claim exclusive jurisdiction there. In the light of these facts, to insist on the control of the whole sea is to take a position, which cannot be defended on righteous principles.

The Decision of the Courts as to the Application of the Contract Labor Law to clergymen and professors in the case of the Rector of Holy Trinity Church, New York, is to be maintained. The attorney of a Roman Catholic University in the District of Columbia applied last week for permission to engage several learned European professors for the college, but General Hepburn, the Solicitor of the Treasury, gives the opinion that the immigration of the foreign professors under any contract, express or implied, would be clearly a violation of the Alien Contract Labor law. He referred to the classes excepted from the provisions of that law, viz., "professional actors, artists, lecturers or singers, and persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants," and gave it as his opinion that the professors in question did not come within any of the classes named, adding that they could hardly be considered as lecturers under the common acceptance of that term.

A Disastrous Conflagration Ravaged the City of Seattle W. T., on June 6. Property to the amount of twenty million dollars is reported to have been destroyed. The fire started in the basement of a two-story frame building by the ignition of some turpentine. The fire department was promptly on the spot, but the block was all frame buildings, and the fire quickly spread from one to the other until all were blazing. Telegrams were sent to Tacoma and Portland, Ore., for help, and the Seattle fire department worked manfully to subdue the fire. Giant powder was used to blow up buildings to cut off its progress, but, in spite of all efforts, sixty-four acres of valuable property were burned over. Every newspaper office, hotel, telegraph office, railroad depot, and wharf in the city was totally destroyed. The entire water front, including all wharves and docks, coal bunkers and railway tracks, the wholesale quarter, and everything south of Union street and west of Second street, and reaching around to the gas works, and above Fourth street on Jackson, was completely burned. It is feared that some lives must have been lost in the fire.

An Earthquake Shock Alarmed the Citizens of Brest, in France, on June 7. It is described as a sharp perturbation, but no damage was reported. This is the second shock in that part of the world in a week. The former one was on May 30. It was most severely felt in Jersey and Guernsey, and in the Isle of Wight. The disturbances were also experienced in many towns on the mainland of both England and France. Among the places included were Portsmouth, Havant, Cherbourg, Havre, Rouen, Paris and its suburbs, Granville and Caen. No damage was done anywhere.

Ireland is to Have a New Lord-Lieutenant, the project of vesting the Executive in a Board or Committee with that of sending a royal prince to Dublin having lapsed for the time. The new Viceroy is the Earl of Zetland, the head of the Dundas family, which a prominent English journalist characterizes as "the most voracious set of tax eaters in modern times." He gives a long list of offices and pensions which are enjoyed by various members of the family. It shows that whatever appetite they may have had for public money, they have had no reason to complain of starvation. The motto borne by the crest of the family is, "I have done what I could." The salary the Earl will receive as Lord-Lieutenant is $100,000 a year, and he is allowed in addition an annual sum of $37,000 for the hire of secretaries, gentlemen-in-waiting, chaplains, etc. The Earl is not prominent in politics, and it is expected that he will content himself with the ornamental functions of his office, and leave the duties of government to Mr. Balfour, the Secretary for Ireland in the Cabinet.

The French Response to the English Friendly memorial is thoroughly cordial. The memorial, as was mentioned in these columns last week, was signed by 263 members of Parliament and expressed their regret at the slight to the French Government involved in Lord Lytton's absence from the inaugural ceremony of the Exhibition. A response signed by two hundred and fifty members of the Chamber of Deputies has been sent, which expresses gratitude for the assurance of sympathy for France which the memorial contained, and utters the hope that those who signed it will join in an international parliamentary conference on June 29, at which authorized representatives of public opinion may unite to chase away the threats darkening the political horizon. This hint probably refers to the Egyptian difficulty, which has again reared its head. If "authorized representatives of public opinion" were to get into the habit of meeting to amicably discuss international questions, brawling monarchs and diplomatists would soon have less power to make mischief.

The Samoan Conference in Berlin appears to have practically concluded its labors, though the last formalities have not yet been performed. A press dispatch from Berlin describes the result as a triumph for the United States. It says that the German and English Governments have definitely accepted the Washington proposals limiting the German indemnity, and Samoan rights to levy import duties, and some of the American amendments to the clauses relating to the internal Samoan policy. The Washington Government's aiming at the utmost possible independence of the Samoans has not the sympathy of the German official mind, which better comprehends measures to protect European interests, and to extend European influence; but, after a slight hesitation, the German Commissioners have invariably yielded whatever concessions America asked in the direction of Samoan autonomy.

An Explanation of a Suez Canal Mystery was made at a meeting of the shareholders in that enterprise in Paris on June 5. It was never clearly understood before why the French allowed England to obtain control over the Canal. The question was raised at the meeting by a protest against the admission of English directors to the Board. M. Charles de Lesseps, in reply, said that after six years he was able to explain that the London agreement was made in order to save the company from being ruined through the Khedive's granting a concession for a new canal. It thus appears that England, who uses the waterway more than any other nation, would have built a canal herself if she could not have acquired control of the one already in existence. The shareholders would have small, if any, dividends if they lost the tolls paid by English ships.

A Significant Remark by the Czar of Russia led to a flurry in the European money markets last week. His majesty was at a breakfast held to celebrate the betrothal of his cousin to a daughter of the Prince of Montenegro. In proposing the health of the Prince, the Czar described him as "the sole sincere and faithful friend of Russia." As if to emphasize his words, and show that they were not uttered hastily in the excitement of the moment, he had them printed in his official journal the next day. Considering the recent visit of the Emperor of Germany to the Czar, and the ostensibly friendly relations of the Russian potentate with other monarchs, the words had an ominous ring which made the financiers anxious about investments which would be affected by war. The Prince of Montenegro who was thus honored is said to be ambitious of becoming King of Servia.

Subscribers whom we were Unable to Supply with Nos. 1, 7, 8, 9, and 10 of this year, can now obtain them on application to this office, 71 Bible House, New York.

Contributions to the Fund for Supplying colored ministers in the South with this journal have been received since our last acknowledgment to the amount of $16.95. They are from: Concord, Mo., $3; Seaward, Me., $2; Philadelphia, Pa., $5; Morganville, N. Y., $5.50; Cincinnati, Ohio, $1; Williamsport, Pa., 45c. We are glad to learn from the colored preachers who have received THE CHRISTIAN HERALD through this fund, that its reading has been blessed to them and that their congregations have been blessed through them. The applications recently received have been filed, and the new names will be added to our list as the fund increases.

The Possibility of Appalling Physical Disturbances is announced in a lengthy communication to a New York journal by the Canadian astronomer, Prof. Wiggins. Referring to the convulsions in remote antiquity, which he believes caused widespread destruction and the death of ninety-nine hundredths of the animal race, he raises the question whether such destruction can again occur, and says: It is possible, for, as I pointed out in 1864, the short-period comet Encke, which travels far within the orbit of Jupiter, is constantly decreasing its orbit's eccentricity, thus forming it more and more toward the circle, and should it at any time run near the earth nothing could be more certain than that it will fall about our sphere and become another satellite. Of course, there are many chances to one that this will not occur, and yet that one chance may become a certainty. Should it run within the moon's orbit, like the great comet of 1770, which passed through the satellite system of Jupiter, it would certainly cause the extinction of the greater portion of the animal creation, while it would usher in an æon of storm and earthquake that would be appalling and destructive.

An Act of Inhumanity was Punished by a judge in Connecticut recently. Two young men were rowing on the Housatonic, and not being acquainted with the river, did not know that they were drifting toward the rapids. The swiftness of the current at length surprised them, and looking ahead, they saw that in a very few minutes they would be carried over and drowned. They put forth all their strength in backing water, but were afraid to turn the boat lest the strong current should capsize it. They were able to keep the boat stationary, but saw no way of getting to land. At last they made an effort to row the boat obliquely, and after struggling as men only struggle when it is for life, they reached the shore, and thankfully stepped out on dry land. In a moment the owner of the property on which they stood was upon them. He warned them that they were trespassing, and ordered them off. The men explained that they dare not risk their lives again, but he was obdurate, and as they would not go, he set a savage dog upon them. They were severely bitten before the farmer relented and allowed them to pass over his land to the public highway. They summoned him for the assault, and the judge, saying that it was an outrageous act of inhumanity, inflicted the heaviest punishment allowed by the law. The farmer had a legal right to resist trespass, but he forgot that in civilized society legal rights must be subordinated at times to the duties of common humanity. In Christian society, if it were what Christ meant it to be, he would find the still higher law of brotherhood enjoining active service for others. (Matt. 25: 45, 46.)

Seventy-Five Dollars for a Bible was offered by advertisement in the New York daily journals on June 5. A reporter, whose curiosity was excited by the offer of so large a sum for one book, made inquiries, and learned why it was so valuable to the owner. It belongs to a lady who is claiming a share of her grandfather's estate. She was born in California, and her father and mother are dead. Her father died in poverty, but he told her that his father was a wealthy citizen of New York, who had disowned him because of his marriage. He bade her go, after his death, to her grandfather, and ask him to keep her. She did so, but the old gentleman would not acknowledge her. His daughter, however, took compassion on her brother's child and befriended her. The child, however, soon lost her kind aunt by death. Her grandfather also died, making no provision for her. She put in a claim for a share of his estate, but it was disputed, as she had no proof of her father's marriage. It had been a secret one, and the clergyman who officiated was dead. She had the old family Bible which her aunt had bequeathed her, and on looking it over she found that her aunt had secretly recorded the marriage among the family records on a blank page. That evidence was very valuable to her, but a few weeks ago the Bible mysteriously disappeared, and she suspects that it was stolen by interested parties. She has now lost the best proof she had of the validity of her title to her inheritance. It is not surprising, therefore, that she offers a large reward for its recovery, and laments that it was not better guarded. Strong efforts are now being made to steal the Christian's Bible from him by disputing its authenticity. They must be strenuously resisted, for in that Book is the evidence of the title Christ purchased for him, by His blood, to his heavenly inheritance. (1 Peter 1: 3, 4.)

A Magnificent Mansion for the Dead is to be erected in New York shortly, if the project receives necessary financial support. On June 3 the Rev. Charles R. Treat explained the plan in a lecture at the Academy of Medicine, and it was enthusiastically received. It is proposed to erect in or near one of our cemeteries a beautiful building, three hundred feet wide and one hundred deep, composed entirely of concrete. It is to have wide halls, corridors, and staircases. Instead of rooms, there are to be cavities in the walls, each large enough to hold one casket. When a burial takes place the casket is to be inserted. The small space at the extremity is to be then closed with a sheet of strong plate glass and hermetically sealed. The glass may be covered, if desired, by an ornamental bronze door. A furnace is to be placed in the basement, from which hot air is to be forced through pipes into each cavity, which will gradually desiccate the body and so prevent putrefaction by carrying off all its moisture. It is claimed that by this method a body will retain its form and features for an indefinite time; it will give forth no effluvia, and can never injure the living; it can never be stolen; and there can be no danger of premature burial; and friends will be able to visit it and see through the glass the casket containing the remains of the beloved one. The project has the support of eminent sanitary authorities, and its many advantages will probably lead to its early adoption. Every one who has seen the body of a beloved relative buried in the cold ground will appreciate the sentimental advantages of this dry, warm mausoleum; but to the truly wise man anticipating his own death, these advantages are trivial compared with the importance of securing through Christ an entrance for the soul into that mansion which is eternal in the heavens. (II Cor. 5: 1.)

A Startling Embrace in a Car on the Elevated Railroad in New York astonished the passengers on June 4. A well-dressed middle-aged man entered the car at Forty-second Street, and, taking one of the cross seats, pulled a newspaper from his pocket and began to read. At the next station a lady entered and sat on the seat opposite him. He looked at her over the top of his paper indifferently, and then more earnestly. After studying her countenance, somewhat to her embarrassment, for some moments, he dropped his paper, and taking her face between both hands, he imprinted two resounding kisses on her lips. The lady screamed, and jumped to her feet in indignation, whereupon the gentleman said, "Don't you know me, Mary?" Then it was her turn to stare. She evidently recognized him, for she gave him her hand, and her face beamed with pleasure. To a reporter in the car the man explained the meeting. Mary was his sister, whom he had not seen since, thirty-three years ago, he, then a boy fifteen years of age, ran away to Montana from their home in Dayton, O. He had loved her dearly, but as the family removed from Dayton to New York shortly after his departure, he had been unable to communicate with her in all that time. "I suppose," he said, "it was an improper thing to do in a public car, but I was so full of joy that I am afraid I should have kissed her just the same if it had been in church. I'll take care we are never separated again." It was a sufficient excuse for his breach of decorum. When a man is suddenly filled with unexpected joy he is apt to forget conventionality. It is so with the man who, under deep conviction of sin, and almost despairing, suddenly perceives the simplicity of salvation by faith. His ecstasy is often condemned or ridiculed by men who have not experienced it. (Acts 2: 13-17.)

BRIEF NOTES.

The order of the King's Daughters now numbers 97,000 active members.

Next Tuesday, June 18, Pennsylvania votes on the constitutional amendment of Prohibition.

Postmaster-General Wanamaker says there shall be no more saloon-keepers in post-offices and no more post-offices in saloons.

Miss Frances E. Willard has been addressing large audiences in the Gulf States. She declared unequivocally for prohibition.

A most interesting revival of religion is in progress in the village of Markham, Ont., Canada, under the labors of the Rev. N. Hill.

The Rev. A. J. Hayner has recently held daily evangelistic services at Palmyra, Wis., which have led to a large number of conversions.

Rev. Thomas Harrison commenced a four days' camp-meeting on Saturday last at the South Third Street Methodist Episcopal Church, Brooklyn, E. D.

A meeting was recently held in Agnes Street Church, Toronto, to bid farewell to Miss Crosshwaite, who has gone to China to join the China Inland Mission.

The latest Mormon party to arrive from Europe numbered 132. One thousand in all are expected this summer. The missionaries complain of their lack of success.

The Boston Park Commissioners have again declined the petition of the Evangelical Alliance, asking that preaching be allowed in the public parks, as it would not "be consistent with the proper use of the parks."

The will of a deceased San Francisco policeman bequeaths his property to his widow for her life, and directs that after her death it shall be divided among his children, providing that none of them is at that time addicted to the use of intoxicating liquor.

The Medical Missionary Society's income last year was $9,829, all of which was expended in its work. Dr. B. C. Atterbury, the President of the Society, attended to upward of 18,000 cases in Peking, China, during 1888, and in every case took the opportunity to deliver the gospel message.

Rev. Sam Jones had audiences of six thousand persons, chiefly men, at his San Francisco meetings. On one occasion, when the doors were closed after every seat was occupied, the crowd burst them open and filled the aisles and every place where it was possible to stand, and remained patiently until the close.

The Illinois Young Men's Christian Association has organized an excellent work at Camp Lincoln, Springfield. It has erected tents near the camp of instruction of the National Guard, and is providing a free reading-room, and conducting religious work among the young men who are there for their annual drill.

Mr. G. H. Bradt has been holding revival services at Petoskey, Mich. Nearly two hundred persons have made a profession of faith since they commenced. The pastor and members of the M. E. Church, in which the meetings were held, speak very highly of the earnestness and devotion which have characterized his labors.

Dr. L. W. Munhall's services at Atchison, Kas., are held in a tent capable of holding five thousand persons. From the first it has been crowded. No such audience, says a local journal, was ever gathered to hear sermons in Atchison before. There is Bible reading at 3 p. m., and preaching at 8 p. m. each day. Prof. J. J. Lowe and Mrs. Lowe lead the musical part of the service. All the evangelical churches are aiding in the work.

The Thirteenth Summer School of Christian Philosophy is to be held at Key East, N. J., beginning Thursday, July 18, and closing Friday, the 26th. Among those who are to deliver addresses or contribute papers, are the Right Rev. Bishop Fallows, of Chicago; George Sexton, LL.D., of London; Dr. Stafford, of Toronto, Canada; the Rev. John Quincy Adams, of San Francisco; President Deems, of the Institute of Christian Philosophy; and Joseph Cook, of Boston.

THE LIGHT OF THE GOSPEL.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"The light of the glorious gospel of Christ." II Cor. 4:4.

Paul's Perception of the Glory of the Gospel—The One Thing Worth Living for—What Prevents Men Seeing It—I. Paul's Name for the Gospel—A Gospel of the Glory of Christ—Of His Person—Of His Love—Of His Incarnation—Of His Sacrifice—Of His Resurrection—Of His Second Coming—II. The Light of the Gospel—A Light Unveiled—Divine—Revealing—Photographic—Joy—Imparting—III. What to Do with the Light—Look Towards It—See All Things by It—Value It—Keep Christ Always in the Front.

SHINING in the centre of the verse, like a pearl in its setting, you find these words. Literally and accurately translated, they run thus: "The light of the gospel of the glory of Christ." This is the form given to my text in the Revised Version, and I shall follow it, because it, word for word, follows the original.

Paul was a man of one idea. The gospel of Christ had saturated his soul, as the dew saturated Gideon's fleece. He could think of nothing else, and speak of nothing else, but the glory of Christ crucified. Important events in politics transpired in the apostle's day, but I cannot remember an allusion to them. Great social problems were to be solved, but his one and only solution was the preaching of that great Saviour who is to cleanse the Augean stables of the world. For Paul there was

But One Thing Worth Living For, and that one thing was worth dying for. He saw most clearly the glory of his Lord, and that precious gospel which is built up thereon, and he marvelled that others could not see it also. Considering their case with care, he sorrowfully perceived that they must first have shut their eyes by wilful unbelief, and that, therefore, Satan had exercised his evil power, and had utterly blinded them. The blaze of the gospel is so bright that, even with their eyes averted, some measure of light must have entered their minds, unless some special evil power had operated to hold them in darkness. The devil himself must have blinded them, and even he found it a great task to shut out the glorious light, and to accomplish it he had to assume all his power as "the god of this world."

I wonder whether there are any here at this time who have long been willing unbelievers, and have at last come to be quite unable to perceive any glory in the gospel of our Lord Jesus. When they hear it faithfully preached, they flippantly criticise the style of the speaker; but the matter of which he speaks appears to them to be of small consequence. They pass by the cross itself, and the sorrow of the Lord is nothing to them. These may be very intelligent men and women in other matters, and yet have no perception of spiritual truth. I pray that while I am speaking of the light of the gospel of the glory of Christ, that light may penetrate their minds.

I. At the outset, let us consider

Paul's Name for the Gospel:

"the gospel of the glory of Christ." It is very evident that the apostle felt that the gospel was solely and altogether of Christ. The Anointed was, in his view, the one subject of the glad tidings, from beginning to end. When He was born, the angels proclaimed good tidings of great joy to the sons of men; and after His death, His human messengers went forth to all nations with messages of love. His death is the birth of our hope; His resurrection is the rising of our buried joy; His session at the right hand of God is the prophecy of our eternal bliss. Christ is the author of the gospel, the subject of the gospel, and the end of the gospel. His hand is seen in every letter of that wonderful epistle of divine love called the New Testament, or New Covenant. He, Himself, is glad tidings to us in every point, and the gospel is from Him in every sense. That is not gospel which does not relate to Jesus.

The glory of the gospel, then, lies very much in the glory of our Lord's person. This is the gospel—that the Son of God Himself gloriously undertook the salvation of men, and therefore was made flesh, and dwelt among us, and we beheld His glory. If we had here full of sick folk, it would be the best of news for those languishing therein if I could tell them that a great physician had devoted himself to their healing; and the more I could extol the physician who had come to visit them, the more would there be of good news for them. If I could say to them, "The physician who is coming to succor you is possessed of infallible wisdom and unerring skill, and in him are united loving tenderness and infinite power," how they would smile upon their beds! Why, the very news would half restore them! Should it not be much more so with desponding and despairing souls when they hear that He who has come to save is none other than the glorious Christ of God?

A Vast Hospital

The glory of Christ lies not only in His person, but in His love. Remember this, and see the gospel which lies in it. Herein to us is His glory. He loved us so, that heaven could not hold Him; He loved us so, that He descended to redeem us; and having come among us amid our sin and shame, He loves us still. "Having loved His own which were in the world, He loved them unto the end." Love, thou hast reached thine utmost glory in the heart of the divine Saviour! And the glory of this love, which is without beginning, boundary, change, or close, is the very life-blood of the gospel. The love of Jesus is the glad tidings of joy.

This being so, beloved, we next see the glory of His incarnation. To us it was the glory of Christ that He was born at Bethlehem, and dwelt at Nazareth. It looks like dishonor that He should be the carpenter's son; but throughout all ages this shall be the glory of the Mediator, that He deigned to be partaker of our flesh and blood. There is and shame; glory in His having nowhere to lay His head; glory in His weariness and hunger. Surpassing glory springs from Gethsemane and the bloody sweat, from Calvary and the death of the cross. All heaven could not yield Him such renown as that which comes from the spitting and the scourging, the nailing and the piercing. A glory of grace and tenderness surrounds the incarnate God; and this, to those convinced of sin, is the gospel.

Glory in His Poverty

The glory of Christ is further seen in His atoning sacrifice. But you stop me and say, "That was His humiliation and His shame." Yes, it is true, and therefore it is His glory. Is not the Christ to every loving heart most of all glorious in the death of the cross? What garment doth so well become our Beloved as the vesture dipped in His own blood? He is altogether lovely, let Him be arrayed as He may; but when our believing hearts behold Him covered with the bloody sweat, we gaze upon Him with adoring amazement and rapturous love. His flowing crimson bedecks Him with a robe more glorious than the imperial purple. We fall at His feet with seven-fold reverence when we behold the marks of His passion. Is He not most of all illustrious as

Our Dying Substitute?

We will now travel a little further, to His resurrection, wherein His glory is more palpable to us. He could not be holden by the bonds of death. He was dead: His holy body could die, but it could not see corruption; so, having slept a little while within the chamber of the tomb, he arose and came forth to light and liberty—the living Christ glorified by His resurrection. Who shall tell the glory of the risen Lord? Consider it deeply, meditate upon it earnestly; and, as you do so, hear the clear sound of glad tidings of great joy. For our greatest consolation we do not look to this precept or to that promise, so much as to Jesus Himself, who has by His rising from the dead given us the surest pledge and guarantee of our deliverance from the prison of guilt, the dungeon of despair, and the sepulchre of death.

Once more, lift up your eyes a little higher and note the glory of His enthronement and of

His Second Coming.

He sits at the right hand of God. He that one was hung up upon the tree of shame now sitteth on the throne of universal dominion. Instead of the nail, behold the sceptre of all worlds in His most blessed hand. All things are put under His feet. His second coming, for which we daily look, is our divinest hope. Mayhap before we fall asleep the Lord shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the trump of the archangel and the voice of God; and then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Then will our weary days be ended: the strife of tongues, the struggle against sin, the stratagems of error, all will be finished, and truth and holiness shall reign supreme.

Mark this: the less you make of Christ, the less gospel you have to trust in. If you get rid of Christ from your creed, you have at the same time destroyed all its good news. The more gospel we would preach, the more of Christ we must proclaim. If you lift up Christ, you lift up the gospel. If you dream of preaching the gospel without exalting Christ in it, you will give the people husks instead of true bread. In proportion as the Lord Jesus is set up on a glorious high throne, He becomes salvation to the sons of men. A little Christ means a little gospel; but the true gospel is the glory of Christ.

II. Secondly, let us consider

The Light of the Gospel.

Our apostle speaks of "the light of the gospel of the glory of Christ." That light is, first of all, unveiled. Whatever light there was in the law—and there was much—it was latent light. The veil on the face of Moses was typical of the way in which the ceremonials of the law were hidden from the sight of men. We forget that a great majority of those things whereof we read in the law were never seen by the Israelites as a people. Do not suppose that any Israelite ever looked within the veil; none but the high priest ever entered there. Even the holy place outside the veil was reserved for the priests. The most of the sacrificial types were as much matters of faith to the Israelites as the meaning is a matter of faith to us. They did not see even the patterns of the heavenly things; they had to be told of them; and in the hearing they had to exercise faith, as we also do. But my brethren, our gospel is one, not of the veil which hides, but of the lamp which shines. The gospel of the blessed God is intended to be conspicuous as the lighthouse on the rock which is seen afar. It is so illuminating that everyone in the house may see by it. The gospel which is not known is of no value; it is as much intended to be understood as light is meant to be seen.

This light, in the next place, is all its own. You cannot illuminate the gospel; it is itself an illumination. Not by rhetoric and reasoning do men perceive the light of the gospel. There is a self-manifesting and in the gospel. It runs on its own feet, and needs no crutches. If men would read the Bibles they would, as a rule, believe the Bibles; but they will not read them. In itself the gospel has such a wonderful power of making itself felt, that, if men did not resist its influence, it would reveal divine things to them. I wish I could induce unbelievers here to read the story of the crucifixion every morning, and to keep on reading it and studying it; for I am persuaded that the light which streams from the cross would, by the blessing of God, open their eyes, and enter their souls savingly.

Self-Evidencing Power

For, mark you, the light of the gospel of the glory of Christ is divine light. The true power of the gospel of Christ lies not in its natural reasonableness, nor in its adaptation to human needs, nor in its moral beauty, but in the attendant power of the Spirit of God. God is in the gospel, and therefore it is mighty. We may preach to you for a thousand years together, and never a soul of you will receive Christ, unless the same Spirit that spake light into the primeval dark shall say, "Let there be light." Salvation is a supernatural process. God himself must come upon the scene before the eyes of a man born blind will see. This light is A Revealing Light.

Whenever the light of the glory of Christ comes streaming into the heart, it reveals the hidden things of darkness. When the glory of Christ is seen, then we see our own shame and sinfulness. Did it need God Himself to redeem us? then we must have been in dire bondage. Did it need that the incarnate God should die? then sin must be exceeding sinful. That is a deep pit which needs that God should come from heaven to lift us out of it. What a revelation it is when the light shines into the secret chambers of imagery, and the idol gods are made manifest in all their hideousness! May God send this light to many, that their ruin, their doom, their remedy, and their way of obtaining it, may be plainly perceived.

The light of the gospel also enlivens. No other light will give life to the dead. You may make the strongest light in the world flash frequently upon a corpse, but there will be neither breath nor pulse. But the light of the gospel of the glory of Christ brings life with it. "The life was the light of men." "Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." Darkness is death, but the light of God is life. Let but this Sun of Righteousness arise, and He not only brings healing, but life.

This light is photographic—you get that in the neighborhood of the text, in the last verse of the third chapter. See the Revised Version: "But we all, with unveiled face, reflecting as a mirror the glory of the Lord, are transformed into the same image from glory to glory, even as from the Lord the Spirit." The light of the gospel of the glory of Christ upon the character of every believer. We see Him, and, seeing His love, we learn to love; seeing His life, we learn to live; seeing His full atonement, we hate evil; seeing His resurrection, we rise to newness of life. By the power of the Spirit working from day to day, we are quietly transformed from our old likeness, and conformed to the likeness of Christ, till our deformity is lost in blessed comeliness of conformity to Him. If we saw Him more clearly and more constantly, we should grow into his likeness more rapidly.

Imprints Christ's Image

No sanctification is worth having but that which comes of communion with the holy Lord through the power of the Holy Ghost. You may read the biographies of good men, and you may copy them in all simplicity, and yet in the end you may become a caricature of perfection, and not the very image thereof. The perfect character of Jesus is yet

The Most Easy to Imitate.

It is safe to copy Jesus; for in Him is no excess or defect; and, strange to say, that character which is in some aspects imitable is in others the most imitable of all. I have often been depressed in view of the high character of certain saints whom I honor, because I have felt that I could never be like them, under any circumstances. I know one who is full of faith and of all goodness; but he is always solemn, and constantly absorbed "in meditations high." I never could grow exactly like him; for there are certain mirthful elements in my constitution; and if they were taken away, I should not be the same man. When I look at my Lord, I see much in Him that is supernatural, but nothing that is unnatural. We see in Him humanity in perfection; but the perfection never conceals the humanity. He is so holy as to be a perfect model; so human as to be a model available for poor creatures such as we are.

Yet, further, it creates peace and joy. This light brings delight. I cannot imagine a man unhappy who clearly perceives the light of the glory of Christ. Is Christ glorious? Then it does not much matter what becomes of me. Have you never heard of dying and wounded soldiers in Napoleon's wars who still clung to their emperor with an idolatrous love in the hour of death? Lifting himself upon his elbow, the soldier of the Old Guard gave one more cheer for the great captain. If the dying warrior saw Napoleon riding over the field, he would with his last gasp cry, "Vive l'Empereur!" and then expire. Infinitely more commendable is the loyalty of the believer to the Lord Christ. Surely there is a gospel in the glory of Christ to our sad hearts. That gospel lifts us out of the damps of doubt and fear into the clear blue of heavenly fellowship. God grant that we may feel this uplifting more and more! Thus have I tried to describe the qualities of this light; but you must see it for yourselves.

III. And now let us consider

What We Shall Do With It.

Do with it! Look towards it. Let us first indulge ourselves with a long and steady gaze upon it. No man can look long at the sun, for it would blind him; but you may look at Jesus, the Sun of Righteousness, as long as you please, and your eyes will grow stronger the longer you gaze on His perfections. I beseech you, beloved in the Lord, to get alone, and give yourself to meditate upon the glory of the once-despised Jesus. Track Him from the cradle to the cross, from the cross to the crown. I cannot suggest to you any subject more instructive, more comforting, more ennobling, than this. Look at this light: for it is a pleasant thing to behold this sun. Have you never heard how the Laplanders climb the hills when the sun is at last about to appear after the weary winter months? How they rejoice in the first beams of the rising sun! So let us rise to lofty meditation, and look to our Lord and Master, till we perceive His mediatorial glory, and are blessed thereby. Have you no time? Give up your newspaper for a week that you may sanctify the time to the noble end of considering the glory of your Lord; and I will warrant that you shall get a thousand times more out of such thought than from skimming the daily journal. Look unto Jesus, and the light will grow like the glory of heaven.

Next, if you say that a man cannot always stand looking at the sun, I admit the statement, and change the advice. See all things by this light. How differently things look in sunlight to what they do by gas-light or candle-light! Let us regard all things by their appearance in the light of the glory of Christ. In this light you see things truly. Many of the wise men of the period ought to be treated as Diogenes treated Alexander. The conqueror of the world said to the man in the tub, "What can I do for you?" He thought he could do everything for the poor philosopher. Diogenes only replied, "Get out of the sunlight." These wise people cannot do us a greater favor than to remove their learned selves from standing between us and the sunlight of the ever-blessed gospel of the glory of Christ.

Beloved, when asked what we should do with this light, I answer again, value it. Esteem the glorious gospel of Christ more than all besides. Let us also hold it out with great confidence.

This Light Must Win

in the long run. Preach Christ, and away goes the God of this world. Exalt Christ, and down goes the devil. Beloved, let us persuade men to let this light shine around them. They cannot see it because of unbelief; but if it shines around them, it may bring them eyes. God the Holy Spirit blessing it, light will beget sight. Induce your friends to hear the gospel and read the Word of God, and who can tell but they will be saved?

And, lastly, let all who try to preach and teach keep Christ always in the front. The gospel must have Christ as its centre and its circumference; in fact, as its all in all. The gospel is not the gospel without Christ. The gospel will have no dominant idea in it but Christ. Let us sing with the Blessed Virgin, "My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit doth rejoice in God my Saviour." This is a gospel sonnet; this is a song which our Well-Beloved deserves of us. O ye preachers and teachers, lift up Christ! He is as the serpent on the pole, and all who look to Him shall live forever. Look to Him all ye that are dying of serpent-bites; for looking, ye shall live. God bless these words in which I have desired to glorify my Lord! Amen.

[The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Dr. Talmage and Mr. Spurgeon especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

MISDIRECTED ENVELOPES.*

JAMES JERROLD was out of work. He was a young married man. The dissolution of a firm threw him out of employment. Repeated failures to obtain work nearly disheartened him. But his good wife kept him hopeful, and daily prayer preserved his strength and courage, for James Jerrold believed in God. One evening the mail brought him two letters. One was from Slater & Bunce, offering him a situation at a good salary. The other was from Wallace & Co., offering him a situation at a smaller salary. He did as others would have done. He wrote to Slater & Bunce, accepting their offer, and another to Wallace & Co., declining. The next day he received answers to his letters. Slater & Bunce wrote their regrets that he had declined their offer, and Wallace & Co. named the time when he should report for duty. James had carelessly changed the envelopes in replying, and each firm had received the letter intended for the other. He hurried to the city to rectify his mistake; but he was too late. The vacancy in Slater & Bunce's had been filled. Then James could only accept the inevitable. He went to his new work and small salary with a heavy heart. Wallace & Co., however, were pleased with him. One day James was startled by a piece of news. He hurried home to tell his wife. Slater & Bunce had failed! James Jerrold's mistake proved a blessing in disguise.

A Mission Rescued.

Professor Eben Tourgée says: I am reminded of an experience in the early history of the mission in the North End, Boston, Mass., which established my own confidence in a Providential guidance in business affairs. I became deeply interested in the mission at a time when its income was very small, and when its opportunities for usefulness were almost boundless. A few earnest men stood by it, and much good was accomplished; but, in spite of our efforts, we were running behind, and it became a very serious question as to how the necessary expense of about $500 a month could be met. There came a day about this time when some money must be paid, and the matter lay heavily on my heart, and became the subject of earnest prayer. In going out that day I met a friend to whom I unbosomed my great interest in the matter, and he suggested the name of a gentleman whom I did not know, but who, he said, might be willing to help us. I immediately proposed that we visit the gentleman, which we accordingly did. I was introduced to him in his office, and proceeded to state the case, appealing to his kindly interest in the name of the good work begun, and the large possibilities of usefulness in the future. I could not forecast the good purpose of his heart as it was moved at that moment, as I felt, by the Spirit of God. I certainly should have been delighted with $50; but, to my overwhelming joy, he walked to his safe and took out $500, which he placed in my hand, saying at the same time that I might come again in a month and get $500 more, and at the end of another month for as

* From "God in Business." By H. J. Latham. Published by the American News Company, Chambers Street, N. Y.

Rev. Howard Crosby, D. D.

Carrying a Wounded Officer Over a Stream in Burmah.

much more, and so on for twelve months. His sole provision in the gift was that I should not mention his name. This is but one of numerous incidents in my own experience in which I have met with unqualified assurance that God does not leave us alone in financial matters.

Old Debts Collected.

Mr. William F. Hills, of Lowell, Mass., says: When a boy, a few months after my conversion, I was sent to collect a bill of several hundred dollars. I realized that my youth and lack of experience would give me no advantage over my fellow-clerks, who had failed in attempting to collect it, so I laid the matter before the Lord. I found the man in his stable, and asked him to settle the account. He said, "Yes, come in the house and I will pay you." Among other bills collected, was one of about twenty dollars. The account was several years old. After asking the Lord for help, I presented the bill, and the man said, "Well, I might as well pay it, I suppose." My employer was astonished to see the money.

REV. HOWARD CROSBY, D. D.

THE Fourth Avenue Presbyterian Church in New York, where the recent General Assembly held its meetings, of which a picture appears on the first page, is privileged in having for its pastor the eloquent preacher and profound scholar whose portrait appears on this page. Dr. Howard Crosby is known and honored in all the churches of the land, and his literary labors have won him laurels on the other side the Atlantic. Probably the first preacher of his denomination that the travelling Presbyterian of education desires to hear when he sets foot in this country is Dr. Crosby, and it is safe to affirm that, however high his expectations may have been, they are never disappointed. The light that his studies and travels enable him to throw on the Bible is always valuable, and is appreciated in a denomination noted for its love and reverence for God's Word.

Howard Crosby was born in New York, February 27, 1826. He is, therefore, now sixty-three years of age. He graduated from New York University in 1844, and at once entered on a course of theological study. For some years he was Professor of Greek in New York University, and subsequently in Rutgers College, New Brunswick. In 1863 the Fourth Avenue Church was anxiously looking for a pastor fit to succeed Dr. Joel Parker, and God guided it to Dr. Crosby. Since that time he and the church have been inseparable. Dr. Crosby has travelled extensively in Bible-lands, and has written several admirable books of travel. His best-known and most valued work, however, is his Commentary on the New Testament, which has had an enormous circulation here and in other lands.

AMBULANCE SERVICE IN BURMAH.

(See Illustration.)

THE British attempt to replace the anarchy with which Burmah was so long cursed under the drunken, imbecile King Thebaw with order and just government has proved a difficult task. They have been embarrassed by attacks from the Dacoits from beyond the Yaw-Chin frontier on the northwest of Burmah. The Dacoits made frequent raids for purposes of plunder, and, latterly, finding them profitable, they have become better organized and more extensive. At last, in December of last year, they included wholesale massacre of the helpless villagers and the burning of towns. A British expedition was accordingly dispatched to meet them and drive them out of the country. This has been successfully accomplished, but not until there had been severe fighting. An artist who accompanied the expedition sends the accompanying sketch of the conveyance which did duty for an ambulance after the battle. A wounded officer, stretched on his mattress and protected from the mosquitoes by a curtain, was carried over the mountains and across the rivers by native bearers, who supported him on their shoulders by a pole.

MRS. SPAULDING'S CHARGE.

(See Illustration on page 381.)

"WELL, Eli, the girls are gone, and won't be back for two weeks. Seems like old times, don't it, you and I sitting down alone together for supper, like we used to at Slackville, when we were first married?"

"Rather a different set out, though, from the little pine table and four chairs," said Eli Spaulding, looking around at the costly furniture of the spacious room in which he and his wife sat at their evening meal.

"Yes, you've got on since then, Eli, but they were happy days. I don't know as we're any happier now with all the money. There's responsibility in it, and I ain't sure we're living up to it."

"Well, what do you want we should do? You subscribe to a lot of charities, and you're always giving money to the churches, but you can have more money if you want it; there's plenty." Eli leaned back in his chair and looked at his wife with a smile of complacency in which there was the natural pride of a man who has been successful in life.

"You're always good about that, Eli, but seems to me we can't clear ourselves by giving the money away. It's so easy, now we don't miss it. It was different when we had to pinch for a week to give a dollar to the minister."

"I don't know what you mean about clearing ourselves, Dorcas. We ain't under any obligation. Every dollar I've got I've made honestly. It's ours."

"We'll have to give account, Eli. When folks are struggling and starving, it don't seem right we should have more than we want."

"Oh, that's nonsense, Dorcas. There's no one now hard-up belonging to us. Since we set your brother Jonas on his feet, there's none of our kin we ought to help."

"I wish we knew where your sister Lydia is."

"Oh, she!"—Eli made a gesture of impatience—"Lydia ain't any claim on us. She made her own bed, and she must lie on it. I was ready to keep her well, but I told her, when she married that good-for-nothing loafer, I wouldn't do anything to help keep him. Besides, we don't know where she is. It's more than sixteen years since we heard anything of her, and she was all right then."

"Ah! that was when she was first married; you know he wasn't the man to support her."

"Well, then, she shouldn't have married him. I warned her."

"She was foolish. There ain't any question of that, Eli, but if she was in trouble you'd be glad to help her now. She's the only relation you've got. You'd help her, Eli, if her husband is a bad un. I know you."

Eli looked down; He was too old to blush, but his look did duty for a blush in the eyes of his wife, who knew how to interpret it. "Maybe I should," he said. "Sometimes I think I was a bit hard with her. That can't be mended now, though."

"Well, I want we should do something to help somebody."

"So you are. You ask those churches and hospitals! There ain't many who give so much as you do. Look at the lists; our name's always among the first."

"Yes, but that's only giving, Eli. I want to do something—something that's a trouble, something that costs."

"I can't understand you, Dorcas, but I'm willing you should do anything you want. What's set you off?"

"Oh, it's been on my mind a long time. But you're right; something did set me off."

"Thought so," said Eli, going on with his supper, "What was it?"

"Well, when I came back from seeing the girls off I went by the park. Just by the gate there was a boy sweeping. He'd no coat or waistcoat on, and he was barefoot. There was a dreadful wistful look in his face that went to my heart. He stopped sweeping to look at a school of boys going by. He looked so thin and miserable, and they so bright and happy. I guess he couldn't understand why there was such a great difference, and I couldn't."

"No more can I," said her husband. "But we ain't responsible for that. I suppose you gave him something."

"Yes, and it was that set me thinking. I gave him a dollar. He was as thankful as he could be, but that was not what he was wanting. It didn't help to set things right."

"Oh, well, you can't set things right. I guess you made him happy for one day."

"That wasn't much, though."

Mrs. Spaulding sighed over the difficult problem, but said no more, for Eli, having finished his meal, took up the evening paper. After they had retired for the night, however, she lay awake a long time thinking. "You awake, Eli?" she said at last.

"Yes; your talk set me dreaming about Lydia, and I can't get to sleep again."

"Eli, I'd like to give that boy a chance."

"What boy?"

"The barefoot boy I told you about."

"All right, you may, but you'll have some trouble, I guess. You don't know but what he's a young thief; most of those street lads are hard cases. What do you want to do with him?"

"Well, put some decent clothes on him first, and send him to school. Maybe you could use him in the business afterward, Eli, if he turns out well."

"Oh! I've got all the boys I want, and well-brought up boys too, with respectable parents. I don't want any street boys around."

"I'd like to give him a start, anyhow, Eli. His eyes seem to pierce my heart. I can see them now in the dark. You can afford it, Eli. Let us help him."

"Oh, I can afford it. It's a queer idea, but you can try it, if it eases your conscience."

Mrs. Spaulding did "try it." The boy was washed and clothed and sent to a good school. Eli took little interest in his wife's strange experiment, but he paid freely, as he would have done for any other fancy of hers. But one day, about two months later, there was a change. He was coming home from his office, when he overtook his wife, who had been to the school to see her charge.

"How's he getting on?" he asked.

Mrs. Spaulding had her veil down, and Eli could not see her face; but from the inarticulate reply she made, he knew that she was weeping.

"Turned out bad," was Eli's comment to himself. "I expected as much. Ungrateful young dog! I wish she'd never seen him."

When they reached home Mrs. Spaulding sat down in the nearest chair and had her cry out, her husband's indignation growing as he saw her suffering. "Oh, Eli," she gasped at last, "who do you think he is? He's Lydia's only child. She's dead, and her husband too, and he was starving when we took him up."

Mrs. Spaulding's Protege.

ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS.

A Life Story: By Mrs. Stenhouse.

For More than Twenty-five Years the Wife of a Mormon Missionary and Elder.

(Continued from page 305.)

Brigham Young's Household.

JOSEPH SMITH endeavored, in organizing his newly invented religion, to make it resemble as much as was possible both the old and new dispensations of Christianity, and among other things he appointed "Twelve Apostles," who were to assist in governing the Church. He associated with himself his elder brother Hyrum, and also Sidney Rigdon, who had so greatly assisted in every way to establish the new faith and define its principles. This Rigdon is the same who has been suspected of the authorship of the Book of Mormon, though it must be admitted that nothing more than circumstantial evidence can be adduced in support of this statement. However that might be, the two Smiths, Joseph and Hyrum, and Sidney Rigdon formed what was called the "First Presidency"—in other words they were "the Church."

The "Twelve Apostles" were first appointed according to a plan of Joseph's own—Lyman Johnson was placed first, Brigham Young came next, and the others followed. Not long after, however, Joseph made a new arrangement, and placed the twelve according to their age, and this plan was always followed subsequently. Thomas B. Marsh now stood first, and next to him came David Patten, and then Young.

When Joseph was murdered in Carthage Jail, with his brother Hyrum, Sidney Rigdon alone remained of the First Presidency. At that time Thomas B. Marsh, the first of the Apostles had apostatized; David Patten had been killed in a fight with the mob; and consequently Brigham Young was now President of the Twelve—he being the next in age. Thus it will be seen that even had he been (which he was not) the most stupid and least fitted of all the Apostles to preside over the Church, his years would nevertheless have given him the leadership.

Up to this time there is no evidence that any idea of becoming head of the Church had ever entered into Brigham's mind. Indeed, it is reported that Joseph on one occasion, reproving him, said ironically that if ever the Church had the misfortune to be led by Brother Brigham he would lead it to ruin. But Joseph was now dead, and Rigdon alone remained between the Apostle Young and the headship of the Church.

In accomplishing the removal of Rigdon, Rigdon himself was Brigham's best assistant. A man of prudence, or even of common sense, might have safely held his position against all the Brigham's in the world, but prudence and commonsense were qualities unknown to Rigdon. He began to have wonderful visions and revelations, announcing the immediate ending of the world, and stated that he would forthwith lead out the armies of the Lord to the battle of Armageddon. In addition to all this nonsense, he ordained some of his particular friends to be prophets, priests, and kings, and otherwise showed that he intended to carry matters with a high hand.

Brigham watched his chance, and when he considered that matters were ripe for a change, by dint of secret manœuvring he caused Rigdon to be tried before the "High Council" at Nauvoo. Rigdon sent word that he was very ill, and could not come, but the trial went on, and, of course, it could have but one possible ending. The result was—as the Mormon papers at that time reported—that "Elder Young arose, and delivered Sydney Rigdon over to the buffetings of Satan, for a thousand years, in the name of the Lord; and all the people said, Amen." Poor Rigdon! He tried to set up a Church for himself, and a good many people followed him, but the attempt was a failure.

Brigham's next step was to declare that the government of the Church was now vested in the Twelve, of whom he was the head. Later still he contrived, by selecting a time when nearly all the Apostles would be promoted, or, in some way, be gratified by a change in the organization of the Church, to get himself elected president of the Church, in the place of Joseph Smith, with the two Apostles next under him as his associates, under the name of "counsellors," and they together formed the First Presidency. Thus Brigham Young became the official head of the Mormon Church.

Brigham Young was an uneducated man. For that, of course, he was not deserving of blame, but his opposition to education in others and to all that is intellectual and elevating did him little credit. Only a very few years ago he, with his two "counsellors," Heber C. Kimball and Jedediah M. Grant, who were both spoken of as model Saints—held forth in the Tabernacle in the most unmeasured language against schools and scholastic acquirements of every description. They were all three untaught men, and like all persons of small mind who have not themselves received any education, they hated and affected to despise those who had.

Thoughtful men, although they may never have enjoyed the advantages of literary culture, never fail to see the great power that it is, either for good or evil; and in most cases they try to secure for their children the blessing of which they themselves have been denied. But the Mormon leaders, while they ridiculed and affected to despise men of education, were shrewd enough to see that if schools were established, and the children of the Saints permitted to attend them, the bonds of superstition would be shaken, and the fabric of Mormonism undermined. They consequently discouraged every attempt at self-improvement, and taught the people to aspire to nothing higher for their children than the rudiments of reading, writing, and arithmetic for the boys, and a knowledge of household, dairy, and farm work for the girls.

Before the "Reformation" a few young men anxious to improve their minds, organized what they called the "Literary and Musical Society." They gave pleasant social entertainments to their friends, at which they gave recitations, read essays, poems, and other literary productions, varying the programme with selections of music. The authorities looked upon the whole proceedings with disfavor, and soon broke up the society. Not content with this, and in order to show their contempt they humiliated the members in every possible way, even publicly pointing them out to ridicule, and appointing a good many of them to be doorkeepers in the Tabernacle. Brigham Young, who, it is said, never in his life read a book, could not understand that they could find any pleasure in intellectual amusements, and accused them of pride, conceit, and even wickedness. Among the Church leaders it is even now common to speak disparagingly of anyone who has any literary acquirements as "having the big head," and "being" next door to apostasy.

Recently greater efforts to obtain a good education for their children have been made by the more intelligent among the Saints, and the Gentiles in Utah have established some very excellent schools. A library and reading-room have also been opened, and the latter has been well attended by the young men, both Mormons and Gentiles. Brigham himself, with his usual inconsistency, even went so far as to give to his own children those advantages which somewhat earlier he selfishly denied to his poorer brethren.

Of the Prophet's moral character, the less said the better. He was remorseless and cruel in his enmities, and he connived at and even suggested, if nothing more, some of the most atrocious crimes that have ever been perpetrated on the face of the earth. In business matters, in the payment of money—to use a popular phrase—his word was as good as his bond, but in the accumulation of wealth he evinced an amount of dishonesty which can scarcely be credited. Brigham always met his obligations, and paid his debts, and got a lawful receipt—his peculiar business could not otherwise be carried on; but the way in which he obtained his wealth would put to the blush the most dishonest member of any "ring" in New York or elsewhere. When he attended his first Conference, he said he had to borrow certain masculine garments and a pair of boots before he could put in an appearance. But when he died he left property worth more than two million dollars. He took up large tracts of land all over the Territory, he had the uncontrolled and unquestioned command of all the tithing and contributions of the Saints, and from gifts and confiscations, and innumerable other sources, his revenue poured in. It was once rumored that he had eighteen or twenty millions of dollars in the Bank of England; but Brigham said that the report was not true. "The Church," he added, had a little money invested abroad. The difference between "The Church" and the individual Brigham Young was never determined.

In the year 1852 the "Prophet of the Lord" found that he had borrowed an inconveniently large sum from the funds of the Church. He was "Trustee in Trust," and, of course, legally responsible; but he never rendered an account of his stewardship, and no one ever asked him for it. His sense of honesty was, however, so strong that he resolved to have his account balanced, and he went down to the Tithing-office for that purpose. There he found that his indebtedness amounted to two hundred thousand dollars, and he proceeded to pay it after his own fashion; the clerk was instructed to place to his credit the same amount "for services rendered."

In 1867 he owed very nearly one million dollars, which he had borrowed from the same fund, and he balanced his account in the same way. His contract for the Pacific Railroad is said to have yielded him a quarter of a million, and his other contracts and mining speculations, purchases and thefts of lands, houses, &c., have been very profitable. The expenses of such a family as Brother Brigham's must have been something enormous, but the contributions which he levied have been so large that he must have been one of the wealthiest men in the Territory.

Brigham was not a generous man. He gave occasionally, as, for instance, at the time of the Chicago fire, when he presented a thousand dollars for the sufferers, but even then his motive was evident—the affairs of "Deseret" were under discussion in Congress. Without the certainty of a profitable return, Brigham never gave a cent. The story of his sordid avarice and his contemptible meanness in the accumulation of money would fill a volume.

Morally and physically the Prophet was a great coward. When he and other Church leaders were once arrested, charged with the gravest crimes, the effect upon the Prophet was most distressing. He had solemnly sworn in the Tabernacle that he would shoot the man who attempted to arrest him; but when Judge McKean opened court and placed him under arrest, he swallowed his threats and played the coward's part. Before this the world has seen individuals who were notorious for their cruelty and tyranny, and who were also remarkable for their cowardice. For many years he imitated royalty, and had a strong body-guard to keep watch and ward around his person every night. No man had less cause to apprehend personal violence than Brother Brigham, but the voice of conscience, which, as the poet says, makes cowards of us all, suggested his torturing fears.

President Brigham Young had nineteen wives. Of these nineteen, Amelia Folsom Young was the favorite, and she continued to be so, for at last Brigham found a woman of whom he stood in dread. It is doubtful whether he loved her, but nobody in Utah doubted that he feared her. It is said that the Prophet confided so many of his secrets to Amelia that he was obliged to submit to her tyranny, for fear of her leaving him, and exposing some of his ways which would not bear the light. Be that as it may, it is generally believed that after all his matrimonial alliances he at last found his master in the person of Amelia. Even good Saints—friends of the Prophet—secretly enjoyed the idea of him being at last brought under petticoat government, for it is believed that Brigham used unfair means to obtain her, and that at last he only gained his object by deluding her into the belief that Heaven had revealed to him that it was her duty to become his wife.

One thing is very certain—he was as crazy over her as a silly boy over his first love, much to the disgust of his more sober brethren, who felt rather ashamed of the folly of their leader. At the theatre a seat was reserved for her at his side, and in the ball-room the same special attention was shown to her. He would open the ball, and, after dancing with each of his other wives who might be present—simply for appearance' sake—the remainder of the evening was devoted to her. For all that, his inconstant heart could not remain faithful to her, and old habits and feelings, to all appearance, came over him again, and he went astray.

Julia Dean, the actress, was the first to draw him from Amelia's side, and it would have been a sorry day for Amelia if Julia had for a moment favored the prophet's suit. Then the charms of Mary Van Cott touched his sensitive heart, to say nothing of Eliza Ann, his last but yet not his best-beloved.

With all this experience, and the constant evidences of the fickleness of Brigham's heart before her eyes, there is no wonder that Amelia felt compelled to hold tight the reins, when they were in her own hands, for it was a great deal to be known as his favorite wife.

In his habits and mode of living, Brigham was very simple. When I first knew him he dressed in plain homespun, home-made, and every article about his person and his houses was as plain and unostentatious as possible. But the importation of Gentiles and Gentile goods since the opening of the railway worked a great change. His wives, who once carried simplicity of dress almost to the verge of dowdiness, acquired a taste for Eastern fashions.

The Prophet's first home in Utah was a little cottage which is now known as the White House,—the same house, I believe, which was valued at 60,000 dollars, and which Brother Tenant supposed he bought, but which Brigham retained possession of after pocketing Brother Tenant's purchase-money for it.

The Bee-Hive House was the official residence of Brigham. There he used to reign supreme as "Governor" Young; and thence he issued secular and ecclesiastical edicts to all who acknowledged his sway. There was one lady resident in this house—Mrs. Lucy Decker Young, his first wife—and no one else was permitted to intrude upon its privacy. Here the prophet had his own private bedroom, and here he breakfasted when at home.

The Lion House was what ought to have been the home of the prophet, for here nearly all his wives resided. (He had, however, many other houses in the city.) On the basement floor are the dining-room, kitchen, pantry, and other general offices. The first floor is divided by a long passage with doors on each side. On the right hand, about half-a-dozen wives with small families found accommodation. On the left, at the entrance, is the parlor, and the other rooms on that side were occupied by mothers with larger families, and ladies who have a little more than ordinary attention. The upper floor is divided into twenty square bedrooms. There was no extravagance in the furniture or apparel of these wives, but they were comfortable and were kept neat and clean.

(To be Continued).

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION—1888.

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God.

JESUS RISEN.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. Lesson for June 23, Mark 16:1-13; Golden Text, 1 Cor. 15:20.

Friends Standing Afar Off—Joseph of Arimathea Begs for Christ's Body—The Resurrection Clearly Predicted—Only One Woman Understanding It—Her Waiting Rewarded—A Strange Mistake—The Death and Resurrection Repeated in Christian Experience—The Paralyzed Faith of the Disciples—Their Own Conceptions of Christ's Mission Falsified—The Commission Issued—A Command to All—The Signs that Were to Follow—The Demons Exorcised in this Day—Instances of the Other Signs.

THERE were many friends of Jesus who stood far off on Calvary: near enough when He multiplied the loaves, near enough when He healed them of their infirmities, but in the hour of His shame and suffering for them they were far off. There are many who will patonize any work of God when it is popular, but when it is understood only by the few, many of those who see the hand of God in it yet stand afar off, lest they should be involved in what will bring on them disrepute and shame. It was an honor to be recognized as friends of the great Physician, the Prophet of Nazareth in Galilee, but it cost too much to be closely recognized as the followers of the condemned supposed criminal who hung upon the cross: like Peter, they had failed Him at the last. We never can count upon any man's devotion until it is put to the test.

The evening came. Jesus was dead; He had finished the work which His Father gave Him to do. It was no longer dangerous, as during His lifetime, to avow friendship for Jesus. Thus "Joseph of Arimathea, an honorable counselor, which also waited for the kingdom of God," and had in a negative sense, made use of his office to serve the King of that kingdom, by not consenting to the counsel and deed of those who condemned Jesus (Luke 23:51), "went in boldly unto Pilate, and craved the body of Jesus." Thus it came to pass that "He made His grave with the wicked, and with the rich in His death." (Isa. 53:7.) Wrapped in fine linen, and laid in a lordly sepulchre, was the body of Jesus, and the two women who cared for Him more than for their own safety "beheld where He was laid."

The next day, the Sabbath of the Jews, passed by, in which no work might be done, and now

The Resurrection Day

was about to dawn. Five times Jesus had declared to His disciples that on the third day He would rise again; but only one, and that a woman, seemed to have any definite expectation that He would do so. Mary Magdalene came early, "when it was yet dark, unto the sepulchre." (John 20:1.) And this statement is corroborated in this very chapter: "Now when Jesus was risen early the first day of the week, He appeared first to Mary Magdalene, out of whom He had cast seven devils." She first made the discovery that the stone was rolled away and the sepulchre empty, and she became the first messenger of the Resurrection to the apostles Peter and John, who, after they had seen the empty grave, went away. But Mary, who had understood that He was to die, appears to have had some vague expectation of something happening. Did she connect the empty grave with His promise that He would rise again? Peter and John as yet

"Knew not the Scriptures, that He must rise again from the dead." (John 20:9.) But Mary, did she know these Scriptures? Had she some conviction that He who had conquered death in Jairus's daughter, in the young man of Nain, and in Lazarus, would also conquer the bands of death in His own person, and that she should see Him living again? In any case, Mary clung to all of Jesus which was left to her—the empty grave was to her the most homelike place on earth, for there she had seen last all that was left of Jesus; and Mary was not disappointed. "Mary," "Rabboni," and the watcher for Jesus' resurrection was rewarded, and went to tell of her risen Lord.

It was probably on her return from the sepulchre that she met with the mother of James, and Salome, who were coming with sweet spices to anoint, perhaps embalm, the dead body of Jesus. It was

A Strange Mistake.

They thought of Jesus as dead. A difficulty suggested itself to them as they neared the place: "Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre?" A barrier lay between them and the dead Jesus, a stone which men had placed there. "And when they looked they saw that the stone was rolled away." No human hand had done it. Divine agency had been at work, and they saw a heavenly being in the vacated tomb—life in the place of death—"a young man with a long white garment." It was so unexpected that they were afraid. But he spoke to them, and reassured them, saying, "Be not affrighted. Ye seek Jesus of Nazareth, which was crucified: He is risen: He is not here: behold the place where they laid Him." It was a wonderful revelation to them: with His death it seemed to them that His cause had failed. True, Lazarus was alive, witnesses of His power and love were plentiful, but, then, if all His power had not sufficed to save Himself from condemnation and death as a common criminal, how could they continue to believe that He was, indeed, the Christ, the Son of the living God? But now if He was risen, and by His own power, this was more marvellous than if He had accepted the impious challenge of the chief priests to save Himself and had come down from the Cross.

But is it not thus sometimes with the experience of Christians? Does not all our faith and knowledge of God pass through judgment, shame, death, and resurrection? Are there not times when everything external seems to give the lie to our faith, and it seems in some dark hour as though God had forsaken us. And then comes the resurrection, the dying and burying of the human and sensuous, that which depends on feelings and on external help, on circumstances, on meetings, or on certain teachers; and then comes a glorious resurrection, when that which we have lost in feeling we find again in fact; when that which used to be a glorying in ourselves is now become, instead, an opportunity of glorifying God.

"But go your way," said the angel; "tell His disciples and Peter that He goeth before you into Galilee; there shall ye see Him, as He said unto you." It was such a complete revulsion of feeling, that the women were filled with; but it was mingled with "great joy" (Matt. 28:8), and they said nothing to any man until they met Jesus Himself, and they "held Him by the feet and worshipped Him." Now they understood the angel. Jesus was not lost. He was still the Christ, the Holy One, the Mighty One; their faith had not been misplaced, and with full hearts they went to tell the remainder of the disciples, but they only Met with Unbelief.

Jesus appeared also to two disciples who were walking to Emmaus, and they bore their testimony to His resurrection, but the majority of disciples still would not believe, until Jesus Himself appeared to the eleven, and "upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen Him after He had risen." They had clung to their own views of things to the last, had still held to the hope that Jesus would in some way deliver the Jews from the yoke of Rome, and His shameful death was such a blow to all their hopes, it was difficult to exercise again the faith which had been paralyzed by disappointment.

But oh, His tender love! After upbraiding them for their unbelief, He trusts them with a commission not given to the angels, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." Clear, precise direction, but oh, how little obeyed! "Go ye," is said to every disciple; "Ye are witnesses of these things" (Luke 24:48) was said not to the eleven only, but to "them that were with them," i. e., the hundred and twenty believers on whom the Holy Ghost came at Pentecost. (Luke 24:33; Acts 1:45.) It was when the disciples, filled with the Holy Ghost, "began to speak with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance," and spoke so that "every creature" within hearing heard from their lips "the wonderful works of God," that such a wonderful ingathering of souls took place—three thousand garnered in one day! It was when those who were scattered abroad, on account of persecution in Jerusalem, went everywhere preaching the Gospel, that we hear of whole cities converted to God. (Acts 8:4-8; 9:35.) "He that believeth and is baptized," he that, having believed, is willing to confess Christ "shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." And shall follow them that believe; in My name shall they cast out devils." There is far more of the possession of the devil in the present day than men are aware of. In the case of lunatics, when such as have never heard oaths, blasphemies, or obscene language are yet made to utter these things, it is very clear that a power contrary to their very nature and surroundings possesses them. What is delirium tremens but possession? What is the lying spirit and the loss of self-respect which characterize the slaves of opium but a possession? God has left in His church the power to cast out devils, and according to our faith it is unto us. Some thirty or forty years ago few men had the temerity to acknowledge that they believed a drunkard could be saved, but, praise God, His witnesses now, wherever the Gospel is faithfully preached, believe that God is stronger than the demon of drink, and thousands of prayers have been answered in the conversion of drunkards, both men and women. But many there are who cannot exercise the same faith for lunatics, and according to their unbelief it is unto them. The power is in the Church, never withdrawn by the hand of God, but oh how little exercised by His believing people. "They shall speak with new tongues." Thank God, we find, here as else where, it is unto us as we have believed. We know of several missionaries who have been enabled to speak a foreign language with comparatively little study, when the exigencies of the work demanded it; and, no doubt, if there were more real faith in God exercised in this matter, we should see more of God's power.

These Signs

"They shall take up serpents." Miss L. Sisson, of Bassim, India, was one day

Bitten by a Cobra.

In a few minutes her arm was fearfully swollen, and her life was in danger; but she gathered her orphan children around her, and they prayed in faith. As they prayed, they saw the swelling go down, and the fatal bite was cured. "If they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them." Mrs. Osborne, once missionary in India, tells of a missionary whose native servant, in revenge for some reproof, put poison into his food. The missionary, knowing nothing, asked in faith God's blessing, and commenced his repast, and, being hungry, finished the dish. The servant looked on expecting his master to fall down in agony, but he was unhurt, and the servant then confessed what he had done: but the missionary had no fear, he clung to the promise of the Master, and was delivered. "They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." The thousands of cases whom God has healed of late without doctors or remedies, of cancer, paralysis, spinal disease, skin diseases, consumption, erysipelas, tumor, blindness, deafness, lameness, insanity, etc., are sufficient evidence that this promise of Christ holds good, and that these signs still do follow them that believe, and in the proportion in which they do believe.

Jesus ascended into heaven. But they who had received this charge went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following." (Acts 2:43; 3:6, 7; 5:12-16; 6:8; 8:6; 9:17, 18, 33-40; 12:6-10; 14:3, 8-10, 19, 20; 16:16-18; 19:11, 12; 20:9, 10; 28:8, 9.)

WHAT WOULD JESUS DO?

If washed in Jesus' blood,
Then bear His likeness too,
And as you onward press,
Ask—"What would Jesus do?"

With willing heart and hand,
Your daily task pursue;
Work! for the day wears on;
Ask—"What would Jesus do?"

Be gentle, e'en when wronged,— Revenge and pride subdue;
When to forgive seems hard,
Ask—"What would Jesus do?"

Be brave to do the right,
And scorn to be untrue;
When fear would whisper "Yield,"
Ask—"What would Jesus do?"

Give with a full free hand,—
God freely gives to you;
And check each selfish thought,
With—"What would Jesus do?"

Then let the golden thread,
Woven your life-work through,
Reflecting heaven's own light,
Be—"What would Jesus do?"

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher: 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent, post-paid, for 10 cts., or 100 for 20 cts. Postage stamps taken.

The latest and best imperial Photographs of Dr. Talmage and Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, with their fac-simile autograph, and also imperial photograph of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, can be obtained from J. E. Jewett, 77 Bible House, New York. Sent postpaid for twenty-five cents each. Postage stamps taken.

WHAT WOULD JESUS DO?

OR,
THE TEXT UPON THE WALL.

COPYRIGHT, 1889, BY J. E. JEWETT.

The beautiful little shield represented above, is made from extra heavy card board in maroon and dark green, with embossed silver letters, beveled and silver edge, 5x6 1/2 inches, corded and ready to hang on the wall. It is a perfect gem.
Price, 15 cts. each, or 8 for $1.00, post-paid.

WHAT WOULD JESUS DO?

OR,
THE TEXT UPON THE WALL.

A 16-page tract, giving some interesting incidents, showing how many a sorrow would be alleviated, how many a wanderer brought back, how many a friend gained, how many an enemy reconciled, how many a pitfall avoided, how many a perplexity resolved, how many a Gordian knot unfied, by the simple reference of all actions and hesitations to this standard—"What would Jesus do?"
Price, 3 cts. each, or 30 cts. per dozen, post-paid.

A sample, one each of the above (Shield and Tract), will be mailed post-paid for 15 cts., by
J. E. JEWETT, Publisher,
77 Bible House, New York.

WANTED Christian Men and Women to sell THE CHRISTIAN'S LEGACY. Reports: "Yesterday I started out about 8 o'clock and at noon had 8 new names." "Monday I worked 24 hours and took 9 orders." "Tuesday I had and added 12 good names." Circulars and recommendations free.

W. J. HOLLAND, 150 Nassau St., New York.
E. E. HOLLAND, 40 Dearborn St., Chicago.

3000 RED CHINA MATTINGS—Rolls Cheek, Fane and White, from $2.75 per roll, 40 yards; specially made of fine white mattings, last season's stock, at $5.75, worth $8.00. Special:—Florest Mosaic Rug, 27x51, at $2.25; Tapestry Brussels Rug, 27x51, 40 cts.; 27x51, $1.15; 30x60, $1.15; figured and plain designs, 500 Mattings, 25 cts. each. Circulars and samples invited. Mail orders promptly filled.
ANDERSON & LESTER'S SONS,
738 & 741 Broadway, New York.

TRAVELING SALESMEN.

Yes, madame, we can tell you how it is possible for a firm to give so many valuable Toilet Articles, Perfumery, Tooth Powder, Shaving Stick, presents, premiums, etc., etc., with "Sweet Home" Soap. This is the only brand of household Soap that is sold direct to the consumer by the manufacturer.

J. D. Larkin & Co., Buffalo, N. Y., are the only Soap manufacturing firm in the United States selling direct to the user. All other firms employ traveling salesmen, like the gentlemen in the picture; jolly, good fellows these travelers are, too—live high, get big wages, wear fine clothes. The Bureau of Statistics at Washington says that "The wages (not counting traveling expenses which are fully equal in amount to the wages) paid during 1887 in this country to traveling salesmen, is one fifth more than the income of all the ministers and doctors in the United States."

Now, if a manufacturer is willing to supply you, direct, a better article than you can get at the store, and is willing to give away, for a limited time—to advertise and introduce his goods—all (and more, too) that is saved in expenses of traveling men, extra freight, profits of wholesale and retail dealers, had you not better accept his offer?

Do not confound "Sweet Home" Family Soap with the common cheap soaps (made to sell). "Sweet Home" is made for use, and each cake will go twice as far as the common soap sold at five cents per bar.

If you are a subscriber to this paper, you can secure a Great Bargain Box of "Sweet Home," on thirty days' trial, by sending your name and address on a postal card to our advertising manager, J. E. Jewett, 77 Bible House, New York.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH
43 Bible House, New York.

YOUR ADDRESS ON A Postal Card

Mailed to us, brings you promptly 30 samples of cloth, guaranteed self-measurement blanks, whereby you can have your clothing cut to order or sent to any express or P.O. Pants $3 to $5. Suits, $13.25 to $21.

PLYMOUTH ROCK PANTS CO.
11 to 17 Eliot St., or 18 Summer St., Boston, Mass.
Or call at our nearest BRANCH STORE—285 Broadway, New York; 943 Pennsylvania Ave., Washington, D. C.; 72 Adams St., Chicago, Ill.; Burnside Building, Worcester, Mass.; Gilmore House, Springfield, Mass.; 60 Market St., Lynn, Mass.; 198 Westminster St., Providence, R. I.; Old Register Building, New Haven, Conn.

DEGREES,
FIRST AND POST-GRADUATE,
Conferred without residence. Any one can secure this desirable title by pursuing a course of study by CORRESPONDENCE under eminent College Professors, at slight cost. In formation of Courses, Professors, etc., given in our UNION READING CIRCLE, a large 16-page literary Journal, sample copy of which and application form for membership will be mailed to any address on receipt of 10 cts. in postage stamps. Address: COR. UNIVERSITY, 147 THROOP ST., CHICAGO, ILL. N. B.—Situations to teach free to members and subscribers. Agents wanted.

EAST GREENWICH ACADEMY.
Founded 1892. For both sexes. Charming location on Narragansett Bay. Steam heat. Electric light. Well equipped. Prepares for College or Business. Eleven courses of instruction, including normal, with training school. $200 a year. Opens Sept. 2d. For illustrated catalogue address Rev. F. D. BLAKESLEE, A. M., East Greenwich, R. I.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS send stamp and we will forward Catalogue and Free Sample Pkt. of Gospel Tracts, Booklets and Books.
TRACT DEPOT, ONTARIO, CANADA.

For the Sunday-School Lessons.

FROM SAMUEL TO SOLOMON. By Rev. C. S. Robinson, D. D., LL. D., 12mo. 310 pp. Cloth, $1.25. Stout paper with cloth back, 50 cts. Covering week by week the International Lessons from July, 1889, to January, 1890.

A bright, fresh, suggestive book; full of apt illustrations. A timely aid to Sabbath-School Teachers.

The Star Library.

A new and attractive Sunday-School library of ONE HUNDRED 16mo VOLUMES.

Each volume illustrated and strongly bound in red cloth, with gilt back. Over 15,000 pages of reading, in large, legible type. In handsome chestnut case.

Every Sunday-School, before looking elsewhere, should examine this large set of excellent books, which is offered at an extremely low price.

ONLY TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, NET.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY,
150 Nassau St. & 304 Fourth Ave., New York.

Boston, 54 Bromfield St.; Rochester, N. Y., 93 State St.; Chicago, 123 Wabash Av.; Philadelphia, 1512 Chestnut St.; Cincinnati, 176 Elm St.; San Francisco, 735 Market St.

SEATTLE No blizzards, heavy snows or cyclones. Average winter temperature 43° above zero. Seattle, largest city in Washington on Terry. Population 25,000. Commercial, educational and financial center of Puget Sound Country. Full information of Queen City. SE-AT-TLE. CHAS. H. KITTINGER, Seattle, Wash. Territory.

PAINLESS EFFECTUAL

BEECHAM'S

THE GREAT ENGLISH MEDICINE
WORTH A GUINEA A BOX

PILLS

For Bilious and Nervous Disorders, such as Wind and Pain in the Stomach, Sick Headache, Giddiness, Fulness, and Swelling after Meals, Dizziness and Drowsiness, Cold Chills, Flushings of Heat, Loss of Appetite, Shortness of Breath, Costiveness, Scurvy, Blisters on the Skin, Disturbed Sleep, Frightful Dreams, and all Nervous and Trembling Sensations, &c. THE FIRST DOSE WILL GIVE RELIEF IN TWENTY MINUTES. This is no fiction. Every sufferer is earnestly invited to try one Box of these Pills and they will be acknowledged to be a Wonderful Medicine.—"Worth a guinea a box."

BEECHAM'S PILLS, taken as directed, will quickly restore females to complete health. For a

WEAK STOMACH; IMPAIRED DIGESTION; DISORDERED LIVER;

they ACT LIKE MAGIC—a few doses will work wonders upon the Vital Organs, Strengthening the muscular System; restoring long-lost Complexion; bringing back the keen edge of appetite, and arousing with the ROSEBUD OF HEALTH the whole physical energy of the human frame. These are "facts" admitted by thousands, in all classes of society, and one of the best guarantees to the Nervous and Debilitated is that BEECHAM'S PILLS HAVE THE LARGEST SALE OF ANY PATENT MEDICINE IN THE WORLD. Full directions with each Box.

Prepared only by THOS. BEECHAM, St. Helens, Lancashire, England.
Sold by Druggists generally. B. F. ALLEN & CO., 365 and 367 Canal St., New York.
Sole Agents for the United States, who (inquire first), if your druggist does not keep them,

WILL MAIL BEECHAM'S PILLS ON RECEIPT OF PRICE, 25 CENTS A BOX.

CANFIELD SEAMLESS DRESS SHIELDS

Only reliable Shield made. Have been worn by more than six million ladies. Sales five times that of any other Shield made in U. S. or Europe. Beware of imitations.

SAMPLE PAIR, By mail, 25 Cents.
Pat. in U. S. and Europe.
For Sale at all Leading Dry Goods Houses.
CANFIELD RUBBER CO.,
86 Leonard St., New York.

TACOMA WASHINGTON IN THE NEW STATE

8% debentures (interest quarterly). 7 and 8% guaranteed first mortgages on city and farm property. Particular attention paid to investments for savings banks, trustees and individuals. For full illustrated information, maps, etc., and any special information concerning this wonderful city and investments therein, mailed free. Address, Oakland Land, Loan and Trust Company, Tacoma, Washington.

PIANOS UNIVERSITY ORGANS

$120 to $1000 Guaranteed 6 years.
They Lead the World
We sell direct to families, and send for trial in your own home before you buy. Catalogue Free. Established 1858. Inceps 1877.
MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO.,
235 East 21st Street, N. Y.

$500 A YEAR GUARANTEED SALARY, and commission (5% to one canvasser in each County. Business permanent and worth $1000 to $2000 a year. No capital or experience necessary. Write for particulars. CINCINNATI PUBLISHING CO., 160 Elm St., Cincinnati, O.

SPECIALTIES IN SILKS.

We shall put on sale, this week, line of Black Faille Francaise, inches wide, at 75 cents per yard and a very large purchase of Fl Colored Gros Grains, in over 30 sirable shades, at 75 cents per yard.

These goods are of exceptional value and calculated to give excellent satisfaction.

Samples sent on request.

JAMES MCCREERY & CO
Broadway & Eleventh St
New York.

BUNYAN'S PILGRIM'S PROGRESS AND THE HOLY WAR.

A New Large Type Edition, Illustrated with Marginal Notes and References, printed from new plates, and beautifully bound in rich English muslin, with beveled edges and gilt back and side. This is the complete edition of the Pilgrim's Progress, The Holy War, and a Memoir of John Bunyan, all bound in one volume of over 700 pages. Price, $1.50, sent postpaid to any address on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, N. Y.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TO LADIES.

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees, and Breads. Powder, and secure a beautiful Gold Band or Moss Rose Clasp. Set, Dinner Set, Gold Band Moss Rose Toilet Set, Water Glass Lamp, Cigar, or Website is Dictionary. Get Premium No. 27. For particulars address 66 and 68 CHURCH STREET, N. Y. P. O. Box 2

T. DeWitt Talmage's New Book, Ten, Pulpit and Platform

SHOTS SUNDRY TARGETS
Aimed at Wrongs 2 B Righted, Pollies 2 B Shunned, Digners 2 B Avoided, Sorrows 2 B Mitigated, Victories 2 B Won. A treasury of his best thought, and beautiful 191 pp. 702 pages, $2.75. E. B. TREAT, NEW YORK

SAMPLE PAGES FROM THE LATEST SUNDAY SCHOOL SONG BOOKS FREE THE ECHO MUSIC CO., La Fayette, Indiana.
BEECHAM'S PILLS act like magic on a weak stomach. For a DISORDERED LIVER try BEECHAM'S PILLS.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1889, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. XII., No. 23. Office, 71 Bible House, N. Y. WEDNESDAY, JUNE 5, 1889. Price, 3 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAITS AND LIVES OF THE LORD MAYOR OF LONDON, AND FOUR PROMINENT SPEAKERS AT THE MAY ANNIVERSARIES.
 VINOUS COMPANY. Dr. Talmage's Sermon last Sunday Morning.
 NECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

THE PROPHECY OF THE FALLING STARS.
 How a Oheque was Cashed—Berachah's Daughter—Progress in India—The Healing of Canon Basil Wilberforce—A Heathen Texas Village, Etc.
 PICTURE OF THE RESIDENCE OF THE LATE BRIGHAM YOUNG IN SALT LAKE CITY.
 PORTRAIT OF REV. TEUNIS B. HAMLIN, D.D., President Harrison's Pastor.

ONE LOST SHEEP. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
 Gems from New Books: Life in the Thirteenth Century—Francis of Assisi—The Death of Cranmer.
 LOUISE HOBART'S SERVICE. (With Illustration.)
 ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS. An Autobiographical Story by Mrs. Stenhouse. (Continued.)
 JESUS CRUCIFIED. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

1. Bishop of Exeter.—2. Canon Fleming.—3. Lord Mayor of London.—4. Hon. and Rev. Carr Glyn.—5. Bishop of Bedford.
 SPEAKERS AND PREACHERS AT THE MAY MEETINGS IN LONDON.

PREACHERS AND SPEAKERS AT THE MAY MEETINGS IN LONDON.

It has long been the custom in England for the missionary and other religious societies to hold public meetings in London during the month of May every year. This year the "May Meetings" commenced before April had run half its course, and will continue until the month of June has come and gone, so multifarious and important are the various societies and organizations that are now working in the different departments of Christian effort. This week we publish a group of portraits of some of the leading speakers who have already taken part in the meetings.

THE BISHOP OF EXETER.

The first of the group is the Right Rev. Edward Henry Bickersteth, Bishop of Exeter, who presided on April 29 at the anniversary of the Home and Colonial School Society. He was born at Islington, London, on January 25, 1825, so that he is now sixty-four years old. He is the only son of the late Rev. E. Bickersteth, the well-known voluminous prophetic author and expositor. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where, in 1847, he took his B. A. degree with honors. In 1848 Mr. Bickersteth was ordained by the late Bishop Stanley, of Norwich, and the same year as curate of Banningham. In 1852 he was appointed curate of Christ Church, Tunbridge Wells, and Rector of Hinton Martell, Dorsetshire, the same year. In 1855 he became the Vicar of Christ Church, Hampstead, a northern suburb of London, where he labored for thirty years. On the translation of Dr. Temple to the See of London, Dr. Bickersteth was appointed Bishop of Exeter, and was consecrated to the episcopal office in 1885.

Began His Ministerial Career

As an author the Bishop has gained a high and honorable niche in the gallery of fame. His better known works are, "The Rock of Ages," "A Practical and Explanatory Commentary on the New Testament," "The Spirit of Life; or, Scripture Testimony to the Divine Person and Work of the Holy Ghost," "The Lord's Table," besides "Poems," "Yesterday, To-day, and For Ever," "The Hymnal Companion to the Book of Common Prayer," which, in its revised and enlarged form, with tunes, appeared in 1876, and is now in use in more than two thousand churches in England, Canada, Australia, etc.

THE REV. CANON FLEMING.

Few clergymen are held in higher esteem by all denominations than the Rev. James Fleming, Vicar of St. Michael's, London, and Canon of York. He was born at Strabane, Ireland, on July 26, 1830, and is therefore now fifty-nine years of age. His father was the late Patrick Fleming, Esq., M. D., a "beloved physician." The Canon was educated at Shrewsbury School, proceeding thence to Magdalene College, Cambridge, where he graduated B. A. in 1853, M. A. in 1857, and B. D. in 1865. Before, however, these academic honors were acquired, he was heartily engaging in the work of the gospel ministry, to which he had devoted himself. He was ordained by the Bishop of Norwich in 1853, and after a year's labor as curate at Ipswich, he removed in 1854 to a second curacy at Bath. After ten years of most successful service in that city, he was called to the metropolis, to become the successor of the eloquent Henry Melvill, and of Daniel Moore, as minister of Camden Church. Here the fame of the preacher grew, and the congregation increased. It was no doubt his increasing popularity that led, after seven years of work at Camberwell, to his being preferred to the important vicarage of St. Michael's, in succession to the late Rev. Rowley Hill, where he ministers to a crowded congregation, largely consisting of persons eminent in professional and intellectual, as well as social life. In 1877 the late Lord Beaconsfield nominated him as Canon-Residentary of York.

Canon Fleming has always taken a deep and practical interest in the principles and work of Temperance. Upon leaving Camberwell in 1874 he had a splendid opportunity given him by the committee of the National Temperance League to advocate the cause by desiring him to preach the annual sermon in Westminster Abbey. The ancient building was crowded, and the canon made good use of his opportunity.

Canon Fleming's deep interest in the workmen led him to be an early promoter and conductor of penny readings. During his short term of service at Ipswich, he became acquainted with this method of getting hold of the working-people on week evenings, the idea having not long before been originated by the editor of one of the local newspapers. Mr. Fleming took up the idea, and wrought it out in striking form, and when he removed to Bath he took it with him, and introduced what was then a novelty into that and many of the towns of the west.

As a preacher Canon Fleming is vigorous, impressive, and eloquent. As a reader he has few equals; but his proper and commanding sphere is the pulpit. Every text is well handled; every sermon is carefully studied; while to ripeness of scholarship and richness of illustration there are added the charm and grace of a finished elocution. Lord Beaconsfield remarked that "he (Canon Fleming) is one of the most eloquent preachers I ever heard," a testimony, which, coming from such a critic, meant much.

The popular Vicar of St. Michael's is one of the honorary secretaries of the Religious Tract Society, a vice-president of the Band of Hope Union, and also of the National Temperance League. The Sunday-school also has his deepest and warmest sympathy.

THE LORD MAYOR OF LONDON.

It would be rather startling to hear of a Mayor of New York presiding at a missionary meeting, but in London the chief magistrate is generally a man of a different type from those elected here. The Lord Mayor of London, in spite of his numerous official duties, is sufficiently interested in Christian work to take the chair at many of the May meetings. He is now fifty-five years old. He entered the Bradford woolen and cloth trade when he was quite young, and going to London in 1860, continued in the business, in which he was remarkably successful until 1881, when he retired. In 1882 he was elected an Alderman of the city. He is an extensive traveller, having visited most of the countries of Europe, the United States, Australia, New Zealand, and the scattered British possessions. He is an ardent educationalist, more especially in regard to technical, agricultural, and higher commercial education.

On March 29, this year, he presided at a meeting of teetotal mayors at the Mansion House, the event being spoken of by some as a living embodiment of the great change that has come over the civic life of the country. The popular notion of civic life has hitherto been festivity to an almost unlimited extent, coupled with a free use of the "flowing bowl." Of late years, however, a marked improvement has set in, and now a corporation is coming to be regarded as a body that exists not merely to preserve ancient privileges and charters, but to benefit the community in which it is established. A meeting like that of March 29 will tend to dispel the first notion and to emphasize the second. A quarter of a century ago a meeting of teetotal mayors would have been impossible, because the class, except as rare specimens, did not exist—in fact, a teetotal mayor was then regarded as an anachronism. A mayor and no "loving cup" would have been looked upon like a watch without a movement; but the teetotalers, adopting the French proverb, may say, "We have changed all that."

On November 9, which is Inauguration Day, it has been the custom for the new Lord Mayor to spend large sums in pageantry, but Lord Mayor Whitehead ruthlessly cut down the expenditure, and spent the money so saved in feeding the starving poor at the East End. Speaking recently at a Temperance meeting, he said: "I think there probably has never been a period in the history of the world—certainly not in the history of this country—when there has been such a deep-rooted determination to elevate and add to the happiness of the masses. That, to my mind, is one of the most pleasing features at the present day. Now, so far as temperance is concerned, there is much ground for encouragement. The cause is gaining ground and taking deeper root every day. Within the short period of my mayoralty, only about four months, we have had several meetings, including one in connection with the Young Abstinents' Union, and another in connection with the British Women's Temperance League, and I should be perfectly within the bounds of truth if I were to say those two were the finest gatherings that have ever taken place within this hall. You are endeavoring to get rid of what is sapping the health and the strength of the nation. You probably will not win what you are aiming at [Total Prohibition] for some years to come. But you may rest assured that you will have as your reward, not only an increased prosperity of the nation, but you will have the consciousness of feeling that you have done something to mitigate the sufferings, and to increase the thinking power as well as the happiness of the people."

THE HON. AND REV. E. CARR-GLYN.

EDWARD CARR-GLYN, the Vicar of Kensington, a suburb of London, is the ninth and youngest son of the late Lord Wolverton. He was born in 1843, and is therefore forty-six years of age. Having gained distinction at the great public school at Harrow, he proceeded to University College, Oxford. At the termination of his curriculum in 1868, he was ordained by the Archbishop of York, and having acted for a time as curate at Doncaster, under Dr. Vaughan, he became in 1871 domestic chaplain to the Archbishop of York, who appointed him to the vicarage of St. Mary's, Beverley, in 1873. It was spoken of as a notable fact, that when, three years later, he bade adieu to this parish, four hundred of his attached congregation remained to receive the Holy Communion after his farewell service.

In January, 1876, he became Vicar of Doncaster, where, though the work was less arduous than at Beverley, he found plenty of scope for his powers, and his assistance to the Church of England Temperance Society is gratefully remembered to this day. In 1878 he succeeded Bishop MacLagan as Vicar of Kensington, one of the highest trusts which the Church of England has to bestow, and since his appointment to it he has gained for himself much fame as an eloquent, earnest preacher, and zealous and amiable worker in all that pertains to the social and moral advancement of his great and important parish.

In July, 1882, he married Lady Mary Campbell, sixth daughter of the Duke of Argyll, and the wedding ceremony created considerable interest in Kensington and the neighborhood. Sufficient tickets were issued for admission to the parish church of St. Mary Abbott's to fill that spacious edifice to its utmost limits; but so overwhelming were the applications for admission that over 3,000 persons were sent away unable to gain their purpose. The company included the Princess Mary and her children. Nearly $3,500 was subscribed, without canvassing, towards the cost of the "parishioners' present," which consisted of two fine oil portraits of Mr. Glyn and his bride; but besides this, the Vicar, who is deservedly popular with all classes, received a prodigious number of gifts of every description. For instance, the police employed in Kensington, in whose welfare Mr. Glyn has always taken great interest, presented him with a handsome silver inkstand. The honeymoon was spent in Scotland, during which the bridegroom conducted service in the ruins of Iona Cathedral, when the whole of the inhabitants of the island, and many from the mainland of Mull, attended, and the occasion was felt to be one of great solemnity and much spiritual profit.

the Bible or a sermon. I announced the hymn, "What a friend we have in Jesus," and raised a tune myself, asking all to sing, but not a voice joined me, and I did the best I could on a solo, and the audience looked on their books and patiently heard me. Thus I sung four solos in the course of the service. I read the Scripture, and preached to a quiet and attentive audience, and at the close they all voted for me to come to Comfort again. I was told by a guest at the hotel that my landlord said that he would give $50 to help build a church. People here who know the reputation of Comfort are astonished, and I am both astonished and grateful.

THE PROPHECY OF THE FALLING STARS.

By W. Appleford.*

To Accompany Earthquakes—Scientific Observation of the Two Phenomena—The Meteoric Shower of 1866—The Origin of Shooting Stars—Fragments of Meteors that Do Strike the Earth—Specimens of Meteorites in our Museums—Where they Come From—The Pulverizing of Biela's Comet in 1867—The Effect of a Large Comet's Disintegration.

IN Rev. 6 we have an account of the opening of the first six seals, the first four of which are accompanied with the going forth of a conqueror, terrible wars, famine, and pestilence. At the opening of the fifth seal there is a cry for vengeance from some martyrs, who evidently have but recently been slain; while the accompaniment of the sixth seal is given in these words: "There was a great earthquake, and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood, and the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind." If we compare this with Matt. 24 and Mark 13, we find a wonderful similarity in the order of events. After warning the disciples against being deceived, our Lord foretells wars, famines, pestilences, and earthquakes, after which follows the Great Tribulation corresponding to the fifth seal, and then in verse 29 we read, "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken."

It has frequently been contended that these prophecies cannot be taken literally, since it would be utterly impossible for

The Stars to Fall to the Earth.

seeing that each of them is much larger than our globe. If these prophecies had reference to the fixed stars we should entirely agree with this argument; but it is well known that those fiery meteors, which may be seen on any clear starlight night, are, and always have been, called stars; while these descriptions so accurately describe the meteoric or star showers, which are now not so very uncommon, that were they found in any other book than the Bible, there would be a unanimous agreement that they are descriptive of them. A further proof, as we take it, that there are literal descriptions of meteoric star-showers, is found in the fact that both the darkening of the sun and moon, and the occurrence of an unusual number of meteors, is by no means an uncommon Accompaniment of Earthquakes.

even as they are represented in the Revelation. Thus Mr. Mallet says: "A near connection may be supposed to exist between earthquakes and meteors. These bodies belong to a class of phenomena proportionately seldom displayed by the atmosphere: yet they have been tolerably frequently observed to occur at the same time with earthquakes. To this class belong the so-called 'globes of fire,' and other extraordinary lights and illuminations in the regions of the air, which cannot be considered as belonging to the ordinary methods of electrical discharge." In a list of earthquakes and some phenomena attending them, I find the occurrence of meteors and shooting-stars mentioned thirteen times in those that occurred between January, 1838, and December, 1842. We therefore think that the joint occurrence of earthquakes and falling-stars in the prophecies is a further proof that they are descriptive of literal phenomena.

A Grand Display of Falling Stars

occurred on the morning of November 14, 1866. A few stars were seen to fall shortly after 12.0 midnight, and from that time they rapidly increased in number till about 1:45, after which their number decreased. A writer in the Edinburgh Quarterly Review (January, 1876, p. 255) thus describes it: "On resuming our watch at ten minutes past one, it would be difficult to say what the appearance of the shower might be compared to, unless it was to the course of arrows. Straight and parallel was the direction, and swift and uniform the speed of this 'vastly extended system of bodies, moving with entire harmony and concert.' Meteors, for the most part as bright as the principal fixed stars, and many brighter—a large proportion comparable to Sirius, and some to Jupiter—sped through the firmament right and left, in a stream so fast and copious that, like drops of water upon a standing pool, to count them all might well have tasked the mind."

These descriptions show how appropriate are the figures employed by the prophets; "the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs when she is shaken of a mighty wind;" and "As the leaf falleth off from the vine." Had the prophets been describing an actual star-shower which they had witnessed they could not have used more appropriate language, either to describe the phenomenon, or the terror it caused the beholders.

Have we, then, any reason, by analogy with known facts, for supposing that these falling stars will reach the earth?

We have. The better to understand this part of our subject, it will be necessary to say a few words on

The Origin of These Bodies.

It is now pretty generally admitted that the shooting-stars and the meteoric bodies that reach our earth are all of the same family. They are supposed to consist of solid substances that have been travelling in regular orbits in space at an enormous velocity, estimated by Sir R. S. Ball at twenty miles per second, or 100 times the velocity of a bullet when fired from a rifle. In the course of time they come in contact with our atmosphere, and on account of the high speed they travel, the resistance they meet with in their progress through the air generates so much heat that at a height of from eighty to forty miles above the earth's surface they reach a white heat, and from that melt, and then pass away as a vapor, which, as it cools and condenses, is deposited on the earth as a fine dust, and as such can be gathered from the snows of high mountains. As these bodies are hard, solid substances, it is evident that were they not thus destroyed we should be in constant danger from their fall, especially in those years when the November star-showers are due.

Some, however, either through travelling at a slower speed, or from being composed of more refractory substances, are not burnt out, but

Fall on Our Earth,

and in the case of those composed of iron, are invariably covered with a crust or varnish, showing that they have been subjected to great heat in their journey through the air. Although their speed is so great when they first impinge upon our atmosphere, the resistance they meet with when they reach the denser region of the air so far reduces that speed that when they strike the earth they travel at a comparatively slow rate. The meteorites that reach the earth vary in size from a grain to many tons. In the Natural History Museum there is one weighing over 3 tons 13 cwt; but even this falls into insignificance before one found in Brazil, which weighs 14 tons, while another, the largest known, on the west coast of Greenland, weighs 22½ tons. In number, probably several thousand reach our earth every year, the large majority of which either fall into the sea, or in places unobserved by men.

Destruction of Biela's Comet.

On February 27, 1826, an Austrian officer named Biela discovered a "planetary" comet, which was also seen ten days later by a French astronomer. Both observers computed that it was the one seen in 1772 and in 1805, and which they calculated would complete its revolution in between six and seven years. It had no tail, and was so small that it had not been seen with the naked eye previous to 1805. The return of this body in 1845-46, was marked by an extraordinary circumstance. When first seen, on November 28, it wore its usual aspect, but on December 19 it was noticed that its shape had become distorted, and ten days later it had divided into two separate objects. This divided comet was seen by many astronomers from this date to April 16, 1846, when they were estimated to be 157,250 miles from each other. Signs of internal agitation were not wanting, for each fragment threw out a tail, and each developed a bright nucleus, although the original comet had exhibited neither of these signs. Once more, in August, 1852, the double comet returned to the neighborhood of the sun, when the distance between the two had increased to a million and a quarter miles. Both vanished shortly after, and have never since been seen, notwithstanding the eager watch kept for them and the accurate knowledge of their track that had been obtained. We can therefore scarcely doubt that as comets they have ceased to exist.

But there is every reason to believe that it has appeared in another form. On November 30, 1867, the annual meteoric shower was more than usually abundant, and it was conjectured that this might be due to adding to the number. The missing comet was next due at perihelion in the year 1872, and the probability was contemplated of its being replaced by a somewhat dense drift of falling stars. The precise date of the occurrence was not easily determinable, but Galle thought the chances favorable for November 28. The event proved that he had miscalculated it by twenty-four hours only. In western Europe, almost as soon as the sun had set, the meteors came in large numbers from the constellation of the Chained Lady. Their number was so great that at times they baffled all attempts to keep a reckoning, and at 8 o'clock they were described as a "real rain of fire." A similar display was expected in 1885, and the observers were not disappointed, for they were both larger and more numerous than in 1872.

Fragments of Biela's Comet

We thus have it as a well-established fact, that these star showers of 1867, 1872, and 1885 were, at least in very great measure, due to the pulverized portions of Biela's comet, but what is more singular, these fragments had in 1885 been scattered over more than 300 million miles of its orbit; yet Professor Newton considers that all must have formed one compact group with Biela at the time of its close approach to Jupiter about the middle of 1841.

If the Destruction of a Small Comet

like this produces so many meteorites or shooting-stars, who can tell what would happen if we came into close quarters with the body of a large one? Is it not possible that "the stars falling from heaven" might reach the earth?

We thus believe that in the meteorites, as in the fixed stars, we have an intimation that the great day is approaching. To those who are unwilling to take these as preliminary signs, we would simply remark that, while we differ from them, the object of these remarks is not so much to prove this, as to show by a comparison of Scripture with Scripture, and with the well-known phenomena of the present day, that by interpreting the prophecies literally we get a straightforward, sensible, and even accurate scientific description of events that are yet coming on the earth; while by treating them as symbols we get into a maze of confusion, from which we seek in vain for one to extricate us.

*From his article in the Prophetic News for May. Price, including postage, six cents, from this office, 71 Bible House.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICE, 71 AND 73 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 3 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

We are changing our system of mailing the paper to subscribers for the purpose of insuring greater safety in transit through the mails, and thus, if possible, prevent its loss. Heretofore, when more than one subscriber was receiving the paper at the same office, all the papers were enclosed in one wrapper, which is the way almost all papers are mailed. This necessitated the papers being taken out of the wrappers at the post-office for distribution, and, we are convinced, caused delay and loss of papers. To prevent this, we are placing every paper in its own separate wrapper, with the FULL address printed on it. Part of our list has already been changed, and the remainder is being done as rapidly as possible.

CURRENT EVENTS.

An Extra Session of Congress is Expected. Prominent politicians and the leading Republican newspapers predict that Congress will be called together for October 7. There are anticipations of a strong and bitter fight over the organization of the House, which may easily occupy the two months before the regular session. The Republican majority is stated to be only three, and it will therefore be a close division to secure the organization. Besides this, a strenuous effort is to be made to re-enact the rules of procedure adopted in the last House. These were so favorable to minorities that a small, compact group of members could force a deadlock, and sixty members could absolutely prevent the passage of any measure to which they objected. The Republicans want to make new rules, so that a struggle that may be memorable is likely to ensue. If, as is probable, Mr. Randall will be the acknowledged Democratic leader, the contest will be a protracted one. His skill as a parliamentary tactician is unquestioned.

A Revival of the Old Question of our Rights in Behring Sea has been accompanied by sensational reports of approaching trouble between this country and England. Complaints have been made for some time past that unauthorized seal-catching by foreign vessels was being carried on. It was stated that the young seals were being killed so recklessly that there would soon be a scarcity. President Harrison, under an act of Congress of March 2, issued a proclamation warning all unauthorized persons against entering Behring Sea within the dominion of the United States for the purpose of taking fur seal or salmon, and the two revenue cutters were charged with the duty of seeing that the order is carried out. He maintains that we have exclusive dominion over all that portion of the Pacific Ocean known as Behring Sea, excepting such as lies east of the treaty line, bordering on the Siberian coast. This was the contention of Russia before our Government acquired Alaska, and all Russia's vested rights in the territory. England claimed that Behring Sea was a part of the Pacific Ocean, and therefore could not be closed. She has, however, shown a disposition to negotiate or submit to arbitration, and in any case will respect the three-mile limit which she expects our fishermen to respect in the Canadian waters. Seal catchers caught at work within that limit are little likely to have English protection if they are seized. As the vessels engaged in the trade are generally better armed than our revenue cutters, the Bear, Thetis, Adams, and Iroquois have been sent to patrol the waters. A sensational rumor that England had sent three of her powerful warships to protect the sealers was circulated early in the week, but was authoritatively denied on May 30 in the House of Commons.

The Appalling Disaster in Pennsylvania on Friday last has sent a thrill of horror throughout the country. A whole village appears, from the accounts received, to have been devastated by sudden flood. A sudden freshet of the North Fork River caused the bursting of a reservoir, and the vast volume of water poured down the valley in a torrent, sweeping everything before it. Johnstown, a town of some 12,000 inhabitants, lay directly in its way, and it was completely devastated. Only two houses remained standing, and a flood thirty feet deep flowed over what a few hours before was a thriving, prosperous town. As a climax of horror about forty houses which were floating down the stream were jammed against the massive viaduct of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and the fires which were burning in the houses were scattered by the shock, and set fire to the heap. Shrieks and cries for help rose from the poor creatures imprisoned in their overturned dwellings, but nothing could be done for them, and it is feared that hundreds of them were burned to death. The number of the drowned it is impossible to estimate. The calamity was so sudden that but few escaped. Persons on the spot believe that five thousand persons at least, and probably many more, must have perished. In addition to these deaths, some railroad passengers—it is not yet known how many—lost their lives. The day express from Chicago to New York was halted at Conemaugh when the depth of the flood rendered it unsafe to proceed farther. The train was caught by the sudden influx of the torrent and in the panic that ensued many were drowned, but a large number were rescued and taken to Altoona. It is an awful catastrophe, the worst of the kind on record in this country, and is only paralleled by the inundations in China.

A Mormon Settlement in Canada is Being made. A press dispatch from Ottawa says that Mormons are flocking into Alberta from Idaho and Utah. They have purchased large tracts of land from the Alberta Railway and Coal Company. Mr. A. M. Stenhouse, the British Columbia legislator, who left his province to join the Mormon colony in Alberta, insists that his associates will practice polygamy if they like, and that the Dominion cannot prevent them doing so. Conditions and restraints might be imposed upon the Mormons if they purchased their lands from the Government, but they are buying from subsidized railway companies. Leading newspapers say that if the Mormons continue to flock into the Northwest the Federal Government will soon have a serious problem to settle.

The Famous Secret Society of Clan-na-Gael, composed of Irishmen living in America, is under a cloud of suspicion. It is charged that Dr. Cronin, who was recently murdered in Chicago, was killed by agents appointed by this society. It appears that some years ago Dr. Cronin asserted that nearly $100,000 of the money contributed for the Irish cause had been misappropriated. He did not conceal his opinion as to who were the guilty persons, and his determination to bring them to justice aroused bitter animosity against him. During the sitting of the Parnell Commission the informer, Le Caron, gave evidence. He had been intrusted with important secrets by the Irish party here, which he regularly betrayed to the British Government. He stated that the Government had four other spies still at work in the confidence of the Irish societies. He refused to mention their names publicly, on the ground that if he did so they would be murdered. The statement was cabled here, and the Irish societies were at once in a fever of suspicion. They held meetings and commenced a rigid hunt for the four spies. The enemies Dr. Cronin had made did not miss the opportunity to direct suspicion to him. He was murdered, and the Clan-na-Gael is suspected of having ordered his removal. Officers high in the society emphatically deny this, but admit that the murder may have been done by some members of the order who were impelled by personal grudges, or in revenge for the treachery of which Dr. Cronin was suspected. Three Irishmen have been arrested on suspicion, but the Clan-na-Gael is so powerful in Chicago that there is little hope of the guilty parties being punished if they are members of the society.

The Samoan Conference in Berlin is Drawing near the close of its labors. It is stated that the main lines of a treaty have been drawn and the only minor details await settlement. The commission has completed a draft of a protocol containing clauses relating to the municipal government of Apia, the coaling ports held by the Powers, the land commission, and the autonomy of the Samoan Government, the text of which has already been cabled to Washington and approved by the State Department. The remaining clauses, defining the tariff of Samoa, the Constitution of the native Government, and the limitation of the German claims for indemnity from the natives, have been framed in consonance with instructions from Washington.

A Protest from English Members of Parliament has been made against the absence of Lord Lytton, the English Ambassador in France, from the opening of the exhibition. A memorial has been drawn up and signed by 26 members for presentation to President Carnot, expressing regret that the Minister was not present. Mr. Gladstone has also publicly charged the Cabinet with an error of judgment in the matter, and expressed his opinion that Lord Lytton should have been there. An effort was made to formally censure the Government in the House of Commons, on the ground that they had acted in concert with other powers to inflict a slight on a Republican government. It failed, however, and the representative of the Cabinet assured the House that Lord Lytton's absence was not due to a prearranged understanding among European Governments. It was the opinion of the Cabinet that the country ought not to have anything to do with the celebration of a revolution regarding which political parties in France remained bitterly divided. When a nation was unanimous in its rejoicing on the centenary of a great historic event, there could be no impropriety in the Queen's representative being present at the ceremonies commemorating such event, as was done when the British Minister at Washington took part in the ceremonies that attended the centenary of American independence.

Mr. Parnell's Lieutenants who have Followed him on the witness-stand before the commission have not improved the case for the League. Their evidence shows that, however strongly Mr. Parnell personally was opposed to violent measures, they looked leniently, if they did not connive, at outrage and murder. Mr. Joseph Biggar, member of Parliament for West Cavan, told the commission on May 29 that there was no part of the League's duty to recommend the shooting of landlords, but that it was its duty to defend anybody charged with shooting landlords or their agents. He said this because no confidence was placed in the administration of the law, and he held that the League ought to defend prisoners whose crimes were the outcome of bad laws. Maurice Healy, the member for Cork, admitted that the Cork branch of the League had received applications from other branches for lists of merchants who were members of the League, in order that other merchants might be boycotted. Mr. Healy held that it was legitimate to place such a pressure upon shopkeepers. It is to be regretted that President Harrison's name has been dragged into the inquiry. On Thursday, Mr. Arthur O'Connor, in giving evidence, said that while he was in Indianapolis last year General Harrison, now President of the United States, declared that every honest man and lover of liberty would rather share the company of Mr. William O'Brien in Tullamore Jail than that of the Viceroy in Dublin Castle.

The Presbyterian General Assembly Closed its sessions on May 28. In the last days' meetings the most prominent topic of discussion was Temperance. The difficulty in discussing this subject is easily realized when it is remembered that among the commissioners were many ardent Prohibitionists on the one hand, and Dr. Howard Crosby on the other. The report of the standing committee recommended the endorsement of all means that would tend to the suppression of the liquor traffic. For this latter recommendation it was moved that a minority report be substituted, recommending in terms the endorsement of the constitutional prohibition amendment. To this resolution Dr. Semple, of the Black Hills, offered a substitute, which said: "While we indorse no political party, we favor constitutional prohibition." Dr. Crosby strongly opposed the amendment, declaring that Prohibition in New York would result in free rum. The Assembly voted down the amendments, and passed the resolution recommended by the committee. At the next session, however, the ex-moderator, Dr. Thompson, said that the vote of the Assembly would be regarded as a blow at Prohibition, and offered a resolution which earnestly recommended all ministers and congregations "to persevere in vigorous efforts until laws shall be enacted in every State and Territory of our beloved country prohibiting entirely the traffic which is the principal cause of drunkenness and its pauperism and crime." Dr. Crosby vigorously protested, but the resolution was carried by a vote of 193 to 82. At the concluding session Dr. Crosby again raised the question, and succeeded in getting a resolution passed declaring that "the deliverances of this Assembly on the subject of Prohibition are not to be considered as the advocacy of any particular party."

Five Weeks on a Burning Ship were Spent by a captain and crew recently. News comes from Rio de Janeiro of the arrival of the steamer Parkhurst from London. Six days after leaving that port it was discovered that fire had started in the cargo, and in a short time it had such hold of the vessel that the captain believed she was doomed to destruction, and had the life-boats got out and provisioned. Everything that could be done to extinguish the fire was done; but, despite the best efforts of the crew, the fire spread through the cargo, and soon the sides of the vessel above the water became red-hot, and the decks could only be walked on by spreading wet sails on them, and keeping them continually saturated. Several times the crew thought they would be driven to abandon the vessel; but, encouraged by the commander, who was foremost in fighting the flames, they managed to stand by the ship, and succeeded in taking her into Rio de Janeiro, the cargo being then still in flames. The captain and seven of the crew were badly burned and almost blinded, and it is believed that most of the 3,000 tons of cargo was destroyed by fire and water. There are men whose whole life is spent in an analogous conflict. The flames of passion and evil propensities consume them, and they are often tempted to abandon the struggle. Blessed are they who then, having Jesus for their commander, are encouraged to fight on until they reach heaven in safety. (Rom. 7:18-25.)

An Attempt to Overturn a Lighthouse failed last week in New York. Since the destruction of the rocks at Hell Gate has been effected, there has been no need for the great lighthouse, 265 feet high, which stands on the Astoria shore. Accordingly it has been decided to remove it. On May 25 the work was commenced. The broad base supports were taken out, and the tower then rested on four comparatively slender iron pillars, which run through from the concrete foundation to the summit of the tower. It was thought that by fastening wire cables to the top it would be possible to pull it over. The tower weighs over a hundred and fifty tons, so the cables were made proportionately strong. They were attached, and pulled taut by machinery. A strain of twenty tons was applied, but the tower stood firm. The strain was increased, but it had no effect except to break the chief cable, and then work had to be suspended. The engineers consulted, and decided to use hydraulic pumps under one side of the tower, and when that was lifted some few feet, to apply the cables again. Evidently the men who built the lighthouse at Hell Gate knew how to build. It is more strongly constructed and more firmly fixed on its foundation than the engineers who are trying to overturn it supposed. That is the case with another kind of lighthouse which has long stood to warn men who were going to the gate of hell. In spite of all the efforts to overthrow the Bible that have been made for many years, it still stands and sheds its warning light. (Ps. 119: 152.)

Large Payments to Remove a Reproach from a father's name were paid last week in New York, and Newark, N. J. In 1881 a shoe manufacturer in the latter city failed for $50,000 and compromised with his creditors for twenty cents on the dollar. He was an honest man, and was deeply concerned about the unpaid debts. He commenced business again, and worked hard and lived economically in the hope of paying the balance. He succeeded in working up a good business, but his health failed, and he died before realizing enough to achieve the object he had at heart. He left his business to his daughter, who fully sympathized with her father in his aim. The business has prospered under her management, and last week she had the satisfaction of paying the last of the $40,000 left unpaid at the failure eight years ago. The creditors, knowing they had no legal claim on the money, were astonished at receiving it, but the daughter said it was her father's dying wish, and she was glad to obey it. There are few daughters who would voluntarily part with so large a sum to fulfil a dead father's wish. It is unhappily still more rare for Christians to feel that their heavenly Father's wishes as to the disposal of their property must be carried out. (Deut. 15: 7, 8.)

The Display of a Flag Caused a Disturbance in New York on May 26. A citizen living in a flat, up-town, had been entertaining some relatives during the previous week. He is an American by birth, though of English descent, and his relatives are English subjects. To please them he hung a British flag out of his window on Friday, that day being Queen Victoria's birthday. He was taken sick the next day, and was not able to take the flag down, and it remained flying all that day and on Sunday. There is a Roman Catholic church on the other side the way, which has large numbers of Irish people in its congregation. The sight of the flag exasperated them, and they collected around the house and threw sticks and stones at it. An Irishwoman who lives in the flat above threw up her window and flung dirty water on the flag. The owner, aroused by the disturbance, rose from his sick-bed and went to his window to see what the trouble was, and was ordered by the mob to take the flag in. He protested, but not wishing to have a disturbance on Sunday, hauled in the flag and the mob separated. He acted wisely, but was much chagrined at having to obey the dictates of an Irish mob. In his case, being an American citizen, no patriotic principle was involved. It is a very different case with those who, owing allegiance to Christ, are afraid to show their colors, lest by doing so they suffer loss. They forfeit much more than their self-respect. (Mark 8: 38.)

An Amusing Deception Has Been Practiced on an artist at Louisville, Ky. During a recent voyage from Europe he made the acquaintance of a fellow-passenger, who was very friendly and confidential. He told the artist that he was on his way to America to take possession of an estate worth $100,000, which had been bequeathed to him and his sister in equal shares. As they grew more intimate he showed the artist the photograph of a beautiful lady, who, he said, was the sister in question. The artist admired the picture excessively, and declared himself in love with the lady represented. His acquaintance professed to be pleased with the announcement, and said he should be delighted to have the artist for his brother-in-law. He willingly took charge of several handsome presents which the infatuated lover desired to be sent to the sister, and after landing in America he accepted a loan of $2,000 from the artist to pay his expenses in settling up the estate. Later, he telegraphed to the artist that his sister had arrived, but $7,000 more were needed. The artist, who had grown more enamored every day with the lady whom he had never seen, sent the money, and hinted his desire to see her. He was told that she and her brother were at Columbus, O., and the brother urged him to come right on, and marry her at once. The artist gladly complied, but, on arriving at Columbus found no trace of the lady or her brother. Becoming suspicious, he made inquiries there and at Louisville, and soon satisfied himself that he had been duped. The portrait was that of an actress purchased in a store, and the estate also was a fiction. He is a bitterly disappointed man, and declares that he grieves more over the violence done to his affections than over the loss of his money. His credulity is astonishing in these days. Preachers of the gospel who are authorized by God Himself to proclaim infinitely greater blessings to those who believe, rarely find such faith and such readiness to love One whom they have not seen. (Rom. 10: 15, 16.)

BRIEF NOTES.

There were 120 new Christian Endeavor Societies reported in a single week recently, at the headquarters.

The First Baptist Church, Newark, N. J., while awaiting the completion of its house of worship, is worshipping in a Hebrew synagogue.

The Methodist Episcopal church at Rousville, Pa., was struck by lightning on May 19, and burned to the ground. There were no services at the time.

During the Rev. B. Fay Mills's services at Bridgeton, N. J., there were several very remarkable conversions in the jail, where Mr. Mills went to preach during his visit.

The Rev. Sam Jones, on May 26, closed a series of revival meetings in Danville, Va. Nearly one thousand persons professed conversion as a result of the meetings.

The Annual Assembly of the Society of Friends was held in the Meeting-House in East Fifteenth Street, New York, last week. About three hundred brethren and sisters were present.

Thirteen young men connected with the Arkansas City Y. M. C. Association, went to Oklahoma with the first "boomers," and arranged to start evening prayer-meetings in Guthrie in the open air.

The remains of the late Miss Mary Whately, whose portrait and life appeared in this journal on April 3, have been interred at Cairo, among the people whom she loved, and to whose welfare she devoted her life.

Postmaster-General Wanamaker is making wholesale removals of postmasters. On Thursday of last week, 244 were removed. During the week ending May 25 there were 985 changes. A previous week's record was 1,016.

Mr. C. W. Sawyer and Rev. Arthur Chester, who have been carrying on evangelistic services for several months in the Bushwick Avenue Congregational Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., have secured the hall of Warner Institute, Broadway, for the summer months.

At the fifteenth annual convention of the Episcopal Diocese of Newark, N. J., held last week, Bishop Starkey referred with warm commendation to Bishop Potter's sermon at the Washington Centennial. He said that the Episcopal Church had spoken by the Bishop.

Dr. John E. Cookman, the eminent Methodist minister, resigned from the Methodist ministry on May 30, and will enter the Protestant Episcopal Church. His eloquence and zeal will be missed in the communion he leaves and will be very welcome in that to which he goes.

The Rev. J. C. Meyers, of State Line, Ind., while conducting services for the Rev. M. Steele in the New Liberty Christian Church on May 26, was struck by lightning. He fell out of the pulpit and was taken up in an unconscious condition. In half an hour he recovered consciousness, but he is much injured.

The Rev. Edward Beecher, who was injured in a railway accident, and had his leg amputated at the knee, preached in his church at Parkville on May 26. To a friend he said, in reference to what he had passed through: "Some of the time I almost felt as if I was in heaven. I commend that kind of religion to you, and take it as a lesson to myself—that kind of faith that keeps a man eighty-six years of age without depression under such circumstances."

ONE LOST SHEEP.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"How think ye? if a man have an hundred sheep, and one of them be gone astray, doth he not leave the ninety and nine, and goeth into the mountains, and seeketh that which is gone astray? And if so be that he find it, verily I say unto you, he rejoiceth more of that sheep than of the ninety and nine which went not astray." Matt. 18: 12, 13.

Individual Conversions the only Way to Evangelize the World—No Person to be Despised—Even of Evil Character—One Strayed Soul of Value—I. The Lord's Interest in One Lost Soul—For the Sake of the Lost He Assumes a Special Character—Makes a Wonderful Descent—Seeks While They are Still Straying—II. His Special Exertions to Save One Soul—Seeking with Persevering Diligence—III. His Rejoicing Over One Soul Recovered—IV. A Striking Example—The Wreck of the "Danmark."

THIS passage occurs in a discourse of our Saviour against despising one of those little ones that believe in Him. He foretells a dreadful doom for those who, in their contempt for the little ones, cause them to stumble; and He forbids that contempt by a variety of forcible arguments, upon which we cannot now dwell. There is a tendency, apparent at this present time, to think little of the conversion of individuals, and to look upon the work of the Holy Spirit upon each separate person as much too slow a business for this progressive age. We hear grand theories of a theocracy of a kind unknown to Holy Scripture; a semi-political dominion of the Lord over masses wherein the individuals are unregenerate. We listen to great swelling words about the uplifting of nations and the advancement of the race; but these lofty ideas do not produce facts, nor have they any moral power. Our "cultured" teachers weary of the humdrum work of

Bringing Individual Souls

into light; they pine to do it wholesale, by a far more rapid process than that of personal salvation. They are tired of the units, their great minds dwell upon "the solidarity of the race." I am bold to assert that if ever we despise the method of individual conversion, we shall get into an unsound order of business altogether, and find ourselves wrecked upon the rocks of hypocrisy. Even in those right glorious times when the gospel shall have the freest course, and shall run the most quickly, and be the most extensively glorified, its progress will still be after the former manner of the conviction, conversion, and sanctification of individuals, who shall each one believe and be baptized according to the Word of the Lord.

Our text warns us that we are not to despise one person, even on account of evil character. The first temptation is to despise one, because only one; the next is to despise one, because that one is so little; the next, and perhaps the most dangerous, form of the temptation is to despise one because that

One Has Gone Astray.

The individual is not in the right path, not obeying law, nor reflecting credit on the Church, but doing much that vexes the spiritual and grieves the holy; yet we are not, therefore, to despise him. Read the eleventh verse: "The Son of man is come to save that which was lost." In the Greek, the word "lost" is a very strong word: we may read it, "that which is destroyed." It does not mean, "that which is non-existent," as you will clearly see; but that which is destroyed as to usefulness to the shepherd, as to happiness to itself, and as to working out the intent for which it was created. If any are so effectually destroyed by sin that their existence is a greater calamity than their non-existence would have been; if they are now dead in trespasses and sins, and even offensive in character, yet must we not despise them. The Son of man did not despise such, since "He has come to seek and to save that which was lost." Many a soul that has been so destroyed as to be lost to itself, lost to God, lost to His people, lost to anything like hope and holiness, the Lord Jesus Christ has saved by His gracious power. He values each one; this is the lesson which I would teach this morning.

I. First, then, in the words before us, our Saviour shows peculiar Interest in One Lost Soul.

Note, in the commencement, that for the sake of those lost ones our Lord assumes a special character. The eleventh verse puts it, "The Son of man is come to save that which was lost." He was not originally known as "the Son of man," but as "the Son of God." Before all worlds, He dwelt in the bosom of the Father, and "thought it not robbery to be equal with God." But in order to redeem men, the Son of the Highest became "the Son of man." He was born of the Virgin, and by birth inherited the innocent infirmities of our nature, and bore the sufferings incident to those infirmities. Then did He also take upon Himself our sin and its penalty, and therefore died upon the cross. He was in all points made like unto His brethren. He could not be the shepherd of men without becoming like to them, and therefore the Word condescended to be made flesh.

Next to this, to show how Jesus values one lost soul, he makes

A Very Wonderful Descent.

"The Son of man is come." He was always known as "The Coming One;" but as to the salvation of the lost He has actually come. For judgment He is "the Coming One" still; but for salvation we rejoice that our Saviour has already come. Quitting the assemblies of the perfect, He has been here as the Friend of publicans and sinners. From being the Lord of angels, He has stooped to be "a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief." Yes, He has come; and not in vain. Those who preached the coming Saviour had such a joyous message to deliver that their feet were beautiful upon the mountains, and their voices were as heavenly music; but as for us who preach that He has come, and, coming, has finished the work which He undertook to perform—surely ours is the choicest of messages.

Note, here, that He does this for those that are still straying. I have marked, in looking at the Greek text, that it is written, "He seeketh that which goeth astray." The Shepherd seeks it because it strays, and needs seeking. Full many of the Lord's redeemed are even now going astray, and even now is the Shepherd going after them. The Saviour seeks those who are even now sinning. That He should have a love to those who are repenting I can well understand; but that He should care for those who are going astray is far more gracious.

Seeks While the Sheep Strays:

The Shepherd takes a peculiar interest in the lost, not only as now straying, but as having already gone very far away. Carefully consider these words—"If so be that He find it." That "if" tells its own tale. The sheep had become so terribly lost that it was not likely to be found again: it had wandered into so dense a thicket, or strayed into so wild a region, that it seemed scarcely within the bounds of hope that it would ever be discovered and brought back. We do not often meet with an "if" in reference to the work of Christ; but here is one—"If so be that He find it." This does not show weakness in the Shepherd, but of the sheep. Herein is love that He should go after those whose finding is by no means a certainty, nor even a probability! Very improbable, almost impossible, is the task He undertakes! Yet in such He takes a deep interest.

The Desperate Danger

Dear friends, since Jesus takes such an interest even in one stray soul, you must not think it little that you should be called to care for a single soul. Do not think that a little congregation of forty or fifty is too few to be worthy of your best efforts. Should your class, through various circumstances, get down to a very small number, do not, therefore, give it up. No, no. Value one soul more than a world's purchase. The full company of the redeemed is far from being made up as yet, and the Lord hath much people in this city not yet brought to His feet; therefore, never dream of ceasing your labors.

II. Secondly, may the Spirit of God help me while I remind you that our Lord put forth solitary individual. Observe in the parable—for it is a parable—that we see the Shepherd leaving happier cares. Yes, He leaves those in whom He could take pleasure, to seek one that gave Him pain. I will not dwell upon how He left the paradise above, and all the joy of His Father's house, and came to this bleak world; but I pray you remember that He did so. It was a wonderful descent when He came from beyond the stars to dwell on this beclouded globe, to redeem the sons of men. But, remember, He still continually comes by His Spirit. His errands of mercy are perpetual. The Spirit of God moves His ministers, who are Christ's representatives, to forego the feeding of the gathered flock, and to seek, in their discourses, the salvation of the wandering ones.

Special Exertion to Save One

According to the text, the Shepherd goes into the mountains, among difficulties and dangers. He will do and dare for the saving of the lost; no hardships can daunt His mighty love. You know through what dark ravines He passed in saving men. You have heard what climbing He had after proud souls, and what condescensions for despairing ones. A sheep in the East is more light of foot than our sheep; it will leap like a gazelle, and climb the mountains like a chamois; and so are sinners very swift in transgression, and very daring in presumption. They leap in their iniquities where the children of God would shudder to follow them even in thought. They make nothing of leaps of profanity which would curdle the blood of him that has been taught the fear of God at the feet of Jesus Christ. Yet the Lord Jesus went

After these Desperadoes.

To show His exertion for the lost, our Lord describes Himself as seeking with persevering diligence. He looks this way, but sees nothing. Where can it be? He travels on with swift foot, for He does not know what may become of His sheep while He delays. He has neither seen nor heard it these long hours; but He will continue seeking till He finds it. The concentrated omniscience of Christ is set upon a soul that goes astray, looking after it in all its evil desires and evil emotions; watching the growth of anything that looks like repentance; and observing with sorrow the hardening of its heart.

At the last He saves—completely saves. He has not come to make the salvation of His people possible; but to save them. He has not come to put them in the way of saving themselves, but to save them. When my Lord comes forth in the majesty of His sovereign grace to save a soul, He achieves His purpose, despite sin and death and hell. The wolf may grind his teeth, but the Shepherd is the wolf's master. The sheep itself may for a long time have wandered, and at the last may struggle against Him; but He grips its feet, and throws the creature on His shoulders, and bears it home; for He is resolved to save it. The sheep is glad to be so borne, for with a touch the Shepherd moulds its will to His perfect will.

III. I am compelled to pass onward somewhat hurriedly. Notice, in the third place, that our Lord feels a special

Rejoicing at the Recovery

of a wandering sheep. Do not make a mistake here. Do not suppose that our Lord loves more the one soul that has wandered than the ninety and nine who have been preserved by His grace from going astray. But you will see the meaning of the passage by an illustration from your own experience. You have a family, and you love all your children alike. But little Johnny is very ill: he has a fever, and is like to die; now you think more of him than of all the rest. He recovers, and you bring him downstairs in your arms, and just then he is the dearest child of the whole company. Not that he is more valued than his brothers and sisters, but the fact that he has been so ill, and was likely to die, has brought him more before your mind, and caused you more anxiety, and therefore you have more joy in him because of his recovery. The great deeps of Christ's love are the same to all His flock, but on the surface there is sometimes a holy storm of joy when any one of them has been newly restored after wandering.

Learn the occasion of this demonstrative joy. The wandering one

Has Caused Great Sorrow.

We were all grieved that our brother should become a gross backslider, that such an earnest Christian as he seemed to be should disgrace his profession. Our Lord is still more grieved than we are. When the erring one comes back, we feel a new joy in him. In proportion to the sorrow felt over the wanderer, is the joy manifested when he is restored.

Moreover, great apprehensions were aroused; we feared that he was not the Lord's, and that he would go back unto perdition. We trembled for him. That black dread is all over now; the sheep is safe, the doubtful one is saved and restored to the fold. In proportion to the weight of the apprehension is the intensity of the relief. The Shepherd had exercised also great labor over the lost one. He went up among the mountains to find his sheep; but now His labor is fully rewarded, for He has found His lost sheep. He remembereth no more His travel and travail, for joy that the sheep is safe.

IV. Now we come to the tug-of-war, that is, to look upon our divine Shepherd as he sets us A Striking Example.

We may view this text as our personal missionary warrant. To-day we are called upon to think of missions; and as I think it idle to preach about missions in the big high-flying style, I have purposed to say something common-place, but practical. Brethren, we are all of us to be missionaries for Christ, and the text presents a warrant for each one to work earnestly as a soul-winner.

What shall we do, then, to imitate our Lord? The answer is—Let us go after one soul. I cannot make a selection for you this morning, but I do entreat all who are workers together with God to go after the ones. There is a kind of knack in speaking to individuals—everybody does not possess it; but every believer should labor to acquire it. Seek the souls of men one by one. It is far easier work to me to speak to you all than it would be to take each one apart and speak to him personally of his soul; and yet such speaking to you one by one might be more successful than this sermon to you in the mass. I entreat you, as the great Shepherd goes after one, do not think you will demean yourself by going after one poor man or woman.

"I have a class and a work," says one. Yes, I want you, for a little, to Leave the Ninety and Nine.

I pray that you may feel called to look after some one greatly depraved person, or some utterly neglected child. Keep up your ninety and nine class, if you possibly can, but, at all hazards, go after the one. Make an unusual effort; go out of your way; let ordinary service be placed second for the time being. It will be a healthy change for you, and, perhaps, a great relief. Peradventure, you will come back and do more good with the ninety and nine, after you have been away a little while with the straying one. You are getting a little mouldy; and you are just a wee tired of the monotony of your work. Every Sunday the same girls, or the same boys, and the same form of lesson. Well, cut the whole concern for a little, and go after the one sheep that has gone astray. "You are giving us odd advice, Mr. Spurgeon." If it is not in my text, then do not follow it; but if it is in our dear Master's words, I trust you will carry it out bravely.

Here is one thing to cheer you. If you should win such a soul as that, you will have more joy, a great deal, than in saving those for whom you regularly labor—more joy over that lost one than over the ninety and nine hopeful ones. It will be such a support to your faith, such a fillip for your joy, such a bright light to your labor, to have won such a specially guilty one. I should not wonder but what you will talk about it for many a day, and it will be a source of strength to you when things are not quite as you would desire. Such converts are our crown of rejoicing. May I specially recommend that you make a trial of this extra sheep-seeking?

I would remind you that under the old law you would be bound to do this thing. Turn to the twenty-second of Deuteronomy, the fourth verse: "Thou shalt not see thy brother's ass or his ox fall down by the way, and hide thyself from them; thou shalt surely help him to lift them up again." How easy it is to hide ourselves! that is the expression used by Moses, "thou shalt not hide thyself from them." When you know that people are very wicked, the usual plan is to wish them well, but keep out of their way. Prudence makes you hide yourself from them. The whole street may swarm with harlots, but then you have gone to bed, and the door is shut. What has their sin to do with you? There are many drunken men about, but you do not drink to excess; what has their drinking to do with you? That is what is meant by hiding ourselves from them. How easily that can be done! Take an illustration which is worth the telling. A vessel, the other day, was crossing the Atlantic, and it fell in with that disabled emigrant ship,

The "Danmark."

Suppose the captain had kept on his course! He might have looked another way, and resolved not to be detained. He might have argued, "I am bound to do the best for my owners. It will hinder me greatly if I go pottering about after this vessel. I had better go by, and not see it; or make haste to port and send out help." It could have been done, and nobody would have been the wiser; for the ship would have gone down soon. The captain of that vessel was a man of a nobler breed. He did not hide himself, nor turn the blind eye towards the vessel in distress. But what did the captain do? All honor to him, he came near, and took the ship in tow. This was not all; he found that she could not keep afloat, and he resolved to take those hundreds of emigrants on board his own ship. But he could not carry them and his cargo too. What then? The decision was greatly to his honor. Overboard goes the cargo! God's blessing rest on the man! Into the sea went the freight, and the passengers were taken on board, and carried to the nearest port.

He could have easily hidden himself, could he not? So can you, you Christian people, as you call yourselves. Can you go through this world and always have a blind eye to the case of lost sinners? Can you come in and out of this Tabernacle and never speak to the strangers who throng these aisles? Will you let them go to hell unwarned and uninstructed? Can you hide yourselves from them! How dare you call yourselves Christians?

How Will You Answer

for it at last? Brothers, sisters, let us shake off this inhuman indifference, and deny ourselves rest, ease, credit, that we may save poor sinking souls. Overboard with cargo cheerfully, that you may, in the power of the Holy Ghost, save souls from death.

Next, notice that we ought never to be moved by the supposed superiority of a race. I have heard it said that it would be far better to try and convert the superior races than to consider the more degraded. Is it not better to bring in the educated Brahmins than the wild hill-tribes? "What a fine sort of people these are, these philosophical Hindoos! If we could win them, they would be worth converting!" That is not at all according to the mind of Christ. The shepherd sought a lost sheep, and when he had found it, it was no great spoil for him, for it was so worn out as to be nothing but a destroyed sheep. Yet he went after that one poor animal. Let us feel that the degraded Africans, the dwarfs of the woods, the cannibals of New Guinea, and all such, are to be sought quite as much as more advanced races. They are men; that is enough. Where you seem least likely to succeed, there go at once, for there you will find room for faith; and where there is room for faith, and faith fills the room, God will send a blessing. The Lord bless you! Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

LIFE IN THE THIRTEENTH CENTURY.*

THE condition of the poor at the beginning of the century was deplorable. In the narrow, undrained, and unlighted lanes, both of city and of village, they herded together without regard to decency or to cleanliness. Their home—if the wood and clay built hovel, which barely kept out the rain, could be called home—consisted of one small, dark, low-roofed, and unventilated room. The floor was the ground itself, covered with straw or rushes, which, from dampness, trampling, and refuse, became matted and foul, breeding diseases now uncommon. Furniture was scarce. On the floor slept the members of the family; by their side, a dog or a goat; and on a pole across a corner, a few fowls. The food was coarse and scanty—a dietary rarely extending beyond rye or barley bread, ground by hand and baked in the ashes; beets, and onions, wild berries, porridge, salt beef, small beer, once in a while a fish or a bird, caught at the risk of the stocks or the lock-up, and an occasional bacon-bone or swan-picking from the abbey or the castle. They used wooden bowls, and spoons of the same material; even in good society forks were unknown. At the table of the rich, instead of on a trencher the meat was served on a thick slice of black bread; and when done with, what remained of the bread was thrown into a basket, with other scraps, which were given to the motley crowd of paupers, dogs, and swine at the gate.

Francis of Assisi.

In the year 1182, at Assisi, was born one whose life-work was given to the poor. His father was a trader, and of a kindly disposition; his mother thoughtful and pious. Francis grew up a merry-hearted lad, bright, pure, and true, fonder of play than of books, but giving rare promise of a brilliant career. He had the gift of a beautiful and luxuriant imagination. A serious illness at the age of twenty-five gave that change to his life which led him to hold in contempt that which hitherto he had held in admiration and love. Instead of gaiety, amusement, and courtliness, he saw lying at the gate the leper, the woeful misery of the neglected, the hungry, and the naked, and there came upon him the consuming spirit of self-sacrifice. Could nothing be done for such as these? In gentlest sympathy he went among them, tending the afflicted, washing their wounds, and helping them to food and raiment. Now was poverty his bride, and the afflicted his peculiar care. His father, greatly irritated at this apparent waste of energies, prospects, and riches, first abused, then imprisoned, and finally repudiated him. The young man went out to live the life of those to whom he would minister, saying, "I have but one father now—my Father in heaven." Before long his enthusiasm attracted other earnest souls to him. He formed them into a society, which, having no property or endowment of any sort, should reproduce the Divine life and service and sacrifice. His charge was, "Sell all that thou hast, and give to the poor; then thou shalt have treasure in heaven." Into the foul slums of the city the brethren went, making their home with the poorest of the poor, with them eating the same coarse food, suffering the same privations, and enduring the same reproach, glad, indeed, that they might be as He who had no place to lay His head, so that they might bring the weary and heavy laden to the Giver of rest. "Go," said Francis to his companions—"go, preach peace and patience, tend the wounded, relieve the distressed, reclaim the erring, bless them which persecute you, and pray for them that despitely use you." Far and wide the brotherhood extended; the spirit of Francis was like a live fire, spreading and consuming everywhere.

* From "Readings in Church History" By the Rev. James S. Stone, D. D., Rector of Grace Church, Philadelphia. A volume describing in fascinating style prominent periods of ecclesiastical history, with descriptions of the men who initiated the greater movements in religious life. The view taken is that of the Protestant Episcopal Church, though with more tolerance toward the Puritans than is sometimes shown there. Pp. 584; price $1.50. Published by Porter & Coates, Philadelphia.

Rev. Teunis S. Hamlin, D. D. (See page 357.)

The Late Brigham Young's Residence in Salt Lake City.

The Death of Cranmer.

Naturally timid, the indignities he had suffered, the loneliness of his position, and the horrors of his prison-life had their effect upon him; so that he learned to dread the death by fire. There was none of Latimer's dauntless spirit, nor yet of Bradford's exultant joy; and when life was offered him, he grasped eagerly for this last hope. The price offered was life, but Spanish malice and Romish malignity could not spare such as he; and so, in spite of their promises and of his recantation, they proceeded in February, 1556, to degrade him from his episcopal dignity and his ministerial office. He was condemned to die, and March 21 was appointed the day of his execution. On the morning of that day—it was a foul and rainy day, says Foxe—the archbishop, clad in a bare and ragged gown, with an old square cap, was led through a great assembly of spectators to St. Mary's Church, there to hear a sermon. In was expected that he would confirm his recantations, and, therefore, he was suffered to address the congregation; but to the astonishment of all, and the confusion of many, he boldly, clearly, and unequivocally declared his repudiation of Rome and the Pope, and his adherence to the principles of the Reformation. "I renounce and refuse," said he, "all things written with my hand contrary to the truth which I thought in my heart, and written for fear of death, and to save my life, if it might be." . . . There was no more flinching, no more fear. From amid the darkening smoke and the lurid flames, above the crackling of the fagots and the tumult of the crowd, men heard him cry again and again, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." Ere long a heap of ashes, a charred stake, and a chain alone remained. The streets were deserted, the rain fell, a painful silence prevailed.

BRIGHAM YOUNG'S HOUSE.

THE installment of Mrs. Stenhouse's narrative published in this number contains the account of a visit to Brigham Young. Her readers will be interested in the picture here given of the mansion in which he lived. When in 1847 the Mormon immigrants from Nauvoo settled in the great basin where now stands Salt Lake City, the land was divided up among the company. The site was surveyed, and divided into ten-acre blocks by wide avenues and streets, run true to the points of the compass and intersecting at right angles. Each ten-acre block was divided again into eight household lots, which were allotted to the pioneers, half of whom thus had corner lots, and every man had an acre and a quarter for himself and family. Since then, of course, there has been a subdivision to suit individual necessities, and the result has been very curious and picturesque. Young took possession of a whole block near the site of the Temple for himself. On this he erected his house and the offices for administrative business. On the end nearest the Temple were the storehouses for the reception of the tithings, the judicial courts, and the church offices. At the other end were the houses for living in, chief of which were the Lion and Bee-hive houses, where Young lived with his wives and numerous progeny. The avaricious and unscrupulous man managed this property so shrewdly, and took such good care of the vast sums which flowed into his hands from his dupes, that when he died, on August 29, 1877, he was worth over two million dollars, which he distributed among his seventeen wives and fifty-six children.

LOUISE HOBART'S SERVICE.

(See Illustration on page 365.)

"A LETTER for Miss Hobart," said a childish voice, as the owner of it, a girl of some ten years, entered the room that was used as a school-room in Squire Harding's mansion. Louise Hobart looked up from the lesson she was teaching the girl's sisters and brother, and took the letter. A shade of disappointment crossed her face as she looked at the weak, almost illegible writing, and saw the letter was from a lady. She expected to see the firm, manly caligraphy which was borne by the only letters that came to her. A letter from Herbert Lacy meant sympathy, encouragement, hope. They were almost the only cheering things that came into her dreary life. He did not write often, for he was studying hard in a theological seminary, and had to support himself by extra work in the hours that the other students gave to recreation; but when he did write, Louise fed on his letters for weeks. She had promised to be his wife some day; but that was in the far distant future. They were both so poor, both orphans, and comparatively friendless.

Louise thrust the letter into her pocket and went on with her teaching. Since it was not from Herbert it could wait, and besides, her employers were exacting, and expected constant devotion to her duties in return for the small salary and board that they gave her for teaching their five children the rudiments of learning. What Mrs. Harding would say if she came into the school-room and found her reading a letter made Louise's cheek pale to think of. But at night, when the children had all gone to bed, and she sat beside the large open fire-place all alone, Louise opened and read her letter.

It was from an aunt from whom she had not heard for more than seven years. Indeed, Louise never remembered to have received a letter from her. Twelve years before, when Louise, was left an orphan, Miss Hobart, her father's sister, had taken the poor, homeless child, and cared for her in her New England home. It was Spartan training that she received there. Miss Hobart's conscience would not let her leave the child to charity, but she considered the charge of her as a burden, and often, Louise's hearing, made caustic remarks about the heedlessness of men who married and had children without being able to leave enough property for their support. However, Miss Hobart did her duty, brought up the child strictly, and educated her well, but Louise could not remember in all the five years she lived with her a single caress or a word of love. At the end of those five years Miss Hobart, to the surprise of all who knew her, married, and sent Louise to finish her education at a boarding-school, reminding her that then she would have to support herself. Louise heard no more from her. Her school-bills were duly paid by remittances from Europe, whither her aunt went with her husband, and when she passed her last examination, she counted herself fortunate in securing the position of private teacher in Squire Harding's children.

"I am now a widow," wrote her aunt, "and an invalid. I have had a stroke of paralysis which deprives me of the use of my left side. It is absolutely necessary that I have some reliable person to be with me constantly to attend to my wants. I know of no such person and if I did, I could not afford to pay the what they would ask. I think I have some claim on you. I befriended you when you needed a friend, and, now that I need help, it will be only common justice that you try to repay me in some measure what I did for you. I leave to your conscience. If you decide to come, let it be quickly, for I am alone and helpless."

"Hard as ever," was Louise's comment, she finished reading the letter. "Not a word of kindness or affection!"

She sat for a long time, with the letter still in her hand, lost in thought. Her memory reproduced the stern woman before whose face she had quailed as a child. The years that had passed since then had evidently softened her, but not a whit. It was not an attractive prospect for the girl to go and wait on that hard old woman. Her aunt evidently intended to give her nothing. Perhaps if no religious teaching but that of her aunt had reached Louise, she would have decided at once not to go. But she had learned of Christ, and knew something of the love that constraineth. Even duty was on a lower grade to that, except as love to Him imposed duties that did not seem duties, but pleasure when He called. And this was His call. There could be no doubt of that. Yes, Louise decided that she would go. It was a ministry to one of His children, though a child who sadly misunderstood Him who is love.

It was well that Louise was prepared for gloomy, cheerless life. Her aunt's nature had grown colder, more austere and loveless, with age and sickness. Louise could not detect a spark of natural affection in her manner, nor any sign of gratitude for the services so cheerfully rendered. "For His sake; in His name;" that was the only support she had for many months. Day and night her services were called for at any moment by the capricious invalid, and a severe reproof was sure to be administered if through fatigue she was involuntarily remiss. Louise grew thin and pale with her labor.

But at length there was a change. "How is it you are always so cheerful?" her aunt asked her one day. "What secret of happiness do you possess, child, that makes this dull life bright to you?"

"I live above it, Aunt, in the sunlight," said Louise. "Jesus makes all bright while I try to please Him."

"I have served Him these forty years," said her aunt, "but I know nothing of that. I expect happiness in heaven, but I have known none here."

Louise spoke of the joy that comes from constant realization of Christ's presence, of the sweet peace and confidence of being consciously led. Her aunt was thoughtful, but said nothing. After that, there was a softened air in the sick-room. The sufferer was less exacting, more patient, and Louise thought there was the beginning of love. There was an effort, too, to grasp the secret of joy that Louise had, and there were many talks about divine things, that drew the two nearer together.

It was some six months after Louise first noticed the change that a strange stillness of unusual continuance caused her to rise from the window where she had seated herself when her aunt fell asleep, and to go to her bedside. She was terrified. Her aunt was dead! Dead with a smile on her face—the first Louise had ever seen there. At last she had passed into the peace and light and joy of which she had enjoyed no foretaste until she had been led to it by Louise.

The problem of self-support again presented itself to the young girl for solution now. Her former position was doubtless filled up, and after considering the matter for some time, she decided to consult her aunt's physician and lawyer, both of whom had been friendly to her. The latter was the first to call, and Louise laid her difficulty before him.

"It is not necessary," he said. "Do you not know that you are your aunt's sole heiress?"

"No, I did not," said Louise. "But I understood she was very poor."

The lawyer smiled. "She was very penurious, but not poor by any means. She left a considerable property, and now it is all yours. I have a copy of her will here, dated only three months ago. See, she dictated this sentence: 'In gratitude for devoted service and for spiritual blessings which the said Louise Hobart was the means of my receiving.' She said you would understand."

Louise Hobart's Reverie.

"Yes, yes, I know; but I did not expect this." "No, I suppose not, but I trust it will make you happy."

ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS.

A Life Story: By Mrs. Stenhouse.
For More than Twenty-five Years the Wife of a Mormon Missionary and Elder.

(Continued from page 350.)

A Call on Brigham Young.

THERE was a wretched family I knew in Utah—a man and his wife and four children, all living together in a miserable, poverty-stricken hut. I had heard that the man was paying attentions to a young girl with a view of making her his second wife, and I frequently watched the first wife as she went in and out, and wondered how she felt about it. The poverty of the man, of course, was of no consequence; living in the primitive style in which necessity then compelled the Saints to live, one or even half a dozen extra wives made very little difference, and Brigham and the leading elders have always represented it as a meritorious act, for the young especially, to "build up the kingdom," without regard to consequences, or the misery of bringing up a family in a destitute condition.

I never can see children without loving them, and in this case it was not long before I contrived to make acquaintance with the little ones. One day, while I was talking to them, the mother came out. She was a woman who was likely to preserve a painful place in the memory of anyone who once saw her. Her face was pale as death, and her jet-black eyes glistened with an unearthly lustre; it was easy to perceive that she was very unhappy, although she tried hard to exhibit a cheerful disposition, and when our conversation turned to that subject which to women here is all-absorbing, the nervous twitching of her pale face showed how deeply painful such thoughts were to her.

She told me that her husband was soon to be married to a young girl about fourteen years of age. "Do you see," she said, "that he is building for her?" And sure enough he was, at odd hours, adding another hut to the miserable hovel in which they already lived; and thither, when it was finished, he intended to take his bride. As I looked at the poor wife, I felt little doubt that ere that time came her troubles on earth would have ended and her little ones be motherless.

The Mormon women, as well as the Mormon men, are noted for attending to their own business—they do not care to tell their sorrows and trials to strangers or to people who are not of their own faith. In this way visitors to Salt Lake who have gone there with the intention of "writing up" the Saints in the newspapers or in a book have generally been misled. My own experience as a Mormon woman leads me to form anything but a flattering opinion of the Mormon stories told by Gentile pens.

The following instance will show that the sisters are not quite so free in giving their experience as some writers would suggest.

One day, while passing through the city, I saw a young woman running across the road with a little child in her arms. The child was crying piteously, for the water was running from its clothing, and I saw in a moment that it had fallen into the stream which ran in front of the house. I followed, to see if I could be of any assistance, but fortunately found that the little creature was not seriously hurt, but would soon recover from the fright and cold. I helped the mother to change its clothing, and while she was lulling her baby to sleep we entered into conversation.

At first she appeared to be very shy of me, and avoided speaking of anything in the slightest degree personal; but growing more interested, she said at last, "Are you a real Mormon?" "Certainly," I answered; "but why do you ask me?" "Because," she said, "we have had one or two Gentile women among us, and they go round among our people and question the women, and get them to tell their troubles, which God knows are heavy enough; and then they go and write about it, and Brigham Young finds it out, and their husbands are called to account for allowing their wives to speak to the Gentiles. You are sure you are a true Mormon?" she added, "you are not deceiving me?"

"I'm sorry you should think such a thing," I said; "but if you suppose I would deceive you, I will not trouble you with my company." And I rose up to leave.

"Do not go yet," she said; "and pray forgive me if I have wounded your feelings; it is simply the fear I have of getting into trouble. Brigham Young and the Elders have frequently told us to have nothing to do with the Gentiles, for they are enemies to the kingdom of God, and are seeking our overthrow—and I suppose it is true."

"How long have you been here?" I asked.

"Over two years," she replied; "and it seems almost twenty—time has passed so slowly. I left father and mother, sisters and brother, for the gospel's sake, and I do not regret it, because it is right; but it was a great sacrifice to make. Yet I believe that God blesses us for the sacrifices we make, and I shall get my reward."

"You have it already," I said, "in that pretty child on your knee; and your husband, I hope, is a good man and kind to you."

"Yes," she answered, "my child is a very great source of happiness to me, and I love my husband very much; but—" (hesitatingly) "are you involved in the heresy of plurality of wives?"

"No, not yet; but I do not know how soon my husband may act upon it," I answered.

Just then the husband made his appearance, and put an end to the conversation. He was a tall, dark-looking man, with gray hair, old enough to be her father. He appeared to be well educated, and to have seen better days, though everything about their home indicated poverty—the room in which we were sitting had no carpet on the floor; there was a plain white-pine table in the middle, a small sheet-iron stove, four wooden chairs, a small looking-glass, and some cheap pictures. This was the sitting-room for the whole family—three wives, eleven children, one husband.

He asked me if I had seen the rest of the family. I replied negatively, and he said he would see if any of them were about. Presently he returned, accompanied by an elderly woman, whom he introduced as Mrs. Simpson; then came another, not quite as good-looking as the first, but a great deal younger; and he introduced her as "My wife Ellen. And this one," he said, turning to the one with whom I had been conversing, "is my wife Sarah."

Then, after a pause, he added, "And they are just as good as they are good-looking—good, obedient wives. I have no trouble with them; my wishes are law in this house. We are not rich in worldly goods, as you see, but we are laying up treasure in heaven. We all live in this little home of four rooms. My wife Ellen, here, has given up her room for a parlor, for us all to meet together in, and she sleeps in a wagon-box; it is not the most comfortable, but she never grumbles. Then here is our Sarah; we are obliged to humor her a little, and give her a room all to herself. She is young and inexperienced, and doesn't like to put up with inconveniences that the Saints have to bear with; while old mother here has half a dozen children in her room, but she never complains."

"Why did you not wait," I said, "until you had a larger house?"

"Then where would my kingdom be?" he answered. "Young men may wait, but old men must improve their time."

There came in now a troop of children of all ages. They had been playing in the field near the house, were miserably clad, bare-footed, and some looked gaunt and hungry—manners to match. "These," he said, with all a father's fondness—"these constitute my kingdom, and I am proud of them."

I felt thankful that I was not destined to be queen over such a kingdom, wished them good-bye, and, with a sad heart, went home to my own darling little ones, not knowing what might be their fate.

Another illustration, showing the misery which Mormon teaching entails upon the women, is furnished by Mrs. Joseph Cook, in her "Face to Face with Mormonism." She writes:

"A few years ago an educated, intelligent gentleman, a journalist, came here from Europe, bringing his young wife with him. How such people came to be entangled in the meshes of Mormonism was a marvel; but both appeared to be sincere believers in the Latter-Day gospel. Soon a strong pressure was brought to bear upon the husband to induce him to contract a second marriage. The wife finding opposition in vain, at length gave her consent, and the bride was brought home. A few months afterward the first gave birth to a child. The poor babe, doomed to bear the sins of others, never smiled, and never cried aloud; but always, night and day, it wept silently. Even in sleep great tears forced themselves from beneath its closed eyelids, and rolled over its cheeks, while its face bore the expression, not of infantile grief, but of the terrible anguish the mother had endured in secret. After a few weeks it began to pine away, and at length, without any visible ailment, sank into its grave. 'My baby died of a broken heart,' said its wretched mother. 'Every hour of its little life it shed the tears that I repressed before its birth, and the agony that I hid in my heart killed it at last.'

Shortly after our arrival in Salt Lake City we visited President Brigham Young, who received us very graciously, and appointed an early day for us to dine with him. On that occasion he invited some of the Apostles and leading men to meet us at his table, and we passed an exceedingly pleasant evening. The prophet made himself very affable; talked with us about our missionary life, and other subjects of personal and general interest; and expressed a high opinion of the energy and ability which my husband had displayed. His wives, too—whom I found, as far as I could judge from such a casual acquaintance, to be amiable and kind-hearted—made every effort to render our visit agreeable.

I was at first sight favorably impressed with the manner of Brigham Young, and felt greatly reassured; for he did not seem to me like a man who would preach and practice such things as I had heard of him while I was in London. This I was glad to see, for it encouraged me to think that perhaps, after all, matters might not be so bad as I had anticipated. We were, in fact, very kindly received in Salt Lake City by everyone with whom we came in contact; for having been missionaries for so many years, we were, of course, well known by name, and had a wide circle of acquaintances among the chief Elders and emigrants.

Years, of course, worked a great change in the appearance of Brigham Young; but when he was nearly seventy-three years of age he was still a portly-looking, I might almost say handsome, man. His good looks were not of the poetic or romantic kind at all; he was very commonplace and practical in his appearance, but long and habitual exercise of despotical authority had stamped itself upon his features, and was seen even in the way he carried himself; he might easily have been mistaken for a sea captain.

When I first knew him, in appearance he was little over fifty years of age, was of medium height, well built, upright, and, as I just stated, had the air of one accustomed to be obeyed. His hair was light—sandy, I suppose I ought to call it—with eyes to match; and the expression of his countenance was pleasant and polite. I, of course, regarded him from a woman's standpoint; but there were others who were accustomed to study physiognomy, and they detected—or thought they detected—in the cold expression of his eye, and the stern, hard lines of his lips, evidences of cruelty, selfishness, and dogged determination, which, it is only fair to say, I myself never saw.

The lines on his face deepened of late years, as what little of gentleness his heart ever knew died out within him; but to the last he presented the appearance of a man who would afford a deep study to the observer of human nature. In early life he had to work hard for a living, and, according to his own statement, he had a rough time of it. He was by trade a painter and glazier, and frequently said in public that in those times he was glad to work for "six bits" a day, and to keep his hands busy from morning to night to get even that. Whether or not the privations of early years fostered in him that avaricious and grasping spirit which of late years was so conspicuous in him, I cannot say, but it is certain that it cropped out very early in his career as a Saint.

An old Nauvoo missionary—a Mormon of the Mormons once, but now a "vile apostate," as Brigham would politely call him—once told me that when the Prophet Joseph Smith sent the Apostle Young on a Mission, a good deal of discontent was shown that the said Apostle did not account properly for the collections and tithings which passed through his hands. Brother Joseph, who was then "the Church" suggested in a pleasant way—for the Prophet Smith was a big, jovial fellow, six feet two or three inches in height, and withal somewhat of a humorist—that the said Apostle Brigham would appear in his eyes a better Saint if he displayed a little less love for filthy lucre. Thereupon the Apostle, like somebody else who shall be nameless, quoted Scripture, and reminded the Prophet that Moses had said, "Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn." "True, Brother Brigham," said Joseph, "but Moses did not say the ox was to eat up all the corn." Brother Brigham made no reply, but is said to have "sulked" for two or three days.

I have not the slightest doubt that, but for Mormonism, Brigham Young would have remained all his life a journeyman painter, and his "sweetness," as the poet says, would have been "wasted on the air." But he was born just at a peculiar time, and he fitted into a peculiar groove; and thus while the original Prophet of the new faith—Joseph Smith—a man of ten times the intellect of his successor, a man ignorant and deluded, it is true, but at the same time a man in whom was the material for one of those natural giants who from age to age have left the impress of their individuality upon the history of the world—while, I say, this man's name and doings have ceased to interest any but persons of studious minds—Brigham Young, whose narrow soul could never look beyond the little circle in which he lived, whose selfishness and heartlessness have been only equalled by his cruelty and avarice, by the force of circumstances alone, obtained a place in the recognition of the world, to which by nature or by grace he had not the shadow of a claim.

I have often heard intelligent Gentiles remark, "Well, Brigham Young may be a wicked man and an impostor, but there must be a great deal of talent in him, to manage those people for so many years." From this opinion I altogether dissent; and those who know Brigham best think with me, though many of them would not dare to say so.

I do not think Brigham Young was at first an impostor in the sense in which those words are ordinarily used; but experience, and a careful study of his life and doings, have convinced me that he was certainly not a great man, or a man of genius in any sense of the word. There can be no possible doubt that he has been guilty of many and great crimes, but I believe that in the early part of his career he was so blinded by fanaticism that those crimes appeared to him actually virtues—the force of habit and the daily associations of his life so completely took from him all sense of right and wrong; while the devotion of his people has made the idea that he could possibly do the slightest wrong so utterly inconceivable to him and to them, that his perceptions of justice, truth, honor, honesty, and upright dealing were as utterly perverted as they ever were in the mind of the wildest savage who prowled among the cliffs and cañons of the Rocky Mountains.

People think that Brigham Young attained to his position by the exercise of ability, such as has been displayed, only on a greater scale, by all those men who, not being born to power, nor having it thrust upon them, have by their genius seized it and held it—unlawfully it might be, but, nevertheless, with talent and moral energy. Nothing could be more untrue. The fact that he was of a certain age at a certain time, and only that, was the cause of Brigham Young's first step up the ladder of ambition.

(To be Continued).

NOTICE TO READERS OF THY HEALER.

On January 1 the size of Thy Healer was reduced to 20 pp, and the price changed from 75 cents to 50 cents. Those whose subscriptions run into 1889 will have their time extended, to credit for the difference in size and price. It is hoped that by reducing the price the circulation will be extended, otherwise it will be a considerable loss. Will not those who have found blessing through its pages recommend it to others?

JESUS CRUCIFIED.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for June 16: Mark 15: 21-39. Golden Text. Phil. 2: 8.

The Lord of Life Obedient to Death—Consequent on His Assuming Human Nature—Bearing the Penalty of Sin—Original not Actual—The Divine and the Human Aspects of His Death—Came to it Weakened by Mental Anguish—The Denominational Struggle for His Garments—His Royal Throne—Fealty and Obedience Due Him Always—His Divine Magnanimity—A Taunt Pathetically True—The Midnight of His Soul—The Strength Coming from Communion with the Father Withdrawn—The Last Momentous Cries.

"OBEDIENT unto death, even the death of the cross." And Jesus "the Prince of life!" "In Him was life." (John 1: 4.) "As the Father hath life in Himself, so hath He given to the Son to have life in Himself." (John 5: 26.) "The last Adam was made a quickening Spirit" (1 Cor. 15: 45); and He was "obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." Death was unnatural to Jesus; and only sin made it natural to the world which He had made. Death would never have found entrance into God's creation, but by sin. "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." (Rom. 5: 12.) But here was a man, the Son of man, who "knew no sin," in whom was no element of corruption, on whom death could have no grip.

How Could He Die?

Only by adopting our sins, and thus being "made sin for us," as the party who made Himself personally responsible for us all. He appeared at the great bar of God, not only as our Advocate, to plead our cause; that He does now, for "He ever liveth to make intercession for us;" but when He suffered He stood arraigned as the accused of all the sins of men, and out of love to us, He never pleaded "Not guilty," but "answered not a word."

Jesus was condemned. On man's side, it was through the envy of the chief priests and elders, who could not brook the supernatural power and holiness which they saw in Him; through political cowardice of Pilate, who, knowing He was innocent, yet, for personal considerations, condemned Him; and then, through the changeableness of the populace that He was condemned. On God's side, it was another thing. "It pleased the Lord to bruise Him, He hath put Him to grief (or let Him be sick): when thou shalt make His soul an offering for sin, He shall see his seed, He shall prolong His days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in His hands. He shall see of the travail of His soul, and shall be satisfied; by His knowledge shall My righteous Servant justify many, for He shall bear their iniquities." (Isa. 53: 10, 11.) And this was Not By Compulsion.

Jesus says, "The bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world." (John 6: 51.) Jesus was spent in His awful Gethsemane struggle, and when His cross was laid upon Him, it needed another to bear it. They found one Simon, a Cyrenian, and compelled him to bear the cross, and they bring Jesus to a place called Golgotha, that is, the place of a skull, the place where criminals were executed, and their bones left to whiten in the sun, that they might be a warning to other evil doers. And this was where the Holy One was to die. There they laid the cross down, and nailed the Saviour to it, and then planted it in the earth with its precious burden.

But the greed of man was manifest. Within sight of the crucified Lord, they parted His garments, and cast lots upon His vesture. It is but what men are doing every day. In the unseemly denominational jealousies, which are only too common in every land, is there not something very like this parting of Jesus' garments, instead of entering into the spirit of Him who hangs there, giving "His life a ransom for many"? He prayed, "That they all may be one, as thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us." Wherever various denominations come together and unite in prayer and efforts, there God always blesses, and an outpouring of the Spirit always results.

As though to add to the indignity which they heaped on Jesus, two thieves were crucified with Him; the sinful and the sinless side by side. "He was numbered with the transgressors." But He made it an opportunity to show His power and love to the very last. "Sitting down," His enemies "watched Him there," but it was with the same eyes of enmity with which they had watched Him before. It was necessary that His accusation should be published, so they wrote an inscription, "This is Jesus, the King of the Jews." When He comes again, the King of kings, and Lord of lords, then how proud the Jews will be to own this Son of David. But then they scorned Him, as though all He had done in His teaching, and in His works of healing, had been done only in order to seize the throne of Judea, and make Himself a King! Anyone who knew Him was aware how unlike this was to the tenor of His life. But He is it is our ruling King, to whom we owe obedience, who died for us. And if we are saved by His death, it is only in order that we may be free from our sins to serve Him with all our hearts, and all the time. No man is thoroughly converted who does not yield himself a servant and a subject to Jesus.

The King as Well as the Saviour;

"And they that passed by railed on Him, wagging their heads, and saying, Ah, thou that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days, save thyself, and come down from the cross." But sneers woke in the heart of Jesus nothing but compassion. He did not reply to them, but, turning to His Father, "He cried, Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." (Luke 23: 34.) Oh, how many there are, even of Christians, who cannot tolerate sneers and insinuations such as this, even in moments when they are in bodily health and in comfortable circumstances. Had they been placed as the same position as Jesus, they would have come down from the cross to show their enemies they could do it. But Jesus ignored all the taunts which were heaped on Him. "He reviled not again." He did not defend Himself, He was not even angry, but He had compassion on them, and prayed for them, and so, in His own death, shews us how to love our enemies. The chief priests, forsaking the dignity due to their office, joined with the "roughs" in mocking Jesus, and said, "He saved others, Himself He Cannot Save."

They spoke more truly than they knew. No; Jesus could not, would not, save Himself in any way. How is it with us? We know a case of family poverty, where a mother, to save herself, has sacrificed her daughter in loveless, mercenary marriage; she saved herself. How often we have heard of business failures, where one man has managed to secure himself, while his creditors have suffered bitter wrongs. "He saves himself" is true of most worldly or half-converted Christians. But oh how seldom can it be said of a man, "Himself he cannot save; himself is the last consideration with him." This was said of Jesus as a reproach; but a higher commendation of Him could not have been spoken. But they went yet farther, and challenged Him to come down from the cross, "Let Christ the King of Israel descend now from the cross, that we may see and believe," and one of the thieves "railed on Him, saying, If thou be Christ, save thyself and us." (Luke 23: 39.) Oh, if Jesus had been goaded by these revilings, and had come down from the cross, without fulfilling His mission and dying for us, who could have been saved? But He bore it all for us, to save us, and to teach us at the same time the divine way of bearing indignities. No thought of retaliation entered His heart. He looked above man, and saw His Father suffering Him to endure the shame which sin merited, and these men were only instruments, and this their scorn was by God's permission.

He had, in the midst of His sufferings, commended His mother and His beloved disciple the one to the other, and now man had seen enough; no human eye must witness the last hour, or look upon Him when His Father, for the time, forsook Him. Oh what a relief to the Lord must it have been to be no longer exposed to those vulgar, malicious eyes. It was the sixth hour; mid-day with man, and for three long hours He was comparatively alone with His Father, and then a deeper darkness still came upon His soul, and He tasted the deepest suffering which a once saved soul can ever know; His communion with His Father was suspended, and He cried out, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken Me?" Thirty-three years He had walked as Man in humiliation, in poverty, hunger, fatigue, loneliness; but all throughout, His communion with His Father was bright and constant. He could say, "I do always those things which please Him." His vocation was not to do His own will, but the will of the Father who had sent Him. (John 6: 38.) He had spent long hours in the night and in the early morning communing with Him, and He drew all His strength, all His directions, all His sympathy, from His Father. Now this was gone, and He was at sea! Just in the moment when the sins of all generations, like another Noah's flood, flowed over His soul, just when death, the consequence of sin, was beginning to lay hold on Him, He needed, as never before, His communion uninterrupted. But He would never have borne our sins and all their consequences in any other way. He must drink the cup of wrath to the very dregs, and He did so. And thus He purchased redemption.

Midnight With Jesus,

No doubt His cry fell upon almost silence among the multitude. When the darkness came over the land, no doubt they were awed and stilled by it, and few were the whispered words spoken during that last three hours. But even on the cross He stretched out His hand to save, and said to the believing thief, "To-day shalt thou be with Me in Paradise." (Luke 23: 43.)

Only Two,

Mary, who anointed Him for His burial, and the thief upon the cross, understood the meaning of His death! Oh what meaning must that fact have had for the thief, "The blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin!" There were some who thought Jesus cried for Elias, and in their blind ignorance imagined that He sent for Elias to come and save Him who was now dying for that very Elijah as well as every other sinner! And one filled a sponge with vinegar and gave Him to drink. But Jesus would not receive any amelioration of His sufferings; He thirsted, but it was for souls; and vinegar could not slake His thirst.

The last hour was come, He had one last message for the world: "It is finished," redemption is accomplished, now the lost can be saved. And He had one last word to God. The darkness was gone, the light shone again upon His soul. "Father, into Thy hand I commend My spirit." And then, for three days, soul and body parted! "He gave up the ghost." He had power to lay His life down, and He did it. But at that instant, the beautiful veil of the temple—type of His flesh—was torn from the top to the bottom, from God's side downward. And one more soul was won. The Roman centurion who was in charge of His execution cried out and said, "Truly this was the Son of God." Thus Jesus died: thus Jesus died for you!

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION—1888.

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God.

THE OPEN DOOR.

"I am the door."—JOHN 10:9.

The mistakes of my life are many,
The sins of my heart are more,
And I scarce can see for weeping,
But I come to the open door.

I am lowest of those who love Him,
I am weakest of those who pray,
But I'm coming as He has bidden,
And He will not say me "Nay."

My mistakes His love will cover,
My sins He will wash away,
And the feet that shrink and falter,
Shall walk through the gates of day.

If I turn not from His whisper,
If I let not go His hand,
I shall see Him in His beauty,
The King in the far-off land.

The mistakes of my life are many,
And my soul is sick with sin,
And I scarce can see for weeping,
But the Lord will let me in.

—Mrs. Ranyard

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher: 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike) will be sent, post-paid, for 10 cts., or 100 for 20 cts. Postage stamps taken.

HIRES

ROOT BEER

The most APPETIZING and WHOLESOME TEMPERANCE DRINK in the world. TRY IT.

Ask your Druggist or Grocer for it.

C. E. HIRES, PHILADELPHIA.

BEECHAM'S PILLS
(THE GREAT ENGLISH REMEDY.)
Cure BILLIOUS and Nervous ILLS.
25cts. a Box.
OF ALL DRUGGISTS.

SAMPLE PAGES FROM THE LATEST
SUNDAY SCHOOL SONG BOOKS FREE,
THE ECHO MUSIC CO., La Fayette, Indiana.

SAFE INVESTMENT
FARRAND & VOTY
ORGANS
DETROIT, MICH. U.S.A.

Send 6 Cents for samples of the famous custom-made Plymouth Rock S3 Pants. Rules for self-measurement and a cloth tape measure included. Every pair guaranteed or money refunded. Plymouth Rock Pants Co., 11 to 17 Elm St., Boston, Mass.

LADIES
Enamel your Ranges twice a year, tops once a week and you have the finest polished stove in the world. For sale by all Grocers and Stove Dealers.
BEECHAM'S PILLS cure bilious and nervous ill.
BEECHAM'S PILLS cure sick-headache.

THE STORY OF A BOX.

In Seven Chapters.

CHAPTER I.—FORTY-EIGHT BOXES.

In the new and wonderful dictionary which Dr. Murray, of England, is preparing, there are forty-eight distinct headings, under which the word box appears. There is a box on the ear and a Christmas-box, a hunting-box, and a jack-in-the-box, and ever so many other boxes. But the subject of this sketch is a box of a peculiar nature, and one which needs a little more than the ordinary dictionary explanation.

FORTY-EIGHT BOXES.

CHAPTER II.—NAUGHTY PANDORA.

You have heard of Pandora's Box; of course you have. According to classical writers, Pandora was the name of the first woman on earth. Pandora means "all-gifted," because the gods each gave her some power by which she was to work the ruin of man. The accounts differ, but one of them says that Pandora brought with her from heaven a box containing all human ills, upon opening which, all escaped and spread over the earth, Hope alone remaining. At a still later period, the box is said to have contained all the blessings of the gods, which would have been preserved for the human race had not Pandora opened the case, so that the winged blessings escaped.

Alas, for the Men!

The Blessings Escaped.

CHAPTER III.—THE BUFFALO BOX.

So much for the story of an ancient box. Now for the story of a box better than Pandora's. Her's was a myth. This is a reality. It hails from Buffalo. You can have it by sending a postal card; it will be sent you freight paid. It is put up by J. D. Larkin & Co., 659 to 667 Seneca Street, Buffalo, N. Y. It will contain one hundred large cakes of "Sweet Home" Family Soap, a full year's supply for the average family.

A Good Deal Better Box.

CHAPTER IV.—SOMETHING MORE: QUITE A STORE.

Besides these one hundred cakes, the box contains five varieties of exquisite toilet soap, three cakes of each; six packages of Boraxine—and there was never seen for making clothes clean anything like it; also a shaving stick, perfumery, tooth powder, etc.; sundry articles, useful and amusing, for older folks and babies—in short, presents for every one in a family of seventeen, including the hired man. A Yale professor writes us that it is more fun to open a Great Bargain Box than to hang up one's stocking at Christmas.

All Thrown In.

CHAPTER V.—LIST OF PRESENTS.

This list will give you a slight idea of the many handsome presents that are packed in the Great Bargain Box:

Just to Give You an Idea.

One fine silver-plated Sugar Shell.
One fine silver-plated Child's Spoon.
One fine silver-plated Butter Knife.
One fine silver-plated Individual Butter Plate.
Five boxes of fine Toilet Soap.

Our Toilet Soaps are made by the French milling process. Quality very fine, perfume exquisite.

One box, 1/4 dozen, Elite Toilet Soap.
One box, 1/4 dozen, Creme Toilet Soap.
One bottle Modjeska Tooth Powder.
One bottle Modjeska Perfume.
One Napoleon Shaving Stick.
One box, 1/4 dozen, Modjeska Complexion Soap.

An exquisite beautifier. Producing that peculiar, delicate transparency and imparting a velvety softness to the skin which is so greatly admired. It removes all roughness, redness, blotches, pimples and imperfections from the hands and face. For all toilet purposes, it is the luxury of luxuries.

Six Packages Boraxine.

Boraxine saves half the labor of washing, is a thorough disinfectant, and is a blessing to every housekeeper who uses it. Boraxine is nothing but a fine quality of soap and borax pulverized together.

One box, 1/4 dozen, Artistic Toilet Soap.
One box, 1/4 dozen, Ocean Bath Soap.
One extra fine long Button Hook.
One Lady's Celluloid Pen Holder (very best).
One Arabesque Mat.
One Turkish Towel (genuine).
One Wash Cloth.
One Glove Buttoner.
One Package Pins.
One Spool Black Silk Thread.
One Japanese Silk Handkerchief.
One Gentleman's Handkerchief (large).
One Lady's Handkerchief.
One Child's Lettered Handkerchief.
One Biscuit Cutter.
One Cake Cutter.
One Doughnut Cutter.
One handsome Scrap Book or Portfolio.
One Package Assorted Scrap Pictures.
Two Celluloid Collar Buttons (patented).
Twenty-two Photo-Engraved Pictures of the Presidents of the United States.

Twenty-four Pictures

Many of which are copper plate engravings, suitable for framing, and are handsome decorations for the parlor.

CHAPTER VI.—A POSTAL CARD DOES IT.

The price of this box is $6.00, freight prepaid. But you need not remit in advance, nor run any risk nor take any chances. The manufacturers only ask permission to deliver you a Great Bargain Box, and if, after a thirty days' trial, you are fully convinced that the soap is all they claim, and the extras all they advertise, you can then pay the bill. But if you are not satisfied in every way, no charge will be made for what you have used, and the box will be taken away. What could be fairer? Think—no you can not think of a butcher who would let you take a beefsteak on trial, eat it, and decide whether it was satisfactory or not, and pay or not accordingly. Yet this is what the Buffalo firm proposes to do.

No Money Wanted.

The Butcher don't do it

CHAPTER VII.—EXPLANATION OF THE SITUATION.

The Reasons Why.

Would you know the reasons why this offer is made? For three reasons:

1. It is to introduce "Sweet Home" Soap into every neighborhood where this advertisement is read. It is the very best Soap made, and any person once using it will always use it, and be come a steady customer.

An Introduction Desired.

2. We propose a new departure in the Soap Trade, and shall sell direct from the factory to consumer, spending the money allowed for expenses of traveling and wholesale and retail grocers' profits, in handsome presents to those who order at once a case of "Sweet Home" Soap.

3. Our "Sweet Home" Soap is made for the select family trade only. It will not be sold to grocers. It is perfectly pure, thoroughly seasoned, and gives perfect satisfaction; and to induce people to try it, we accompany each case with various articles and household necessities. "Sweet Home" is the perfection of family soaps.

No Grocers nor Agents Need Apply

Important. Do Not Delay. The manufacturers of the "Sweet Home" Soap have been induced to make the above offer to subscribers of this paper. Your order must be directed as follows:

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York City.

I am a subscriber to The Christian Herald and you may notify J. D. Larkin & Co. that I am willing to accept a Great Bargain Box (with extras, etc., etc., as promised), on thirty days' trial.

Name, _____

P. O., _____

State, _____

Write your name and address very plainly, cut this order out and send to us, or if you prefer not to mutilate your paper, write same on postal card and send to our address.

The Advertising Manager of this paper has used the "SWEET HOME" Soap in his household for over a year, and does not hesitate to pronounce the goods first-class. There is no "catch" about the above advertisement, and subscribers to The Christian Herald will do well to accept the offer AT ONCE.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1889, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. XII., No. 22. Office, 71 Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 29, 1889.

Price, 3 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF MONS. CARNOT, President of France, and View of the Paris Exhibition.
THE GOSPEL ALKALI. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday Morning.
NECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.
FINANCIAL SIGN OF OUR TIMES.
THE RETURN OF THE JEWS.
 Two Years' Penance—Why a House was not Rented—The Gospel in a Japanese Prison—A Tailor Teaching an Empress—The Church in Mexico.

THE GATE WIDE OPEN. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

Gems from New Books: A Business Man's Deliverances—A Change of Investments, Etc.

PORTRAIT OF HON. THEODORE ROOSEVELT, The New Civil Service Commissioner.

A CHINESE ARTIST'S PICTURES OF INCIDENTS IN THE FAMINE.

A MATRIMONIAL DIFFICULTY. (Illustr'd.)

ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS. An Autobiographical Story. By Mrs. Stenhouse. (Continued.)

JESUS BEFORE PILATE. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

Mons. Carnot, President of the French Republic—View of the Paris Exhibition from the Eiffel Tower.

Mons. M. F. S. CARNOT.

President of the French Republic.

Birth and Education—Services as Legislator and Administrator—His Unimpeachable Integrity—The Character that Tells—His Election to the Presidency—His Administration—His Famous Father—His Grandfather's Career—The Colleague of Robespierre—A Momentous Secret Discovered at a Dinner-Party.

WITH the picture of the great exhibition in Paris, which appears on the first page, is the portrait of M. Marie Francois Sadi Carnot, the President of the French Republic, who formally opened the exhibition on May 6. M. Carnot is in his fifty-second year, having been born at Limoges, on August 11, 1837. He has been the chief executive in France since December 3, 1887, when he was elected to fill the office which M. Grévy had resigned. By profession M. Carnot is a civil engineer, but he has from his youth been interested in politics and has won laurels as A Legislator and Administrator.

His education was a thorough one. He studied at the Ecole Polytechnique, where he graduated fifth in his class in 1857, and in the School of Bridges and Railroads he reached the head of his class at his graduation in 1863. He was appointed Government engineer in various provincial districts in the Annecy district, and continued to act in that capacity until 1870. During that time, he superintended the construction of many important public works, including the great Collonge bridge over the Rhone, near the Swiss frontier, where he adopted a new system of tubular foundation. On the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian War he was placed in charge of the construction of the forts, etc., for the defence of Normandy, being made a Commissary Extraordinary of the Lower Seine, Eure, and Calvados, and Prefect of the Lower Seine. He held this position until the close of the war.

His first appearance in the Legislative Chamber was in 1872, when he was elected to the National Assembly by the district of Côte d'Or. He took his seat with the Republican Left, and was appointed Secretary of that section. In 1876 the District of Beaume elected him to the Legislature. He continued to sit with the same group, and his practical experience enabled him to render efficient service on committees of public works and industrial matters. He was also placed on the Finance Committee, in which he unexpectedly developed remarkable financial abilities. He became on the advent of M. Ferry to the Premiership in 1880, having previously served as Under Secretary under De Freycinet. In this office his duties were more arduous than those which usually attach to the office in other countries, as in France the Government controls the chief lines of railroad. The construction of ports, canals, bridges, etc., involved labor to which M. Carnot brought natural ability, long and careful training, and years of experience. He had in his Department seventy-two chief engineers, 240 ordinary engineers, and 1,500 assistant engineers. In 1885, on the resignation of the Secretary of the Treasury, M. Carnot was invited to succeed him, and he carried into his new Department the energy which had distinguished him in that of Public Works. His record in office is one of Unimpeachable Integrity, and a conspicuous illustration of it was dramatically cited in the chambers. When M. Rouvier, the late Premier, was trying to defend the then President, M. Grévy, and his son-in-law, M. Wilson, from the charge of misapplying public funds, the question was raised whether certain sums which had been paid into the National Treasury for stamps and registering duties by the Dreyfus firm, in which M. Wilson is interested, had not been returned to them, M. Rouvier said that an application had been made for the return of the money while M. Carnot was in office, but that he had refused it. It also appeared that this refusal was the cause of M. Carnot leaving office, as it brought upon him the hostility of the President and his wretched son-in-law. When these facts were disclosed, the whole chamber rose, and turning to the ex-Secretary, cheered him vociferously. He sat pale and with bowed head, evidently touched by this recognition of his integrity.

Minister of Public Works

His Election to the Presidency on December 3, 1887, was another of those significant facts from which young men may learn a valuable lesson. It proved that in the race of life it is character that tells. When men are needed for responsible positions, when a great trust is to be confided to some one man, the man who commands public confidence is usually less remarkable for brilliant talents than for unstained character. M. Grévy sent in his resignation on December 2, 1887, and on the following day the Senate and the Chamber went to Versailles to elect a President. M. Grévy resigned before the close of his term of office, but, according to the French Constitution, his successor was elected, not to finish M. Grévy's term, but for the full term of seven years. The prize was one of great magnificence. To be ruler of all France for seven years, with a salary of $120,000 a year, a free residence in the Palace of the Elysée, and an allowance of $60,000 a year for household expenses, render it one to satisfy the most ambitious citizen of France. The election lay with the eight hundred and fifty members of the Senate and Chamber of Deputies, and the votes were taken by ballot. On the second ballot M. Carnot was elected.

Since that time he has governed France with moderation and skill.

His Administration

has not been brilliant, but it has been safe and respectable, and that has been better for the country than a brilliant administration. It has been no easy task, and M. Carnot's difficulties have tested his calibre. The statesmen from whom alone he could select his advisers and chiefs of departments are men of small talents in whom the people have little confidence, while the man who is popular with the people, and who has the reputation for ability, is General Boulanger, who with good reason is suspected of being a traitor to the Government. How to deal with Boulanger has probably been one of the most difficult problems the President has had to solve, and it is not solved yet; for the prosecution which scared the General into exile seems to have increased his popularity.

The Family of Carnot

has been famous in French history. The father of the President, M. Lazare Hippolyte Carnot, took a prominent part in the Revolution of 1848. He was born in 1801, and in early life identified himself with the Simonians, and became their advocate in the press. He entered the political field, and in 1839 was elected deputy to the Legislature. He connected himself with the Republican section, and acted and voted with them until the Revolution. He was rewarded with the office of Minister of Public Instruction. After the overthrow of the Republic, by Louis Napoleon, in December 1851, M. Carnot was among the proscribed deputies. He was elected by the city of Paris to the Legislature, his colleague being General Cavaignac. Both men, however, having refused to take the oath of allegiance to Napoleon III., were unable to take their seats, and retired into private life. After the fall of the Empire in 1870, he was honored by being made Senator for life.

The Grandfather of the President was still more famous in his day. He was the Captain Hippolyte Carnot of whom Carlyle says, in describing the leaders of the Revolution of 1789, he was "the highest faculty of them all." He was War Minister in the famous Committee of Public Safety—a position of terrific responsibility in the days when France, torn and distracted within, stood at bay before united Europe. It was he that organized the army, and made the victories of Napoleon Bonaparte a possibility. It was Carnot, too, a little later, who was prominent among the men who hurled the dreaded Robespierre from power. At the hour when the tyrant could by a word send best and noblest in France to the guillotine, men trembled, not knowing who might next be doomed by the fiendish creature, Carnot made a discovery which united together the band men who finally crushed the tyrant. There was a bachelor dinner-party one night during the Reign of Terror at the house of Barrere. Carnot and Robespierre were among the guests. In some turn of the conversation Carnot needed a blank sheet of paper. The night was high and the guests had laid aside their coats. Carnot went to the room where the garments were hanging and locking into this and that pocket for paper came upon a sheet in the pocket of Robespierre's coat. But it was not blank. Its contents made his cheek blanch. There was his own name, and that of thirty-nine others, associates, in Robespierre's writing. It was evidently the list of the next band of men who Robespierre meant to send to the guillotine. That detected treachery sealed Robespierre's doom, and Carnot organized the attack which delivered France from the hated tyrant. When Napoleon established the Empire, Carnot disappeared from public view, and when the Bonapartes were restored, Carnot was honored by being formally proscribed by name, and he died in seclusion. It is from such a stock that a man comes who is now the President of the French Republic.

OPENING OF THE PARIS EXHIBITION

It was not to be expected that the year 1889 would be allowed to pass in France without national celebration. It is the centennial anniversary of the inauguration of the great revolution the world has ever seen. In the year 1789 the people of France, driven mad by oppression, exactions, and tyranny, rose in the might and overturned the social fabric. They were like demons in their frenzy, and there were no elements in their midst to restrain the fury. The Huguenots, who might have exerted some restraining influence, had been massacred or banished, and the descendants of the king and nobles who had eliminated them from the nation were left face to face with a society destitute of religious principle. The result was massacre of King, Queen, and aristocracy, and a carnival of blood unparalleled in history. After marvellous vicissitudes, at the end of the century France is once more a Republic, and she naturally celebrates the awful time in which the principles of Republican government in France had their birth. One form of the celebration is the great exhibition, which attracts to Paris visitors from other nations, and which was formally opened on May 6.

Early on the morning of that day Parisians began trooping towards the Champ de Mars. Not the least conspicuous were the number of the poorer classes from the outlying quarters who brought their provisions with them, and who were bent on enjoying the inauguration from outside. The weather was delightful. Shortly after 1 o'clock the President's escort drew up in a square in front of the Elysée. The crowd as soon as it caught sight of President Carnot raised hearty cheers. The open carriage in which M. Carnot sat was drawn by four light bays, adorned with Tricolor rosettes. The procession proceeded at a walking pace from the Elysée to the Champ de Mars, where the Exhibition is, and the President was greeted with an uninterrupted series of ovations.

The President drove between two lines of soldiers, behind which stood dense masses of people, who repeatedly cheered him. At 2 o'clock he alighted in front of the Central dome, where he was formally received by M. Tirard and the other Ministers.

A Bird's-eye View of the Exhibition and the adjacent grounds appears in the illustration on the first page. The building is on the left bank of the Seine, at the Pont d'Iéna, occupying the Quai d'Orsay, the Esplanade des Invalides, and the Champ de Mars; the principal structure being erected in the Champ de Mars, around three sides of a central space laid out as a garden, and approached by the arch under the Eiffel Tower. On the opposite bank of the river is the palace of the Trocadéro, which was built for the Exhibition of 1878.

The proceedings under the dome on the opening day were brief and simple. On a raised platform above the vast assembly of spectators there was a gilt chair for the President. The opening speech was delivered by M. Tirard, the Prime-Minister, and in his peroration he said: "And now let us rejoice on having opened France to the produce of the whole world; let us congratulate ourselves on this great and peaceful manifestation of the vitality of our beloved country, which proudly pursues its way in the path of progress and civilization. Let us offer a hearty and glad welcome to strangers, and thus show that Republican France is hospitable and generous, that she loves and honors the workers of all nations, and does not look upon them as rivals to be viewed with jealousy, but as fellow-men who unite their efforts with hers for the happiness and peace of the world."

M. Carnot briefly replied, and after a few hearty words of welcome to the guests of France declared the Exhibition open.

The Scene in the Evening was brilliant beyond description. The crowd was enormous. When the cannon fired to announce that the Fête de Nuit had begun, all the gardens were suddenly bathed in light. All the three cupolas of the Exhibition Building, the Machine Gallery, and the façades were outlined with many-colored lamps. The interminable covered walks had each in the centre of the awning a row of Edison lamps extending from end to end. The numerous fountains were illuminated, and the effect of the beautiful and skilfully blended colors of the water contrasting with the perfect whiteness of the statues was almost magical. The building of the Trocadéro rivalled in point of beauty the Exhibition itself; but the supreme wonder of science was

The Gigantic Eiffel Tower.
All its arches and main shafts were outlined with incandescent lamps. On its summit was an arc light of immense size. The summit had become as a vast star, when the tower was suddenly bathed from summit to foundation in the brightest crimson light. The tower shone like a beacon, and could be seen at a distance of eighty miles. This tower is 975 feet high, and weighs 17,000 tons. It is made solely of steel and iron, and cost about $982,500. The first great platform is covered with French, English, Flemish, and Russian restaurants, and is 250 feet square. On the second story (470 feet high) miniature copies of the Figaro are being printed from small Marinoni machines; and on the third and highest floor, beyond which nobody can penetrate except with a special pass, and which is 50 feet square, there is a complete suite—dining and drawing rooms, kitchen, and all appliances. A comparison between the height of the tower and the world's famous monuments gives some astonishing results. The Pyramids are pigmies to it. Only the Washington Monument exceeds one half the height of the tower. You could get the Arc de Triomphe and Notre Dame comfortably under the first story.

President Carnot was Fired at on the previous day at the commemoration of the centenary of the French Revolution. As his carriage was leaving the Elysée a man in the crowd suddenly raised a pistol and discharged it point-blank at the President. The outrage aroused the indignation of the crowd, and it was with difficulty that the police saved the perpetrator from being torn to pieces. It was found, however, that the incident had no political significance, and, indeed, that the man did not intend to kill the President. His pistol contained only blank cartridges. He was a crazy clerk who had been discharged from a Government office, and took this theatrical method of calling attention to his grievance.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Mr. Wang, a Water Carrier, was Engaged by Mr. Riley in Ch'ungking. He was unable to read or write, but soon he could read his New Testament. The past seven years of faithful, honest service have testified to the reality of his change of heart. Persecution he has had, but he has stood firm and true for his Master, never hiding his colors. His wife, too, baptized four years since, though without his strength of character, is a decided Christian, and hundreds and hundreds of women have heard the truth from her lips. They have passed through deep trial lately; a little girl of two and a half years and a baby boy of six weeks died within a month of each other. Their little boy of twelve is really converted to God.

A Lord and His Slave in the Same Crypt.
—"I was visiting one of the crypts in Dublin where the air is so dry that none of the bodies deposited there ever go to dust. Some of the bodies have been there for over four hundred years. I found myself opposite a body, which from the label I found had been the body of a great lord, and by his side was the body of one who, at that remote time, had been that lord's slave. Time had worn away the coffins, armors, and golden ornaments that had distinguished the one from the other, and as they lay there, there was no perceptible difference. So, in God's sight, when man is stripped of all his artificial trappings, we find that all are alike sinners. And all have to come the same way for salvation, the way of repentance through Christ, the Door to everlasting life."

"Old Long Po-Po is a Great Cause for praise," says Mrs. Riley. "Five years ago she was a devotee of Buddha, and heard the truth as it is in Jesus, and gladly accepted it. One or two remarkable dreams deepened her convictions; fasting and chanting were all thrown aside, and whole-hearted devotion to Jesus her Saviour has been the result. How many times have I heard her pleading with Chinese men and women to turn from idols to the One True God, and such power has been with her words! For twelve months at her washing-tub in many houses did she preach Jesus; and now, a city Bible-woman, she carries the light into many a hold of darkness, where otherwise it would not be taken. Her daughter-in-law, my own faithful servant for the past four years, was baptized three years ago, and it is the hope of mother and daughter-in-law some time in the future to have a shop in their native place, where they can be preachers of the glad tidings."

An Unexpected Six Months' Gas-Bill.—Dr. George F. Pentecost says: "A friend of mine determined to have a tour in Europe. He packed up everything he thought he would require. Put brown paper on the windows, and having made everything secure at his house, locked the door. He had not gone far towards the place of his embarkation when he remembered something which he had forgotten to bring with him, and which was absolutely necessary. He returned at once, and re-entered the house, lit the gas, and searched for the missing article. That being found, he hurried after his family, utterly oblivious of the fact that the gas was still burning in the room which he had left. He proceeded to Europe, and on his return after six months he found the gas still burning, and a gas-bill for a very considerable amount was handed in to him. The gentleman went to the gas-office, and explained that he had been in Europe all the time, and that he did not know of the gas burning; but the company insisted upon their account being paid, saying the gas had been consumed, and it was no fault of theirs if he by his own carelessness wasted it. Ultimately my friend was obliged to pay the bill. There are some men who offer the same excuse for their sin as that gentleman did for his non-liability for his gas account. They did not know they were sinners. If we by our careless indifference neglect both the inward mentor, which God has given us, and fail to examine His word wherein we are clearly shown what sin is, then most assuredly we are liable to the full punishment which sin entails."

The "Bar Sinister" on the Shield.—"The other day I was looking over a book in heraldry, and there I saw the shield of one of the ancient barons of England. It was resplendent in its many quarterings, but right across it from side to side was a broad band. What was it? It was the bar sinister, that showed that the first wearer of that shield had come to the titles and estates illegitimately. The direct and legitimate line had failed, and he, the child of sin, had succeeded. But he was compelled to proclaim to all the world, by the bar upon his shield, that he was the child of sin. But, praise God, there is no bar sinister with Him. I look over His genealogy, and there I see the names of Rahab, Tamar, and Bath-sheba, and I thank Him that they are there, for it shows me that no matter from what family a man comes, he has acceptance with Christ."

The Fever-Stricken War-Ship.—Dr. George F. Pentecost says: "Some years ago the U. S. ship of war Plymouth, one of the old line-of-battle ships, returned from a Southern port with the yellow fever on board, of which disease many of the crew died. After being in quarantine for some time, she was ordered to Portland, the most northerly port in the States, and there dismantled and thoroughly disinfected. She was put in commission again and sent out. She had not been long at sea when, although her crew was now without exception entirely different from the former one, the fever broke out again. A third time the same process was repeated, but with the same result; as soon as the ship went south the fever made its reappearance. Upon examination it was discovered that the fever spores had got into the ship, and they were everywhere in it embedded in its timbers. There was no possibility of completely disinfecting it. When this was made plain the vessel was taken out to the open sea and sunk. As it was with that ship, so it is with sinners. Conceived in sin, and continually sinning, it is in vain we try to rid ourselves of sin. To be free from sin our old self must be sunk, must die, and we must be regenerated in Christ Jesus."

Man in the Devil's Image.—Dr. Pentecost says: "An infidel once rudely said to me, 'Do you believe the Bible?' 'Certainly,' I replied. 'And do you believe the story of creation?' he asked. 'Yes,' I answered. 'That God made man after His own image?' he queried. 'I believe so,' I replied. 'Then,' said he, 'if God made man after His own image, God is like man, and I would not worship a God that is like man.' Then he went on to describe man as miserable, avaricious, greedy, lying, and everything that is bad. 'You are quite right,' I replied; 'man is all that you say. If I had ventured upon any such statement from the pulpit you would have been up in arms, but in your description of man I quite agree with you.' 'Then, how can you ask me to worship a God that is like that?' he exclaimed. 'My friend,' I replied, 'if you have read the Bible, you have not had gumption to read it right through; you have surely omitted all about Jesus. The man you describe is Adam, but you don't know what the character of Jesus was.' At this he quickly drew up and said, 'If all men were counterparts of Jesus I admit that this earth would be a heaven.' Then looking straight at the infidel, I continued, 'You are the devil's man, not God's man, and upon you your master is fast perfecting his image.' He winced most manifestly, and abruptly turned away. What we want just now is less looking to man and more looking to Jesus. He is the mark at which we should aim. He is the pattern which we should copy, as well as the Saviour upon whom we should rest."

Prophetic Studies. A Report of the Address delivered at the Prophetic Conference at Chicago, with portraits of some of the speakers. It contains 216 pages. Fifty cents in paper covers, including postage. Address Manager, 63 Bible House, New York.

THE GOSPEL ALKALI.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday Morning, May 26, 1889.

"If I wash myself with snow water, and cleanse my hands in alkali, yet shalt thou plunge me in the ditch, and mine own clothes shall abhor me." Job 9: 30, 31. (Rev. Ver.)

A Discarded Theology—A Picture of Human Nature—Defects and Deformities Revealed by the Bible Camera—Cleansing Needed—Human Attempts which Fail—I. By Fine Apologies—Charging it to Ancestors—The Original Estate Increased—Debiting Associates—Claiming Superiority Over Others—II. By Good Resolutions—A Fatal Defect—The Past Unredeemed—A Great Cemetery of Past Evil—A Crime Unearthed After Thirty Years—Skeletons in the Cemetery of Memory—A False Picture of Sin in Mezzotint—A Life-Boat to a Water-Logged Ship—The Bible Picture—A Text for Rationalists—A Christian Boot-Black.

ALBERT BARNES—honored be his name on earth and in heaven—went straight back to the original writing of my text, and translated it as I have now quoted it, giving substantial reasons for so doing. Although we know better, the ancients had an idea that in snow water there was a special power to cleanse, and that a garment washed and rinsed in it would be as clean as clean could be; but if the plain snow water failed to do its work, then they would take lye or alkali and mix it with oil, and under that preparation they felt that the last impurity would certainly be gone. Job, in my text, in most forceful figure sets forth the idea that all his attempts to make himself pure before God were a dead failure, and that, unless we are ablated by something better than earthly liquids and chemical preparations, we are loathsome and in the ditch. "If I wash myself with snow water, and should I cleanse my hands in alkali, yet shalt thou plunge me in the ditch, and mine own clothes shall abhor me." You are sitting for

Your Picture.

I turn the camera obscura of God's word full upon you, and I pray that the sunshine falling through the skylight may enable me to take you just as you are. Shall it be a flattering picture, or shall it be a true one? You say: "Let it be a true one." The first profile that was ever taken was taken three hundred and thirty years before Christ, of Antigonus. He had a blind eye, and he compelled the artist to take his profile so as to hide the defect in his vision. But since that invention three hundred and thirty years before Christ, there have been a great many profiles. Shall I to-day give you a one-sided view of yourselves, a profile, or shall it be a full-length portrait, showing you just what you are? If God will help me, I shall give you that last kind of a picture.

When I first entered the ministry I used to write my sermons all out and read them, and run my hand along the line lest I should lose my place. I have hundreds of those manuscripts. Shall I ever preach them? Never; for in those days I was somehow overmastered with the idea I heard talked all around about, of the dignity of human nature, and I adopted the idea, and I evolved it, and I illustrated it, and I argued it; but coming on in life, and having seen more of the world, and studied better my Bible, I find that that early teaching was faulty, and that there is until it is reconstructed by the grace of God. Talk about vessels going to pieces on the Skerries, off Ireland! There never was such a shipwreck as in the Gihon and the Hiddekel, rivers of Eden, where our first parents foundered. Talk of a steamer going down with five hundred passengers on board! What is that to the shipwreck of fourteen hundred million souls! We are by nature a mass of uncleanness and putrefaction, from which it takes all the omnipotence and infinitude of God's grace to extricate us. "If I wash myself with snow water, and should I cleanse my hands in alkali, yet shalt thou plunge me in the ditch, and my own clothes shall abhor me."

No Dignity in Human Nature

I. I remark, in the first place; that some people try to cleanse their soul of sin in the snow water of fine apologies. Here is one man who says: "I am a sinner: I confess that; but I inherited this. My father was a sinner, my grandfather, my great-great-grandfather, and all the way back to Adam, and I couldn't help myself." My brother, have you not, every day in your life, added something to that was bequeathed to you? Are you not brave enough to confess that you have sometimes surrendered to sin which you ought to have conquered? I ask you whether it is fair-play to put upon our ancestry things for which we ourselves are personally responsible? If your nature was askew when you got it, have you not sometimes given it an additional twist? Will all the tombstones of those who have preceded us make a barricade high enough for eternal defenses? I know a devout man who had blasphemous parentage. I know an honest man whose father was a thief. I know a pure man whose mother was a waif of the street. The hereditary tide may be very strong, but there is such a thing as stemming it. The fact that I have a corrupt nature is no reason why I should yield to it. The deep stains of our soul can never be washed out by the snow water of such insufficient apology.

The Original Estate of Sin

Still further, says some one: "If I have gone into sin, it has been Through my Companions,

my comrades, and associates; they ruined me. They taught me to drink. They took me to the gambling hell. They plunged me into the house of sin. They ruined my soul." I do not believe it. God gave to no one the power to destroy you or me. If a man is destroyed, he is self-destroyed, and that is always so. Why did you not break away from them? If they had tried to steal your purse, you would have knocked them down; if they had tried to purloin your gold watch, you would have riddled them with shot; but when they tried to steal your immortal soul, you placidly submitted to it. Those bad fellows have a cup of fire to drink; do not pour your cup into it. In this matter of the soul, every man for himself. That those persons are not fully responsible for your sin, I prove by the fact that you still consort with them. You cannot get off by blaming them. Though you gather up all these apologies; though there were a great flood of them; though they should come down with the force of the melting snows from Lebanon, they could not wash out one stain of your immortal soul.

Still further: some persons apologize for their sins by saying: "We are a great deal

Better than Some People.

You see people all around about us that are a great deal worse than we." You stand up columnar in your integrity, and look down upon those who are prostrate in their habits and crimes. What of that, my brother? If I failed through recklessness and wicked imprudence for ten thousand dollars, is the matter alleviated at all by the fact that somebody else has failed for one hundred thousand dollars, and somebody else for two hundred thousand dollars? Oh, no. If I have the neuralgia, shall I refuse medical attendance because my neighbor has virulent typhoid fever? The fact that his disease is worse than mine—does that cure mine? If I, through my foolhardiness, leap off into ruin, does it break the fall to know that others leap off a higher cliff into deeper darkness? When the Hudson River rail train went through the bridge at Spuyten Duyvil, did it alleviate the matter at all that instead of two or three people being hurt, there were seventy-five mangled and crushed? Because others are depraved, is that any excuse for my depravity?

Am I Better than They?

Perhaps they had worse temptations than I have had. Perhaps their surroundings in life were more overpowering. Perhaps, O man, if you had been under the same stress of temptation, instead of sitting here to-day you would have been looking through the bars of a penitentiary. Perhaps, O woman, if you had been under the same power of temptation, instead of sitting here to-day you would be tramping the street the laughing-stock of men and the grief of the angels of God, dungeoned, body, mind, and soul in the blackness of despair. Ah, do not let us solace ourselves with the thought that other people are worse than we. Perhaps in the future, when our fortunes may change, unless God prevents it we may be worse than they are. Many a man, after thirty years, after forty years, after fifty years, after sixty years, has gone to pieces on the sandbars. Oh, instead of wasting our time in hypercriticism about others, let us ask ourselves the questions, Where do we stand? What are our sins? What are our deficits? What are our perils? What our hopes? Let each one say to himself: "Where will I be? Shall I range in summery fields, or grind in the mills of a great night? Where? Where?"

The Polluted Snow.

Some winter morning you go out and see snow-bank in graceful drifts, as though by some heavenly compass it had been curved; and as the sun glints it the lustre is almost insufferable, and it seems as if God had wrapped the earth in a shroud, with white plaits woven in looms celestial. And you say: "Was there ever anything so pure as the snow, so beautiful as the snow?" But you brought a pail of that snow and put it upon the stove and melted it; and you found that there was a sediment at the bottom, and every drop of that snow-water was riled; and you found that the snow-bank had gathered up the impurity of the field, and that after all it was not fit to wash in. And so I say it will be if you try to gather up these contrast and comparisons with others, and with these apologies attempt to wash out the sins of your heart and life. It will be an unsuccessful ablution. Such snow water will never wash away a single stain of an immortal soul.

II. But I hear some one say: "I will try something better than that. I will try the force of Good Resolutions.

That will be more pungent, more caustic, more extirpating, more cleansing. The snow water has failed, and now I will try the alkali of the good, strong resolution." My dear brother, have you any idea that a resolution about the future will liquidate the past? Suppose I owe you five thousand dollars and I should come to you to-morrow and say: "Sir, I will never run in debt to you again; if I should live thirty years, I will never run in debt to you again; will you turn to me and say: 'If you will not run in debt in the future, I will forgive you the five thousand dollars.'" Will you do that? No. Nor will God. We have been running up long score of indebtedness with God. If for the future we should abstain from sin, that would be no defrayment of past indebtedness. Though you should live from this time forth pure as an archangel before the throne, that would not redeem the past. God, in the Bible, distinctly declares that He "will require that which is past—past opportunities, past neglects, past wicked words, past imaginations, past everything."

The Past is a Great Cemetery, and every day is buried in it. And here is a long row of three hundred and sixty-five grave. They are the dead days of 1888. Here is a long row of three hundred and sixty-five more grave and they are the dead days of 1887. And here is a long row of three hundred and sixty-five more graves, and they are the dead days of 1886. It is a vast cemetery of the past. But God will rouse them all up with resurrectionary blast and as the prisoner stands face to face with juror and judge, so you and I will have to come up and look upon those departed days, exulting in their smile or cowering in their frown.

"Murder will out" is a proverb that stops too short. Every sin, however small, as well as great, will out. In hard times in England years ago, it is authentically stated that a man was on his way, with a bag of money to pay off his hands. A man infuriated with hunger met him on the road, and took a nail with a nail in it from a paling fence and struck him down, and the nail entering the skull, instantly slew him. Thirty years after that the murderer went back to that place. He passed into the graveyard, where the sexton was digging a grave, and while he stood there the spade of the sexton turned up a skull, and, lo! the murderer saw a nail protruding from the back part of the skull; and as the sexton turned the skull, it seemed with hollow eyes to glare on the murderer; and he, first petrified with horror, stood in silence, but soon cried out, "Guilty! guilty! O God!" The mystery of the crime was over. The man was tried and executed. My friends, all our unpardoned sins, though out of sight and gone into a mere skeleton of memory, will turn up in the cemetery of the past, and glower upon us with their misdoings. I say all our unpardoned sins. Oh, have you done the preposterous thing of supposing that good resolutions for the future will wipe out the past? Good resolutions, though they may be pungent, and caustic as alkali, have no power to neutralize a sin, have no power to wash away a transgression. It wants something more than earthly chemistry to do this. Yea, yea, though "I wash myself with snow water, and should I cleanse my hands in alkali, yet shalt thou plunge me in the ditch, and mine own clothes shall abhor me."

We May Think They are Buried

You see from the last part of this text that Job's idea of sin was very different from that of Eugene Sue, or Georges Sand, or M. J. Michelet, or any of the writers who have done up and garlanded the wine cup with eglantine and rosemary, and made the path of the libertine end in bowers of ease instead of on the hot flagging of eternal torture. You see that Job thinks that sin is not a flowery parterre; that it is not a tableland of fine prospects; that it is not music—dulcimer, violoncello, castanet, and Pandean pipes, all making music together. No. He says it is a ditch, long, deep, loathsome, stenchful, and we are all plunged into it, and there we wallow and sink and struggle, not able to get out. Our robes of propriety and robes of worldly profession are saturated in the slime and abomination, and our soul, covered over with transgression, hates its covering, and the covering hates the soul, until we are plunged into the ditch, and our own clothes abhor us.

Iniquity in Mezzotint,

I know that some modern religionists caricature sorrow for sin, and they make out an easier path than the "pilgrim's progress," that John Bunyan dreamed of. The road they travel does not start where John's did, at the city of Destruction, but at the gate of the university; and I am very certain that it will not come out where John's did, under the shining ramparts of the celestial city. No repentance, no pardon. If you do not, my brother, feel that what do you want of Christ to lift you out? If you have no appreciation of the fact that you are astray, what do you want of Him who came to seek and save that which was lost? Yonder is the City of Paris, the swiftest of the Inmans, coming across the Atlantic. The wind is abaft, so that she has not only her engines at work, but all sails up. I am on board the Umbria, of the Cunard line. The boat davits are swung around. The boat is lowered. I get into it with a red flag, and cross over to where the City of Paris is coming, and I wave the flag. The captain looks off from the bridge, and says: "What do you want?" I reply: "I come to take some of your passengers across to the other vessel; I think they will be safer and happier there." The captain would look down with indignation and say: "Get out of the way, or I will run you down!" And then I would back oars, amidst the jeering of two or three hundred people looking over the taffrail.

You Are Down in the Ditch,

But the Umbria and the City of Paris meet under different circumstances after a while. The City of Paris is coming out of a cyclone; the life-boats are smashed; the bulwarks gone; the vessel rapidly going down. The boatswain gives his last whistle of despairing command. The passengers run up and down the deck, and some pray, and all make a great outcry. The captain says: "You have about fifteen minutes now to prepare for the next world." "No hope!" sounds from stem to stern, and from the ratlines down to the cabin. I see the distress. I am let down by the side of the Umbria. I push off as fast as I can toward the sinking City of Paris. Before I come up people are leaping into the water in their anxiety to get to the boat, and when I have swung up under the side of the City of Paris, the frenzied passengers rush through the gangway until the officers, with ax and clubs and pistols, try to keep back the crowd, each wanting his turn to come next.

There is but One Life-Boat, and they all want to get into it, and the cry is: "Me next! me next!" You see the application before I make it. As long as a man going on in his sin feels that all is well, that he is coming out at a beautiful port, and has all sail set, he wants no Christ, he wants no help, he wants no rescue; but if under the flash of God's convicting spirit he shall see that by reason of sin he is dismayed and water-logged, and going down into the trough of the sea where he cannot live, how soon he puts the sea glass to his eye and sweeps the horizon, and at the first sign of help cries out: "I want to be saved. I want to be saved now. I want to be saved forever." No sense of danger, no application for rescue.

Oh, that God's eternal spirit would flash upon us a sense of our sinfulness! The Bible tells but we get used to it. We joke about sin. We make merry over it. What is sin? Is it a trifling thing? Sin is a vampire that is sucking out the life blood of your immortal nature. Sin? It is a Bastille that no earthly key ever unlocked. Sin? It is expatriation from God and heaven. Sin? It is grand larceny against the Almighty, for the Bible asks the question: "Will a man rob God?" answering it in the affirmative. This Gospel is a writ of replevin to recover property unlawfully detained from God.

The Story in Letters of Fire,

In the Sandwich Islands there is a man with leprosy. The hollow of the foot has swollen until it is flat on the ground. The joints begin to fall away. The ankle thickens until it looks like the foot of a wild beast. A stare unnatural comes to the eye. The nostril is constricted. The voice drops to an almost inaudible hoarseness. Tubercles blotch the whole body, and from them comes an exudation that is unbearable to the beholder. That is leprosy, and we have all got it unless cleansed by the grace of God. See Leviticus. See II Kings. See Mark. See Luke. See fifty Bible confirmations.

The Bible is not Complimentary

in its language. It does not speak mincingly about our sins. It does not talk apologetically. There is no vermilion in its style. It does not cover up our transgressions with blooming metaphor. It does not sing about them in weak falsetto; but it thunders out: "The imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth." "Every one has gone back. He has altogether become filthy. He is abominable and filthy, and drinketh in iniquity like water." And then the Lord Jesus Christ flings down at our feet this humiliating catalogue: "Out of the heart of men proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornication, murders, thefts, blasphemy." There is a text for your rationalists to preach from! Oh the dignity of human nature! There is an element of your science of man that the anthropologist never has had the courage yet to touch; and the Bible, in all the ins and outs of the most forceful style, sets forth our natural pollution, and represents iniquity as a frightful thing, as an exhausting thing, as a loathsome thing. It is not a mere bemiring of the feet, it is not a mere befouling of the hands; it is going down, head and ears, in a ditch, until our clothes abhor us.

My brethren, shall we stay down where sin thrusts us? I shall not, if you do. We cannot afford to. I have to-day to tell you that there is something purer than snow water, something more pungent than alkali, and that is the blood of Jesus Christ that cleanseth from all sin. Ay, the river of salvation, bright, crystalline, and heaven-born, rushes through this audience with billowy tide strong enough to wash your sins completely and forever away. O Jesus, let the dam that holds it back now break, and the floods of salvation roll over us.

Let the water and the blood,
From Thy side a healing flood,
Be of sin the double cure,
Save from wrath and make me pure.

Let us get down on both knees and bathe in that flood of mercy. To you is the word of this salvation sent. Take this largess of the divine bounty. Though you have gone of libidinous desire and corrupt behavior, though you have sworn all blasphemies until there is not one sinful word left for you to speak, though you have been submerged by the transgressions of a lifetime, though you are so far down in your sin that no earthly help can touch your case—the Lord Jesus Christ bends over you to-day, and offers you His right hand, proposing to lift you up, first making you whiter than snow, and then raising you to glories that never die. "Billy," said a Christian bootblack to another, "when we come up to heaven it won't make any difference that we've been boot-blacks here, for we shall get in, not somehow or other, but, Billy, we shall get straight through the gate."

Down in the Deepest Ditch

Oh, if you only knew how full and free and tender is the offer of Christ this day, without one exception. Oh that this might be the hour when you would receive Him! It is not a Gospel merely for footpads and vagrants and buccaneers; it is for the highly polished, and the educated, and the refined as well. "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." Whatever may be your associations, and whatever your worldly refinements, I must tell you, as before God I expect to answer in the last day, that if you are not changed by the grace of God, you are still down in the ditch of sin, in the ditch of sorrow, in the ditch of condemnation; a ditch that empties into a deeper ditch, the ditch of the lost. But blessed be God for the lifting, cleansing, lustrating power of His Gospel.

You Would All Take Him

The voice of free grace cries, Escape to the mountain: For all that believe, Christ has opened a fountain. Hallelujah to the Lamb who has bought us our pardon, We'll praise Him again when we pass over Jordan.

A WIDOW PUZZLED.

IN the course of an address, recently, Professor Elmslie said: "I went to live for three months in Rome in order to learn Italian, and I stayed in a Roman Catholic household. The mother was a widow lady, and there were two sons and a daughter. The parent was an out-and-out Catholic, so was the daughter; of the sons, one was a medical student and an atheist, and the other was—well, I do not know that he was anything. The mother called me a Protestant priest at first, and stood up in defence of her religion, though I never mentioned Protestantism to her, but before long we became fast friends. In her quiet hours she would often sit with me, and she began at last to tell me the story of her life and home. Then she said to me, 'You Protestants have not the mass, but you have something, have not you, instead?' and when I described the simple Presbyterian communion—the bread broken and passed round, and the cup handed one to another, and the word of the Lord spoken—her face grew grave, and she said: 'It is so strange! that is just how it was done by the blessed Lord Himself the first time it was ever done; and yet ours must be the right way, for the true Church ordains it; but still, how can yours be wrong when you do just what the blessed Master Jesus Christ did?'"

A TWO YEARS' PENANCE.

AMONG the Gonds of North India the patient faithful labor of the missionaries has at length been blessed with fruit. The Rev. W. D. Williamson thus describes the conversion of the first of the tribe: "God saw fit to let us labor for six years before showing us the first-fruits of our Gond mission. Then He brought out the man He had been preparing to be the first-fruits of our mission. He was a man owning a couple of villages, and was looked on as a holy man. He had sat beside the river Nerbudda doing penance for two years, seeing if he could find peace. He sat there on the advice of Hindoo pundits. Not having found peace, he came back to his native village, and there the Lord caused me to meet him. I asked where he was, but he was not at home; he had gone to a village twenty miles away, and was said not to be likely to be back for three days. But in the afternoon, as I was resting, in he came. I said, 'I heard you were likely to be away three days.' He said, 'I cannot tell how it was, but when I had got half-way to the village, something said to me, "Go back to your own home;" and now I see a clergyman, I know what it was that brought me back—it was God.' I said, 'Yes, it was God!' He had been taught to read by the Hindoos—a thing not one in a thousand can do; so that on the third day I handed over a New Testament to him, and the end of it was that, with the help of God's Spirit, he was brought to accept Christ as his Saviour, and was baptized as the first-fruits of our Gond mission."

WHY A HOUSE WAS NOT RENTED.

A STRIKING illustration of a Christian truth occurs in a speech by the late Professor W. F. Sherwin, printed in the Watchword. The Professor said: "When I moved from New York to Cincinnati, I experienced not a little difficulty in obtaining a suitable tenement, one which would be generally convenient, as well as pleasant and homelike for my family. At length, however, I found one that was quite to my taste. It was very pleasantly situated. It was bright with color; it had a fine southern exposure. There was a little lawn in front, a garden in the rear, and its appointments generally were all that could be desired. I made haste to signify to the agent in charge of the premises that I desired to engage the house. He informed me that before the bargain could be finally closed, it would be important for me personally to visit the owner, as, before the house could be rented, he desired to make a single reservation. And so away to the owner I hurried. And what do you think that reservation was for which allowance was thus to be made? It was nothing less than the right to the whole use and individual control of one of the principal rooms in that house—the same to be under lock and key, and no one save himself to be ever allowed to enter it, or even know the nature of its contents. My disappointment was great. A liberal discount was to be allowed on the rent for the use of this reserved chamber. I did not especially need the excepted room. What should I do? I did not long debate. After a moment's reflection, choking down the bitterness of my chagrin, I courteously, and yet emphatically, and even indignantly, exclaimed 'The whole, or none!'

"And so," said the Professor, most impressively, "it is in regard to our relations to God. It should be definitely understood that God insists on having absolutely the whole, or none, of our hearts."

THE GOSPEL IN A PRISON.

IN an interesting letter to the Missionary Herald from Mr. Atkinson, who is laboring in Japan, he thus refers to some efforts recently made to preach the gospel in the prison of Matsuyama: "One of the evangelists goes to the prison every day at noon to speak to as many as choose to hear. The hearing is entirely at the choice of the prisoners. At present about fifty attend. They listen well, and some have asked for baptism. In wet weather the evangelist enters the rooms of the jail, reading and explaining the New Testament, and praying with those who desire him to do so, or who desire to unite with him in prayer. Some time ago the chief warden of the prison was ill. Miss Dudley was in Matsuyama at the time, and calling at his house, talked with him of Christian truth and life. The man received the truth, repented of his sins, and became a new creature. The prisoners were astonished at the change that took place in him; for whereas he had been most severe in his treatment of them, he came to be forbearing and kind. This change materially aided the evangelist in his teaching. Some other of the prison officials are now members of the church."

Mr. Atkinson also mentions a practical evidence of the effect of Christian teaching on a condemned convict. Before he was executed he was asked, according to custom, if there was any delicacy he would like to have to eat or drink. In most cases the men ask for saki, but this man, who had been under Christian teaching since his conviction, said he would not have anything; but he asked that the money which the proffered delicacy would have cost be spent in buying something for the sick in the prison.

A TAILOR TEACHING AN EMPRESS.

At a meeting of the Women's Board of Missions in Chicago on April 12, Miss Ward related some interesting facts about the lady selected as the wife of the young Emperor of China. The choice was made, it appears, by the Emperor's aunt, the present Empress. Miss Ward said that about a year before an Emperor of China is to be married, every girl between thirteen and seventeen, whether rich or poor, if of a family receiving a stipend from the Emperor, has to appear at court to take her chances of being selected for his bride. These girls, perhaps a thousand in number, arrive in detachment at the palace very early in the morning, just before light. They are seen first by the wife of a high official, who disposes of half of them, and sends them away with some trifling present. The remaining ones are detained until the next day, when there is another sifting, and so the process continues until it has narrowed down to one successful aspirant. In this case the fortunate young lady was a cousin of the Emperor. Through one of those remarkable providences which show God's watchful care over the world, the young Empress has heard the gospel story. When the trousseau was to be made, a tailor was employed who was an earnest Christian, and when he went to her home to work, he carried his New Testament with him. As he sewed he kept it open on a table by him, and the young Empress took it up, and occasionally read a little in it. The tailor explained that it was part of the Christian Scriptures. One day she was in a room with a younger sister, when she saw one of the tailor's employees going through the court. She sent a servant and called him to her, and when he came in she shut the door and said, "Now I want you to tell me about this new doctrine." Who can tell what momentous events may be determined by that unconstrained talk between the young bride-empress and the humble tailor's assistant!

THE CHURCH OF JESUS IN MEXICO.

A SERIES of articles on Bishop Riley's work in Mexico, published in the daily journals of New York last week, caused some discussion in church circles. A misunderstanding of the Bishop's position, as well as of the attitude of the Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church, on the subject of the work in Mexico, has evidently existed, which is operating prejudicially to Bishop Riley. The theory of the Church is that the work of propagating the pure gospel in Mexico should be undertaken as a missionary work, and directed by a Board in this country. Bishop Riley's long experience in Mexico convinced him that, so conducted, the work would encounter difficulties that would probably be fatal to its success. The masses of the people are intensely patriotic, and regard with suspicion any movement, social, political, or religious, which has its origin in this country. They suspect that its object and tendency must be in the direction of annexation. He therefore desired that the Protestant Church in Mexico remain a national church. As he was unable to convince the American Bishops of the wisdom of his plan, and as they were without practical experience of the difficulties which Bishop Riley had encountered from national prejudice in Mexico, he had no alternative but to put the movement he had promoted on an independent footing. He therefore resigned the income he was receiving from the Protestant Episcopal Church, and trusted to God to enable him to carry on the work. Some of the pastors felt more secure of support under the auspices of the wealthy American Church, and elected to join the missionary organization. Others, however, were faithful to Bishop Riley, and believed with him that God would see that they did not starve. They and their congregations were poor, but God could raise up friends to help them, and they relied on His promise. The Bishop gave all his private income to their support, and friends all over the country have helped him. Thus, as a work of faith, the Church of the Lord Jesus in Mexico has been sustained; and though it has been denounced by Ritualists, who disapprove of opposition to Roman Catholicism in any form, and by disciplinarians who lack confidence in any work that has not official endorsement, the Church still lives and prosecutes its beneficent work.

THE RETURN OF THE JEWS.

THOUGH the complete restoration of the Jews to their own land will not take place until, under the Napoleonic Antichrist, they are decoyed thither by a seven years' treaty, which he will repudiate when it has run half its course, prophecy leads us to expect that there will be a preliminary and gradual return of representative families. It is a noteworthy fact that this return has commenced in such numbers as to attract public attention. At a recent meeting in London, the Archbishop of Canterbury and Sir John Kennaway referred to it as a reason for increased zeal in evangelistic work among the Jews. Students of prophecy have long held that the final messengers of the gospel to the uttermost parts of the earth will be Jews converted at Christ's coming. The Archbishop, in speaking of their characteristics, pointed out their peculiar fitness for the work. He said:

"I have a letter from the Bishop of Jerusalem, who writes to me that quietly, since the beginning of this year, for some reason or other, the Turkish restrictions on the influx and settling of the Jews in Palestine are removed, and that it is now anticipated that, considering what the influx used to be under all those restrictions, they will come in by thousands. Now, if that be so, ten years hence, if you have thrown yourselves with energy on Palestine, think what will have happened if this influx goes on. You will have the most remarkable centre in the world. Other religious centres and localities decay, but that will have become more bright and thriving than ever. And what will the people be that you have there? A people trained among all nations, trained in every nation of the world, knowing the habitudes, the feelings, the principles that belong severally to all the nations of the world. Why, look at them now! Their very princes help all nations at this moment. It is not merely that they are strong on this Bourse, or that Exchange, but that they really are, with their immense capital, and with the sagacity with which they devote it to every end, helping all nations. And their poor, the world over, are doing the hardest and humblest work for the least recompense, and of all people they do it in the most patient, industrious, and self-denying spirit. Well, those characteristics of their rich and their poor will follow them; and, therefore, I say that if you do fix your whole heart on the work in Palestine, if you fix it there in a generous and comprehensive spirit, and try to enlist the sympathies of the whole Church in your k, you will have there an agency for the mission of Christianity, a power for the diffusion of Christianity, if you could make it Christian, such as can be found nowhere else."

dealing with the same subject, Sir John Ingham said: "You are looking forward to it is to be the sure word of prophecy as reads the work in Jerusalem, seeing that the Jews themselves are turned on the Holy Land. It is there that our chief thoughts and interests are centred. And the work there demands a special interest at the present time view of the great increase of the population. The first thirty or forty years of the Society's existence the number of Jews in Jerusalem itself was from 5,000 to 8,000, and in the whole of Palestine there were only 20,000 to 25,000. Now there are 25,000 in Jerusalem alone, and it is calculated that there are 60,000 in the whole of Palestine. And this is the case in spite of every opposition placed in the way by the Turkish Government. It is interesting to compare this with the 42,360 who returned after the captivity in Babylon as stated in Isaiah 61:4. And we are encouraged by the report of the Bishop of Jerusalem, who uses very remarkable words: 'We have now reached the opening demands and responsibility of a day of unique opportunities. Never, since our Lord's day, have there been so many converts after Christianity, never so general a withdrawal of prejudice and opposition. Never the rulers of the Jews show so kindly an attitude towards the work.'"

A FINANCIAL SIGN OF OUR TIMES.

By Rev. F. L. Chapell.*

Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days." 25:5-3.

Last Days to be the Wealthiest—The Wealth to be Piled Up—True Now of the World at Large—An Abnormal Age—An Unprecedented Increase of the World's Wealth—I. In Real Estate—II. In Inventions—III. In Trade—How is Used—To Increase Wealth—A Pressing Problem—When it will be Solved.

In the revised version the text reads, "Ye have laid up your treasure in the last days." The meaning is not essentially different, but a clearer, namely, that there would be an accumulation of wealth in the last days of the age. And we name this as one reason for saying that the end of the age is near—a sign found in things industrial and financial. Not only is there vast wealth in the world, but that wealth is piled up, instead of scattered abroad. The few, instead of the many, have it; in consequence, there is want and discontent and outcry on the part of the laborers who create it; as the next verse to the text goes on to say: "Behold the hire of the laborers, who have reaped down your field, is of you kept back by fraud, crieth," &c., while this has always been true, in particular times and places, especially with nations that have reached the acme of their glory and are to naught, it is now getting to be True of the World at Large, which is also coming to the acme of its present greatness and coming to naught. But we cannot understand this reason, as the Bible puts it, as we look at things as God looks at them. The reason why men do not believe the Bible is that they do not take God's point of view and conceive of His whole plan in reference to the earth and the race of man on the earth. They start from their own observation of present facts, instead of from God's revelation of past and future facts. They infer that the present condition of things is a normal and a natural one, which they are to improve as best they can; while God says that this present condition of things is an abnormal and unnatural one, which is to be endured until He shall re-establish the normal and the natural again.

Now, our text says that in the last days of the age there will be a heaping up of property. This, therefore, becomes one of the signs from his sermon published in the Christian Alliance.

that the end is drawing nigh. Just as in intellectual and locomotive matters there has been nothing like the present conditions, just so, in industrial and financial matters, there has been nothing like the conditions of the last century.

1. And, first, in regard to the availability of Real Estate.

In any recording of the wealth of the world, land is a very important item; for it is out of the soil that much of wealth is produced. To be sure, land is worth nothing unless it is improved. And it is never improved unless civilized man gets it in possession. But it is only within these fifty-eighth and fifty-ninth centuries of the world's history that a large part—perhaps, I might say half—of the best land of the world has been open to civilized man. North and South America, Australia, and the larger part of the continent of Africa have just been made available. And as population carries into these available regions, the increase in their value is fabulous. Less than three centuries ago, I doubt not, the whole of New York City could have been bought for a hundred dollars, if, indeed, any one could have been found who could give a title to it. Less than seventy-five years ago all Chicago was in like condition. And the same is true in hundreds of localities where property is now reckoned by millions.

All that some people have had to do in order to become wealthy has just been to sit still and see their real estate increase in value. Europe is, of course, worth more to-day than before America was discovered. Therefore, all of America's wealth is clear gain to the wealth of the world. The same is true in regard to Australia and many parts of Asia and Africa. Yea, the same is true to some extent, of the seas, which, while they are not owned by individuals, are yet yielding up their wealth to the use of man. Think, also, of the mines and the vast deposits of coal and oil that have recently come to light! The world is thus growing enormously, fabulously wealthy in these latter days. Population is, indeed, increasing, but probably not one thousandth part as fast as is the wealth of the world. We cannot realize it, since we have been born and brought up in this marvelous era. But when you take into view the long fifty-nine centuries past, the material development of our day is like a flash of lightning for suddenness and magnificence.

2. The Inventions of the present day. These create wealth by doing the work of thousands of men. The printing-press—what an army of scribes it draws pay for! The steam-engine—what millions of days' work it earns! The mower, the reaper, the thrasher, and all farm machinery—what wealth there is in it! The sewing machine—how many millions by common needles it distances! The numerous inventions in electricity, magnetism, and photography, &c., and all inventions—I cannot stop to enumerate them—have immensely increased the wealth of the world. An inventor becomes a millionaire in spite of himself. And all these things not only produce wealth of the standard and staple sort, such as was in existence before, but they themselves become articles of value. An inventory of the world's property to-day would show hundreds of things of the greatest value—such as railroads, telegraphs, &c.—that had no existence whatever one hundred years ago. And production of manufactured articles becomes sometimes so enormous that factories and mills are forced into idleness until the glut in the market abates. Thus by inventions alone the wealth of the world is enormously increased.

3. But, also, consider the fact that Markets Become World-wide.

The facilities for transportation are such that a market is found for many things that even fifty years ago could not be sold. In my boyhood I saw fed to the swine luscious fruits that now would command the cash in the cities. We now have California fruits on our tables, whereas fifty years ago we scarcely realized that there was such a country as California. Some of us remember the California gold-fever of '49. It was a wild and far-off land then. Only forty years have passed, and what wealth California alone has added to the world! Then a millionaire was almost unknown. Now they are common enough. And even the billionaires are figuring in literature, although it is well-nigh impossible for the human mind to really grasp what is meant by such a term. Comparisons of different epochs are difficult, but it is probably a very safe thing to say that the world is worth a thousand times more than it was one hundred years ago, or even ever before in all its fifty-nine centuries of history.

What I have hitherto said has reference to the creation and increase of wealth. We now come to the more important question:

What is Done With This Wealth?

Is it distributed among the many? Is it used for temporary needs, with the thought that the present age is soon to pass away? Is it poured freely forth to spread the glad tidings of the age to come? Ah no! It is heaped together and held with the idea of the permanency of the present age. For, in the first place, the very laws of trade themselves centre wealth with the few rather than with the many. In the great city, which is the centre of trade, we find the millionaire on one street and the beggar on the next. Grant, if you please, that the millionaire has lawfully come by his millions. He nevertheless has them. Treasure is heaped up with him, while hundreds all around him are in actual need. And he not only has his treasure, but he is also determined to keep it and add to it.

Money makes Money.

He can control the market; he can make a "corner," for example, in wheat, which will put millions more in his heap, even if it raises the price of every loaf throughout Christendom. Now, if the man to whom the millions come, in the course of trade, were a believer in the age to come, he would say, "I must make a temporary use of this wealth." He could easily find ways enough of using it, and might bless thousands in so doing. A few there are who endeavor thus to use their treasure. But they are so very few that they make but little impression on the general drift of the world's financial affairs. The vast majority have no thought whatever of the age to come. The temporariness of the present age does not enter at all into their calculations. But, rather, permanent possession is their only thought and ideal. And so the heaping-up process goes on.

Not only is this state of things calling the attention of God—it is also calling the attention of man. Never before in all the world's history was there so much thought given to the problems arising out of the peculiar conditions of financial affairs. So prominent is this financial question becoming, so pressing are these industrial necessities, that they are made the rallying-cry in political campaigns, and the themes for sermons in so-called Christian pulpits. Indeed, they are becoming the burning questions of the hour, because they press so heavily upon the masses of mankind. Fifty years more of such heaping as we have seen in the last fifty would make somebody cry out in very agony for the last day to come. For these questions cannot possibly be settled satisfactorily in the present age. Only the age to come will settle them, by creating new conditions of society and new methods of life.

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION—1888.

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 328 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICE, 71 AND 73 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 3 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

We are changing our system of mailing the paper to subscribers for the purpose of insuring greater safety in transit through the mails, and thus, if possible, prevent its loss. Heretofore, when more than one subscriber was receiving the paper at the same office, all the papers were enclosed in one wrapper, which is the way almost all papers are mailed. This necessitated the papers being taken out of the wrappers at the post-office for distribution, and, we are convinced, caused delay and loss of papers. To prevent this, we are placing every paper in its own separate wrapper, with the FULL address printed on it. Part of our list has already been changed, and the remainder is being done as rapidly as possible.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The International Marine Conference to be held in Washington, D. C., in October next is expected to be a thoroughly representative one, and its decisions and recommendations will probably be the means of averting wrecks and collisions. The following countries have thus far accepted invitations to participate in the conference: Great Britain, Germany, France, Italy, Denmark, Russia, Belgium, Mexico, Brazil, Chili, Costa Rica, Guatemala, Hawaii, Japan, the Netherlands, Nicaragua, Spain, Sweden and Norway, Uruguay, and Honduras. The United States will be represented by a board of seven persons, and it is expected that the larger powers will have the same number of representatives. The smaller countries, it is thought, will generally be represented by their Ministers here, assisted by one or more experts in the subjects before the conference. Congress appropriated only $20,000 for the expenses of the conference, and it is probable that a deficiency appropriation will have to be made.

The Effort to Secure the Abolition of Sunday parades in the army appears at last to have some prospect of success. A press dispatch from Washington says that the order abolishing Sunday morning inspections, and otherwise making Sunday a day of rest in the army will receive Executive approval at an early date. Fully three-fourths in the army are in favor of the reform, and, with few exceptions, the other fourth are indifferent in the matter. Having lately learned the sentiment of the majority of army officers through the Inspector-General, who has been in daily receipt of communications on the subject during the past few months, the President has signified his willingness to act in the matter.

The Invitations to the Central and South American Conference in Washington have been accepted by the Governments of Mexico, Guatemala, Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia, Chili, Argentine Republic, Uruguay, and Venezuela. It is expected that Mexico will be represented by several delegates; the Argentine Republic by three delegates, Chili by two delegates, Venezuela by two delegates, and the other countries named by one delegate each. The conference will be composed of about forty delegates, ten of whom will represent the United States. On matters which are voted upon, each country will be entitled to only one vote. Among the subjects to be discussed are: Measures toward the formation of an American Customs Union, under which the trade of the American nations with each other shall, so far as possible and profitable, be promoted; the adoption of a uniform system of weights and measures, and laws to protect the patent rights, copyrights, and trade-marks of citizens of either country in the other, and for the extradition of criminals; the adoption of a common silver coinage, to be issued by each Government, the same to be legal-tender in all commercial transactions between the citizens of all of the American States; an agreement upon and recommendation for adoption to their respective Governments of a definite plan of arbitration of all questions, disputes, and differences that may now or hereafter arise between them, to the end that all difficulties and disputes between such nations may be settled and wars prevented.

A Protectorate of Samoa by the United States is earnestly desired by King Mataafa, who has formally renewed the application previously made by King Malietoa. Writing to Admiral Kimberley just before the last mail left Samoa, the King said, after expressing his determination not to prosecute the war any further: "I declare that Samoa would escape danger if the United States alone were to protect and give their support to it, and be the sole master of all Samoa, without the interference of any other Power, for in years gone by we have been endeavoring to form a strong government on the basis of protection by three Powers. In consequence Samoa has been constantly torn to pieces, and many lives have been lost, and the country has been brought down to a very low condition. On this account we are sure that a recurrence of the triple system would be useless." This declaration, and geographical considerations, all point in the same direction, but are little likely to weigh with the Conference on the subject now sitting in Berlin. Beside which, our Government does not desire the office.

The Work on the Nicaragua Canal is to be commenced this month. Mr. C. P. Treat, one of the contractors, who is now in Chicago, told a reporter last week that he had been over the whole route and had found no indications of serious engineering difficulties. He said, "The heaviest piece of work on the line is the great divide cut across the San Francisco range. The cut is to be through rock three miles long, with an average depth of 120 feet, which is the heaviest work ever undertaken." Mr. Treat believed there would be no health troubles, such as interfered with the Panama enterprise. In Nicaragua the northeast trade winds blow eight or nine months in the year, and thus drive away malaria and keep the temperature down. The engineers of the company have been there a year and a half under the most trying circumstances, and not one was seriously ill during that time. An expedition will start from the United States this week, and upon its arrival at Greytown active work will be begun.

The Rapid Accumulation of Silver Dollars in the Treasury is a fact to which a financial journal called public attention last week. It points out that whereas, on January 1 there were thirteen millions of them in the Treasury, there are now twenty-one millions. This shows that of the twelve millions coined this year, only four millions have gone into circulation. It may, therefore, be expected that the President will not avail himself of the power given him by the Allison Act, of doubling the coinage of the unpopular coin. The same journal states, on authority which it says is reliable, that there has commenced a steady and increasing return of the dollars to the sub-treasuries of the Eastern States, which indicates a still larger accumulation in the Government vaults.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, now assembled in New York, reached on Friday last the critical question of co-operation with the Southern Church in the evangelization of the colored race. The question came up on the report of the conference committee jointly appointed by the two assemblies. This report recommended that the relations of the colored people in the two churches be allowed to remain in statu quo, the work among them to proceed on the same lines as heretofore, and that the Northern churches should agree to aid and recommend to givers the schools and other work undertaken by the Southern Assembly, especially its Tuscaloosa Institute for the education of colored ministers. While the debate on the report was in progress in New York, telegram was received from Chattanooga, where the Southern Assembly is in session, stating that the report had passed that assembly by vote of 99 to 27. The debate was continued in the Northern Assembly, and Dr. M. Woolse Stryker, of Chicago, succeeded in getting passed by a small majority an amendment omitting from the conference report the words, "While by conceding the existing situation, it approve the policy of separate churches, presbyteries and synods, subject to the choice of the colored people themselves." With this exception the entire report on Fraternal Co-operation in Christian Work, prepared by the joint committee, was passed, and a telegram was sent to Chattanooga informing the Southern Assembly of what had been done. The question of revising the confession of faith came up on Friday. It was decided to ask the 216 presbyteries to report, (1) Whether revision was desired, and (2) If so, in what respect, and to what extent.

A Warm Welcome to England was tendered to Mr. Lincoln, the new United States Minister, on his arrival on May 22. Elaborate preparations had been made by the Mayor of Liverpool to give him not only a hearty reception, but a banquet. Minister Lincoln was evidently touched by the sincerity of his greeting, and, shaking hands warmly, he expressed his pleasure in meeting the Mayor and his friends. In response to an invitation to remain to the banquet proposed in his honor, Mr. Lincoln said that he regretted his inability to remain even for one night, as the railway arrangements had been made for him to go through to London at once. The Minister's party were driven in special carriages to the Northwestern station, and they left almost immediately on the afternoon express for London. On the following day he was introduced to the Marquis of Salisbury, the English Premier, and arrangements were made to visit the Queen on Saturday.

The Parnell Commission had Mr. William O'Brien, the editor of United Ireland, on the witness-stand last week. He had not the command of temper that Mr. Parnell displayed, and his evidence consequently injured his cause with the court and the public. One of his statements was that the murder of the Manchester policeman—one of the most cowardly murders ever committed—was not a crime, but legitimate warfare. He also admitted the authorship of an article declaring that the chairman of the committee selected to receive the Prince of Wales on the occasion of his visit to Ireland would be hunted from public life. At this point Mr. O'Brien became excited, and vehemently exclaimed, "He has been, and rather than allow Englishmen to be deceived by a show of sham loyalty I am resolved to tell them the truth." The worst feature of his evidence, however, and that most injurious to his country, was the statement that if it was clear that England would not satisfy the aspirations of Ireland, and if there was any rational chance of success, an attempt should be made to rebel. When it was remembered that Mr. Parnell is endeavoring to convince the court, the Parliament, and the people that Ireland would be loyal, peaceful, and contented under Home Rule, the evidence of Mr. O'Brien is most disastrous.

The Inauguration of a Pan-Slavic Crusade is threatened. The Servians propose to observe this year the five hundredth anniversary of the battle of Kossovo. In that battle the Servian monarchy was destroyed, and was not revived until, in 1878, the Berlin Congress reconstituted Servia a kingdom under King Milan. The Servian people had no spirit to take up the matter, but under his son, the new king, who has Russian blood in his veins, and is under Russian influence, the Servians once more cherish hope of recovering their old prestige and becoming the centre of a great Slavic nationality.

The Margaret Strachan Home for the friendless and fallen in West Twenty-seventh Street, New York, to which reference was made recently in these columns as being under a heavy mortgage and in need of help, has reason for thankfulness. The publicity given by the Sun and other journals to the merits of the institution and its needs has evoked a prompt response. Every dollar of the $10,000 mortgage has been paid. A large truck of furniture has been sent from one of the river-towns, and quantities of second-hand clothing from Yonkers and other places. Letters of sympathy and encouragement containing remittances ranging from one dollar to fifty, gladdened the hearts of the managers, and they are now thanking God that the beneficent work is relieved from its embarrassing burdens.

A Curious Anomaly in New York Police methods is pointed out by a daily journal. It states that the police have an elaborate system for discovering the homes of lost children when they find them, but they have no plan or method for rescuing children when they are lost. The police sergeants are helpless when a parent notifies them that a child has strayed away. The idea of sending at once to the neighborhood and scouring it for news or clues of the direction the child took, or where and how it was last seen, has never occurred to our police thus far in all the years our city has been in existence. The Christian worker's difficulty differs from both those. He knows where God's lost children are, and he knows the home standing ready to receive them, but too often he cannot persuade them to seek it through the living Way. (Jer. 3:22.)

Wild Beasts on the Streets of Chicago caused a scare on May 18. Just as a circus wagon was crossing the tracks on the Chicago & Evanston Railroad a train dashed up. The engine struck the rear of the wagon and smashed it. Instantly a lion, two large wolves, and a panther leaped out through the opening, and made a break for liberty. They went in different directions, and with such speed that the circus employees lost sight of them. People on the streets fled at their approach, and for more than half an hour there was a panic in that section of the city. Eventually the lion was found crouching on the top of a pile of lumber, and with some difficulty was coaxed into an undamaged cage. Soon afterwards the other animals were traced and secured, but it was some time before the terrified people who had seen them bounding down the streets or heard their roars and howls, ventured forth from the refuges to which they betook themselves. Their alarm was very natural; but if they took a Scriptural view of their condition, they would feel still greater apprehension when they see around them indications of the presence of the great enemy of souls whose malignity is far more to be dreaded. (1 Pet. 5:8.)

Three Dangerous, Uncharted Islands Were discovered by the captain of a ship which arrived at Portland, Ore., from China, on May 20. The captain states that when twenty days out from Hong-Kong on his voyage home, he was called up from his cabin by his mate, who, in a state of great excitement, informed him that there was land right ahead. The captain told the mate he must be mistaken; there was no land in their course, and showed his chart, on which no land in that position was marked. As the mate insisted, the captain went on deck, and there, about five miles ahead, he saw three high, rocky islands, about a quarter of a mile apart, clearly defined in the moonlight. There was a good wind, and the vessel was making nine knots an hour. In a very short time she would strike the reefs. Instantly the captain ordered the ship hauled to by the wind, and sailed to the westward, just skirting the islands. It was a narrow escape, for if the night had not been clear, the vessel would have gone right on the rocks, and not a soul on board would have been saved. The islands are in a lonely part of the ocean, and, as the captain showed, are not marked on any chart. He believes they are a very recent upheaval, and he warns other captains sailing that route to be on the look-out for them. That is only common humanity, and his warning is sure to be heeded. It is not always so, however, with warnings which are given of dangers in the voyage of life. New forms of evil and temptation, against which there is no explicit warning in the Bible, spring up with our advanced civilization, and cause the wreck of souls. Constant watchfulness and prayer are necessary to safety. (Prov. 16:17.)

A Bonnet Show in a Church in Kentucky has involved a suspension of the services for one Sunday, according to a press dispatch from Owingsville, Ky. The reporter states that no service would be held at — Church in Bath County on May 26, because of a fashionable custom which the minister wishes to break up. He says: "Annually, on the fourth Sunday in May, for many years past, it has been the habit for all the pretty women for miles around to array themselves in their best new clothing, and go to the services at — Church. By and by this rivalry among the Kentucky ladies centralized itself on bonnets. It was the particular aim of each to wear a new bonnet which would eclipse that of any of her neighbors. Thus the day came to be known as the 'bonnet show' day, and was famous through the surrounding counties." On "bonnet show day," the church would not hold all who came, and people stood outside and gazed through the windows at the congregation. The minister and officers of the church last year requested that the custom be discontinued, but no lady came in her old bonnet. The same request was issued this year, but as it was soon apparent that it would be disregarded, the minister decided to hold no services on that day. It may be hoped that so marked a reproof will lead to the discontinuance of the foolish custom. In a Christian church, of all places, the Apostolic rule for personal adornment should be observed. (1 Peter 3:3, 4.)

A Warning to Immigrants from Russia appears in a journal of St. Paul, Minn. A resident of that city recently received a letter from a Russian friend who has a business in St. Paul, but last year went on a visit to his native country. He is now in prison in Russia awaiting his trial. It appears that on his arrival at his old home he was questioned about his residence in the United States. He explained that he went to earn a living, and that, admiring our Constitution and Government, he declared his intentions of becoming a citizen, abjured his allegiance to the Czar, and had received naturalization papers. The Russian Government officials reported the case to headquarters, and an order for his arrest was promptly returned. He was accordingly seized and incarcerated. It appears that while the Washington Government does everything possible to guard and protect citizens, native or naturalized, while abroad, there is no treaty with Russia on this point, and it seems to be the case there that when a man is once a Russian he is always a Russian, and amenable to Russian laws. The case is therefore published as a warning to naturalized citizens of Russian origin against venturing into the jurisdiction of the sovereign whom they have abjured. A similar warning might advantageously be given to young Christians who, feeling safe in their Christian profession, venture back into the saloon or the theatre, or any of their old haunts. Christ is able to keep them from Satan's clutches, but their temerity may cost them suffering and remorse. (11 Peter 2:20.)

The Pursuit of Many Demons was the Excuse given by a man who attempted suicide in New York on May 21. A short time after sunrise on that day a policeman on duty near South Ferry saw a middle-aged man run out of the ferry-house and make for the sea-wall, as if to throw himself over. The policeman ran after him, and seized him before he could accomplish his purpose. After a severe struggle the policeman overpowered him, and took him to the Harbor Police Station. There the prisoner admitted that he intended suicide. He said he was an officer in the U. S. Artillery, but had left his quarters on Governor's Island because they were haunted with demons. He went to the Astor House, but there the figures on the wall-paper became devils too, and attacked him. He fled to the street, but they pursued him, and when he took refuge in the ferry-house they came after him there, and, headed by their Captain "a villainous-looking fellow whom they called Beelzebub," tried to seize him and carry him off. He said he was going to jump into the water to escape them. The poor fellow was evidently demented, and word having been sent to Governor's Island, some of his friends came and took charge of him. Though they ridiculed his fancy, it was obviously very real to the sufferer. If his mind had not been unbalanced, however, he would have realized that in committing suicide he would fall more completely into their power, rather than escape them. For those whom fiends pursue—and more people are so pursued than are conscious of it—there is but one way of escape, and that is to cry to Jesus for deliverance. (Luke 10:18, 19.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Laura Bridgman, the famous blind deaf-mute, died on May 24 at South Boston, Mass. She was in her sixtieth year.

Dr. Bischoff, of Elizabeth, N. J., a graduate of Princeton Seminary, has been ordained by the Presbytery of Elizabeth, to go as a missionary to Bulgaria.

A gift of $25,000 has been made to the Wesleyan University of Middletown, Conn., by Daniel Ayres, M. D., LL. D. It will be devoted to the endowment of a Professorship of Biology.

The Rev. Thomas Harrison on May 26 closed his six weeks' revival services at Tabernacle Church, Greenpoint, N. Y. A very large number of persons have joined the church on probation.

Rev. C. M. Murphey and Mr. W. T. Eavens, of Decatur, Ill., have just concluded revival services at Sparta, Ill. They continued three weeks, and were blessed to the conversion of nearly 500 souls.

Three interesting baptisms on profession of faith, took place in the Third Avenue Presbyterian Church, Detroit, on May 12. They were of a man aged eighty-two; his son, aged forty-seven; and his grandson, aged sixteen.

About six hundred and fifty delegates from America have announced their intention of being present at the World's Sunday-school Convention, which meets in London on July 2, and extends over the three following days.

The Turkish Grand Vizier has just given the Bible House at Constantinople permission to print 35,000 portions of the Bible in Turkish. They will include the Psalms, Proverbs, the Gospels, and Acts of the Apostles.

The Rev. Dr. W. A. Leonard, of Washington, D. C., has been chosen at the Protestant Episcopal Convention of the Diocese of Ohio as assistant Bishop to the venerable Bishop Bedell. If Bishop Bedell's resignation is accepted, Dr. Leonard will succeed to the full office.

Major Whittle's recent gospel meetings in Dundee and Stirling, Scotland, were most successful. Dr. Moxey assisted, and the interest resulting is widespread and profound. At his closing service in the Music Hall, Aberdeen, hundreds were unable to procure admission. He is shortly returning to America.

George Sexton, Ph. D., LL.D., Fellow and Gold Medalist of the Society of Science, London, is to deliver a lecture before the Summer School of the American Institute of Christian Philosophy at Key East, N. J., on the 19th of next July. His subject will be "The Folly of Atheism Intensified by Modern Discovery."

The Order of the King's Daughters hold their annual meeting this day, May 29, in the Broadway Tabernacle, corner Broadway and Thirty-fourth Street, New York City. There will be a morning session for prayer and conference at 11 o'clock, led by the President, Mrs. Margaret Bottome, and an afternoon session at 3 p. m.

Mr. C. S. Mason, the Young Men's Evangelist, is holding meetings in San Francisco. They will continue through June. Eight services will be held weekly in the rooms of the Y. M. C. A. A series of meetings for young people has been commenced in the First Baptist Church, after which he will hold a ten days' mission in other churches consecutively.

Rev. Wilbur F. Craits, Field Secretary of the American Sabbath Union, is planning to visit every State and Territory (except some of those recently visited) before the end of the year, to promote the observance of both the religious and the civil Sabbath, by organizing State and county and city Sabbath associations, or preparing the way for such organizations. His address is 74 East Ninetieth Street, New York.

THE GATE WIDE OPEN.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be delivered." Joel 2: 32.

The Morning Star of Gospel Times—The Promise Still Holding Good—I. Something always Wanted—Deliverance From Present Trouble—From Future Trouble—In the Hour of Death—II. The Way in Which Deliverance is to be Had—By Prayer—What is Included in the Name—Power and Mercy Implied—When the Promise will be Withdrawn—III. To Whom the Promise is Made—The Afflicted—The Vicious—Preachers as Well as Sinners—People Without Good Feeling—IV. The Blessing Itself—V. The Common Neglect of It—A Pathetic Reproach.

In the worst times that can ever happen, there is still salvation for men. When day turns to night, and life becomes death, and the staff of life is broken, and the hope of man has fled, there still remains in God, in the person of His dear Son, deliverance to all those who will call upon the name of the Lord. We do not know what is to happen: reading the roll of the future, we prophesy dark things; but still this light shall always shine between the rifts of the cloud-wrack: "Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered."

This passage was selected by the apostle at Pentecost to be set in its place as a sort of Morning Star of Gospel Times.

When the Spirit was poured out upon the servants and the handmaids, and sons and daughters began to prophesy, it was clear that the wondrous time had come, which had been foretold so long before. Then Peter, as he preached his memorable sermon, told the people, "Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved;" thus giving a fuller and yet more evangelical meaning to the word "delivered." "Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered" from sin, death, and hell—shall, in fact, be so delivered as to be, in divine language, "saved"—saved from the guilt, the penalty, the power, of sin, saved from the wrath to come. These gospel times are still the happy days in which "whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved."

I have nothing to do but to tell you over again the old, old story of infinite mercy come to meet infinite sin—of free grace come to lead free will into a better line of things—of God Himself appearing to undo man's ruin wrought by man, and to lift him up by a great deliverance. May the Holy Spirit graciously aid me while I shall talk to you very simply, thus:

I. First, there is Something Always Wanted.

That something is deliverance, or "salvation." It is always wanted. It is the requisite of man, wherever man is found. As long as there are men on the face of the earth, there will always be a need of salvation.

Dear friends, while we mingle only with those who are saved, we forget how much need there is still of a divine salvation. If we could go through London, into its dens and slums, we should think very differently of human need from what we do when we simply come from our own quiet domestic circle, and step into our pew and hear a sermon. The world is still sick and dying. The world is still corrupting and rotting. The world is a ship in which the water is rising fast, and the vessel is going down into the deep of destruction. God must step in, and bring deliverance, or there remains no hope.

Some want deliverance from present trouble. If you are in this need now through very sore distress, I invite you to take my text as your guide, and believe that "whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered." Depend upon it, in any form of distress, physical, mental, or whatever it may be, prayer is wonderfully available. "Call upon me," says God, "in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me." If you are so down at the heel that your foot is on the bare pavement; if you have come to this place in bodily sickness, and feel as if you should die on the seat in which you sit; if there be no physician to help you, and no friend to stretch out a generous hand, call upon God, I beseech you. You have come to the end of men; you are now at the beginning of God. See whether your Maker will forget you. See whether the great, generous heart of God does not still beat tenderly towards the sorrowful and the afflicted.

This is true whenever you come into a position of deep personal distress, even though it should not be of a physical kind. When you do not know how to act, but are bewildered and at your wits' end, when wave of trouble has followed wave of trouble till you are like the sailor in the storm, who reels to and fro, and staggers like a drunken man; if now you cannot help yourself, call upon God, call upon God.

The text holds good concerning deliverance

From Future Troubles.

What is to happen in the amazing future we do not know. Whatever is to happen according to the Word of God—if the sun shall be turned into darkness and the moon into blood—if God shall show great wonders in the heavens and in the earth, blood and fire and pillars of smoke, yet remember that though you will then assuredly want deliverance, deliverance will still be near at hand. The star Wormwood may fall, but we shall be saved if we call upon the name of the Lord. Plagues may be poured out, trumpets may sound, and judgments may follow one another as quickly as the plagues of Egypt, but "Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved." When the need of deliverance shall apparently increase, the abundance of salvation shall increase with it.

Yes, and when you come to die, when to you the sun has turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, this text ensures deliverance in the last dread hour. Call upon the name of the Lord, and you shall be saved. Amid the pains of death, and the gloom of departure, you shall enjoy a glorious visitation, which shall turn darkness into light, and sorrow into joy. When you wake up amid the realities of the eternal future there will be in resurrection, or judgment, or in the yawning mouth of hell. If you have called upon the name of the Lord, you shall still be delivered. Stands the promise firm, whatever may be hidden in the great roll of the future; God cannot deny Himself; He will deliver those who call upon His name.

Nothing for You to Dread

What is wanted, then, is salvation; and I do think, beloved brethren, that you and I who preach the Word, and long to save souls, must very often go over this grand old truth about salvation to the guilty, deliverance to all who call upon the name of the Lord. Sometimes we talk to friends about the higher life, about attaining to very high degrees of sanctity; and all this is very proper and very good; but still the great fundamental truth is, "Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved." Get where you may, however high your experience, be what you may, however great your usefulness, you will always want to come back to the same ground upon which the poorest and weakest of hearts must stand, and claim to be saved by almighty grace, through simply calling upon the name of the Lord.

II. Now, secondly, let us attentively observe the way in which this Deliverance is to be Had.

Is not the most obvious sense of this language prayer? Are we not brought to the Lord by a prayer which trusts in God—by a prayer which asks God to give the deliverance that is needed, and expects to have it from the Lord, as a gift of grace? It amounts to much the same thing as that other word, "Believe and live;" for how shall they call on Him of whom they have not heard? And if they have heard, yet vain is their calling if they have not believed as well as heard. But to "call on the name of the Lord" is briefly to pray a believing prayer, to cry to God for His help, and to leave yourself in His hands. This is very simple, is it not?

What a suitable way of salvation it is to those who feel that they can do nothing! Ah, dear hearts! if we had to preach to them a very difficult and elaborate salvation, they would perish. They have not the mind, some of them, to follow our directions if they were at all intricate; and they have not enough hope to venture upon anything that looks at all difficult. But if it be true that "Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved," this method is simple and available, and they catch at it. He can pray to God who

Can Do Nothing Else.

Thank God, he need not want to do anything else; for if he can call for help, he gets deliverance, and, in that deliverance, he gets all that he will ever want between this place and heaven.

The text, however, contains within it a measure of specific instruction. We read, "Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord." Now, by the word "name" we understand the person, the character, of the Lord. The more, then, you know about the Lord, and the better you know His name, the more intelligently will you call upon that name. If you know His power, you will call upon that power to help you. If you know His mercy, you will call upon Him in His grace to save you. But, little as you may know, call on Him according to the little you do know. Cast yourself upon Him, whether your trouble be external or internal; but especially if it be internal, if it be the trouble of sin, if it be the burden of guilt, if it be a load of horror and fear because of wrath to come, call upon the name of the Lord, for you shall be delivered.

Dear friends, I speak to some whom I know to be now present, who are Under Severe Trial.

You dare not look up. You seem to be given up; at any rate you have given yourself up; and yet, I pray you, call upon the name of the Lord. You cannot perish praying; no one has ever done so. If you could perish praying, you would be a new wonder in the universe. A man calling on God, and rejected of God!—the supposition is not to be endured. There will come a day—but that is not now—there will come a day in the next state when He will say, "I called, but ye refused;" but it is not so now. While there is life there is hope.

I recollect a time when, if I had heard a sermon on this subject, putting it plainly to me, I should have leaped into comfort and light in a single moment. Is it not such a time with you? I thought I must do something, I must be something, I must in some way prepare myself for the mercy of God. I did not know that a calling upon God, a trusting myself in His hand, an invocation of His sacred name, would bring me to Christ, the Saviour. But so it stands, and happy indeed was I when I found it out. Heaven is given away. Salvation may be had for the asking.

The People Delivered.

III. Now I come to notice, in the third place, the people to whom this promise and this deliverance will be given. "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be delivered." According to the connection, the people had been greatly afflicted—afflicted beyond all precedent, afflicted to the very brink of despair; but, the Lord said, "Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved." Go down to the hospital. You may select, if you please, the hospital which deals with the effects of vice. In that house of misery you may stand at each bed and say, "Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved." You may then hasten to the jail. You may stop at every door of every cell, yes, even at the grating of the condemned cell, if there lie men and women there given up to death, and you may with safety say to each one, "Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered."

I know what the Pharisees will say—"If you preach this, men will go on in sin." It has always been so, that the great mercy of God has been turned by some into a reason for continuing in sin; but God (and this is the wonder of it) has never restricted His mercy because of that. It must have been a terrible provocation of Almighty grace when men have perverted His mercy into an excuse for sin, but the Lord has never even taken the edges off from His mercy because men have misused it: He has still made it stand out bright and clear: "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." Still He cries, "Turn and live." "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord, and He will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for He will abundantly pardon."

Yes, but there were some, according to Joel, who had the Spirit of God poured out upon them. What about them? Were they saved by that? Oh, no!

Those Who Had the Spirit of God so that they dreamed dreams and saw visions, yet had to come to the palace of mercy by this same gate of believing prayer—"Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved." Ah, poor souls! you say to yourselves, "If we were deacons of churches, if we were pastors, oh, then we should be saved!" You do not know anything about it: church officers are no more saved by their office than you are by being without office. We owe nothing to our official position in this matter of salvation; in fact, we may owe our damnation to our official standing unless we look well to our ways. We have no preference over you plain folks. I do assure you I am quite happy to take your hand, whoever you may be, and come to Christ on the same footing as yourself.

Also, there were some upon whom the Spirit of God did not fall. They did not speak with tongues, nor prophesy the future, nor work miracles; but though they did none of these marvels, yet it stood true to them—"Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved." What though no supernatural gift was bestowed, though they saw no vision, and could not speak with tongues, they called upon the name of the Lord, and they were saved. There is the same way of salvation for the little as well as for the great, for the poorest and most obscure as well as for those that are strong in faith, and lead the hosts of God to the battle.

"Ah," says another, "but I have

No Good Feelings

I would give all that I have to possess a broken heart. I wish I could even feel despair, but I am hard as a stone." I have been told that sorrowful story many times, and it almost always happens that those who most mourn their want of feeling are those who feel most acutely. Their hearts are like hell-hardened steel, so they say; but it is not true. But if it were true, "Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved." Do you think that the Lord wants you to give yourself a new heart first, and that then He will save you? My dear soul, you are saved when you have a new heart, and you do not want Him to save you then, since you are saved. Come without any good feeling. Come just as you are. Come, you that are like a frozen iceberg, that have nothing about you whatever, but that which chills and repels; come and call upon the name of the Lord, and you shall be saved.

IV. I want you to dwell for a minute upon

The Blessing Itself.

"Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered." I need not say much about it because I have already expounded it. It is a very good rule, when a man makes you a promise, to understand it in the narrowest sense. It is fair to him that you should do so. Let him interpret it liberally, if he pleases, but he is actually bound to give you no more than the bare terms his promise will imply. Now, it is a rule which all God's people may well practice, always to understand God's promises in the largest possible sense. If the words will bear a bigger construction than at the first sight they naturally suggest to you, you may put the larger construction upon them. "He is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or even think." Come, then, if you are the subject of the judgments of God; if you believe that God's hand has visited you on account of sin, call upon Him, and He will deliver you both from the judgment, and from the guilt that brought the judgment—from the sin, and from that which follows the sin.

The Fret and Trouble.

And if your case should be different, if you are a child of God, and you are in trouble, and that trouble eats into your spirit, and causes you daily wear of spirit and tear of heart—call upon the Lord. He can take away from you the fret and the trouble too. "Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered." You may have to bear the trouble, but it shall be so transformed as to be rather a blessing than an evil, and you shall fall in love with your cross, since the nature of it has been changed.

If sin be the great cause of your present trouble, and that sin has brought you into bondage to evil habits, if you have been a drunkard, and do not know how to learn sobriety, if you have been unchaste, and have become entangled in vicious connections, call upon God, and He can break you away from the sin, and set you free from all its entanglements. He can cut you loose tonight with the great sword of His grace, and make you a free man. Only call upon the name of the Lord! Call upon the name of the Lord, and you shall be delivered. Yes, and I repeat what I said just now. If you have come under the power of disease, if you are near to die, if already death has written his name legibly upon your body, and you are afraid of death and hell, yet call upon the name of the Lord, and you shall be delivered at this last moment.

V. In conclusion, I must remind you of one mournful thought. Let me warn you of

The Sadly Common Neglect

of this blessing. You would think that everybody would call upon the name of the Lord; but read the text, "For in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance, as the Lord hath said." It shall be there as the Lord hath said. Will they not have it then? Notice! "And in the remnant whom the Lord shall call." It seems to shrivel me up altogether, that word "remnant." What! Will they not come? Are they madmen? Will they not come? No, only a remnant; and even that remnant will not call upon the name of the Lord until first God calls them by His grace. This is almost as great a wonder as the love which so graciously invites them. Could even devils behave worse? If they were invited to call upon God, and be saved, would they refuse?

Unhappy business! The way is plain, but "few there be that find it." After all the preaching, and all the invitation, and the illimitable breadth of the promise, yet all that are saved are contained "in whom the Lord shall call." Is not our text an invitation; the setting open of the door, yea, the lifting of the door from off its hinges, that it never might be shut? And yet "broad is the gate, and wide is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat." There they come, streams of them, hurrying impatiently, rushing down to death and hell—yes, eagerly panting, hurrying, dashing against one another to descend to that awful gulf from which there is no return! This is all that sovereign mercy rescues after all—a remnant, and that remnant only because the arm of the Lord is revealed, and a miraculous power exerted upon their wills.

The Remnant

This is the misery of it, that the guilty are not willing to be parted from their sins. They will not seek that which alone is their life, their joy, their salvation. They prefer hell to heaven, sin to holiness. Never spake the Master a word which observation more clearly proves than when He said, "Ye will not come to Me, that ye might have life." Jesus cries, "Ye search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of Me; but ye will not come to Me, that ye might have life." You will do anything rather than come to Jesus. You stop short of calling upon Him. O my dear hearers, do not let it be so with you! Many of you are saved; I beseech you, intercede for those who are not saved. Oh, that the unconverted among you may be moved to pray. Before you leave this place, breathe an earnest prayer to God, saying, "God be merciful to me a sinner. Lord, I need to be saved. Save me. I call upon Thy name." Join with me in prayer at this moment, I entreat you.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

A BUSINESS MAN'S DELIVERANCES.*

SHORTLY after accepting Christianity I began to notice peculiar incidents in my business. Mistakes and accidents which at first seemed disastrous, resulted to my advantage. These occurrences happened so often that it seemed impossible that they could be mere coincidences. It seemed as if someone was silently guiding and guarding my business. It dawned upon me at last that this was the divine help referred to in the passage: "In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and he shall direct thy paths." (Prov. 3:6.)

One day in my office about two hundred pounds of the plaster fell from the ceiling. At a desk directly under the break, a young girl sat every working day for six months. Five minutes before the crash, an emergency had arisen which necessitated sending her out on an errand. She had never before been asked to perform an errand. If she had been in her seat, that heavy two-inch plaster would undoubtedly have crushed her skull. I believe God produced the emergency that saved her life.

May 1st, needing a place for large work, I rented another room for a year. Five months afterward, when I handed in a cheque as usual for the month's rent, I was told I could not have the place any longer. The landlord repudiated the verbal lease. I said, "All right," and gave up the place. I decided not to procure another place until another contract for large work came in. From the time that cheque was refused until the following May, I did not have a single order for large work. I did not need the room. That landlord's rascally repudiation of the lease saved me seven months' rent. "All things work together for good to those who love God." (Rom. 8:28.)

At a Banner-Raising.

During the last campaign we had an order for a banner to be swung on the occasion of a political meeting. It was delivered at 6 o'clock, but could not be hung because of a net-work of telegraph wires in front of the club-room. The sign-hangers on the roofs endeavored to pull the wires apart, but without avail. The club-room was lighted up. The crowd began to assemble. If the banner was not up soon it would not be accepted. That meant a loss of $150. The band arrived. The sign-hangers renewed their efforts. It was no use. Failure stared us in the face. At this juncture, we saw passing on the other side of the street two men who, we thought, might help us. We hailed them and told our predicament. They were telegraphic linemen with their spurs on. They mounted the poles, cut the dead wires, separated the live ones and the banner was swung. Nothing on earth but linemen could have saved us. There they were! How did they happen to be there? "I am with thee to deliver thee!"

A Change of Investments.

For six years I held stock in a California vineyard. As no dividends had been declared, I wrote inquiring the reason. The answer was, "The cultivation of grapes does not pay. But you may now expect large dividends. We are about to start a distillery." A distillery! This was certainly not a suitable enterprise for a Christian. I sold the stock and asked the Lord where to place the money. The answer came—that is, what I considered to be the answer. Six

* From "God in Business." By H. J. Latham. A book full of instances in which God has interfered in answer to prayer to rescue His servants from difficulties which menaced them with ruin. Published by The American News Company, Chambers Street, New York.

Mr. Theodore Roosevelt.

Incidents of the Famine in China, by a Chinese Artist.

lots were just then offered to me. I bought them. Within a week I heard that they were sold at a profit of $150.

The following Sunday evening at a church meeting I handed to a city missionary $15, the proportion of the profit which God claims as His share. I mention this to bring out another fact. The missionary arose and said: "Friends, this afternoon I was in deep distress. I had many calls upon me for help; but I had no money. I asked God what I should do. I opened my Bible. Before my eyes were these words: 'The Lord hear thee in the day of trouble, send thee help from the sanctuary.' (Ps. 20:1, 2.) To-night in this meeting, this sanctuary, I have received the money I needed. During my Christian experience I have had hundreds of answers as unmistakable as this."

A few days after this meeting I was surprised to hear that the sale of these lots was off. The purchaser had paid a deposit on them, but had backed out, and had received his deposit back from the agent. What did this mean? Had God's plans miscarried? Was this theory of Divine help, after all, but a delusion? These thoughts were banished as they arose. I decided to trust in God and wait. I waited for two months only, when another purchaser came along, and bought four lots at a profit of $200. Recapitulation: $700 in a vineyard for six years without a dividend. In two months, under God's direction, turned at a profit of $200, and two lots left. "Oh, that men would praise the Lord for His goodness, and for His wonderful works to the children of men." (Ps. 107:8.)

MR. THEODORE ROOSEVELT,

Newly Appointed Civil Service Commissioner.

In appointing Mr. Roosevelt to the third place on the Civil Service Commission, the President has shown a praiseworthy desire to give the much-abused system fair play. Mr. Roosevelt has been an enthusiastic advocate of it, all through his career, and can be trusted to do his utmost to promote its practical operation. There can be no question as to the wisdom of enforcing the law. Its friends desire nothing more, and if its enemies believe in Gen. Grant's dictum, that "the most effectual way of getting rid of a bad law is to enforce it," they, too, must wish to see it operated. That is what all will see under the new commissioner.

Mr. Roosevelt is one of the most prominent of the younger generation of the Republican party. He is thirty-one years of age, having been born in 1858 in the city of New York. He studied at Harvard, and graduated in 1880. The next year he was elected to the State Assembly.

His party was then in a minority in that body, but Mr. Roosevelt was not discouraged on that account. He made a vigorous resistance to the many corrupt jobs that were introduced, and he had the satisfaction in several instances of receiving support from conscientious men on the Democratic side, as well as of his own party.

Mr. Roosevelt was a delegate to the National Convention of 1884. There he advocated the nomination of Senator Edmunds, and earnestly warned the Convention of the defeat that the party would suffer if it nominated Mr. Blaine. His warning was not heeded. Mr. Blaine was nominated, and Mr. Roosevelt's prediction was fulfilled. It is worthy of note, however, that though Mr. Roosevelt strongly opposed the nomination, his opposition to the candidate ceased when the nomination was made. In 1886 Mr. Roosevelt was nominated for Mayor of New York. He was then only twenty-eight years of age, and his nomination for so important an office showed how high the young man stood in the esteem of his party. It was the year of Mr. George's candidacy, and the fear of his succeeding caused many Republicans to rush to the support of Mr. Hewitt, who had the best chance of being elected. Mr. Hewitt's plurality over Mr. Roosevelt was consequently nearly 30,000. Mr. Roosevelt bore his defeat with good grace, and soon had the satisfaction of knowing how bitterly the city regretted its choice. It was two years before the mistake could be remedied. Mr. Roosevelt was not then a candidate, but the city gave an unequivocal verdict on his successful rival's conduct in office by its vote. Mr. Hewitt was relegated to obscurity by a plurality for his opponent of over 42,000. Since 1885 Mr. Roosevelt has spent most of his time on his ranch in Dakota.

THE FAMINE IN CHINA.

(See Illustrations.)

In previous numbers of this journal some accounts have been published of the widespread suffering now afflicting the people of China. On this page are two illustrations intended to give pictorial representation of incidents of the famine. The artist who sketched them is a Chinaman, and followed the rules of perspective observed in his native land. To Western eyes they do not answer the purpose that illustrations usually serve, of rendering the text more impressive. The first panel is supposed to represent a mandarin distributing relief to the starving poor. The second panel is more expressive; a Chinese husband and father is carrying his dead child to the tomb, while the corpse of its mother lies on a bier in the background.

A district of 6,000 square miles has been so devastated by the floods, that at the lowest estimate 1,500,000 men, women, and children are now reduced to the verge of starvation. In many parts the people manage to subsist on the shrubs and grass growing on the hills, but when that supply is exhausted, unless relief is speedily afforded from without, the greater part of this great multitude must inevitably perish. In not a few districts the wheat, though sown, never will be reaped, for the people are dragging up the roots and eating them to satisfy their craving for food. Many are committing suicide to escape death by starvation. Famine fever is also raging in many places.

A MATRIMONIAL DIFFICULTY.

(See Illustration on page 349.)

At the little country railroad station of Churchville, one moonlight night, a tall, graceful girl of some twenty years was walking leisurely up and down the platform. At each turn she looked expectantly up the track, but no sign of an approaching train was to be seen. There was no one on the platform, and there was little probability of any one coming until the incoming train discharged some of its passengers, so the girl seated herself on a little baggage-truck to rest while she waited. She had scarcely done so, when a gentleman in shooting costume sauntered out of the ticket-office. The girl rose to her feet, but apparently recognizing the newcomer, sat down again, and he came up to the truck and greeted her cordially.

"The ticket agent told me you were here, Lizzie," he said. "I was very glad, for my train will be half an hour late, I hear. You are waiting for uncle, I suppose, so we can help each other to kill the time."

"Or improve it," was the reply. "You do not need any help to kill it, I think, Claude, if I may judge by your coming down here so often. This is where you do nothing but kill time—and birds, too, I suppose. Dear Claude! what is wrong? I am only your cousin, and ever so much younger than you; but perhaps I could help you. Why does Louie write such doleful letters? and why do you spend your time at your father's place, instead of being at home with her? I am not inquisitive, but if things are wrong, I should be so glad to help you both."

"You are a good girl, Lizzie, and I know you mean well; but I think the trouble is beyond your power. Yes, I do not mind admitting to you that things are going wrong. Early days, is it not, to admit that? We have been married but little more than a year."

"I don't know. I have heard that it is the time when difficulties generally come. Later on you may understand each other better."

"I think not in our case. Well, I will tell you about it. It will be well, perhaps, to have some one's opinion, and I would rather take yours than that of any one else. You are a good Christian girl, and will not make matters worse."

The young man leaned on the guard of the truck and spoke in a low tone, while the girl listened attentively. "The difficulty—or I may as well say at once, the estrangement—between Louie and me, for it amounts to that, arose out of my being a poor man, with the necessity of earning a livelihood. When I returned from our wedding trip my work was in arrear, and to complicate things, my partner was down sick, and had quite a long illness. Of course I had to work hard to keep things going, and was at the office early and late. Louie grew discontented, complained of being left so much alone, doubted whether it was really work that kept me, thought I ought to get another partner, or do something to enable me to spend more time at home. I tried to explain, tried to impart some of my own ambition, did all I could, in short, to make her see that I was doing the wisest and best thing for us both. But it was useless. She grew querulous, and more and more discontented. Then she had trouble with the hired girls, and that made matters worse. When I got home at night, tired and weary, I had to listen first to the complaints about my being late, and then to a list of worries that seemed paltry compared with my own, and—"

"And then you were impatient and snubbed her, I suppose," Lizzie interjected.

"Yes, I am ashamed to say I often used rough words, for I was irritable with over-work. Then it went on until I felt a repugnance for home, and when I might have gone early I did not go, and when I could spare a half day off, I have come down here for a little amusement instead of taking Louie out. That is an outline of the case, as we lawyers say. You can easily fill it in. Does it strike you as one that you could deal with?"

"Let me put a question, Claude. Have you kept up your Christian habits through it all? Do you ask God's help and direction as you used to do?"

"Well, no, Lizzie. I could not. When we had been quarrelling, and I was mortified by being betrayed into using hard words to Louie, I was not in the mood for prayer. I am shocked to think how long it is since I prayed. But if the home trouble were removed I should get back to it."

"That is the key to the difficulty, Claude. Do not wait for the trouble to disappear. If you had taken it to God in the beginning, it would have vanished before this. If you had prayed regularly and earnestly, both alone and with Louie, He would have helped you bear one another's burdens. It is not too late now; why not try?"

The young man hesitated. "It is hard to get back, Lizzie," he said.

"Yes, but every day will make it harder, and perhaps the trouble will grow too bad for healing."

"That's so," he said. "I believe you are right. At any rate, it is the only way. Yes, I will try."

They rose and shook hands as the belated train steamed into the station. Claude thoughtfully took his seat in the car, while Lizzie walked homeward with her father. The next day a letter went to the discontented wife from her Christian friend, delicately counselling her in the same tone as that already used to the husband, and a breach that might eventually have gone to the divorce court for settlement, was healed by the remedy which is efficacious in all troubles—the appeal to God for help.

The Husband States His Case.

ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS.

A Life Story: By Mrs. Stenhouse.

For More than Twenty-five Years the Wife of a Mormon Missionary and Elder.

(Continued from page 335.)

In Salt Lake City.

It would be impossible for me to describe my feelings at that time. Even while I was enchanted with the glorious prospect before me, there arose again in my mind the haunting spectre of my existence as a woman, wife, and mother. I believed that this little earthly paradise would probably be to me, and my daughters after me, a prison-house, and with a mother's instinct I shuddered as I thought of what they might be destined to suffer there. Lovely as the scene was, there was a fatal shadow overhanging it all. Then, too, there was no escape; if the sad forebodings of my heart were realized, it would be utterly impossible for us ever to get away. The idea of a railway being constructed across those desert plains and rocky mountains never for a moment entered my mind, and even had I thought it possible, I should have supposed that it would take a life-time to complete. No; there was no help for me, even if it came to the worst. I felt that my doom was sealed; and there were many women in our company who thought just the same as I did, and who were troubled at heart with fears as sad as mine.

My first impressions of Salt Lake City when we began life there were anything but pleasant—we had to "rough it." For nearly two weeks we were obliged to remain in our wagons, as it was quite impossible to obtain house-room. At that time each family built their own little hut, and there were no vacant houses to let. The weather was now growing very cold and wintry, and it was absolutely necessary that we should have some better shelter than the wagons afforded. One day my husband told me, when he came home, that he had been offered a house which belonged to the Church. It was in a very dilapidated condition, he said, but that if I would go and look at it with him, he could then decide about taking it. No time was to be lost, for companies of emigrants were coming in almost daily, and if we neglected this chance we might not find another.

When we arrived at the house I was much discouraged at seeing the condition it was in; the window-panes were all cracked or broken out, the floors and walls looked as if they had never known soap or paint, and the upper rooms had no ceilings; in fact, it was not fit for any civilized Christian to live in. In point of size there was nothing to complain of, but of comfort or convenience there was none—the wind whistled through every door and every cracked window; and altogether it presented anything but a cheering prospect for winter. My husband told me that Daniel H. Wells, who was superintendent of Church property, and also one of the First Presidency of the Church, had promised him that if we took the house it should be repaired and made fit for living in before winter fully set in; and under the circumstances we thought we could do no better than accept his offer.

Thus we began housekeeping in Utah, and we unpacked our trunks and tried to give the place as home-like an appearance as we possibly could. I had known what it was to be in a strange country and destitute; and, therefore, benefiting by experience, when I left New York, regardless of the teachings of the elders and of my own husband's directions to the contrary, I had secretly stowed away many little necessities towards housekeeping. Indeed, had I not done so we should have been as badly off when we reached Utah as when we arrived in New York. Besides which, I have no doubt that our wagons would have been filled with the trunks of those very brethren who counselled us not to take more than was absolutely necessary. The brethren who gave this counsel were, I noticed, constantly purchasing, while they advised every one else to sell, and I thought it wiser to follow their example than their precepts.

Among my treasures was some carpet, and when that was laid down and the stove put up we began to feel almost at home. The wind, however, soon drove away all thoughts of comfort, for it came whistling in through a thousand undetected crevices, and the tallow candles which we were obliged to burn presented a woful spectacle. Even the most wealthy, then, had no other light than candles, and every family had to make their own. I have often seen people burning a little melted grease with a bit of cotton rag stuck in the middle for a wick—how pleasant the smell, and how brilliant the light thus produced, can be imagined. Everything was upon the same scale—and to keep house in any fashion was really a formidable undertaking, especially to those who had been accustomed to the conveniences of large towns. I believe that many Mormon women consented to their husbands taking other wives for the sake of getting some assistance in their home duties.

We spent nearly all the first evening in our new house in trying to discover some means of keeping out the storm, but to little purpose. Nearly a fortnight passed before anyone came to see about repairing the house, but as it belonged to the Church, my husband seemed to think it must be all right. The Mormon men are always very lenient towards "the Church" very much more so than the Mormon women, for the latter have somehow got mixed up in their minds the idea that Brigham Young and "the Church" are synonymous terms. I remember, one day, a good young sister—a daughter of one of the twelve Apostles—saying to me, "I have just seen the Church," and when I asked her what she meant, she said, "I have just met Brigham Young and Hiram Clawson, and are they not the Church?" It was evident to me that others besides myself sometimes gave way to wicked thoughts. Nevertheless I was still of opinion that "the Church" had plenty of money, and ought to have repaired the house.

One day a man whom I had never seen before called upon me, and asked what repairs I should like done. I was not feeling very well, and had been annoyed at the delay, and I answered rather ungraciously that I should like anything done, if it were only done at once, for I thought we had waited long enough. He answered me very politely, and said that he would see to it immediately. When Mr. Stenhouse returned home in the evening, he said, "So you have had a visit from President Wells." "No," I said, "there has been no one here but a carpenter—an ugly man with a cast in his eye, and I told him that I wanted the house fixed right away." "Why, that was President Wells," he said, very much shocked; and I think I felt as bad as he did when I realized that I had treated one of the "First Presidency" so unceremoniously.

This Daniel H. Wells, besides being an apostle, a counsellor of Brigham Young, and one of the three "Presidents" who shared with Brigham the first position in the Church, and were associated with him in all his official acts, was Lieutenant-General of the Nauvoo Legion, and was for some years Mayor of Salt Lake City. It was a shocking indiscretion, to say the least, to speak slightly of such a high and mighty personage. The repairs, however, were seen to, and the house rendered a little more habitable. We had now to begin the struggle of life afresh, and could not afford to be too particular about trifles; to obtain shelter was something—for the rest we must still continue to hope.

At its first settlement the Mormon colony in Salt Lake City had to contend with all these difficulties, and submit to all those privations which beset the path of all new settlers in a strange country. Until very shortly before our arrival the greater number of the dwellings were small and low, like so many little huts, and not unfrequently you might see a row of these huts, with one window and a door to each, and inside a wife, a bedstead, two chairs, and a table—with poverty to crown the whole. But even then might be seen in the laying out of the streets, and in the other arrangements, the germs of a great city. The roadways were broad, and the sidewalks convenient, and provision was made—more with an eye to the future than to present necessity—for a great depth in the measurement of the houses and blocks. Down the sides of the streets flowed a sparkling stream—the water of which was brought from the mountains for the purpose of irrigating the gardens in the city; and, as far as they possibly could, the settlers marked out and planned a capital worthy of that name for the Mormon people.

When I arrived in Salt Lake City a great many improvements had been effected; and expecting, as I did, that this would be our future home for many years, perhaps for life, I was interested in everything I saw. But even then, in merely taking a walk about the city, I met with evidences of the degrading teachings of Mormonism. I saw that little deference was paid to the women; they were rudely jostled at the crossings, and seemed to be generally uncared for. Since the completion of the railway, and the consequent influx of Gentiles, this of course, has not been so noticeable.

The city is built on a slope formed by a bend in the mountain range. Brigham Young's house stood on the northern side, and had a commanding prospect. The tabernacle and tithing-office are in the same street. The tabernacle is a plain-looking building, entirely devoid of any architectural beauty. It stands in the block where the temple, which has now been building for the last forty years, is waiting to be finished. About forty years ago Brigham wrote to Orson Spencer, the President of the Mormon Church in England, urging him to "gather up as much tithing as he possibly could, for glass, nails, paint, &c., to assist in building up the Temple of the Lord in the valley of the Great Salt Lake." A large sum of money was collected, and millions of dollars have been raised by tithing and by other means, but during Brigham's lifetime there was no one with courage and authority sufficient to demand of him an account of those funds, and the interest and compound interest which should be accruing.

The first Sunday I went to the Mormon Tabernacle in Salt Lake City I could not help noticing the way in which some of the sisters were dressed. Quite a number wore sun-bonnets, but the majority wore curious and diverse specimens of the milliner's art—relics of former days. Some wore a little tuft of gauze and feathers on the top of the head, while others had helmets of extraordinary size. As for the dresses, they were as diversified as the bonnets. Some of them presented a rather curious spectacle. I noticed two young women who sat near me; they were dressed alike in green calico sun-bonnets, green calico skirts, and pink calico sacks. On inquiring who they were, I was told that they were the wives of one man, and had both been married to him on the same day, so that neither could claim precedence of the other. Outside of Utah such a thing would seem utterly impossible; but so many of the young girls at that time came out without father or mother or anyone else to guide them; and left to their own inexperience and afraid to disobey "counsel," it is no wonder that they soon yielded to the universal custom.

The two young women whom I have mentioned did not appear to me to be overburdened with intelligence; they looked like girls who could be made to believe anything; but after that I met with two well-educated women who, like these foolish girls, thoughtlessly tried the experiment of two or more marrying the same man on the same day, agreeing with their "lord" that that would be the best possible way to preserve peace in their household. But they were terribly mistaken; and even before the marriage-day was over, the poor bewildered husband had to fly to Young for counsel.

The tabernacle services seemed to me as strange as the women. There was no regular order in conducting the proceedings, but the prominent brethren made prayers or "sermons" as they were called upon to do so. The "sermons" would be more properly called speeches; they are nothing but a rambling, disconnected glorification of the Saints, interspersed with fearful denunciations of the Gentiles, and not unfrequently a good sprinkling of words and expressions such as are never used in decent society. As for the spirituality and devotional feeling which characterized our meetings in England, they were only conspicuous by their absence, and many Mormon Saints have told me that when they first went there, before the erection of the great organ, the free-and-easy manners of the speakers, and the brass band which was stationed in front of the platform, made them feel as if they had come to witness a show rather than to attend a religious meeting.

There was one lady at the tabernacle service whom I regarded with considerable interest.

This was no other than Eliza R. Snow, the first wife of President Brigham Young. Her principal occupation at the present time is converting rebellious wives to obedience to their husbands, and convincing young girls that it is their duty to enter into a condition of life similar to her own. Unhappy husbands derive great consolation from her counsels. In matters of religion she is a perfect fanatic, but in connection with the Female Relief Society she reigns supreme; and I could tell of many acts of loving-kindness and self-denial which she has performed. As the chief poet of the Mormon Church, and as the Representative of Eve in the mysteries of the Endowment House, she enjoys more renown than any other woman among the Saints.

Another singular Mormon lady is "Aunt Shearer." She is in every respect a unique specimen of womanhood—tall and angular, with cold yet eager gray eyes; a woman of great volubility, and altogether grim looking and strong minded. She was an early disciple, and is said to have sacrificed everything for Mormonism. Like the others, she is called "Mrs." and I suppose there is or was a Mr. Shearer somewhere, but upon that point she is very reticent. Her little lonely hut is fitted with innumerable curiosities and little knick-knacks, which some people are forever hoarding away in the belief that they will come into use some day. She is a woman that one could not easily forget. She wears a muslin cap with a very wide border flapping in the wind under a comical-looking hood, and is easily recognized by her old yellow marten-fur cape and enormous muff; her dress, which is of her own spinning and weaving, is but just wide enough, and its length could never inconvenience her. Add to these personal ornaments a stout pair of brogues, and you will see before you "Aunt Shearer," one of the Prophet's spiritual wives.

Marriages contracted by the Gentiles, or by Mormons in accordance with Gentile institutions, are not considered binding by the Saints. That was partly the cause of my indignation, and the indignation of many another wife and mother. We were told that we had never been married at all, and that our husbands and our children were not lawfully ours: surely that was enough to excite the indignation of any wife, whatever her faith might be. For a marriage to be valid, it must be solemnized in the Endowment House in Salt Lake City, or the persons contracting it can never expect to be husband and wife in eternity. Should the husband die before he reaches Utah, and if the wife loves him sufficiently well to wish to be his in eternity—when she arrives in Salt Lake City, if she receives an offer of marriage from one of the brethren, and does not object to him as a second husband in this world, she will make an agreement with him that she will be his wife for time, but that in eternity she and all her children shall be handed over to the first husband. She is then called a "proxy."

"Spiritual" wives consist of old ladies who have plenty of money or property, which of course needs looking after; and generous elders marry them, and accordingly "look after" the said property with much industry, and the owner of it becomes the elder's spiritual wife. She will only be his real wife in eternity.

(To be Continued).

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman

(London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 71 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles, among others, are contained in the number for May:

Three Days' Prophetic Conference in Melbourne, Australia. Stars and Prophecy. By W. Appleford. Prophetic Lectures at Birmingham. Historical Fulfilment of the Fourth Trumpet. Prophetic Lectures at Brighton. Primary 2,345 Years from Ezra's Reforms in Nisan, B. C. 457 to Nisan A. D., 1889. Coming and Kingdom of the Lord Jesus. Will General Boulanger be the French Caesar (Gallos Kaiser) of Scripture Prophecy. Antichrist's Future Acting; Described in Dan. II 21-45. Passing Events Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

JESUS BEFORE PILATE.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for June 9, Mark 15: 1-20. Golden Text, John 19: 6.

The Deliverer Bound—Pilate's Question—The Clumsy Evasion—An Attempt to Avoid Responsibility—The Count of Threatening to Destroy the Temple Dropped—A Charge Capital under Roman Law Needed—Accused of Sedition—Christ's Kingdom Defined by Himself—His Mission Declared—He Came as a Witness to Truth—Pilate and Herod Declare Him Not Guilty—A Choice between the Saviour and a Robber—Pilate's Weakness—Afraid of Offending Cæsar—Water that Did Not Cleanse.

FROM the priestly tribunal Jesus must pass to the civil. "Straightway in the morning the chief priests held a consultation with the elders, and scribes, and the whole council, and bound Jesus (who had set so many free), and carried Him away, and delivered Him to Pilate." It was early in the day, but Pilate was ready to fulfil the duties of his office, and inquired, as is always the custom in a court of law, "What accusation bring ye against this man?" It was a question to which his accusers had no answer, and so they hid themselves under generalities, and answered in a negative sense, "If He were not a malefactor we would not have delivered Him up unto thee." (John 18: 29, 30.) At last they conjured up a kind of accusation, "We found this fellow perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Cæsar, saying that He Himself is Christ, a King." (Luke 23: 2.) No man could have proved this subtle charge; they sought to alarm Pilate for the safety of the government, and to lead him to look on Jesus as a person dangerous to the state! They knew well that their witness was false, that Jesus had always paid tribute (Matt. 17: 25-27), and that the very expression which they had so distorted, in order to give a shadow of truth to their charge, conveyed an exactly opposite meaning, "Render unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's, and unto God the things which are God's." (Matt. 22: 21.) Pilate Was Loath to Condemn Jesus.

Probably he had heard of His works of mercy, and he said, "Take ye Him, and judge Him according to your law." But in the providence of God, the responsibility must rest with Pilate. "The Jews therefore said unto him, It is not lawful for us to put any man to death:" that the saying of Jesus might be fulfilled, which He spake, signifying what death He should die, for Jesus declared that He should be delivered to the Gentiles, etc. (Mark 10: 33, 34.)

There was a suspension in the trial, after which "Pilate entered into the judgment hall again, and called Jesus and said, Art Thou the King of the Jews? Jesus answered him, Sayest thou this thing of thyself, or did others tell it thee of me?" The Syrophenician woman had said of herself that Jesus was the son of David, and so had blind Bartimeus. But Pilate, whatever he thought in his own mind, spoke very cautiously; he was afraid to commit himself. "Am I a Jew?" he asked. "Thine own nation and the chief priests have delivered Thee unto me; what hast thou done? Jesus answered, is not of this world." This was the truth, which neither friends nor foes understood. Living as they did, occupied with things seen and temporal, there were few, very few, understood things unseen and eternal. Few endured, "as seeing Him who is invisible," as Moses did. (Heb. 11: 27.) Few could see, as Elisha saw, the hosts of God in the horses of fire and the chariots of fire round about them. Most men are exceedingly material in their views of things; and the spiritual world, where God is known, and sin, salvation, and communion with God are realities, is looked upon by many as a mere creation of the fancy, instead of the eternal, enduring thing it is. And yet, after all, what power there is in the kingdom of Christ even now! What was it which brought about the Reformation? The kingdom of Christ. His kingdom is "righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost." (Rom. 14: 17.) "If My kingdom were of this world," said Jesus, "then would My servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews; but now is My kingdom not from hence." The warfare of Christ's kingdom is not with flesh and blood, but with principalities and powers and wicked spirits in heavenly places. (Eph 6: 12.) In Christ's kingdom, men resist not evil, love their enemies, pray for their persecutors, and do good to those who hate them. (Matt. 5: 44.) Truly, this is not of this world, and truly these marks of Christ's kingdom are very rare, and the flock which composes that kingdom a very "little flock." (Luke 12: 32.)

My Kingdom

"Art thou a King, then?" Pilate asked. The meek and gentle Man who stood before him looked so unlike an earthly pretender to a throne, so unlike one "that stirreth up the people," that Pilate might well be excused that he was puzzled by the accusation and the accused. Jesus answered: "Thou sayest that I am a king; to this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth. Every one that is of the truth heareth My voice." Pilate asked, "What is truth?" Many have asked this question since. If Pilate had followed up the clue he then had, and made it a personal matter, his fame might have been as an apostle, instead of that which is said as a confession of faith in all the known world, "He Suffered Under Pontius Pilate."

"I am the . . . Truth," Jesus said. (John 14: 6.) Darkness and light were close together: the sinner, Pilate, was within touch of the Saviour, but darkness conquered, and the sinner condemned his Saviour to the cross!

Pilate's testimony was clear and unvarnished. "I find in Him no fault at all." (John 18: 38.) The chief priests could prove nothing against Him. Pilate sent Him to Herod, thinking to shift the responsibility of pronouncing sentence upon another, and his report before the chiefs and rulers was, "Ye brought unto me this Man as one that perverteth the people, and behold, I, having examined Him before you, found no fault in this Man touching those things whereof ye accuse Him: no, nor yet Herod, for he hath sent Him back unto us; and behold, nothing worthy of death is done by Him." (Luke 23: 14, 15, R. V.) Priests, governor, and king sought alike to establish a just condemnation against Jesus, but He stood the proof, and died upon the cross, Still Uncondemned.

"He was wounded for our transgressions (not His own), and bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon Him, and with His stripes we are healed." (Isa. 53: 5.) We can never bear what He bore; we can never in any way atone for our sins, or for those of others; but when we are unjustly accused, and suffer for His sake, when no wrong can be proved against us, we have the privilege of the "fellowship of His sufferings." "If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye, for the Spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you; on their part He is evil spoken of, but on your part He is glorified." (1 Pet. 4: 14.)

Finding that the case was going against them, "the chief priests accused Him of many things, but He answered nothing. And Pilate asked Him again, saying, Answerest Thou nothing? Behold how many things they witness against Thee. But Jesus yet answered nothing, so that Pilate marvelled." It was His best way of illustrating His own teaching, "I say unto you, that ye resist not evil." (Matt. 5: 39.) The grace of silence is a very rare one, especially under unjust and untrue accusation; it is only the certainty that God is ordering all things in the truest and fullest love and wisdom which can keep us silent, not only outwardly, but inwardly, at the very moment when our natural hearts would burn with the sense of wrong. Jesus could trust His Father, and be still. He was carrying out the purposes of another, and all through these hours of human anguish He could say, "I do always those things which please Him." (John 8: 29.)

As though to aggravate the suffering and shame and indignity which they heaped upon Him, the people chose Barabbas, the most notable criminal of the time, to be released in honor of the feast, rather than Jesus, "who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil." (Acts 10: 38.) The governor put it to them, "Whom will ye that I release unto you?"

Barabbas, or Jesus, which is called Christ?" For he knew that for envy they had delivered Him. "Before their answer could be given Pilate received an unexpected warning." His wife sent unto him, saying, Have thou nothing to do with that just man; for I have suffered many things this day in a dream because of Him." Could Pilate condemn Him? Three tribunals had tried Him, and sought in vain for a just impeachment. He himself was persuaded of the innocence of Jesus. This message from his wife went to influence him in the same direction. But the influence of the rich and powerful went just the other way; the chief priests and elders were doing unpriestly and undignified work canvassing the multitude for votes against Jesus. They worked on the popular mind, which is so easily swayed, first one way, then another, and succeeded in persuading the multitude "that they should ask Barabbas, and destroy Jesus." The governor repeated his question, "Whether of the twain will ye that I release unto you?" The final choice was made; the people were on the side of sin, and said, "Barabbas."

The same choice is being made by the world now; drunkards, unclean men, gamblers, thieves, are tolerated in the community, and men do not persecute them; but those who are separate from the world, and who dare to believe in God's almightiness in a practical way—those are the men whose names are cast out as evil. And above all, men will not have Christ; self-discipline, yes; high morality, yes; anything and everything which exalts or glorifies man, but "we will not have this man—the Son of man—to reign over us." "What shall I do, then," cried the perplexed Pontius Pilate, "with Jesus, which is called Christ?" Reader, what will you do with Jesus? Will you let Him be King and Lord of your life and your whole being, or will you reject Him, and crucify Him afresh? The answer of the multitude was, "Let Him be crucified!"

Now was the moment for Pilate: without his final word, Christ could not be condemned. But his political power and influence was at stake. If he justified Jesus, the whole Sanhedrim might turn against him, and he might lose his influence; they might accuse him to Rome, and he might be deposed. He would stand alone, despised and hated; he could not make such a sacrifice; this was to him, so he made a compromise; he would let every one know his true opinion, but he would not act upon it; he "took water and washed his hands (not his heart) before the multitude, saying, I am innocent of the blood of this just person; see ye to it." Ask God in heaven; ask the angels; ask man; ask the devils in hell, "Is Pilate innocent of the death of Jesus?" No. He "suffered under Pontius Pilate." A man who trifles with his own conscience sins against his own soul, and is a suicide for eternity. The soldiers followed the deed, not the word, of their master—then the crown of thorns, the purple robe, the mockery, the reed, the spitting, and at last the awful tramp to the cross. Sinners had condemned their Lord.

Worth More than Christ

Volume XI, of the Christian Herald, containing the numbers for 1888, with complete index, bound in cloth, may be had from this office; price, $2.50, including postage. A few volumes of 1884, 1885, and 1887 are also for sale. We can also furnish complete volumes for 1884, 1885, and 1888, unbound, price $1.00, including postage.

"HIMSELF."

'Tis the same dear old truth, but so precious new,
That I want you to hear it, and make it yours too;
That 'tis not some rich blessing, but Jesus we need,
His own person within us on whom we must feed.

Like a sweet revelation this dawns on my soul;
And the heart door swings open, and He makes me whole;
And myself is at last at His feet lying low, While throughout all my being His life blood doth flow.

Ah! my eyes which so long have been looking within,
Only seeing life's trials, my failures and sin,
Have at last caught a view of "Himself"
dwelling there,
To His own blessed fullness thus making me heir.

It is henceforth not my life but His I'm to live;
All my righteousness, and even faith He must give;
Oh! how blessed! I've only to just let Him reign,
And He pledges each moment unspeakable gain.

And while thus in my heart His own presence doth shine,
I can easily say, "never my will, but thine;"
All my life will be glorified thus watching Him, Till the heavens are opened, and earth light grows dim.

—Carrie G. Merrall.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher: 77 Bible House, New York,
will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Simple Pocket of 50 leaflets
assorted (no two alike), will be sent, post-paid, for 10
cts., or 100 for 20 cts. Postage stamps taken.

Horsford's Acid Phosphate, A Nerve-Food and Tonic. The Most Effective yet discovered.

The latest and best imperial Photographs of Dr. Talmage and Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, with their fac-simile autograph, and also imperial photograph of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, can be obtained from J. E. Jewett, 77 Bible House, New York. Sent postpaid for twenty-five cents each. Postage stamps taken.

Send for our Annual Stock Taking CLEARANCE SALE LIST.

Good Books at GREATLY REDUCED prices until June 29th, 1898.

Write at once if you wish to take advantage of these SPECIAL TERMS.

Address A. G. WATSON, Manager Toronto Willard Tract Depository, Toronto, Canada.

N.B.—Ask for our new Tract Catalogue and Revised List of Bagster Bibles.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico
are most pressing needed, and can be mailed to
the address of
BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH
43 Bible House, New York.

MINISTER'S POCKET RITUAL

A Hand-Book of Scripture Lessons and Forms of Service
for Marriage, Confirmation, The Lord's Supper, Visitation
of Sick, Burial of Dead, Dedications, Ordinations, Installations, Suggestions on various services. For all denominations. By Rev. Hiram Mulliken, D. D., 12 mo. Limp Morocco, $1; Limp Morocco 50c. Mailed on receipt of price.
PERKINPINE & HIGGINS, 914 Arch St., Philada.

WANTED AGENTS to sell "The Christian's Legacy." Introduction by Rev. A. T. Pierson, D. D. One agent sold and delivered 200 copies in six weeks.

W. J. HOLLAND, 150 Nassau St., New York.
E. E. HOLLAND, 40 Dearborn St., Chicago.

SEATTLE No blizzards, heavy snows or cyclones.
Average winter temperature 43° above zero. Seattle, largest city in Washington Terr. y. Population 25,000. Commercial, educational and financial center of Puget Sound Country. For information at once apply to CHAS. H. KUTTINGER, CITY SEATTLE, Wash. Territory.

SAMPLE PAGES FROM THE LATEST
SUNDAY SCHOOL SONG BOOKS FREE,
THE ECHO MUSIC CO., La Fayette, Indiana.

SACRED MELODIES

REVISED.

By E. C. AVIS.

For Church and Sunday-School.

Takes, and is fast winning its way to the hearts of the people: giving great satisfaction.
Many copies have been sold already.

"Sacred Melodies has more in it for the money than any book I have seen on the market."—E. E.
Nickerson, Boston, Mass.

"I like Sacred Melodies very much."—Geo. H.
Simmons, Evangelist Louisville Ky.

"I could not wait to finish my dinner, when your book came, before playing 'Row me over the Tide.'" —Florence Thomas, Frederick, Md.

Don't fail to examine it. By mail, 35 cts. per copy; $3.60 per doz.; postage extra 7 cts. per copy.
Address all orders to

E. C. AVIS, Andersonville, Tenn.

Extract from a letter by Rev. C. H. SPURGEON. &

"Be sure you buy a genuine unabridged Cruden, and none of the modern substitutes, good as they may be at the price.
You need only one: have none but the best."

Cruden's Complete Concordance

To the Old and New Testaments and the Apocrypha.

Edited by WILLIAM YOUNGMAN.

"We have just issued what we consider the best and cheapest edition in the World of Cruden's Complete Concordance to the Bible, type new and readable; contains the Apocrypha; alphabetical list of the Proper Names in the Old and New Testament, with their meaning or signification in their original languages; a concordance to the Proper Names; a summary of the contents of the Holy Bible, and also a complete summary of the contents of all the chapters of the New Testament. More references and more supplementary matter of great value than any other popular concordance. In royal 8vo. cloth, gilt, price $1.50; (weighs three pounds.)

SPECIAL OFFER FOR A SHORT TIME.

The postage alone on this book costs 25 cents, but on receipt of One dollar and twenty-five cents, we will mail you a copy, postage free, if you mention the CHRISTIAN HERALD.

FREDERICK WARNE & CO.,
3 Cooper Union, 4th Ave., New York City.

FITS!

They Say we give the whole trade fits;
That all our Specialties are hits;
Our Fits they suit, our Suits they fit;
And that's the long and short of it.

TO OBTAIN the Famous Custom-made
Plymouth Rock $3, $4, and $5 Pants, first send 6 cts., for which we will mail you 20 samples,
self-measurement blanks, and linen tape-measure,
provided you MENTION THIS PAPER; or if you cannot wait for samples, tell us about the color preferred, with waist, inside leg and hip measures, remit $3, together with 35 cents to cover cost of ex-pressage or postage, and we will forward the goods prepaid to any address in the U. S., guaranteeing safe delivery and entire satisfaction or money refunded.
Remember, also, that we make to your order, Full Suits, $13.25, $16.75, $20.50; Overcoats, $12.00; and that for any cause we refund money at buyer's request, upon return of goods, or make alterations or new garments free of extra charge.

PLYMOUTH ROCK PANTS CO.

Address all mail to

11 to 17 Eliot St., or 18 Summer St., Boston, Mass.

BRANCH OFFICES:—285 Broadway, New York; Bonside Building, Worcester, Mass.; 60 Market St., Lynn, Mass.; 198 Westminster St., Providence, R. I.; Old Register Building,
New Haven, Conn.; 943 Pennsylvania Ave.,
Washington, D. C.; 72 Adams St., Chicago, Ill.

Any one wishing to learn of our responsibility, may write the American Express Co., at Boston (capital $20,000,000), or consult the commercial agencies.

PIANOS UNIVERSITY ORGANS

$150 to $1500 Guaranteed 6 years.

They Lead the World.

We sell direct to

families, and send for trial in your own

home before you buy.

Catalogue Free.

Established 1899. Incorporated 1897.

MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO.,

235 East 21st Street, N. Y.

IF YOU WANT AN
"OXFORD" TEACHER'S BIBLE, OR BAGSTER BIBLE,

send for complete Bible Catalogue giving full description of styles, sample of type, and price, to

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

PAINLESS BEECHAM'S PILLS

For Weak Stomach—Impaired Digestion—Disordered Liver

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

PRICE 25 CENTS PER BOX.

Prepared only by THOS. BEECHAM, St. Helens, Lancashire, England

B. F. ALLEN & CO., Sole Agents

FOR UNITED STATES, 365 & 367 CANAL ST., NEW YORK

Who (if your druggist does not keep them) will mail Beechan Pills on receipt of price—but inquire first. (Please mention this paper

Jenny June's Books for Ladies

LADIES' FANCY WORK. New Edition. Edited by Jenny June.

A new book, giving designs and plain directions for Artistic Fancy Work in Embroidery, Lace-work, Knitting, Tatting, Crochet-work, Net-work, Kensington Painting, Wax Flowers, Painting on Silk, and all kinds of Fancy Needle-work. This book is printed on fine paper, has a handsome cover, and contains over 700 Illustrations. Price 50 Cents.

Comprising designs for Rugs, Footstools, Hat-racks, Pincushions, Ottomans, Work-baskets, Pen-wipers, Bed-quills, Lambrequins, Work-bags, Book-covers, Wood-boxes, Scrap baskets, Sofa Covers, Folding Screens, Sofa Cushions, Music Portfolios, Slipper Patterns, Wall Pockets, Carriage Rugs, Chair-back Covers, Towel-racks, Perfume Sachets, Lamp-shades, Needle-cases, Catchalls, Match-safes, Chair-bolsters, Umbrella-cases, School-bags, Patch-work, Glove-cases, Air-castles, Gypsy Tables, Hair-receivers, Table Mats, Night-dress Cases, Shoe-bags, Jewel-boxes, Door-mats, Knitted Jackets, Paper-racks, Pillow-shams, Hairpin Holders, and every design in fancy work a lady can describe, to the number of over 700. Jenny June, in her preface to this book, says: "The present volume aims to supply a greater variety of excellent designs—every one of which is useful for dress or household decoration—than have ever before been gathered within the leaves of one manual." Price, Post-paid, 50 Cents.

LETTERS AND MONOGRAMS, for Marking on Sillinen, and other Fabrics for Household use. Edited by Jenny June.
The aim of this new book is to give as great a variety of Initial Letters as possible, and to teach how and where the different sizes, forms, and models of letters can be most suitably applied, and with what materials they can be most suitably reproduced. This book is printed on fine paper, with handsome cover, and contains over

1,000 Illustrations. Price 50 Cents.

Comprising Alphabets, Monograms, and Initial Letters for marking Baby-blankets, Bed-linen, Bureau-scarfs, Banners, Handkerchiefs, Doylies, Duster-cases, Ecclesiastical Embroidery, Underclothing, House-linen, Pillow-shams, Laundry-bags, Portfolios, Sermon-cases, Sofa-cushions, Splashes, Tea-cloths, Table-linen, Tidies, Towels, Umbrella-cases, Work-aprons, Work-bags, etc.
Ladies will find this the only book of Initial Letters, Monograms, and Alphabets published in this country. Price, Post-paid, 50 Cents.

KNITTING AND CROCHET: A Guide to the Use of the Needle and the Hook. Edited by Jenny June. The aim of the editor has been to supply women with a simple, accurate and satisfactory guide to Knitting and Crochet work. This book is printed on fine paper, bound with a handsome cover, and contains over 200 Illustrations. Price 50c.

All known Stitches in Knitting, Macramé, and Crochet Work are illustrated, described, and made plain for beginners.
Signs and directions are given to Knit and Crochet Afghans, Under-vests, Sh-Petticoats, Jackets, Shawls, Insertion, Trimming, Edging, Comforters, Lace, Slip Socks, Boots, Gaiters, Drawers, Stockings, Mittens, Clouds, Counterpanes, Quilts, R-Hoods, Caps, Shawls, Dresses, Bed-quilts, etc. The most complete work on Knit-and Crochet published. Price, Post-paid, 50 Cents.

NEEDLE-WORK: A Manual of Stitches and Studies in Embroidery and Drawn Work. Edited by Jenny June. In this new book the author attempts to systematize the modern methods in Embroidery and Drawn Work, and aid women to a true and practical guide to the beautiful art of Needle-work. This book is printed on fine paper, has a handsome cover, and contains 200 Illustrations. Price 50 Cents.

All known Stitches in Needle-work are illustrated, described, and made plain for beginners. Designs in Needle-work are given to decorate my lady's chamber, my lady's robe, the dining room, parlor, and library, and for Linen and Cotton Fabrics, including designs for Mantel-scarfs, Bed-spre-Child's Quilt, Pillow-covers, Bureau-scarfs, Table-covers, Chair-backs, Morning Sacques, Handkerchiefs, Juffers, Ve-Sashes, Fans, Slippers, Bonnets, Parasols, Aprons, Work-bags, Glove-cases, Sachets, Lunch-cloths, Napkins, Table-m-Doylies, Tray-covers, Tea-cloths, Curtains, Banners, Screens, Sofa-cushions, Scarfs, Sofa-rugs, etc. The only stand-book on the subject of Needle-work. Price, Post-paid, 50 Cents. The four books for $1.75. Stamps tak-

Address, J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York

BUNYAN'S PILGRIM'S PROGRESS

AND
THE HOLY WAR.

A New Large Type Edition, Illustrated,
with Marginal Notes and References,

printed from new plates, and beautifully bound in rich English muslin, with beveled edges and gilt back and side. This is the complete edition of the Pilgrim's Progress,
The Holy War, and a Memoir of John Bunyan, all bound in one volume of over 700 pages. Price, $1.50, sent postpaid to any address on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, N. Y.

"Demonology or Spiritualism," Ancient and Modern. "An effective weapon."—A sword of fire. "Only unanswerable work on the subject."—Startling disclosures.—History, facts and data—Scores saved already. Whole communities rescued. Every family, preacher and christian worker needs one. 310 pp. 12mo. cloth. Price reduced to $1.
Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. Address
J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York

$500 A YEAR GUARANTEED SALARY, and one year's vacation, for one canvasser in each County. Business permanent and worth $1000 to $2000 a year.
No capital or experience necessary. Write for particulars.
CINCINNATI PUBLISHING CO., 189 Elm St., Cincinnati, O.

BONANZA TO AGENTS SAMPLES FREE
Geo. A. Scott, New York City

IF YOU WANT ANY BOOKS,

it makes no difference where you see them advertise or by whom or where they are published or sold send your orders to me and I will attend to the promptly, send all books to you prepaid, and guarantee that they reach you safely. Postage stamp received for fractional parts of a dollar.

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York

THE SHEPHERD'S GOOD NEW TO LADIES.

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our new book
"The Shepherd's Good New"
Tea, Coffee, and Baking Powder, and secure a beautiful
Gold Band or Moss Rose China
Set, Dinner Set, Gold Band Moss Rose China
Bless Lamp, Caster, or Webster's Dictionary.

Get Premium No. 27. For particulars address 66 AND 68 CHURCH STREET, N. Y. P. O. Box 2

DeWitt Talmage's New Book, Pen, Pulpit and Platform

SHOTS at SUNDRY TARGETS

Aimed at Wrongs 2 B Righted, Follies 2 B Shunned, Disgers 2 B Avoided, Sorrows 2 B Mitigated, Victories 2 B Won
A treasury of his best thoughts. Beautifully Illustrated
702 pages, $2.75. E. B. TREAT, NEW YORK

BEECHAM'S PILLS act like magic on a weak stomach
FOR A DISORDERED LIVER try BEECHAM'S PILLS.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

This Journal contains every week a Portrait and Biography of some eminent person; a new Sermon by the Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, of London, and the Rev. Dr. TALMAGE'S latest Sunday morning Sermon; also always a Prophetic Article, and a Summary of Current Events, as well as Stories, Anecdotes, etc.

Vol. XII., No. 21. Office. 71 Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 22, 1889.

Price. 3 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT OF MATAAFA, KING OF SAMOA, and Picture of an Incident in the Recent Hurricane.
NEW SPRINGS OF JOY. Dr. Talmage's Sermon last Sunday Morning.
ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS: A Lady's Surprise—The Negro and His Clock—Hindering the Salvation of a Girl—Refusing the Gift of a Bible—Nails in a Rotten Tree, Etc.
BOULANGER IN PROPHECY: WILL HE BECOME GALLOS KAISAR? By Rev. M. Baxter.
PORTRAIT OF MR. HUGH S. THOMPSON, The New Civil Service Commissioner.

LIFE'S WRECKAGE RESTORED. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
Gems from New Books: The Catacombs—Their Signs and Symbols.
PICTURE OF MAIN STREET, SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.
Tacking Ship on a Street—A Child Sold for Food—The Lachmin Case in India—An Experiment of Faith—An All-Night Struggle with Opium, Etc.
GOWER'S SICKNESS. (With Illustration.)
ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS. An Autobiographical Story by Mrs. Stenhouse. (Continued.)
JESUS BEFORE THE COUNCIL. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

The Crew of the U. S. Frigate "Trenton" Cheering the "Calliope" in the Great Storm at Samoa.

MATAAFA, KING OF SAMOA.

BRIEF accounts of the great naval disaster in Samoa have already appeared in this journal, and we are now enabled to give a picture of one of the most stirring incidents of the visitation, and with it a portrait of Mataafa, who occupies the position of King of the island pending the return of Malietoa, the rightful king, who was made prisoner by the Germans. Portraits of Malietoa and the insurgent chief Tamasese appeared in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD on Feb. 27.

Mataafa is a large, finely proportioned man of about fifty years of age. To the correspondent of an American journal who asked him recently for an explanation of his position as the friend of the imprisoned king, occupying his place, he said: "I am a member of Malietoa's family, and at the time he was deposed by the Germans was his principal chief. Just before he surrendered to the German commander, he handed over his office to me and left the administration of affairs in my hands. He appointed me his successor in every respect, and my people afterward confirmed the appointment by electing me King, and I now hold my office not only by virtue of Malietoa's appointment, but also by the votes of a majority of the Samoan people. In view of the fact that Malietoa resigned his office in my favor, he will not necessarily become King again in case he returned to his native land. Malietoa and myself would have to determine between ourselves who should be King, and, if he should return here, we would at once hold a conference for that purpose. I feel sure there would be no serious controversy between us." American and other foreign residents of Samoa confirmed Mataafa's statements. They believe him to be loyal to Malietoa, but believe that Malietoa is fully aware that Mataafa has more ability than himself, and will, when he returns, voluntarily allow the supreme power to remain in his hands.

Like Malietoa, Mataafa's hopes are centred on the friendship of the United States. He looks to our Government to interpose between him and the greedy, arrogant German power that would crush him and swallow up the islands. The German officials have stirred up the rivalry of the native sections in the hope, by setting one against another on the plan so successfully practiced by the English in India, of weakening both parties and producing so much anarchy and misery that the wily European power may be called upon to restore order. Mataafa appears to have penetrated the design, and realizing the danger, have looked to the Washington Government for protection. It may be hoped that the more conciliatory attitude now adopted by Bismarck, in deference to the protests of the United States, is an augury of good for Samoa, and that in the conference now in session at Berlin its independence may be assured.

THE FLEETS DISPERSED BY THE HURRICANE.

THE Samoans must have looked with awe upon the maritime monsters of Germany, England, and the United States, which early in March last were anchored in the bay of Apia. They must have been aware that their guns could have poured upon their city such a storm of shot and shell as would have destroyed every building within range. It is a poor, weak country, and the mighty governments represented by those floating forts are each gigantic in comparison. The Samoans, however, learned that mighty as those powers are, there is One mightier still. In one day the combined fleets were scattered by the winds, which are obedient to God alone. The missionaries there may point to the fact, and use it as an argument with the people to trust not in kings and earthly governments, but in Him whose power has so terribly manifested itself before their eyes.

The hurricane burst on the bay on March 15. The vessels had their steam up to relieve the strain that must come on their anchors, but that precaution was not sufficient to meet a storm so violent. The German steamer Eber began to drag her anchor. She was soon unmanageable, and drifted helplessly on the coral reef at the entrance to the harbor. She sank in deep water with nearly all on board. Her consort, the Adler, followed her, and struck on the same reef. The captain and some of the officers and crew saved themselves by swimming. The United States steamer Nipsic was the next to succumb, but her captain had the presence of mind to drive her on a sandbank instead of letting her drift on the terrible reef. Boats were lowered, and all on board were saved, except six who were drowned by the capsizing of one of the boats. The United States war-ship Vandalia speedily followed, and the gale carried her straight on the reef. Her captain, four officers, and forty men were washed overboard and drowned. The Trenton, the last of the three American ships, drifted on the wreck of the Vandalia and thence to the shore. All on board of her were saved. As morning broke, the Olga, the last of the German squadron, and the only war-ship in the bay, having hitherto bravely withstood the gale, succumbed and was driven on the beach. Six of the seven vessels which on March 14 rode proudly at anchor were wrecked, and ninety-six Germans and fifty Americans were dead. The seventh vessel, and the only one to escape was the British steamer,

The "Calliope."

She was equipped with very powerful machinery, capable of driving her at a rate of sixteen knots an hour. Finding that her anchors were dragging, her captain determined to abandon the anchors and trust to her engines for safety in flight. It was a momentous resolve, for the anchors and engines together had failed to save the other vessels in the harbor. Captain Kane, however, saw in that course his one chance of safety. He slipped his cable, and the next moment the Calliope leaped forward into the very teeth of the gale, her propeller making eighty-five revolutions per minute. Clearing the Olga she steamed by within speaking distance of the Trenton, passing between that vessel and the western reef.

"My anchors are gone and I am going to sea," shouted Captain Kane.

"Good luck to you," answered Admiral Kimberly from the Trenton's bridge.

And then from those four hundred men standing face to face with death, broke forth a ringing Yankee cheer to speed the plucky Englishman on his way (see illustration), and as the Calliope disappeared in the mist and driving rain, an answering shout came back upon the gale. The Calliope was buffeted by winds and waves, but made her way safely to Sydney, and soon afterward returned to Samoa, and rendered valuable aid to Admiral Kimberly and the German commanders.

The Report of Admiral Kimberly.

who was in command of the American squadron, to the Secretary of the Navy, said: "On March 15, when the gale commenced, there were in the harbor the following men-of-war: United States ships Trenton, Vandalia, and Nipsic; H. B. M. ship, Calliope, and H. I. G. M. ships, Adler, Olga, and Eber. There were also a few merchant vessels and small craft. The Nipsic had the inner berth, and the Trenton (last to arrive) had the outer berth. Indications of bad weather appeared during the forenoon, and at 1 o'clock I commenced preparations to meet a gale by sending down the lower yards and housing topmasts. Fires were lighted and steam was raised. By 3 o'clock the gale had developed. During the night it blew with great violence, but with the aid of steam the vessels kept in good shape until morning. At daylight we had hoped for a moderation of the wind, but were disappointed. The gale set in with renewed fury, and early in the forenoon it was evident that some of the ships were ashore, and those nearer to us were riding uneasily.

"The wind was blowing with hurricane force, and the seas were very heavy. The ship had begun to make water during the early morning. The hand-pumps were manned, and all bilge-pumps in the engine-room put on. The water gained and threatened to put out the fires. All hands were set to bailing, but by 9:30 A. M. the fires had been put out and the men driven up from the fire-room. Work at the hand-pumps and with the buckets continued from this time throughout the gale, with the hope of being able to relight the fires and to keep the ship afloat. In the afternoon, the wind having hauled a little, the flagship was more unsteady at her moorings and parted two chains, one soon after the other. We then drifted over toward the eastern reef, escaping the wreck of a merchant bark by the mere chance of her dragging as we approached her. We drifted until our stern was almost against the reef. Destruction seemed imminent, as the vessel was within a few feet of the reef for a long while and pitching heavily.

"All this time the gale was blowing with unabated fury. About 6 o'clock we were expecting to strike the reef momentarily. It was directly under our stem, but, as on the eastern side, an undertow or current seemed to carry us along the reef, and keep us just clear of striking. Thus we came on to where the Vandalia was lying, and it was evident that our stem would soon strike against her port side. As we approached her, rockets were fired carrying lines with the hope of rescuing the people on her masts. This proved very successful, and the men from the main and mizzen were rescued first. Soon after, we struck the Vandalia with violence, and her main and mizzen masts went by the board. We then swung gradually, and settled into a position alongside of her, just touching the bottom, and our stern grazing a small wreck and the reef. The men were rescued from the foremast of the Vandalia, and thence on during the night we continued to beat the bottom and against the Vandalia with great force. The wind during this (Saturday) night blew with hurricane force, squall following squall, with hardly any appreciable interval. The seas, however, were not so high as they were further out, and we got through the night without serious misfortune."

A Witness on Shore

says: "The force of the storm was never equalled in this part of the world before. The barometer had been falling steadily for several days previous to the storm, and the wind began to blow on Friday afternoon, March 15, and continued until Sunday morning. The rain fell in torrents during the whole time, and great clouds of sand swept over the town. Hundreds of people stood on the beach, and watched the awful spectacle in the harbor. The vessels all had full head of steam on and three or four anchors out. Their yards and topmasts were down, and every precaution was taken to insure the safety of the ships, but the wind constantly shifted from northeast and northwest. The force was so great that the vessels dragged their anchors all over from one side of the bay to the other, and came into collision a dozen times. Tremendous seas broke over the decks, and torrents of water rushed down the hatchways and put out the fires. There was great confusion among the men on several of the vessels early on Saturday morning, but the officers did noble work, and the men became orderly, and attended to their duties bravely in the face of danger."

The vessels most plainly visible were the Eber, the Adler, and the Nipsic. They were very close together, and only a few yards off from the reef. The little gunboat Eber was making a desperate struggle for life, but every moment she was being drawn nearer and nearer the reef. Her doom was certain. Suddenly she shot forward as if making a last struggle to escape destruction. The current, however, bore her off to the right, and her prow struck the port quarter of the Nipsic. The shock carried away several feet of the Nipsic's rail and one boat. The Eber then fell back and fouled with the Olga, but neither vessel sustained much damage by the collision. The Eber swung around, broadside to the wind, and drifted slowly toward the reef, while awful seas broke over the little vessel. A great wave rolled in toward shore. The Eber was lifted high on its crest and carried broadside on the reef. She came down with awful force, and in an instant there was not a vestige to be seen. She struck fairly upon her bottom, rolled over and disappeared from view.

Samoans to the Rescue.

Every timber of the gunboat must have been shattered, and half the poor wretches aboard her crushed to death before they felt the waters closing above their heads. Hundreds of people were on the beach, and with one accord they all rushed to the water's edge nearest the point where the Eber had foundered. The natives ran into the surf far beyond the point where a white man could have lived, and stood waiting to save any poor creature who might rise from the water. At first it seemed as if every man on the ill-fated steamer had gone to his death, but soon a few men who had come to the surface struck out feebly for the shore. Presently a man was seen clinging to the piling under a small wharf near by. Willing hands soon grasped him and drew him upon the shore. He proved to be Lieutenant Gaedeke, the only officer of the Eber who was saved. He was in a dazed condition, and unable to realize his escape. Four sailors from the Eber were seen struggling in the water near shore at about the same time. They were quickly rescued by natives, and also taken to the American Consulate. There were six officers and seventy men on the Eber when she struck the reef, and of these five officers and sixty-six men were lost.

The Samoa or Navigators Islands are situated about two hundred miles north-east of the Fiji Islands, in the Pacific Ocean. The two largest are Savaii and Upolu, the latter of which contains the port and town of Apia, and is the chief place of trade; the next is Tutuila, where the steamers call on the voyage from San Francisco to Sydney. Upolu is an island forty-five miles long and fourteen miles broad, in which two-fifths of the area, between 60,000 and 70,000 acres, are in the possession of the German South Sea and Plantation Company, which maintains more than forty stations on this island alone, in which white merchants barter copra of the natives. Some of the smaller islands are entirely in the possession of the company. The working of the plantations is done by labor imported from the Solomon Islands, the Ellice group, and other islands. The laborers are hired for three years under the superintendence of the German Consulates, and are brought back under the supervision of the Consuls. They have the right of complaining to the German Consuls, have medical treatment when required, and receive clothing from the company. The German South Sea and Plantation Company employs about thirty clerks, forty German superintendents of stations, and several hundred traders. Besides the South Sea and Plantation Company, there are a number of smaller German firms.

The Native Population of Samoa consists of about 35,000 persons, about 26,000 of them being at least nominal Christians. The first missionaries to these islands were eight evangelists from Tahiti (itself not long elevated from barbarism and cannibalism), who went there in the year 1830. Six years later they were followed by English missionaries sent out by the London Missionary Society. There are now about 200 Christian schools, with somewhat more than 8,000 scholars. The Wesleyan Methodists have also several successful missions and a number of churches. The natives have many interesting characteristics, and a history which shows them to be possessed of excellent mental and moral capabilities; except in the town of Apia (where many foreigners live), police and crime are almost unknown.

Volume XL, of the Christian Herald, Containing the numbers for 1888, with complete index, bound in cloth, may be had from this office; price, $2.50, including postage. A few volumes of 1884, 1885, and 1887 are also for sale. We can also furnish complete volumes for 1884, 1885, and 1888, unbound, price $1.00, including postage.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

A Lady's Surprise.—"On one Occasion when I had been preaching," says Dr. Pentecost, "and saying that all who had not received life from Christ were dead in trespasses and sins, a lady came to me and said, 'Dr. Pentecost, there is my husband. Surely you do not mean that he is dead in sin? He is so good and kind, so honest, so fair and upright, he wants only one thing—' 'And that thing is life,' I added; 'he is dead. He may be fair to look upon, but being spiritually dead he is on the sure and speedy road to corruption. Nothing can save him except Christ sends His vivifying spirit to him.' Corruption is only a matter of degree and time. The fair daughter of Jairus from whom the breath had just passed was as dead as the son of the widow of Nain, or Lazarus, who had lain in his grave four days; and it needed the same power to revivify the one as the other."

The Negro and His Clock.—"I Heard of a negro who, a few years after he was set free, had by some means got possession of a clock. His time-piece did not go very well, so taking off the hands he took them to a watchmaker, and handed them over, saying, 'I want you to fix these for me; they go all wrong and I never know when to get up.' The clockmaker could not refrain from laughing, as he said, 'You must bring the whole clock to me before I can set it right.' But the negro maintained that he knew better than that. 'All the rest of the clock is quite right,' he said, 'it is only the hands that are wrong; you just want to run up a big bill, and I will not bring the clock.' Similarly some sinners think they have just to be saved from one sin, and they take it to Christ. It is of no use. You must bring the whole heart to Him, or there can be no salvation. Christ does not heal the heart piecemeal; He regenerates the whole, or He will have nothing to do with it."

Hindering the Salvation of the Girl.—Mr. Moodie, the soldier-evangelist, relates: "I was preaching at Edinburgh two weeks ago, and at one of the meetings I noticed during the address a young girl who was evidently much impressed and anxious about her soul. At the close of the first service she waited behind to be personally dealt with about her salvation. There being no lady worker near at the time, I went into the ante-room to procure one, and as I turned to come back, to my surprise I saw an old woman absolutely dragging the reluctant girl towards the door. The woman herself was professedly a Christian, and yet she was dragging this poor anxious girl, presumably her daughter, out of an inquiry meeting, away from the influence of the Gospel, with which she was eager to close. Christians, take care that you do not do anything to hinder another's salvation. You may not go the length of openly seeking to withdraw your fellows from the sound of the Gospel trumpet, yet by your speech or behavior you may be a stumbling-block in their way."

Refusing the Gift of a Bible.—Mr. Willington says: "Mr. John Brown, of Greenock, came to me some years ago, and said, 'Mr. Willington, I was out the other day, and bought two Newbury's English-Hebrew Bibles. I have already given one away, and I am going to give the other to you.' 'Thank you,' I replied, 'but I do not want it.' 'Don't want it?' he repeated; 'now don't be such a s mpleton. It cost fifty shillings, and I bought it specially for you. Take it.' 'No; I am sorry to refuse, but I cannot accept of it.' You see, whenever I have two Bibles I always feel constrained to give one away, and as I am attached to my present Bible, I would rather not accept your very generous gift.' My friend seemed disappointed, but went away, taking the Bible with him. After a little consideration, I began to think that I had been very foolish to refuse the gift so freely offered, so the next time we met, I said, 'Mr. Brown, I have thought better of your offer; I will accept that Bible after all.' But Mr. Brown only shook his head. 'I am in earnest,' I said. 'So am I,' was the response; 'I bought that Book for you, I offered it to you, but I could not accept it for you. I was grieved by your refusal, and now you will never have that Bible from me.' Sinners, Christ has died for you. He has bought redemption for you, and that at a great price. He offers it freely to you, but He, even He, cannot accept it for you! This you must do for yourself. Do not reject it, you may never have the offer again."

Nails in a Rotten Tree.—"When I was in the army," says Dr. Pentecost, "I remember coming one day to a place where we were told we should remain for two months or so. At once we began to look around us to see if we could make ourselves tolerably comfortable. A brother officer and myself made up our minds to build ourselves a bunk, which would be a much better shelter than a canvas tent. I found, when driving the nails into the timber, that they went in very easily, but I did not take much notice of that. At night we got into the bunk: but, to our consternation, down it came with a crash. The wood was sound, the nails were good and well driven, but they were driven into a rotten tree, against which we had fixed the bunk. Similarly some professed Christians and sinners build up splendid moral structures, their words and actions are good and sound, but they are built on a bad foundation: there is nothing to hold to. If we wish the temple of our lives to stand safely, then we must be united to Christ, and build on Him."

Burning Irreligious Books.—It is related that the eloquent Father Beauregard once preached a sermon in Notre Dame, Paris, upon the injury done by the reading of irreligious books. A lady who was a bookseller in the city heard the sermon, and, conscious that she had many irreligious books in her shop, she was very deeply impressed. After the sermon she went to the preacher, and, with tears in her eyes, said to him, "You have shown me how sinful I have been in selling many impious books, and I entreat you to finish the good work you have begun, by coming to my warehouse and examining all the books that are in it, and putting aside all those which may be injurious to morals or religion. I am resolved to part with them, whatever it may cost me. I had rather lose part of my property than consent to lose my soul. Father Beauregard complied with her request. The very next day he selected the books he considered objectionable. The lady, in his presence, cast them into a great fire she had provided. The cost of the books was fifteen thousand francs ($3,000); but she made the sacrifice without a murmur, and showed the reality of her repentance by turning from evil.

The Father and His Wandering Child.—A minister relates that a Christian visitor found a young woman who had left her father's house for a sinful life, and now was wretched beyond all description. Her anguish was especially in the desire to get home again, and her certainty that her father would not and could not receive her, nor forgive her. "Have you ever tried him?" she was asked. "No, I dare not," she replied. "Does your father know where you are?" asked the visitor. "No, I have never written to him since I left home," the girl responded. It was a long time before she would even let the visitor write in her behalf. But at last she consented, and the letter was prayed over. By return of post an answer came with "immediate" written large on the outside; and the substance of it was, "Ready to forgive." Said the father: "This is what I have been earnestly praying for; I have wanted to know where my wanderer was, and yearned to hear that she was willing to return. Let her come back at once; I will forgive all, and love her still." This father's readiness to forgive and receive his child was a fact before the letter was written—a fact all the time she thought so hardly of her father, and judged his heart by her own deservings. What should this teach us about our heavenly Father? He waits to be gracious.

NEW SPRINGS OF JOY.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon, Preached last Sunday Morning, May 19, 1889.

"Thou hast given me a south land; give me also springs of water. And he gave her the upper springs and the nether springs." Joshua 15: 19.

Caleb's Offer—The Conquering Lover—A Good Time for Getting a Gift—The Dower Land—A Double Response—The Upper and the Nether Springs—God's Gift of the World—A Larger Portion Wanted—Dissatisfied Successful Men—The Miseries of Prosperous Worldlings—Where the Suicides Come From—Talleyrand's Confession—The Nether Springs of Spiritual Blessing—Christians Who Have Enjoyed Them—Celebrated in Poetry and Allegory—Springs of Comfort—The Upper Springs of Glibry—Glimpses of It—Deliverance Coming—A Long Journey in One Week.

THE city of Debir was the Boston of antiquity—a great place for brain and books. Caleb wanted it, and he offered his daughter Achsah as a prize to any one who would capture that city. It was a strange thing for Caleb to do; and yet the man that could take the city would have, at any rate, two elements of manhood—bravery and patriotism. With Caleb's daughter as a prize to fight for, Gen. Othniel rode into the battle. The gates of Debir were thundered into the dust, and the city of books lay at the feet of the conquerors. The work done, Othniel comes back to claim his bride. Having conquered the city, it is no great job for him to conquer the girl's heart; for however faint-hearted a woman herself may be, she always loves courage in a man. I never saw an exception to that.

The Wedding Festivity

having gone by, Othniel and Achsah are about to go to their new home. However loudly the cymbals may clash and the laughter ring, parents are always sad when a fondly cherished daughter goes off to stay; and Achsah, the daughter of Caleb, knows that now is the time to ask almost anything she wants of her father. It seems that Caleb, the good old man, had given as a wedding present to his daughter a piece of land that was mountainous, and sloping southward toward the deserts of Arabia, swept with some very hot winds. It was called "a south land." But Achsah wants an addition of property; she wants a piece of land that is well watered and fertile. Now it is no wonder that Caleb standing amidst the bridal party, his eyes so full of tears because she was going away that he could hardly see her at all, gives her more than she asks. She said to him: "Thou hast given me a south land; give me also springs of water. And he gave her the upper springs, and the nether springs."

What a suggestive passage! The fact is, that as Caleb the father gave Achsah the daughter a south land, so

God Gives to Us His World.

I am very thankful He has given it to us. But I am like Achsah in the fact that I want a larger portion. Trees and flowers and grass and blue skies are very well in their places; but he who has nothing but this world for a portion has no portion at all. It is a mountainous land, sloping off toward the desert of sorrow, swept by fiery siroccos; it is "a south land," a poor portion for any man that tries to put his trust in it. What has been your experience? What has been the experience of every man, of every woman, that has tried this world for a portion? Queen Elizabeth, amidst the surroundings of pomp, is unhappy because the painter sketches too minutely the wrinkles on her face, and she indignantly cries out: "You must strike off my likeness without any shadows!"

Hogarth, at the very height of his artistic triumph, is stung almost to death with chagrin because the painting he had dedicated to the King does not seem to be acceptable; for George II. cries out: "Who is this Hogarth?" Take his trumpety out of my presence!" Brinsley Sheridan thrilled the earth with his eloquence, but had for his last words, "I am absolutely undone!" Walter Scott, fumbling around the ink-stand, trying to write, says to his daughter: "Oh, take me back to my room; there is no rest for Sir Walter but in the grave." Stephen Girard, the wealthiest man in his day, or, at any rate, only second in wealth, says: "I live the life of a galley slave; when I arise in the morning my one effort is to work so hard that I can sleep when it gets to be night." Charles Lamb, applauded of all the world, in the very midst of his literary triumph says: "Do you remember, Bridget, when we used to laugh from the shilling gallery at the play? There are now no good plays to laugh at from the boxes." But why go so far as that? I need go no further than your street to find an illustration.

Pick me out ten successful worldlings—without any religion, and you know what I mean by

Successful Worldlings

—pick me out ten successful worldlings, and you cannot find more than one that looks happy. Care drags him across the bridge; care drags him back. Take your stand at 2 o'clock at the corner of Nassau and Wall streets, or at the corner of Canal Street and Broadway, and see the agonized physiognomies. Your bankers, your insurance men, your importers, your wholesalers, and your retailers, as a class—as a class, are they happy? No. Care dogs their steps; and, making no appeal to God for help or comfort, they are tossed every whither. How has it been with you, my hearer? Are you more contented in the house of fourteen rooms than you were in the two rooms you had in a house when you started? Have you not had more care and worryment since you won that fifty thousand dollars than you did before? Some of the poorest men I have ever known have been those of great fortune. A man of small means may be in business straits, but is that of the man who has large estates. The men who commit suicide because of monetary losses are those who cannot bear the burden any more, because they have only a hundred thousand dollars left. On Bowling Green, New York, there is a house where Talleyrand used to go. He was a favorite man. All the world knew him, and he had wealth almost unlimited; yet at the close of his life he says: "Behold, eighty-three years have passed without any practical result, save fatigue of body and fatigue of mind, great discouragement for the future, and great disgust for the past." Oh, my friends, this is "a south land," and it slopes off toward deserts of sorrows; and the prayer which Achsah made to her father Caleb, we make this day to our Father God: "Thou hast given me a south land; give me also springs of water. And he gave them the upper springs, and the nether springs."

The Ghastliest of all Embarrassments

Blessed be God! We have more advantages given us than we can really appreciate. We have spiritual blessings offered us in this world which I shall call and glories in the world to come which I shall call the upper springs.

The Nether Springs,

Where shall I find words enough threaded with light to set forth the pleasure of religion? David, unable to describe it in words, played it on a harp. Mrs. Hemans, not finding enough power in prose, sings that praise in a canto. Christopher Wren, unable to describe it in language, sprung it into the arches of St. Paul's. John Bunyan, unable to present it in ordinary phraseology, takes all the fascination of allegory. Handel, with ordinary music unable to reach the height of the theme, rouses it up in an oratorio. Oh, there is no life on earth so happy as a really Christian life. I do not mean a sham Christian life, but a real Christian life. Where there is a thorn, there is a whole garland of roses. Where there is one groan, there are Three Doxologies.

Where there is one day of cloud, there is a whole season of sunshine. Take the humblest Christian man that you know—angels of God canopy him with their white wings; the lightnings of heaven are his armed allies; the Lord is his Shepherd, picking out for him green pastures by still waters; if he walk forth, heaven is his body-guard; if he lie down to sleep, ladders of light, angel-blossoms, are let into his dreams; if he be thirsty, the potentates of heaven are his cup bearers; if he sit down to food, his plain table blooms into the King's banquet. Men say: "Look at that old fellow with the worn out coat;" the angels of God cry: "Lift up your heads, ye everlasting gates, and let him come in." Fastidious people cry: "Get off my front steps!" the doorkeepers of heaven cry: "Come, you blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom!" When he comes to die, though he may be carried out in a pine box to the potter's field, to that potter's field the chariots of Christ will come down, and the cavalcade will crowd all the boulevards of heaven.

I bless Christ for the present satisfaction of religion. It makes a man all right with reference to the past; it makes a man all right with reference to the future. Oh, these nether Springs of Comfort!

They are perennial. The foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, "The Lord knoweth them that are His." "The mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed, but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord, who hath mercy upon them." Oh cluster of diamonds set in burnished gold! Oh nether springs of comfort bursting through all the valleys of trial and tribulation! When you see, you of the world, what satisfaction there is on earth in religion, do you not thirst after it as the daughter of Caleb thirsted after the water springs? It is no stagnant pond, scummed over with malaria, but springs of water leaping from the Rock of Ages! Take up one cup of that spring water, and across the top of the chalice will float the delicate shadows of the heavenly wall, the yellow of jasper, the green of emerald, the blue of sardonyx.

Happy Christians.

I wish I could make you understand the joy religion is to some of us. It makes a man happy while he lives, and glad when he dies. With two feet upon a chair, and bursting with dropsies, I heard an old man in the poor-house cry out: "Bless the Lord, oh my soul!" I looked around, and said: "What has this man got to thank God for?" It makes the lame man leap like the hart, and the dumb sing. They say that the old Puritan religion is a juiceless and joyless religion; but I remember reading of Dr. Goodwin, the celebrated Puritan, who in his last moments said: "Is this dying? Why, my bow abides in strength! I am swallowed up in God." "Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace." Oh, you who have been trying to satisfy yourselves with the "south land" of this world, do you not feel that you would, this morning, like to have access to the nether springs of spiritual comfort? Would you not like to have Jesus Christ bend over your cradle, and bless your table, and heal your wounds, and strew flowers of consolation all up and down the graves of your dead?

'Tis religion that can give Sweetest pleasures while we live;
'Tis religion can supply
Sweetest comfort when we die.

But I have something better to tell you, suggested by this text. It seems that old father Caleb on the wedding-day of his daughter wanted to make her just as happy as possible. Though Othniel was taking her away, and his heart was almost broken because she was going, yet he gives her "a south land;" not only that, but the nether springs; not only that, but

The Upper Springs.

O God, my Father, I thank Thee, that Thou hast given me a "south land" in this world, and the nether springs of spiritual comfort in this world; but, more than all, I thank Thee for the upper springs in heaven.

It is very fortunate we cannot see heaven until we get into it. Oh, Christian man, if you could see what a place it is, we would never get you back again to the office or store or shop, and the duties you ought to perform would go neglected. I am glad I shall not see that world until I enter it. Suppose we were allowed to go on an excursion into that good land with the idea of returning. When we got there, and heard the song, and looked at their raptured faces, and mingled in the supernal society, we would cry out: "Let us stay! We are coming here anyhow. Why take the trouble of going back again to that old world? We are here now; let us stay." And it would take angelic violence to put us out of that world, if once we got there. But as people who cannot afford to pay for an entertainment sometimes come around it and look through the door ajar, or through the openings in the fence, so we come and look through the crevices in that good land which God has provided for us. We can just catch a glimpse of it. We come near enough to hear the rumbling of the eternal orchestra, though not near enough to know who blows the cornet or who fingers the harp. My soul spreads out both wings and claps them in triumph at the thought of those upper springs. One of them breaks from beneath the throne; another breaks forth from beneath the altar of the temple; another at the door of "the house of many mansions." Upper springs of gladness!

Upper Springs of Light!

Upper springs of love! It is no fancy of mine. "The Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall lead them to living fountains of water." O Saviour divine, roll in upon our souls one of those anticipated raptures! Pour around the roots of the parched tongue one drop of that liquid life! Toss before our vision those fountains of God, rainbowed with eternal victory! Hear it. They are never sick there; not so much as a headache, or twinge rheumatic, or thrust neuralgic. The inhabitant never says: "I am sick." They are never tired there. Flight to farthest world is only the play of a holiday. They never sin there. It is as easy for them to be holy as it is for us to sin. They never die there. You might go through all the outskirts of the great city and find not one place where the ground was broken for a grave. The eyesight of the redeemed is never blurred with tears. There is health in every cheek. There is spring in every foot. There is majesty on every brow. There is joy in every heart. There is hosanna on every lip.

How They Must Pity Us

as they look over and down and see us, and say: "Poor things away down in that world"! And when some Christian is hurled into a fatal accident, they cry: "Good! he is coming!" And when we stand around the couch of some loved one whose strength is going away, and we shake our heads forebodingly, they cry: "I am glad he is worse; he has been down there long enough. There, he is dead! Come home! Come home!" Oh, if we could only get our ideas about that future world untwisted our thought of transfer from here to there would be as pleasant to us as it was to a little child that was dying. She said: "Papa, when will I go home?" And he said: "To-day, Florence." "To-day? So soon? I am so glad!"

I wish I could stimulate you with these thoughts, oh Christian man, to the highest possible exhilaration. The day of your is coming. It is rolling on with the shining wheels of the day, and the jet wheels of the night. Every thump of the heart is only a hammer stroke striking off another chain of clay. Better scour the deck and coil the rope; the harbor is only six miles away. Jesus will come down in the "Narrows" to meet you. Now is your salvation nearer than when you believed.

Deliverance is Coming,

Unforgiven man, unpardoned man, will you not to-day make a choice between these two portions, between the "south land" of this world, which slopes to the desert, and this glorious land which thy Father offers thee, running with eternal water courses? Why let your tongue be consumed with thirst when there are the nether springs and the upper springs, comfort here, and glory hereafter?

Let me tell you, my dear brother, that the silliest and wickedest thing a man ever does is to reject Jesus Christ. The loss of the soul is a mistake that cannot be corrected. It is a downfall that knows no alleviation; it is a ruin that is remediless; it is a sickness that has no medicament; it is a grave into which a man goes, but never comes out. Therefore, putting my hand on your shoulder, as one brother puts his hand on the shoulder of a brother, I say this day, Be manly, and surrender your heart to Christ. You have been long enough serving the world; now begin to serve the Lord who bought you. You have tried long enough to carry these burdens; let Jesus Christ put His shoulder under your burden. Do I hear any one in the audience say: "I mean to attend to that after awhile; it is not just the time"?

It is the Time, for the simple reason that you are sure of no other; and God sends you here this morning, and He sent me here to confront you with this message; and you must hear now that Christ died to save your soul, and that if you want to be saved you may be saved. "Whosoever will, let him come." You will never find any more convenient season than this. Some of you have been waiting ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, and sixty years. On some of you the snow has fallen. I see it on your brow, and yet you have not attended to those duties which belong to the very springtime of life. It is September with you now, it is October with you, it is December with you. I am no alarmist. I simply know this: if a man does not repent in this world he never repents at all, and that now is the accepted time, and now is the day of salvation. Oh, put off this matter no longer. Do not turn your back on Jesus Christ who comes to save you, lest you should lose your soul.

On a Monday morning a friend of mine started from New York to celebrate her birthday with her daughter in Virginia. On Saturday of the same week, just after sunrise, I stood at the gate of Greenwood waiting for her silent form to come in. It is a long journey to take in one week—from New York to Philadelphia, from Philadelphia to Baltimore, from Baltimore to Washington, from Washington to Virginia, from Virginia into the great eternity. "What thy hand findeth to do, do it."

A DYSPEPTIC SUFFERER.

THE following testimony, interesting to many sufferers in our land, which was recently given at Bethshan, is published in the current number of Thy Healer.* Mr. Bowen said: I have come to this meeting expressly to acknowledge what the Lord has done for me. For over twenty years I have suffered from indigestion and a sluggish liver, which have been a hindrance to me, spiritually and temporally, and the more exertion I made the worse I became; therefore, I could not do anything as I ought. But about four years and a half ago I had heard, through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, in Australia, of the great work done here. I turned the matter over in my mind, and I was not more than five minutes before the Lord made it very clear to me that the blessing was to be received now as well as when Christ and His apostles were upon earth; and as soon as I had made up my mind to this, I ran to my bedroom and went on my knees, and there and then presented my body to my Creator and Saviour, who had borne my sufferings and weaknesses on the cross, and when I rose from my knees, after a short prayer, I felt all the joys that I had heard Christians talk about, and felt strongly inclined to shout out, "Praise the Lord!" I did not receive the healing immediately, but I knew, from the joy I had, that the matter was in the Lord's hands. In less than a month I felt quite another man, and since then I have had much experience of the Lord's goodness in connection with my own body, and also in connection with my family.

AN ALL-NIGHT STRUGGLE WITH OPIUM.

ANY experienced physician can appreciate an incident related a few days ago by the Rev. J. Macgowan, the well-known missionary at Amoy, in China, and will agree that there are in it at least the elements of the miraculous. Mr. Macgowan said:

Years ago, in one of our country churches, one morning, while the service was going on, a man came in, and he stayed while the preacher was preaching. I want you to look at this man for a moment. He was a most dissipated man—a man upon whose face vice was set, a man whom no influence in all China could make better. He was an opium-smoker, and had been for years. His lands had dwindled away, his wife was in poverty and sorrow; he was a man in the lowest ebb of life even in China. He came in, and he stood listening to what the preacher said. You can tell by his long dress and an indescribable something about him that he is a scholar, and you would say to him, "Now, why don't you be a good man, and give up your opium? Your wife is starving; your land is gone; your house is in ruins. Why not be a good man?" "I dare not," he replies; "I am afraid if I attempt to give up my opium I shall die. I cannot." "But you are a Chinese scholar. You have read the books of Confucius?" "Yes; I know them from one end to the other. I can repeat them." "Do you never, when you read these Confucian books, find some inspiration coming to you and saying, 'I must be a better man, and live a good life?'" "No; I don't," he says: "I dare not give up my opium. I am afraid I should die."

He came again and again, and heard the Gospel and read the Bible, and the result was that one Sunday he said, "I am going to be a Christian. I am going to give up all my Confucianism, but the first thing I am going to do is to give up my opium." The preacher said to him, "Well, we are very glad of that, but you will have to be very careful. Do it gradually. It is a very serious business." He said, "I know it is, but I am not going to do it gradually. It is wrong, and from this moment I will never touch opium as long as I live." He was employed as a tutor by a rich merchant, who was a great opium-smoker himself. By-and-by his employer said to him, "Come away to your opium." "No," he replied, "I am never going to smoke it again." The rich merchant smiled sarcastically and said, "Before midnight comes you will want it. When you do, here it is on the tray. Here is the opium, and here are the lights."

Midnight came and found this man in intense agony. Every bone in his body ached, and elicited an indescribable wail from him. Sleep fled from his eyes as though they were never intended to sleep. As night went on the pain increased, and he felt as though the outside world were in terrible conflict with the influences that made up his own individuality. In the next room there was the opium all ready; but he never took a step towards it. He and the opium were separated for ever. There was a new force in his life. No; he would not move, although it seemed that the night would never end, and that the Chinese sun was shining in his eyes all through. No; he would suffer, but he would not take the opium as long as he lived. That was the same power that evoked the martyr's spirit. This Chinese scholar was being brought among those whose names have stamped themselves upon history. The opium was there, but never a step he took towards it. For years this man has been one of the chief workers and best pastors in the Church, a man whom the Chinese can look up to.

* Thy Healer and Faith Witness, a monthly Magazine, edited by Mrs. M. Baxter, contains original articles on Holiness and Healing, Authentic Testimonies of Divine Healing, and Items of Intelligence from Heathen Lands where missionaries are laboring in faith, soliciting no help from man, but relying solely on God for support. Annual Subscription 50 cents, may be sent to Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

BOULANGER IN PROPHECY.

Will General Boulanger be the French Cæsar (Gallos Kaisar) of Scripture Prophecy, who is Mainly to Cause the Formation of the Existing Twenty-three Kingdoms Inside Cæsar's Roman Empire Territories into a Confederacy of Ten Kingdoms, which may be Reckoned the Eighth Wonder of the World?

By Rev. M. Baxter.

THE seven wonders of the world as they are popularly reckoned were: The Egyptian Pyramids; the Mausoleum erected by Artemisia; Temple of Diana at Ephesus; The Colossus or Brazen Image of the Sun at Rhodes; Walls and Hanging Gardens of Babylon; the Statue of Jupiter Olympus; The Pharos or Watch-tower of Ptolemy Philadelphus, instead of which some reckon the Royal Palace of Cyrus, built by Memon, the stones of which were cemented with gold.

An Eighth Wonder, however, is in 1892 to be added to this historic number in the form of a ten-kingdomed allied confederacy of all the nations within the boundaries of Cæsar's ancient Roman Empire, as foreshown by the Ten-horned Leopard and Ten-toed Image in Daniel 7:24, and 2:31.

The absorbing and all-important question is, Will General Boulanger, who on April 24, the day after Passover Week, 1889—precisely the first day of the final twelve years of this Age—has come from Brussels to the hospitable shores of England, be yet raised to a position of power in connection with the general elections in France in October, or by other events in that country, so as to take a leading part in which must in 1890 or 1891, according to Daniel's prophecies, issue in the extension of France to the Rhine as its ancient frontier, and its defeat of Germany? Is he to be the wonder-working magician, who, as by the waving of a wizard's wand, is to translate and compress twenty-three kingdoms or states, which now exist within the territories of Cæsar's original Roman Empire, into only Ten Kingdoms, namely—Britain, France enlarged to the Rhine, Spain with Portugal, Italy, Austria south of the Danube, Greece, enlarged northwards, Egypt, Syria, Turkey, and the Balkan States?

The Great European War

Is General Ernest Boulanger to be the mighty Artificer, Constructor, Engineer, or Architect, who is to create a Political Fabric more marvellous than the Eiffel Tower, or the Pyramids of Egypt, or the Cologne Cathedral, or the Suez Canal—a political Structure that will be the Eighth Wonder of the World—namely, a Colossal Confederacy of those Ten Kingdoms, which is pre-figured in Daniel 7:24 and 2:31 under the symbol of a Ten-horned Therion or Wild Beast and of a Ten-toed Image, to be fully formed and developed by 1892? Is the name of Boulanger to be more prominent in connection with a Paris Congress in 1891 or 1892, that shall re-model the boundaries of nations and frame on this decemregal basis, than the name of Bismarck in connection with the Berlin Congress of 1878, which will then become entirely superseded? Shall the star of the French General be soon seen in the ascendant as Arbiter of the destinies of Europe, and the star of the German Statesman decline—that Statesman to whom as the modern Eolus or "honest broker," Europe is under Providence largely indebted for the peace it has enjoyed since 1878?

A New Map of Europe

The answer to the foregoing questions will at least be measurably facilitated by considering as attaching to General Boulanger the following Four Prophetic Features.

I. The First Prophetic Feature observable in General Boulanger is His phenomenal and mysterious rise to sudden prominence and popularity in France just at the very time when Daniel's prophecies require a Military Leader during the years 1890 to 1892 to regain the Rhine frontier for France, and reconstruct the map of Europe, and change the French Republic into a Monarchy.

The time for the above-mentioned Ten-kingdomed Confederacy to be formed, is clearly announced in Daniel's prophecies to be about 1892 after a Universal European War in 1890 or 1891, i. e., not later than nine years before the End of this Age in 1901, and therefore some Political personage who shall be instrumental in bringing these events to pass must almost immediately make his appearance in France. The Hour is come, and also apparently the Man. What popular leader is there except General Boulanger, that seems fitted and qualified to fulfil these prophecies? If he does not do so, someone else, who must be very like him in many respects, will enact the rôle above indicated. But can any other living man be found who is qualified to perform this part on the stage of Europe, and who at the same time is distinguished by the prophetic features which are found in General Boulanger.

Phenomenal Popularity.

The sudden growth of General Boulanger's great prestige and popularity in France dates from the time when he was Minister of War in the French Government in 1886. All the efforts made by his opponents to diminish that popularity have only increased it. His reduction from the position of General in the French Army at Clermont-Ferrand in March, 1888, led to his being enabled to reside at Paris, and to carry on electoral campaigns with surprising vigor and success. His candidature as representative for the constituency of the Nord, the industrial Birmingham of France, in 1888, resulted in his election by an unlooked for majority of votes. Then his majority of 70,000 votes for the Department of the Seine in Paris on January 27, 1889, was wholly unexpected. Later on, his prosecution by M. Tirard's French Government, which caused his celebrated flight to Brussels on April 2, 1889 (the end of 2,345 years from Ezra's reforms), has only resulted in his becoming more talked about and more famous than ever.

General Boulanger represents a widespread protest of Frenchmen against three things. First, the Jingo policy of M. Ferry, author of the Tonquin expedition. Secondly, the extreme Anti-Clerical policy of the present French Republican Government. Thirdly, the corruption in high places as exemplified in the case of M. Wilson, son-in-law of M. Grévy.

The probability is that when the Paris Exhibition is over in the autumn of 1889, the French general elections of October will place in a majority at the head of the polls Boulanger, and representatives who will be led by him in the new French Parliament. He reckons on carrying sixty-eight out of the eighty-six Departments into which France is divided. Then the elevation of Boulanger to supreme power in France may speedily follow.

II. The Second Prophetic Feature in General Boulanger is found in the peculiarities of

His Name.

1. His name E. (initial for his Christian name, Ernest) Boulanger, when written in the letters of the Greek alphabet (in which language the Apocalypse was originally written) contains the prophetic number 666, which was predicted in Revelation 13:18, to be the number of the name of the man who shall be the central figure and prominent leader in the future Ten-Kingdomed Confederacy represented by the Ten-horned Leopard or Wild Beast. Thus

E5 B2 070 u400 l30 a1 n50 g3 e5 r100=666.

The statement that General Boulanger has 666, the number of the wild beast, in his name, does not imply anything disrespectful or uncomplimentary to him, as if he were thus compared to a wild beast, for this ten-horned wild beast, or leopard, is only a figurative symbol for this ten-kingdomed confederacy, and so the number of the beast means simply the number of the ten-kingdomed confederacy. A strong presumptive proof is thus furnished that General Boulanger may be largely instrumental in producing, or at least moulding and shaping those great political and national changes in Europe which will issue in the Ten-Kingdomed Confederacy by 1892. But it is important to observe that Boulanger cannot be the Antichrist, because the Antichrist must be a Napoleon. (Apollyon, Rev. 9:11.)

2. This marvellous name, E. Boulanger, consists of ten letters, which (like an acrostic) most remarkably are the initial letters of the Ten Countries which are by 1892 to form the Ten-kingdomed Confederacy or Ten-horned Leopard, viz., 1. Espania (Spanish for Spain); 2. Britain; 3. Oesterreich (German for Austria); 4. Ungarn (German for Hungary, which, together with the Balkan States will be one kingdom); 5. Levant (Turkey); 6. Assyria ana Armenia; 7. Nile countries, viz., Egypt, Libya, etc.; 8. Gallia (Latin for Gaul or France); 9. Epirus and rest of Greece; 10. Roman States and the rest of Italy.

Now let the names of all the Sovereigns or Political rulers in the world be examined, and not one of them will be found to consist exactly of the initial letters of the countries over which they rule. Here then is another indication that E. Boulanger is probably to be associated with the future formation of the Ten-kingdomed Confederacy.

A Patronymic Coincidence.

3. There is a singular resemblance between the great dynastic name Buonaparte and Boulanger in this respect, that the first three letters Buo are identical in each case, and that four of the other letters in each name are the same, namely, N, A, R, E, so that out of the nine or ten letters in each name seven letters are the same. This striking similarity between the names may be found in the future to extend also to the policies, political careers, and successes of Buonaparte and Boulanger.

The great dynastic French title of Roi Louis (the French for King Louis), borne by sixteen French Kings, is also significantly concealed in his name, Georges Ernest Jean Marie Boulanger. The letters r and o appear in the word Georges, and i or j as the initial in Jean, and l among the first four letters of Boulanger, and i in Marie, and s at the end of Georges. It may be found that not only the title of Roi Louis is mysteriously hidden among the letters of his name, but also the career and character of a French King, may in due time be manifested in his history. The name Louis contains 666 in its Latin form Ludovicus, as was pointed out by the Rev. Joseph Sutcliffe 100 years ago. In Latin, L stands for 50, u or v for 5, d for 500, v for 5, i for 1, c for 100, u or v for 5, total—666.

III. The Third Prophetic Feature in General Boulanger is the occurrence of certain events in his life on Days of Prophetic Significance.

As the Hegira, or Flight of Mahomet from Mecca to Medina to escape capture by his foes, was so notable an epoch in his career that it was afterwards adopted as the starting-point of his Calendar, so the Hegira, or Flight of General Boulanger from Paris to Brussels to escape capture by his opponents, must be regarded as a notable epoch in his life. And this escape may prove to be of transcendent consequence to the destinies of Europe if he rises to great power in the midst of the momentous conflicts which, according to prophecy, must take place in Europe during 1890 or 1891. For if he had been seized and imprisoned, he might have been debarred from taking an active part in the French elections, and from having opportunity to attain to power during the Coming Crisis.

Now the writer of these remarks in his pamphlet, "Coming Wars and End of this Age in 1901," stated in its enlarged edition in 1887, that some prophetic event might be expected to take place on April 2 (Nisan 1) 1889, because that day is the exact termination of Daniel's great period of 2,345 years from its primary commencement on Nisan 1, B.C. 457, when Ezra completed his Reforms at Jerusalem on the first day of the first month, Nisan, according to Ezra 7:9 to 13; 10:17. Various writers on prophecy, such as Bickersteth and others, have shown that the 2,300 years ended on the first day of Nisan, 1844, and the additional 45 years extend from thence to the first day of Nisan (April 2), 1889. Thus it is remarkable that April 2, 1889, on which the Hegira of General Boulanger took place, was the exact end of these primary 2,345 years. And the secondary fulfilment of the 2,345 years is from the command to Nehemiah to rebuild Jerusalem on Nisan 22, B. C. 445 to the end of this Age on Nisan 22 (April 11), 1901. Thus the great period of 2,345 years has an initial ending on April 2, 1889, with General Boulanger's Hegira, and an ultimate ending on April 11, 1901, with the End of this Dispensation.

It is further noticeable that he arrived in London, the great Babylon, on Wednesday, April 24, 1889, the day immediately following Passover Week, which extended from April 16 to April 23 in this year 1889. Now this day April 24, 1889, was exactly the first day of the final twelve years of this Age, which extend from the end of Passover Week, 1889, to the end of Passover Week, 1901.

It is also observable that January 27, 1889, was the most remarkable electoral triumph he has had, by obtaining a majority of 80,000 votes over the Government Republican candidate, M. Jacques. Now, January 27 in 1896 will be an important prophetic date, because it will be the first day of the final 1,901 days of this Age. And, so far, it is a singular coincidence that in the present year—just seven years beforehand—a remarkable event in General Boulanger's life occurred on January 27.

IV. The Fourth Prophetic Feature in General Boulanger is the remarkable healing of five dangerous, if not deadly, wounds received by him, namely, 1—in the breast, at the battle of Turbigo, in the Franco-Italian war of 1859; 2—in the leg by a spear-thrust in the Cochinchina war, in 1861; 3—in the shoulder in the Franco-Prussian war of 1870; 4—in the elbow in a conflict with the Communists in 1871; 5—in the neck in a duel with M. Floquet, French Premier, on July 13, 1888—this last being thought at the time to be a most dangerous wound. Yet he has experienced a marvellous recovery from all these five wounds, and seems to have a charmed life, and to be immortal till his work is done. In these respects he bears a striking typical resemblance to his successor the future last imperial head of the Ten-kingdomed Confederacy—the Napoleon who, according to Revelation 13:3, 14, and 17:8, is to "be wounded to death, and his deadly wound to be healed."

TACKING SHIP IN A STREET.

THE leader of the Seamen's Prayer-Meeting in New York a few Sundays ago said he would like to tell the sailors how he came to be there. When a young man he had sailed with American seamen, but had never been to America. They were always loud in praise of New York. The greatest city in the world, they all said it was—no city like it, and no street in it was equal to the Bowery. The wonders of that thoroughfare were indescribable. Its museums, its stores, its billiard and pool rooms, and above all its drinking and dancing saloons, were unrivalled. All agreed about it, and the young sailor made up his mind that New York was the place he must see. At last his opportunity came. He shipped on board an American ship sailing from Liverpool, England, for New York. It seemed to him a tedious voyage, for he was hungering for a sight of the wonderful city. On landing he made his way up Cherry Street, and then asked his way to the Bowery. That was the street he was bound for. Before he got across Madison Street, his attention was arrested by an invitation to seamen which was suspended in a window. He opened the door and looked in. There were a lot of sailors reading and writing. He would have closed the door and gone on his way, but a lady came forward and greeted him in the sweetest voice he ever heard. His experience of ladies' voices was chiefly of the coarse, loud variety, and he was impressed with the difference. The voice was inviting him to stay, in a most friendly, hospitable manner. "I'm bound for the Bowery," he said, "but I'll tuck ship." The lady talked to him about his home in England and about his mother. She seemed interested, and he told her all. Then she spoke to him about the dangers of his calling, and kindly hoped that his soul was safe. He spoke less confidently about that, and the lady went on to show him how he could come to Jesus, and told him how good a Friend he would find Him. She begged him to come to the prayer-meeting that night, and he promised. "Time to tuck ship again," he said, as the hour of meeting approached. He did so, and sailed into the meeting. The lady was there again and a whole lot of sailors. They took an interest in him and prayed for him. Almost before he knew it he was praying for himself. His prayer was heard. He concluded to drop anchor there, and from that time to this Jesus had kept him, and he never came to New York now without coming straight to the mission to tell his story, and how true and good a friend Jesus had been to him. That was all he could do; but he had found that it was enough. The men liked to have a bit of experience, and they had the idea that what one of themselves had tried and proved and could recommend, would be good for them.

A CHILD SOLD FOR FOOD.

No incident yet published so vividly sets before us the straits to which some families in China are reduced as one published in the Spirit of Missions. It occurs in a letter from the wife of Dr. John L. Nevius, the well-known Presbyterian missionary in China, who has been distributing relief in the famine districts of that afflicted land. She says: "When Dr. Nevius was in the famine region he gave Mr. Li-ping-i, a young preacher, a little money to expend in special cases of distress. One day, Mr. Li was going along the road, and saw a woman lying on the ground, weeping bitterly, her husband standing by her. When he came to them, he tried to say some words of comfort, but the husband exclaimed, 'Oh, you do not understand it. She is crying for her little girl. We have just sold her, and there she is being carried off by the people who bought her,' and they pointed to a company of people about disappearing over the brow of a hill; 'we were all starving, and we had to sell her to get a little food to keep the rest of us alive.' Mr. Li found they had sold the child for about $1.50, about enough to keep them alive a month, I suppose. He said, 'You may have her back,' and he gave them some silver with which they at once redeemed the little girl, and were soon happy in having her in their arms again, and some food, too; but I fear not very much."

THE LACHMIN CASE IN INDIA.

THE judgment in the case of the girl Lachmin, mentioned in this journal on February 6 (page 86), is reported in the Indian Witness, just received. It will be remembered that the girl was sold by her wicked mother for immoral purposes to an old debauchee, and that when she fled to the missionary for protection, the old man appealed to the law, and the English magistrate, Mr. Quinn, gave judgment in his favor. The missionary then appealed to a higher tribunal. The appeal has apparently been mismanaged, or it was impossible to obtain legal evidence. The justices who heard the appeal have ordered the girl to be restored to her mother. They say that they made the order because they had no evidence before them to show that she was not a fit and proper person to have control of the child. As the mother was her natural guardian, it was impossible to pass her over and give the child to the missionaries, as prayed, without such evidence. The poor girl, therefore, is no better off for the appeal. It will, however, indirectly benefit other widows and children. The justices censured the magistrate for making the order, and said that he had no power to consign the girl to her purchaser, as he practically did. Other magistrates who read the judgment will, therefore, act wisely in taking warning. They now know, as probably they did not know before, that English magistrates in India have no legal right to pander to heathen lust and immorality.

AN EXPERIMENT OF FAITH.

LITERAL obedience to an explicit promise of God's word has had a notable fulfilment recently in Morocco. The story is told in a letter to the Watchword by E. F. Baldwin. On setting out on a missionary tour in that country, he and the brother who accompanied him gave away the few silver coins they had in their pockets, having determined to obey Christ's injunctions to His disciples (Matt. 10:9, 10). The following extract from the letter gives the result of the experiment, and it should be noted that invariably all who have dared to take the Lord's promises literally, and act upon them, have had like experience:

The question of food was one to my mind of great practical moment. Can missionaries indeed now travel and preach without carrying supplies? We believed they could, but wished to prove it by experience, which we abundantly did, amid a strange and fanatical people, whose very Koran forbade them to be friends with us, and among whom we might well expect, humanly speaking, to starve, if indeed we escaped without violence. To the praise of our faithful Lord, we can testify that not one of the twenty-one days we were journeying did we lie down without having eaten food, although several days the Lord permitted us to fast until well on in the day, and two or three times until night. But on these occasions we seemed inwardly sustained, and suffered no inconvenience, and never grew hungry; although when at home the delay of an hour in taking food would produce faintness. These days of such evidently appointed fasting were generally our best days, in which prayer and praise abounded.

We found the more we preached the more regularly and certainly our needs were supplied. If our zeal in speaking for Christ relaxed, supplies grew scant. Almost invariably it was those to whom we testified who gave to us. Let no one think we asked food of any but God. We went forth in the consciousness of being the high-commissioned ones of heaven, who had untold spiritual treasure to give, knowing it was a small thing that we should receive the little bread that fed the body, and the little space its weariness required for rest.

One morning, having walked since dawn through a desolate region for more than twenty miles, it being now noon, and having eaten nothing, we prayed for food. Immediately thereafter we met a tall native (the first one I think we had seen in the road that day), who saluted us, and though knowing nothing of our need he at once let down a basket from his shoulder, disclosed a dish of hot kous-kous, and bade us eat. Another day at noon, as we rested beneath a tree, and in the very act of praying for food, having eaten nothing, a man from a passing caravan invited us to share with him a loaf of excellent bread. Several times we arrived at villages or houses where, the moment we came in, there was brought us hot food, just "that instant" dished up, being in God's knowledge, though not in theirs, for His weary servants. Occasionally we were treated as dogs, and put out of the mosques and houses, but never at night when we needed shelter.

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION—1888.

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God.

OFFICE, 71 AND 73 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 3 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

The Business Office of the Christian Herald is now at 71 and 73 Bible House. Correspondents will please note this change of address.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Two Foreign Missions were Filled by the President on Thursday last, Mr. Enander, of Illinois, who was nominated Minister to Denmark, and whose portrait and life were given in this journal with other newly appointed Ministers on April 17, having been compelled by serious illness to decline the position, the President appointed in his stead Col. Clark E. Carr, who did effective work for the party in Illinois during the Presidential campaign. The honor of representing this country at the Turkish court was on the same day conferred on Mr. Solomon Hirsch, of Oregon. A remarkable coincidence about this appointment is that Mr. Hirsch is a Jew who succeeds another Jew, Mr. Oscar Straus, at the same court. Much was said in political circles and in the press four years ago, against the appointment of a Jew to represent the United States in Constantinople. It was urged that the most important part of the Minister's duties being the protection of Christian missionaries and gaining concessions from the Sultan for Christian schools in Turkey, a Jew was scarcely an appropriate selection. The result, however, proved that the apprehension was groundless. Mr. Straus was most energetic and successful in his intervention on behalf of Christian interests, and it may be hoped that in his co-religionist who succeeds him the missionaries will find as true and zealous a friend. Two minor but lucrative foreign appointments were also disposed of last week. The consulship at Birmingham, Eng., was given to Mr. John Jarrett, of Pennsylvania, whose success in raising money for the campaign in that State was very marked. The consulship at Liverpool was given to Mr. Thomas H. Sherman, who has been Mr. Blaine's private secretary.

The Important Question Relative to the exclusion of the Chinese as to the constitutionality of the action of Congress was decided last week by the Supreme Court of the United States. The question was raised by the case of a Chinaman who, on leaving this country, received a certificate guaranteeing him readmission on his return. When he came back the authorities refused to admit him, and, when confronted with the certificate, declined to respect it, on the ground that it had been revoked by a law passed during the Chinaman's absence. The Court, in passing judgment, upheld the law, and endorsed the action of the authorities in refusing the Chinaman's admission. Justice Field said: "The question whether our Government is justified in disregarding its engagements with another nation is not one for the determination of the courts. The province of the courts is to pass upon the validity of laws, not to make them. Whatever license Chinese laborers may have obtained previous to the act of October 1, 1888, to return to the United States after their departure is held at the will of the Government, revocable at any time at its pleasure. Whether a proper consideration by our Government of its previous laws, or a proper respect for the nation whose subjects are affected by its action, ought to have qualified its inhibition, are not questions for judicial determination." The Government therefore is sustained by the Court in breaking its engagements and refusing to keep the promise it made, on the faith of which the Chinaman left the country. When a Chinaman hears an American missionary in China expound Christian ethics, and asks him if the Government of the United States is a Christian Government, what answer can he give?

A Remarkable Exhibition of Political Incapacity, which might be justly described by a harsher name, was made at Albany, N. Y., on May 14. The New York Legislature had before it the two reports of the Committees appointed to investigate the ceiling scandal. It deliberately rejected the report of the Fish Committee, which charged the contractors with combining and conspiring with the Superintendent of Public Works to defraud the State of $105,000, and instructed the Attorney-General to apply to the Grand Jury for an indictment of them. Instead of this report the Assembly adopted the report of the Committee on Appropriations, having first expunged from it almost the only vigorous paragraph it contained. This report was the one originally prepared, and which was so glaringly defiant of public opinion, that an honest investigation was demanded, and granted in the appointment of the Fish Committee. The vote was sixty-three to forty-four. There is therefore, now, no more prospect of prosecution or restitution. Something, however, has been gained by the disclosure. The public now knows the character of the men elected to represent the people at Albany. If any one of those sixty-three is re-elected, the party responsible for his re-election will deserve to have it said that he is a fit representative of it. Those who voted for him before may have done so under a mistake as to his character; if they vote for him again, they will be disgraced by condoning his iniquity.

The Death of Allen Thorndike Rice, the newly appointed Minister to Russia, occurred in New York on May 16. It has occasioned deep and wide-spread regret in political, literary, and social circles. Mr. Rice had made a vigorous fight for political purity, and in these degenerate days he was a man who can ill be spared. He was, besides, a man of culture and refinement, who had travelled extensively, and was well fitted to do credit to his country in the high position to which he had been appointed. His death was very sudden. On May 12, he was in his usual health except for a slight cold, and a depletion consequent on the exertion involved in closing up his affairs preparatory to leaving for St. Petersburg. He had taken his passage on the City of Paris, which sailed on Wednesday, and fully expected that the sea voyage would recuperate him. Tonsillitis, however, developed on Monday, combined with severe ulceration of the throat. Still, his physicians did not apprehend danger, and even on Wednesday night thought he would soon recover; but before morning he was dead. He was thirty-six years of age. His portrait and life appeared in this journal on April 17.

A Charge of Making a Premature Autopsy is to be investigated this week in New York by a Coroner's jury, and three prominent physicians have been held to bail pending the result. The subject of the autopsy was the famous mind-reader, Washington Irving Bishop. On Sunday night, May 12, while being entertained at the Lambs Club, in New York, he volunteered to give an exhibition of his skill. He undertook a feat that he had never performed before, and he was completely successful. Just as he triumphantly finished it he fell back in a cataleptic fit. A physician who was present endeavored to resuscitate him, but failed. Becoming alarmed, he called in another physician, and the two labored with him until noon of May 13, when they pronounced him dead. The extraordinary feats performed by Bishop prompted curiosity as to the character of his brain, and the physician who first attended him resolved to hold an autopsy before the brain could change, as it does quicker than any other organ after death. A specialist was summoned, and about five hours after Bishop had been pronounced dead his body was dissected and his brain examined. Bishop's wife and mother, on hearing of what had been done, were very indignant. They do not believe that he was dead when the autopsy was made. They say that he was subject to cataleptic fits, and they had known him lie to all appearance dead for several days at a time. They demanded an inquest, and as the charge was so serious, the physicians who made the autopsy, and the physician who ordered it to be made, are held in bail to await the issue of the inquiry.

The Emperor of Germany has Been Mediating in the gigantic labor troubles in Westphalia. On May 14 he received a deputation of the striking miners, and listened attentively to their complaints. He told them that he had ordered a careful investigation to be made, but warned them that there must be no rioting, or he should himself, if necessary, order the troops to batter and shoot rioters, while if they are quiet he would protect them. Two days later the employers waited on the Emperor to present their side of the case. The Emperor gave them a patient hearing, and then spoke very plainly to them, intimating that they must lose no time in settling the dispute with their men. He said: "The workmen have made a good impression upon me, having held aloof from the Socialists. I urgently advise the mining companies to maintain henceforth as close touch as possible with the workmen. I would ask that care be taken to give the workmen chances to formulate their wishes. I much desire to bring the dispute to a favorable issue. It must ever be borne in mind that companies employing great numbers of workmen have a duty to perform to the State. They must use every effort to provide for the welfare of the men." After the audience, delegates of the miners met representatives of the mine-owners. A prolonged conference was held, which resulted in the acceptance of a basis of settlement. The working day is to be fixed at eight hours, and wages are to be increased. The victory, therefore, on that basis would be with the miners.

Gen. Boulanger, From His Safe Vantage ground in England, has ventured to talk of revolution. In an interview last week, he said that if the French Government prolonged the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies until next year its action would be equivalent to a coup d'état against universal suffrage, and it would be the duty of every citizen to rise in opposition. He declared that he would not be the last man to rise in case such action should be taken by the Government. Meanwhile, the prosecution of him in Paris appears, likely to collapse. A Paris journal, credited with being in the confidence of the Government, says that the Senatorial Court finds difficulty in framing a specific charge against Gen. Boulanger. Some Senators propose that a nolle prosequi be entered in his case, others that he be tried at the Assizes, and still others that he be court-martialed. It is believed, the papers say, that the proceedings against Gen. Boulanger will fail, and that the prosecution of M. Rochefort will be abandoned.

A Proposal to Make One of the English Royal princes Viceroy of Ireland is being discussed. It is suggested that either the Queen's third son, the Duke of Connaught, or one of the sons of the Prince of Wales, should be sent to Dublin to hold a Royal court. Some prominent statesmen advocate it as a means of arousing the loyalty of the Irish people, while others oppose it as a species of Home Rule which might lead to embarrassing complications. At present the real executive is the Irish Secretary in London, though the Lord-Lieutenant is nominally the head of the Government, and conducts the ceremonial functions. It seems probable, from the debates in Parliament, that some change will be made, and if a Prince is not sent, the executive will be put in commission.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of America met on Thursday last in the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian church, New York. This is the one hundred and first of these assemblies. It is, however, only the Northern branch. The Southern branch, which, in spite of repeated efforts for union, proceeding from both sides, is still a separate body, convened on the same day at Chattanooga, Tenn. The sessions in New York will continue until May 26. Unusual interest attaches to the proceedings because the assembly is expected to decide the question of the proposed revision of the book of faith. Many ministers and laymen are desirous of eliminating or moderating some of the strongest expressions of Calvinistic doctrine contained in the creed, while others oppose any change. The Temperance question will also come up for discussion. Among other subjects set down for consideration are the duty of the Church toward immigrants, Sabbath observance, Indian schools, religious instruction in the army and navy, education for the ministry, unemployed ministers and vacant churches, aid for the freedmen, &c. On Thursday the Assembly elected as moderator Dr. William S. Roberts, President of Lake Forest University.

A Notable Conference was Held in Toronto recently. It was composed of ministers of the Anglican, Presbyterian, and Methodist churches, and was in session for two days to consider the question of organic unity of all Protestant bodies. The sessions were of the most interesting character, the representatives of the churches declaring that they would result in great good to the whole Christian Church. The utmost harmony prevailed, although doctrines were discussed upon which all were not in unison. The subjects before the conference were: "Organic Union;" "The Amount of Unity in Doctrine, Worship and Modes of Action between the Three Bodies;" "The Holy Scriptures;" "The Creeds," and "The Historic Episcopate." The Bishop of Huron, Provost Boddy, of Trinity College, Dr. Carry, of Port Perry, and Dean Carmichael, of Montreal, took leading parts in the discussion. A resolution was adopted recommending to the several churches the appointment of delegates to another conference.

A Father's Heroic Self-Sacrifice is Described in a press dispatch from Montreal. It states that during the recent floods a party set out to cross the Nicolet River from Clothilde to Ste. Anne. When the boat reached the middle of the river it was struck by a sudden squall and overturned. Three of the men in it, who were good swimmers, struck out for the shore, and others clung to the capsized boat. One of them held on with one hand, while with the other he supported his little daughter. But the boat was sinking, and the men had to let go their hold. The man with the child grasped a loose board out of the bottom of the boat which floated by him. But it was insufficient to support both him and his child. He snatched a handkerchief from his pocket, and bound the child's arm to the board. Then he kissed her, loosed the board, and sank never to rise again. The child was rescued by a boat which was sent by the men who swam ashore, but the man was past recovery. He might have been saved if he had loosed his child and used the board for his own support, but he deliberately gave up his life that she might live. Her life has cost a great price; it ought to be a useful one. It is so with every believer: Christ died for him, and the purchased life ought to be one consecrated to his Lord. (II Cor. 5:15.)

A Shower of Frogs in Dakota Caused Much astonishment on May 6. The Pioneer Press says that during a severe wind-storm the people of Hamestown, Dak., noticed a curiously agitated black cloud moving overhead. It suddenly broke up, and the principal street of the town was covered with little frogs, which leaped hither and thither for refuge. It is supposed that the hurricane must have taken a cyclonic form at some stage of its travels before reaching Hamestown, and have caught up the frogs from their marshy home, carried them as far as the town, and then released them. Some years ago this extraordinary visitation would have struck terror into observers, who would have imagined that it portended the approach of some awful calamity. Men know more of the forces of nature in these times, and are less liable to be scared by wonders that can be explained by natural causes. They are apt to rest satisfied with these explanations, too, in studying social and political events, and to forget that above natural causes, and working by them, is the Almighty First Cause. That is why events fulfilling prophecy which are now occurring are not recognized as signs of the approaching consummation. (II Peter 3:4-7.)

A Prominent Society Lady's Penance was witnessed recently in Boston by a group of wondering spectators. During the last week of Lent a carriage and pair of horses stopped at the corner of a street. A lady alighted clad in elegant attire. She carried a pail, brushes, soap, and towels, and walked to the Church of the Advent. She knelt down, and conscientiously scrubbed the stone steps of the edifice, and wiped them with the towels. Then gathering up her cleansing materials she walked back deliberately to her carriage heedless of the wondering looks of the spectators, and was driven to her home in the most aristocratic quarter of Boston. She is said to be a lady of wealth and culture, but her proceeding showed little intelligence. If, as is probable, it was done to atone for some sin, it was worse than useless, because it would satisfy her conscience, and cause her to refrain from trusting wholly in the atonement already worked out for her by the Saviour. (Rom. 4:5.)

A Government Clerk's Disrespectful Conduct has resulted in his discharge, according to a press dispatch from Washington. Among the removals in the Pension Department is the chief of one of the divisions, who is a young man noted for his levity and fondness for practical joking. A few years ago one of the clerks under him was an aged clergyman, who, being incapacitated from preaching by an infirmity and by age, applied for and received employment in the office. He was remarkable for his punctuality and the efficient discharge of his duties, but the old gentleman was made the butt of the young man's witticisms, and was rendered uncomfortable by his ingenious devices. Pieces of paper bearing ludicrous inscriptions were pinned to his coat, his spectacles were abstracted, and in other ways his life in the office was made miserable. But the old gentleman has a married daughter, and last March this daughter's husband was inaugurated President of the United States. Dr. Scott soon afterward left the Pension Office and went to reside in the White House with his daughter. He was silent about the persecution he had endured, but others, who knew of it, told the President. On May 13 the facetious clerk received notice that his services were no longer required, and he had no difficulty in surmising why he was discharged. There are many Christians in the world so humble and apparently so defenceless that it seems safe to insult and oppress them, but the day is coming when it will be found that they have a Protector to avenge them. (Prov. 22:23.)

An Extraordinary Cure is Reported From Biddeford, Me. A press dispatch from that city states that at the beginning of this month a lady came there from Portsmouth, N. H., suffering from severe stomach troubles, which had puzzled many physicians. Her pains were most acute and her body had become emaciated. She had been ill since August, 1886, and she insisted that her affliction dated from a country excursion during which she drank water from a brook. She was convinced that some reptile was in the water, and that it was still living and preying upon her. None of the physicians whom she consulted gave credence to her story. They treated her for cancer and various diseases, but without effect. The patient had no faith in their prescriptions, and warned them that unless they could deliver her of the reptile they could not cure her. They all scouted the idea, and the patient grew worse. On going to Biddeford she told her story to a physician there, and for the first time it was listened to respectfully. The physician adopted the treatment employed in analogous cases, and to his own astonishment and that of the patient and her friends, a small snake a foot long was ejected. Since that time the patient has had no suffering, and is rapidly regaining strength. If the woman had been treated radically at first, she would have been saved more than two years of suffering from the pain of the reptile and the blisters and other painful and useless remedies resorted to. It is so with those awakened sinners who try to work their own reformation. They struggle painfully with sin and temptation, and are never delivered until the great Physician takes their case in hand and removes from them their evil heart, the source of their evil life, and gives a new heart. (Rom. 7:18-25.)

BRIEF NOTES.

The Mayor of Omaha says that last year under high license there was made in that city one arrest to every twelve of the population.

An Inter-State Women's Christian Temperance Union Conference will be held at Mountain Lake Park, Maryland, from July 17 to 20.

Dr. A. T. Pierson, of Philadelphia, estimates the money annually raised for carrying on Protestant foreign missions at about $11,250,000.

The Methodist Episcopal Church now has 2,154,237 communicants, against 2,093,935 last year, indicating a net gain in 1888 of over 60,000.

At the Commencement exercises of Princeton Theological Seminary, held on May 6, diplomas were conferred on forty-eight candidates.

The Reformed Church in America raised during the year ended April 30, for Foreign Missions, $93,142.34. This includes legacies to the amount of $2,500.

The Chicago Evangelistic Society has purchased three houses and lots north of the Chicago Avenue Church for the Moody Training School, at a cost of $55,000.

The American Tract Society's report shows that it expended $123,165 last year. General O. O. Howard's name has been added to the list of Vice-Presidents.

Dr. L. W. Munhall is holding services with much success at Leavenworth, Kan. Next week he expects to go to Atchison, on the invitation of all the churches in the city.

Five cities in Kansas are now under the government of women. Five women are serving as mayors, and twenty-five on city councils. Three are performing the difficult duties of police judge.

The Rev. R. G. Pearson, of Ashville, N. C., has been holding three weeks' revival meetings in Shreveport, La. Over 1,500 persons were present every night. A large number have made profession of faith.

Rev. George T. Dowling, D. D., who has quitted the Baptist denomination, has been received in the Classis of Albany, and will be installed as pastor of the Madison Avenue Reformed Church, Albany, June 4.

A gentleman in New England has given $100,000, and Japanese gentlemen have subscribed about $70,000, to found a Christian university in Japan, according to a plan proposed by the Rev. Joseph Neesima, of the American Board.

Mr. E. C. Avis, the well-known gospel singer, has been holding meetings in Bristol, Tenn. He had two daily meetings in the Young Men's Christian Association—that in the afternoon for young women, and that in the evening for young men. The local journals say that a great work has been done.

Mr. C. S. Mason, the Young Men's Evangelist, has been holding meetings at Ventura, Cal. The Young Men's Christian Association of that town has formally recorded its appreciation of the results of his work, and testifies that by God's blessing on his labors many young people have been led to decide for Christ.

The National Temperance Society held its annual meeting in New York on May 14. Its total income from all sources last year was $59,956.59, and its expenditures 59,908.67. Six colored missionaries were kept in the field, and a large quantity of temperance literature was circulated in the South. Dr. T. L. Cuyler was re-elected President.

Any Subscribers Who Have Kept Copies of this journal of numbers 1, 7, 8, 9 and 10 of this year, and have no further use for them, would confer a favor by mailing them to this office, 71 Bible House, New York, and we will remit stamps in payment. The editions of those numbers have been exhausted, and we have orders for them, which we are unable to fill.

LIFE'S WRECKAGE RECOVERED.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"And I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten." Joel 2: 25.

The Fruits of Wasted Years—Recovered by Larger Grace—I. The Locust-eaten Years—What Kind of Years they Are—Dead years of Sin—Of Unprofitable Labor—Of Disappointment—Of Fruitlessness—Of Doubt and Depression—Of a Low State of Grace—Of Backsliding—II. Locust-Eaten Years Restored—Repentance the First Condition—Mary Magdalene's Years—Sorrow Bringing Fruit in Power to Comfort—III. What is to Come of It—Satisfaction—Communion—Anointing—The Locusts Blown Away.

LOST years can never be restored literally. Time once past is gone for ever. Let no man make any mistake about this, or trifle with the present moment under any notion that the flying hour will ever wing its way back to him. As well recall the north wind, or fill again the emptied rain-cloud, or put back into their quiver the arrows of the lord of day. As well bid the river which has hastened onward to the sea, bring back its rolling floods, as imagine that the years that have once gone can ever be restored to us. It will strike you at once that the locusts did not eat the years: the locusts ate the fruits of the years' labor, the harvests of the fields; so that the meaning of the restoration of the years must be the restoration of those fruits and of those harvests which the locusts consumed. You cannot have back your time; but there is a strange and wonderful way in which God can give back to you the wasted blessings, the unripened fruits of years over which you mourned.

Fruits of Wasted Years

may yet be yours. It is a pity that they should have been locust-eaten by your folly and negligence; but if they have been so, be not hopeless concerning them. "All things are possible to him that believeth." There is a power which is beyond all things, and can work great marvels. Who can make the all-devouring locust restore his prey? No man, by wisdom or power, can recover what has been utterly destroyed. God alone can do for you what seems impossible; and here is the promise: "I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten."

By giving to His repentant people larger harvests than the land could naturally yield, God could give back to them, as it were, all they would have had if the locusts had never come; and God, by giving you larger grace in the present and in the future, can make the life which has hitherto been blighted, and eaten up with the locust, and the caterpillar, and the palmer-worm of sin and self and Satan, yet to be a complete and blessed and useful life, to His praise and glory. It is a great wonder; but Jehovah is a God of wonders, and in the kingdom of His grace miracles are common things.

We shall go into this subject, which I think must be very full of interest to those here present who have wasted years to mourn over, since they have hitherto done nothing for God, nor even for themselves. The locust hath eaten everything. The prospect of recovering the wreckage of a life must be of interest to them.

I. I shall first speak upon

Locust-Eaten Years.

Years which the locust hath eaten: what sort of years are these? Well, first and darkest of all, there are the dead years of sin, of unregeneracy, impenitence, and unbelief. Without God, and without Christ, without life as to spiritual things! What a condition to be in! Oh, how many, many years have some passed in this horrible state! We all of us—those of us with whom God has dealt very graciously—always feel sorry that even our most early days should have been spent in sin. I was brought to know the Lord when I was fifteen years of age, and I have often said that I could wish I had known Him fifteen years before. Oh that one could from the very earliest openings of one's eyes have seen the light of the Eternal! But yet I fear me there are very many to whom the idea of conversion in boyhood and youth seems almost too good a thing to be true, for they have now reached thirty, forty, fifty years of age, and are still unreconciled, unrenewed. I could weep over you! We frequently meet with people older still, whose many years have all been graceless, locust-eaten years. Ah me! how sad to be old and unsaved, feeble with age, and yet without strength unto God!

Labor Lost.

Now, remember that eating of the locust—that devouring of everything by the caterpillars—meant a laborious year, because that year the people ploughed and sowed, and watched their crops; although the labor was all in vain. So, he that does nothing for God, and has no spiritual blessing, yet has to work and to labor. None toil harder than those who are the slaves of lust, pleasure, self, and Satan. These people often labor as in the very fire. The way of transgressors is hard. They have to toil and slave, and tug and strive; for the yoke of the world is not easy, and its burden is not light. But nothing comes of it; and this is the gall of the bitterness. One does not mind working when there is good reward for it; but to plough and sow, and then to reap nothing, because the locust hath eaten it—this is misery!

The locust year was particularly

A Year of Disappointment.

They looked for a harvest; in fact, they seemed to see it spring up, and then it was devoured before their eyes. Even so the ungodly man, the man who has no faith in Christ, is often charmed with the prospect of a happiness which he never reaches. A little more, and he will be content. He gets a little more; and this increases his thirst for yet another draught from the golden cup. Run as we may, when the heart shoots with its far-reaching bow, still the arrows are beyond us. The student must know a little more; the ambitious must climb a little higher upon the ladder of honor, and then he will be at ease. He learns, he reaches the honor; but the ease is still as distant as ever—perhaps it is even further off.

And, alas! they are fruitless years. O sirs, what have some of you ever done in this world yet? I heard of one who had made a half a million of money, and he died, and a Christian man said, "Now, I call that man's life

A Dead Failure.

What has the man done? He has accumulated what he could not enjoy. He has scraped it together, and he has made no use of it whatever." Such persons remind me of jackdaws who will hoard I know not what—all kinds of treasures and trash; and what do they do but hide them in a hole behind the door? They cannot do anything with them. They have no sense to use them: whether they steal the abbot's ring or a bit of wire, it is all the same to jackdaws; and to misers, what can be the difference between a thousand pounds or a thousand pins, since they use neither? Alas! many have the power to get, but have not the faculty to use what they have gotten. Their years are eaten with the locust.

Now, very briefly let me mention that there is another sense in which the text can be used. There are some whose years have been eaten by the locust, through great dolor, and depression, and disappointment. They remember those happy days of spring-tide when they greatly rejoiced in God; but by some means they dropped their confidence, and lost their hope; their sky was darkened, and the wintry winds of despair howled around them. I am grieved for dear friends on whom the chill of long depression has fallen with terrible power. I frequently meet with these sons and daughters of melancholy, and my sorrow is that I am so often unable to deal wisely with them. Prisoners who have been immured till it almost seemed that the moss would grow on their eyelids, have yet been set free. Do not utterly despair, for here stands this gracious promise: "I will restore unto you the years which the locust hath eaten." God can give you back all those years of sorrow, and you shall yet be the better for them. You shall have to thank God for all this sadness of heart. It is that I tell you. Peradventure you will not believe me, but you shall live to see it true: God will grind sunlight for you out of your black nights: in yonder oven of affliction grace will prepare the bread of delight. I said this to a friend with whom I have often conversed—an earnest Christian woman, who for three years had defied all attempt to comfort her. We had prayed with her. Her godly, gracious husband, a minister of Christ, had laid out his heart to cheer her, but she had refused to be comforted; and yet, to my great joy, the other day I received a letter saying, "The Lord has opened the gates of my dungeon. My captivity has ended; and though I am sick in body, that does not matter, for I am restored in spirit." Yes, the Lord can loose the captives, and He does it. There are dear children of God who have been ten or twenty years the victims of despair, to whom, nevertheless, this promise has, in the fullness of time, been fulfilled, "I will restore unto you the years which the locust hath eaten."

A Strange Story

And now, having given you those two versions of the text, let me give you another. I speak of those whose years have been wasted by their low state of grace. Many Christians are Barely Christians.

We may not be judges of our brethren; but if some professors are Christians, it is in a very small way. They seem to be like Hosea's "silly dove," without heart. I do not judge them; but I look at them with pitying wonder. How can they be content to be such useless things? How can they be satisfied to be so neutral, so double-minded, when all around them the stern conflict rages? I wish they would give us a little more evidence upon which to judge whether they are for us or for our enemies. The years which the locust hath eaten in some professors are far too many; and I would earnestly exhort any brother here who has had the locusts at him for a long time, and remind him that the promise stands, if he will avail himself of it, "I will restore unto you the years that the locust hath eaten." It is high time that he saw to it, for his case is a bad one. It is ill to be trading so ill, when a merchandise so precious as time is being lost.

Once more only, lest by these varied instances I should weary you. There are some in whom their years have been eaten up by the locusts in Open Backsliding.

This is one of the plagues of the church of God. Alas, for the many who did run well, but have suddenly stopped, and run no longer in the divine road! This is our frequent sorrow, even to heartbreak. We believe in the perseverance of the saints, but many are not saints, and therefore do not persevere. Nominal saints exhibit no final perseverance. Saints who have only the name of saints last but for a time, and then die away. In too many the life of God rather lingers than grows: their religion is so very weakly that they exhibit rather the sign of disease than of health. They wander away from their Lord and Master because they do not sufficiently feel His attractive power. Oh, that the Lord would be gracious in restoring such wanderers! Do I address any who have almost given up attendance on the means of grace! God have mercy upon you! Come and receive His restoring mercy. He will not cast you away, but He bids me say to you, that if you turn to Him according to the teaching of this chapter, He will yet restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten. It is a great wonder; but you shall see it, if you will seek the Lord yet again.

II. What does God say? "I will restore unto you the years that the locust hath eaten." This is our second head:

Locust-Eaten Years Restored.

Notice, this is divine work, "I will restore unto you the years that the locust hath eaten." You cannot get them back. Nobody can give them back to you. But the omnipotent Jehovah says, "I will restore them to you." Can you believe that? All things are possible with God. Those dead years, those doleful years, those desponding years, those idle years, those backsliding years—all the harvests of them God can give them back to you. Look away from yourself, and trust in the miracle-working God, while you hear this promise, "I will restore unto you the years which the locust hath eaten."

But notice that this restoration follows upon a true and genuine repentance. Repent, then. This is the great teaching and operation of the gospel at its commencement upon the heart. "Repent, and be baptized, every one of you," is its first cry from the wilderness. "Turn ye every man from his evil ways." "Turn ye, turn ye, why will ye die, O house of Israel?" To go on in impenitence is to miss the blessing of my text. To go on in spiritual deadness—to go on in backsliding—will never bring the restoration of lost years. But he that shall unfeignedly confess his sin, shall heartily hate it, and shall turn unto God through Jesus Christ, trusting in the precious blood of His atonement, shall receive the unspeakably precious benediction of the Lord, the Restorer. Such a man shall plead this promise with God, and have it graciously fulfilled to him: "I will restore unto you the years that the locust hath eaten." It is a very remarkable promise, but you see to whom it is given.

This promise is only fulfilled by the exceeding grace of God; and it shall be my business for a minute to show you how the grace of God works it out. We take, for instance, a man or a woman who has been living for many Years in Known Sin.

Those years have all been wasted. How can God give us back the fruit of those wasted years? He can. He can. Seest thou that woman? She is a sinner, a common sinner of the town. She has spent her days, her nights, in wantonness. She comes into the room where the Saviour lies reclining at the dinner-table, and His feet are not far from the door. She bears a choice box of ointment; she has, besides that, eyes full of tears, and she stands behind Him weeping. She washes His feet with those tears. She loosens the luxuriant tresses of her head, those nets in which she had entangled many a living soul, and she bows down, and wipes those feet which with her tears she washed. While she kisses them with her lips, she wipes them with her hair. Now, that woman, in that day, had through grace restored to her the years which the locust had eaten. And you, too, my hearer, though you may have been so many years a sinner, can yet be so transformed as to overtake the saints. God can give you such a true repentance, such a burning love, such an enthusiastic consecration, that during the rest of your days you shall make up for all those wasted years.

I will suppose the locust has eaten many years by your being in great sorrow; and I believe that the Lord can easily make up to you.

The Wear and Fret of Grief

are great, but there is a remedy. Have I not seen some that have passed through years of deep soul-distress, who have been all their lifetime much the better for it? They have been more able to sympathize with poor, tried saints. They have had a truer, deeper, richer experience; and, as a rule, they have known the gospel of Christ better, and they have had a tenderer love to Him who brought them up out of the horrible pit, and out of the miry clay. Personally I have been much the gainer by my sad hours and my sick-days. Your ills may become wells of comfort for others. The Lord can bring so much good out of the evil, so much light out of the darkness, so much joy out of the sorrow, that you shall one day say, "I thank God that I was shut up in Doubting Castle. I thank God I did sink in the deep mire where there was no standing, for He has restored to me the years that the locust hath eaten."

And if, again, the locust has eaten up your years through your being cold and indifferent and idle, God can recover you from this sad mischief. He will give you to repent bitterly of this great sin; for a great sin it is to lose a moment which should be used for Jesus. But yet, if the Lord shall visit you with an intense hatred of such idleness, and sting you into action, and at the same time draw you by the cords of love into full consecration, you will, perhaps, by redoubled zeal, recover the lost seasons. Oh that God would make it so with those who hitherto have sadly loitered in the race! Oh that our smouldering logs would become flaming firebrands! Oh that our slugs-guards could be aroused into enthusiasts!

Do not invite the locusts to come, I pray you, in the hope of getting back that which they devour. No, no; no—a thousand times No. We do not want the locusts at all: we cannot endure sin, or doubt, or trifling. We want every year to be fruitful—fruitful with a hundred-fold increase. But if the evils have come, let us turn to God with penitence and faith, and He can yet restore to us the losses they have caused.

III. I have done, when I have said just a word or two upon a third point. Here are locust-eaten years, and here are those locust-eaten years restored: and now,

What Is To Come Of It?

If God restores to us the years that the locust hath eaten, He has done a great deal for us; but notice that He is able to do yet more, and will do it, for what doth He say? He says, in the twenty-sixth verse, "And ye shall eat in plenty, and be satisfied, and praise the name of the Lord your God, that hath dealt wondrously with you: and my people shall never be ashamed." What a promise! You half-starved professors—you that are moping and mourning, who rise from the tables of the world unsatisfied, devoured with a gripping hunger—if you turn to God with full purpose of heart, He will fill you with heavenly bread, and give you as real enjoyment as ever He gave to the best of His people. What shall come of it? Why, this shall come of it—that you who have had the most to mourn over shall be among the loudest singers. You shall praise the name of the Lord your God that hath dealt wondrously with you. You will cry, with tears running down your cheeks, "Who is a God like unto Thee, passing by transgression, iniquity, and sin?" I was a sinner up to the neck in filth; a despairing soul shut up in the densest darkness; but He has washed me, and He has brought me out into the light, and put a new song into my mouth. He is a glorious God—this God and Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. I pray you may have intense enjoyment of His marvellous grace, and may pour forth your whole souls in His praise.

Next, you shall have most clear and sweet communion with God. Hear what the prophet further says, "And ye shall know that I am in the midst of Israel, and that I am the Lord your God, and none else, and My people shall never be ashamed." Wonderful! wonderful! that a far-off, outcast sinner should know his covenant God, and should say, "He is my God," and should enter into fellowship with Him, and should enjoy all the privileges of a friend of God. Wonderful that all his fear should be gone, and that he should instead be full of holy confidence, and have a right to hold up his head and never be ashamed! It shall be so, dear hearer. True repentance shall bring rest.

And then, best of all, the

Anointing Shall Come

upon you. I hope that the Lord has some here, at this hour, who did not know Him when they came within these walls, who, at this time, shall be called by His grace, and before long shall begin to tell to others what the Lord has done for them. O Lord, find ministers among these miserable sinners! Raise up for Thyself witnesses from among these careless youths! May the locusts all be blown away by a strong north wind, and never darken the air again! May these wasted years all be given back to you, and may you become the Lord's living, loving servants from this time forth. Oh, for the highest form of spiritual life! Oh, for the greatest possible usefulness! Oh for grace to fill out our poor shrivelled lives till they arrive at a heavenly fullness! Oh for the sacred breath of God to fill out all the canvas of our capacity! Lord, the sail flaps; the boat scarcely moves; we lie becalmed in indolence! Send us a breeze, we pray Thee. Grant us the wind of Thy Spirit to fill out every sail, that we may fly over the waves. Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

THE CATACOMBS.*

THE custom of laying the dead in natural or rock-hewn caves was familiar to pagan antiquity, especially in the East. But the recesses used for this purpose were only private or family vaults. Their growth into catacombs or subterranean necropolises for larger companies, bound together by their one religion, without distinctions of rank (Gal. 3: 28), first arose on Christian soil from a consciousness that their fellowship transcended death and the grave. For the accomplishment of this difficult and costly undertaking, Christian burial societies were formed after the pattern of similar institutions of Paganism. Specially numerous and extensive necropolises have been found laid out in the immediate neighborhood of Rome. In Malta, Naples, Syracuse, Palermo, and other cities, this mode of sepulture also found favor.

The Roman catacombs, of which in the hilly district round about the eternal city fifty-eight have been counted in fourteen different high-ways, are almost all laid out in the white, porous tufa-stone, which is there so abundant, and useful neither for building nor for mortar. It is thus apparent that these are neither wrought-out quarries nor gravel-pits, but were set in order from the first as cemeteries. They form labyrinthine, twisting, steep galleries, only three or four feet broad, with rectangular corners, caused by countless intersections. Their perpendicular sides varied greatly in height, and in them the burial niches were hewn out, one above the other, and on the reception of the body, were built up, or hermetically sealed with a stone slab, bearing an inscription and a Christian symbol. The wealthy laid their dead in costly marble sarcophagi or stone coffins, ornamented with bas-reliefs. The walls too, and the low-arched roofs, were adorned with symbols and pictures of Scripture scenes.

The Symbols

on the last resting-places of the dead are of varied character. First, there was the cross, though, for fear of the reproaches of Jews and heathens, not in its proper form, but only in the form that indicated what was meant, namely, in the form of the Greek T, very frequently in later times in the monogram of the name of Christ. Then there is the lamb or sheep as symbol of the soul, which still in this life seeks after spiritual pasture; and the dove as symbol of the Holy Spirit, or of the pious, believing soul entering into eternal rest, often with an olive-branch in its mouth (Gen. 8: 11), as symbol of the eternal peace won. Also we have the hart (Ps. 42: 1), the eagle (Ps. 103: 5), the chicken, symbol of Christian growth; the peacock, symbol of the Resurrection, on account of the annual renewal of its beautiful plumage; the dolphin, symbol of eagerness in the appropriation of salvation; the horse, symbol of the race to the goal of eternal life; the hare, symbol of the Christian working out his salvation with fear and trembling; the ship, with reference to Noah's ark as a figure of the Church; the anchor (Heb. 6: 19), the lyre (Eph. 5: 19), the palm-branch (Rev. 7: 9), the garland, or crown of life (Rev. 2: 9), the lily (Matt. 6: 28).

* From "Church History." By Professor Kurtz. Translated from the German, with the author's approval, by Rev. John MacPherson, A. M. This work has had an enormous circulation in Germany, where it has run through nine editions, and is accepted as a standard work. The translation has been done accurately and gracefully, and it is likely to become as popular here as in Germany. It is in three volumes, of which the first is now issued. Pp. 574. Price $2 per vol. Published by Funk & Wagnalls, 18 and 20 Astor Place, New York.

Mr. Hugh S. Thompson, of South Carolina.

Main Street, Salt Lake City, Utah.

the balances, symbol of divine righteousness; fishes and bread, symbol of spiritual nourishment with reference to Christ's miracle of feeding the multitude in the wilderness, etc., etc.

Beside these are the parabolic figures. These are illustrations borrowed from the parables of the Gospels. To these belong conspicuously the figure of the Good Shepherd, who bears on His shoulder the lost sheep which He had found (Luke 15 : 5), the vine-stock (John 15), the Sower (Matt. 13 : 3), the marriage-feast (Matt. 22), the ten virgins (Matt. 25). Lastly, there are scenes from the gospel's history. These, such as the visit of the Wise Men from the East, and the resurrection of Lazarus, are, throughout the period in which these carvings were made (A. D. 70-322), exceedingly rare.

SALT LAKE CITY.

(See Illustration.)

THE narrative Mrs. Stenhouse is giving from week to week in these pages, of her experience of Mormonism, renders the picture here given doubly interesting. It represents Main Street, the chief thoroughfare of Salt Lake City, as it appeared some three or four years ago. A traveller who visited the headquarters of the Mormon Church about that time, says that he found the city well built, richly wooded, plentifully watered by conduits, and smiling with fertile fields, gardens, and orchards. The square blocks into which the city is divided are six hundred and sixty feet each way, and the chief streets are one hundred and twenty-eight feet wide. In some of the streets fine trees on each side make a beautiful shady avenue. The houses are built of adobe, and each has its garden. The most imposing is the mansion, or rather collection of dwellings, which Brigham Young built for the accommodation of his numerous wives and large families. Many of them are still occupied as they were during his life. The chief public building is the magnificent "temple," a huge and costly structure, the pride of the Mormon Church. The Tabernacle ranks next. It has a conspicuous dome-like roof, and is capable of accommodating fifteen thousand persons.

Main Street is the business thoroughfare of the city. The houses on it are built close to the sidewalk, and there are no trees on that street. It is the central mart of Utah Territory, and the ores and minerals, as well as the farm products, are brought there from all parts of the Territory for sale and distribution. It is generally crowded with bullock wagons, coaches and carriages of all kinds, and in the busy parts of the day, merchants, miners, farmers, and Indians crowd its stores and hurry along its sidewalks.

The Mormons are proud, and not without reason, of the change they have effected in the region that forty years ago was a desolate, barren wilderness. The fact is admitted, and their thrift and industry cannot be denied. But the horrors of what they call their "religion" eclipse the merits to which they are entitled. Polygamy produces there, as it has produced wherever it has flourished, cruelty, oppression, and the degradation of woman. The poor, deluded creatures who are enticed there, little know, until it is too late, all the misery comprised in that one word. It is a system of organized gratification of lust in the men, and of servitude of the most degrading type for the women.

MR. HUGH S. THOMPSON, The New Civil Service Commissioner.

(See portrait.)

It has gratified the friends of Civil Service Reform throughout the country that President Harrison has at last taken a step that indicates his desire to execute faithfully the much abused Pendleton law. In appointing to the vacant places on the commission Mr. Hugh S. Thompson, of South Carolina, whose portrait is here given, and Mr. Theodore Roosevelt, of New York, whose portrait we hope to give shortly, he has delegated the administration of the law to two of its faithful friends, who may be trusted to carry it out in spirit and letter. The law in their hands, we may hope, will have a fair trial, and if they are not thwarted its beneficial results must be apparent. It will do much to check the disgraceful struggle for office that makes our system of government the laughing-stock of other nations, and will do much to suppress the corruption that is eating like a cancer into our national life.

Mr. Hugh S. Thompson is the only Democrat on the Commission. He is fifty-three years of age, having been born in South Carolina in 1836. He entered the Southern army in 1861, and at the close of the terrible struggle had attained the rank of colonel. He was one of the first men of his State to gracefully accept the results of the war, and he set himself promptly to the task of reconstructing the demoralized condition of the South. He was made State Superintendent of Education, and during the six years that he held the office did all that could be done in the unpropitious circumstances to promote the interests of the rising generation. In 1882 he was elected Governor of his State, and he was re-elected in 1884. Before his second term expired President Cleveland made him Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, in which he acquitted himself with credit. It is worthy of note that while occupying that position he strictly carried out the principles of the law of which he is now appointed one of the administrators.

GOWER'S SICKNESS.

(See Illustration on page 333.)

To be poor and solitary and sick in a great city is perhaps the most miserable lot a man can endure. In the country, friends are sure to miss a man who is absent from his usual haunts, and will come and see him and render little services, or, in any case, will cheer him by their presence. But in a busy city there are so many faces that one is not missed when it drops out of the crowd. Some one may wonder where the man is, but there is no time for speculating on such subjects; his vacant place is soon filled, and he is forgotten. Meanwhile the man may be lying in that debatable land in which he does not know whether to-morrow will find him in this world or the next. If he has funds he can command the services of doctors and nurses; or if he be poor it may be that he has a wife or mother or sister who will watch by his bedside, smooth the crumpled pillow, administer the medicine, and speak words of encouragement; but if he is poor and solitary and sick in a great city he is a miserable man.

George Gower was in that plight. He was a carpenter by trade, but he was out of work. A long spell of dullness in building was upon his own locality, and he went to the nearest city in the hope that work of some kind might be had. He did find some at good wages for a time, but the dull time followed him there, and soon he found himself again unemployed. Day after day he sought employment, but returned at night to his miserable lodging without success.

It was a poor place, a mere closet, scarcely large enough to hold the bed and leave a narrow passage at the side. The window was small, one of the panes was cracked, and it was so close to the houses opposite that very little sunlight could enter by it. The ceiling was low and discolored with the rain that penetrated between the loose shingles. A dreary room even in summer and when its occupant was in good spirits; but to lie there ill!—it was enough to make one shudder to imagine such a thing. And Gower was ill. He felt sure of it. Strange shiverings ran through his body. He was thirsty, and his skin was dry and hot. A drenching rain, which wetted him to the skin some days before, must have given him a bad cold. He scarcely recognized his room when he reached it. That was certainly the chair he sat upon this morning, but it seemed to him to have taken on a fantastic shape, and the bed—was that a bed?—his bed? it looked to him like a hearse. Was he in his own room, or was he on a journey? He was bewildered and excited, and finally flung himself on the bed without undressing and tried to sleep. The horrors of that night Gower never forgot. He seemed to travel over vast distances, to fall from enormous heights, to struggle from under huge weights, to be held by strong chains, yet to be under the imperative necessity of hastening on some urgent business. It was a dreadful night.

The next morning he was delirious. It was no one's business to look after him. He only rented the one room he used, and did not board in the house. Happily for him, his rent was due; so his poverty served him a good turn for once. The janitor, coming up to his room to collect the rent or give him a warning to quit if the rent was not forthcoming, found Gower tossing about restlessly and muttering indistinctly and incoherently at a great rate. The janitor did not stay there long. The bloodshot, flaming eyes and the flushed face of the sick man frightened him. Hurrying down the dark and narrow staircase without any definite idea of what it was best to do, he ran against a man going up. He knew him, and congratulated himself. He was a city missionary, and the janitor quickly told him about the man up-stairs. Even men who despise religion have an instinctive idea that a religious man has in him more than the average share of human kindness, and is the right man to have around in time of trouble.

"I will go up and see him," said the missionary. "Has he any friends?"

"None that I know of," said the janitor. "I never spoke to him except about his rent, and that is in arrear now."

The missionary climbed the stairs and entered the room. His practiced eye told him at once that the illness was serious, and might be fatal. It was useless to ask questions, so he gave the man a drink of water, and hurried away to report to his employers. He returned a few hours later with a doctor and a nurse, and Gower was undressed and made as comfortable as circumstances would permit.

It was a serious illness, and for a long time it seemed as if it would be a fatal one; but one day the missionary found, when he paid his usual morning visit, that the crisis was past, and that Gower was sleeping naturally and peacefully. The next day, though still weak, he was able to talk, and asked who were the good people who had cared for him. The missionary told him, and in return heard his sad story. It was the story, only too common, of a lad piously brought up, but falling into temptation. A life of carelessness, sometimes of vice, and then poverty and sickness. The missionary prayed with him, and, fearing to say more in the weak condition of the patient, left him. On his next visit he found the man who the day before had been sad and despairing, much brighter and more hopeful. The missionary talked to him of Jesus, and Gower said, "Yes, let me hear more of Him. Look there; I scarcely took my eyes off that after you left yesterday."

He pointed to the cracked window, over which the nurse had pasted a piece of paper torn from a religious journal. The missionary looked and read, "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners. (1 Tim. 1:15.)"

"That is the greatest truth ever given to the world," said the missionary.

"Yes, sir," Gower answered; "but you need to be such a sinner as I have been to value it. My mother taught me that text, but I had forgotten it; and yesterday, when I had been thinking of my past life, I looked up, and it seemed like a message from my poor dead mother to her wandering boy. That is just what she would say to me if she could speak to me now."

"We will pray to God to enable you to realize it still more," the missionary said; and he knelt down by the bed.

They had many talks after that; and when Gower was able to rise from his sick-bed, he was not only made whole in body, but had within him a new heart and a right spirit, and was conscious that God had accepted him through Christ. In after years, and in more prosperous circumstances, he blessed God for the sickness and poverty that had come upon him to stop him in his sinful course, and for that day when the glad message of the gospel spoke to him from the cracked window.

The Convalescent's Study of the Patch on the Window.

ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS.

A Life Story: By Mrs. Stenhouse.

For More than Twenty-five Years the Wife of a Mormon Missionary and Elder.

(Continued from page 319.)

An Unwelcome Migration.

ONE morning we were surprised to receive a visit from the Apostle George O. Cannon, who had come to take the place of Mr. Stenhouse as President of the Mission in the Eastern States, and we were now to prepare to travel with the next company of emigrants. To me this was most unpleasant intelligence. The time had come at last when I was to realize my worst apprehensions, and I think at that time, had I been permitted to choose, I would have preferred to die rather than journey to Salt Lake.

Besides this, ever since my husband had been engaged with the secular papers, we had been getting along very comfortably. We had now a pleasant home, and many comforts and little luxuries which we had not enjoyed since we left Switzerland, and I was beginning to hope that we should be allowed to remain in New York for a few years at least. We had also by this time six children—the youngest only a few days old—and I leave it to any mother to determine whether I had not good cause for vexation when I was told that we were expected to leave New York within two weeks, with the emigrants who were then en route from England. My husband also was to take charge of the company, and therefore everything would depend upon me—all the preparations for our journey, the disposal of our furniture, and, in fact, the thousand and one little necessary duties which must attend the packing up and departure of a family.

In the course of a few days the emigrants arrived, and then my husband was compelled to devote all his time to them. When I told the Elders that it was almost impossible for me, in the delicate state of health in which I was, and with a babe only two weeks old, to undertake such a journey, they told me that I had no faith in the power of God, and that if I would arise and begin my preparations, the Lord would give me strength according to my day. Thinking that probably my husband believed as they did, I made the effort, but it cost me much.

In the Mormon Church the feelings or sufferings of women are seldom considered. If an order is given to any man to take a journey or perform any given task, his wife or wives are not to be thought of for a moment. They are his property just as much as his horses, mules, or oxen; and if one wife should die, it is of little consequence if he has others, and if he has not he can easily get them; and if he is not young or fascinating enough to win his way with the young ladies, he had only to keep on good terms with Brigham Young, or even with his bishop and every difficulty would be smoothed away, and they would be "counselled" to marry him.

It is difficult for one not in the Mormon Church to understand how the women submit to such treatment, and in consequence they are regarded by some as spiritless, debased specimens of humanity, but, as an authority on Mormonism has said, "Whoever has read debasement in the women of Utah has done them an injustice. Some there be who are devoid of refined sentiment and the nobler instincts of their sex, but no woman in history ever deserved more respect and sympathy than the true women among the Mormons."

They are taught to believe that their religion is a Divine institution, which is to regenerate the world and restore the golden age, and that by their submitting to the decrees of the Church they help to bring about this long-hoped-for restoration. If they endure heartrending sorrow in the performance of their religion, they yet yield to the Mormon doctrine that "the first duty of a woman is submission, the second, silence." The men also are taught that he is noblest who values the companionship of the soul the least, and that his wife is but the mother of his children. Thus the poor Mormon women are often placed on the level of the most inferior animals. One of the most noted of the Mormon Apostles said: "We think no more of taking a woman than we do of buying another one."

It is never expected, nor would it be tolerated in any Mormon woman, that she should exercise her own judgment in opposition to her husband, no matter how much she might feel that he was in the wrong. I have frequently seen intelligent women subjected to the grossest tyranny on the part of ignorant and fanatical husbands who were influenced by the absurd teachings of the Tabernacle.

One of the greatest Mormon writers, Orson Pratt, has said: "The wife should never follow her own judgment in preference to that of her husband; for if her husband desires to do right, but errs in judgment, Heaven will bless her in endeavoring to carry out his counsels; for God has placed him at the head, and though he may err in judgment, yet the wife will not be justified in disregarding his instructions and counsels; far greater is the sin of rebellion than the errors which arise from want of judgment; therefore she would be condemned for suffering her will to rise against his. Be obedient, and Heaven will cause all things to work for good."

The trouble and annoyance occasioned by leaving a comfortable position in New York to travel to such an unknown region as Utah was then, was not a trifle; but we hastened our preparations, sacrificing all that we possessed in the most reckless manner, and in due time set out. When we reached Florence—the starting-point on the frontiers—we were detained by some mismanagement on the part of the agents, and remained for three weeks in camp. Ours was what was called an "independent company;" by which I mean that we were able to defray our own expenses without borrowing from the Church: the poorer emigrants were assisted from a fund provided for that purpose—the Perpetual Emigration Fund.

As was before said, this fund was not intended to provide a free passage; those who had a little money were assisted, and then after all, they had to make good to the last farthing, with interest, whatever amount they had borrowed from the fund. I have known many people who contributed very largely, and it was represented constantly as the duty of all to do so.

Americans in Salt Lake City who contemplate marriage with a newly arrived emigrant, generally try to discover whether the "emigration" of their lady-love has been settled for, and if their investigations end unfavorably, the result very frequently is that their devotion is turned into another channel, and some other maiden whose expenses have been fully paid bears off the palm. Englishmen have not always been quite so prudent, and some have married according to their own sweet fancy without asking a question, and to their dismay, not long after the wedding, an account has been sent in for the emigration of Miss Blank. Others, again, have not been allowed to marry the lady of their choice until she was first paid for.

The Mormon Church never gives, it only lends to the poor. Many a man and woman has given enough to have emigrated himself or herself over and over again. This was because they were old people, and it was the young girls and young people generally who received the benefits of the fund. Many years ago a poor old widow woman in England said to me, "I have nearly starved myself to contribute all that I could to the emigration fund, in hopes that I should have the privilege of going to Zion, and mingling with the chosen people of God, but every season the young girls are all picked out of our branch, and I am told to wait. I cannot think that this is right, but I don't wish to judge the actions of God's servants. I suppose I must wait." She did wait, and died waiting.

Our company was in an infinitely better position than that of those emigrants of whose sad fate my friend Mary Burton had told me; for our journey was made at the proper season, and, as far as was possible under the circumstances, convenience and comfort had been attended to. The incidents which befell us were few, and although, of course, every one of us felt weary and worn out, we were not called upon to pass through the miseries and suffering endured by the hand-cart emigrants. Looking back to our primitive mode of travelling, it appears to me almost as if I must be making some mistake about my own age, and that it must have been several centuries instead of a few years ago, since we crossed the Plains.

The ox-team and wagon, the walk on foot in the day and the camp-life at night, have been pleasantly exchanged for the swift travel of a few days in a Pullman palace-car. There was, however, for a short time, an intermediate stage between this and the old mode of travelling, when, before the opening of the branch line to the city, about forty miles had to be traversed in a coach. As the descriptions hitherto given of the journeys to Salt Lake have been of a melancholy nature, I shall be excused for giving in this place a humorous description of this part of the journey from the pen of Mr. W. F. Rae, a correspondent of the Daily News. He says:

"The Pacific Railway runs through Utah Territory, and skirts the northern end of the Great Salt Lake. From the nearest railway station to the City of the Saints the distance is about forty miles. A branch line, called the Utah Central Railroad, has now brought Salt Lake City into communication by rail with the principal American cities of the East and West. When I made the journey, the visitor to the capital of Mormondom had to leave the Union Pacific at Uintah station, and take a seat in one of the stage coaches of Wells, Fargo & Co. The coach which meets the train is what is styled a 'Concord Coach.' It has seats for nine persons inside, and for at least five upon the roof. The inside seat for three is placed crosswise between the two doors. Those who occupy it are not only cramped, but are exposed to disagreeable pressure from the knees of the passengers behind, as well as to inconvenience from the feet and legs of those facing them. To suffer this during five hours, the time occupied by the journey, is bad enough, yet this is not the worst.

"The road itself is unique of its kind. To rival it would be difficult, to surpass it impossible. In badness it is pre-eminent. Execrable is the strongest epithet in the language for a road having no redeeming points. This word, however, serves but feebly and inadequately to describe and stigmatize the road between Uintah Station and Salt Lake City. There are innumerable ruts and depressions in it. Huge stones interpose obstacles to the smooth passage of a vehicle. If the occurrence of the ruts were more uniform, and the arrangement of the stones more regular, less complaint might with justice be made. But the perverse combination of the two is utterly unbearable.

"On one side, at short distances apart, is a rut a foot deep; on the opposite side is a row of stones a foot high. As the four horses harnessed to the coach draw it rapidly over these rough places, the effect is that of a sudden lurch and stunning blow produced simultaneously. The swing to the one side which follows the sinking of the wheels, bumps the passengers against the sides and against each other, while the jar of the other wheel against the stones throws their heads against the roof, or their backs against the front or rear of the coach. Thus they learn, in a way alike practical and unpleasant, the import of the threat to beat a man into a jelly, or to break every bone in his body.

"On reaching their destination the passengers have good ground for charging the company with a species of assault and battery. That no steps have yet been taken with a view to obtain redress for physical injuries sustained during the drive is probably due to the fact that every one who has survived the ordeal must be so thankful that he has escaped with his life as to have no disposition to foster vindictive feelings against his fellows.

"It is a standing miracle that the driver sticks to his post. Judging from the one who drove the coach when I was among the passengers, I should say that the risks run and the jolting undergone had a souring effect on his temper and a saddening influence on his mind. A more surly, ill-conditioned, and taciturn driver I never met before. The chief point in his favor was his determination to keep the cattle going at full speed. When we halted to change horses, and were detained a few minutes beyond the allotted time, he told the outside passengers to hold on firmly, as he meant 'to go ahead like greased lightning.' As the road before us looked even worse than that behind, this intimation seemed equivalent to a threat of extra sufferings about to be inflicted. On the other hand, the warning was accepted with gratitude. It was better to have one's misery shortened in time, even if intensified in degree, than to have it protracted as well as extreme. To this hour I am amazed that the wheels and framework of the coach remained unbroken and unstrained."

What living contradictions we were as we crossed the Plains—singing in a circle, night and morning, the songs of Zion and listening to prayers and thanksgivings for having been permitted to gather out of Babylon; and then during the day as we trudged along in twos and threes expressing to each other all our misgivings and doubts and fears, and the bitterness of our thoughts against the "plurality abomination, while each wife, confiding in her husband's honor and faithfulness, solaced herself with the hope that all might yet be well! How little sometimes do the songs of gladness reflect the real sentiments of the heart! How often have I heard many a poor heart-broken woman singing the chorus, "I never knew what joy was till I became a Mormon"! I never could sing that song, for my experience had been exactly the reverse.

It was the month of September—the beginning of our beautiful Indian summer—when we emerged from the cañon, and caught sight of Salt Lake City. Everything looked green and lovely, and in spite of all my sad forebodings while crossing the Plains, I involuntarily exclaimed, "Ah, what a glorious spot!" It looked like a beautiful garden—another Eden—in the midst of a desert valley. We had a glimpse of the great Salt Lake far away in the distance, stretching out like a placid sheet of molten silver, while everywhere around were the lonely looking snow-capped mountains, apparently encircling us like mighty prison-walls.

Probably all my readers have heard of the saline mystery of the Great Salt Lake, but have ideas about it most vague and unsatisfactory. It excels the ocean as a bathing-place. Do not picture it as a sullen, listless sheet, beating idly on shores barren and repellant, for it is beautiful. The waves are bright blue or green. As they dance on its surface it is hard to tell which color prevails. Away in the depth the eye may reach, but it searches out no living thing. The water supports no life.

The strange sinking and rising of the lake is only one of many curious phases. What outlet has it? Whence comes its salt? Why does it not overflow? Its area embraces 4,000 square miles, and the mountainous islands which mark its centre, distance has turned to purple. The residents of the Territory appreciate their prize, and during the summer fairly flock to it. Garfield and Black Rock are the bathing-places. The sensation upon entering is novel and congenial. Imagine a cork swimming always upon the topmost crest, floating without an effort. One must keep properly balanced, or head and heels change places. Do not swallow the water. Cooling, strengthening, and refreshing as a beverage, its stomachic qualities are doubtful and its stay short. It is twenty-two per cent. salt, while the ocean is only two per cent. Being so heavy it affords a solid foundation for the swimmer, who has only to keep poised to stay at the top. The temperature is low, so lessening the tendency to take cold upon leaving it.

The proper length of a bath is not much over five minutes, though many lengthen this. The water is extremely invigorating. If there is any abrasion upon the body, it will smart for an instant when it touches the brine, but after rinsing in the fresh water, provided in every room, the smart is gone never to return. There is a sense of cleanliness more perfect than an ordinary bath can produce. Weariness and sickness seem to belong to another realm. It is strange that with such a burden of salt, the water is clear, but none of the mineral is precipitated. Boating here is peculiar. Every wave strikes against the prow with a very perceptible shock, beating it back. In ordinary weather a boat sits high, and can skim along like a duck.

Amongst the minor features connected with the lake may be mentioned the hot Red Springs a few miles north, so named from the hue that they impart to the soil. They contain salt, magnesia, and iron, and the waters are much hotter than the hand can bear.

(To be Continued).

JESUS BEFORE THE COUNCIL.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for June 2, Mark 14: 55-65; Golden Text, John 15: 25.

The Voluntary Sacrifice—The Strange Judgment-Seat—The Just Before the Unjust—The Search for an Indictment—His Offences Were Miracles and Good Works—A Capital Charge Wanted—Silence Under False Accusations—The High Priest's Crucial Question—An Unequivocal Avowal—Where Persecution Always Falls—The Worldly Church Escapes—Peter's Denial—Why He Fell—The Melting Look.

"AND they led Jesus away." "He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter." (Isa. 53: 7.) Hitherto man had no power over Him; now, it was only by permission that they could lay hands on Him. He said Himself, "Therefore doth My Father love Me, because I lay down My life, that I might take it again." (John 10: 17.) He was led away to the high priest. What a mockery was that trial! Jesus, our great High Priest, who can enter the immediate presence of God, not "once every year," like the Jewish high priests, who offered for themselves and "for the errors of the people," but who "ever liveth to make intercession for us," standing at the bar of an earthly priest! There stood, face to face, the type and the Antitype, the high priest from among men and the divine Son of God, "an High Priest for ever." The man Caiaphas with his own heart full of unforgiveness, and the blessed "Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world"! It was

A Strange Judgment-Seat!

God arraigned before men, the Sinless before the sinful, the Creator before the creature! Had the curtain of the invisible world been dropped, and could the great cloud of witnesses in the unseen world have appeared, and their discourse, like that of Moses and Elijah with the transfigured Jesus, have been heard, how infinite would have been the contrast between their view of things, and that of "the chief priests, and the elders, and the scribes," who, with the high priest were sitting in judgment upon Jesus!

It was not man that humbled Jesus: He "made Himself of no reputation" (or emptied Himself); it was His own doing. "He took upon Him the form of a servant;" no one forced it upon Him. "And being found in fashion as a man, He humbled Himself," voluntarily and not by constraint, and "became obedient unto death;" He was not born to it, as sinners are, and that death was "even the death of the cross!"

Now that the chief priests had succeeded in apprehending Jesus, they were at a loss to find some legal ground of condemnation. They had their Man, but how to accuse Him was the difficulty. They had plenty against Him, but had it been weighed in the scales of the sanctuary it would have been found lighter than vanity as

The Ground of Condemnation.

He was only a carpenter's son! This had offended them, but this was no just ground of complaint. (ch. 6: 3.) "This fellow doth not cast out devils but by Beelzebub, the prince of the devils." (Matt. 12: 24.) But this accusation could not be proved. He healed on the Sabbath day. But none could prove, therefore, that He broke the Sabbath. He compounded no medicines, applied no ointments, bound no bandages, but simply spoke the word, or touched the sick one, and it was done. "They were incensed because He affirmed that the Father had sent Him" (John 7: 28-30), and because He declared that He was before Abraham (John 8: 58, 59), but it was for them to disprove His claim. Taking or granted, in spite of His wonderful works, His more wonderful teaching, and His unworldly spirit, that He was an impostor, and not the promised Messiah, they were wroth with Him because He said, "I and My Father are one" (John 10: 30, 31); but that which angered them more than all else was the raising of Lazarus from the dead. In consequence of this unprecedented miracle, the chief priests and Pharisees had convened a council, and said, "What do we? For this man doeth many miracles. If we let Him thus alone, all men will believe on Him; and the Romans will come, and take away both our place and nation" (John 11: 47, 48).

But numerous as were these grievances which their unbelieving and jealous hearts cherished against Jesus, not one of them was against the law of God, or could be made a legal charge which could be proved in a court of justice. The chief priests and all the council sought for witness against Jesus to put him to death,

And Found None.

The failure of His accusers to substantiate a charge, as well as the testimony of His disciples, went to prove that He "did no sin, neither was guile found in His mouth." (1 Pet. 2: 22.) "Many bare false witness against Him;" such can always be hired for money, "but their witness agreed not together," and therefore could not stand, according to the law of Moses, "One witness shall not testify against any person to cause him to die." (Num. 35: 30.)

At last there arose certain who came to some measure of agreement in the charge, "We heard Him say, I will destroy this temple that is made with hands, and within three days I will build another, made without hands. But neither so did their witness agree together." Through mingled ignorance and malice, they were perverting the words He spoke at the time of the Passover, in the first year of His public ministry. "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up. . . But He spake of the temple of His body." (John 2: 19-21.) The same power which confused the tongues of the wilful Babel builders now confused the witness of those who would accuse Jesus. The high priest was getting desperate; he could retain his seat no more, he stood up in the midst, as though to awe Jesus into submission, and asked Him, "Answerest thou nothing? What is it which these witness against thee? But He held His peace, and answered nothing;" "As a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so He openeth not His mouth." (Isa. 53: 7.) "Who, when He was reviled, reviled not again, . . . but committed Himself to Him that judgeth righteously." Oh how few there are who know how to be silent under accusation, and to let God undertake to justify them! Our beloved Lord said in prophecy, "He is near which justifieth Me." (Isa. 50: 8.) He was contented to be understood by His Father, though all men believed evil of Him. It is one of the strongest proofs of our unbelief in God when we are troubled by false accusation of man. God can turn hearts in a moment and justify us, and if He wills that we should lie under calumny, as Joseph did in Egypt, He will only let it be for a time, and then "shall thy light rise in obscurity, and thy darkness be like the noonday."

Then the high priest put

The Crucial Question.

"Art thou the Christ, and the Son of the Blessed? And Jesus said, I am; and ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven." Jesus only spoke the truth, but it was an unwelcome truth, and they did not, and would not, believe it, and therefore took for granted that, as an impostor, He had spoken blasphemy. The high priest, who was ready to catch at a straw that he might condemn Jesus, rent his clothes, as though with horror (oh how much better if he had rent his heart), and said, "What need we any further witnesses? ye have heard His blasphemy; what think ye? And they all condemned Him to be guilty of death." And on similar grounds are His faithful followers persecuted now. It is not the worldly churches, with their fashions, their concerts, their bazaars, their entertainments, their flowery preachers, and their music which provoke the enmity of the world, but it is the despised few where the power of God is manifest, where drunkards and profligates, fallen men and fallen women, are reclaimed, where souls and bodies are blest and healed—there it is that contempt and persecution fall. Any amount of worldly religion—which does not search the conscience or bring the sinner face to face with his God—is welcomed in this day, but wherever the power of God is manifest, the majority of people are very suspicious that all is not right; they do not from their hearts "believe that (God) is, and that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him."

In the presence of one of His disciples, and that one he who had declared, "Though I should die with Thee, yet will I not deny Thee," some began to spit on Him, and to cover His face, and to buffet Him, and to say unto Him, Prophecy; and the servants did strike Him with the palms of their hands." And Peter said nothing, did nothing, but care for himself! He was "beneath in the palace," and a maid saw him "warming himself," and said, "And thou also wast with Jesus of Nazareth." Warming himself

At Such an Hour!

Jesus, His Saviour and Lord, to whom he had borne witness, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." (Matt. 16: 16.) This very Jesus upon His trial, and condemned by the priests and elders to die, and yet Peter so indifferent that he could warm himself even within sight of that condemned Holy One! Could it be? And yet have we, have I, never done the like? What had happened to Peter, the zealous Peter? He had counted upon himself, and largely reckoned upon the devotion of his own heart, and had not yet learned that that very devotion was a gift of God, only kept alive by the Holy Ghost, and not by the power or will of man. "He denied, saying, I know not, neither understand I what thou sayest. And the cock crew." The morning was dawning, but not yet on Peter's soul. It is just when we are the most confident of our own holiness that we are the nearest to a fall. "Thou standest by faith; be not highminded, but fear." (Rom. 11: 20.) "A maid saw him again, and began to say to those that stood by, 'This is one of them.' He denied a second time, and again they said, 'Surely thou art one of them, for thou art a Galilean, and thy speech agreeth thereto.' When once a follower of Christ falls, the enemy gets such a hold of him that an attempt to show him his error maddens him; poor fallen Peter "began to curse and to swear, saying, 'I know not this Man of whom ye speak, and the second time the cock crew.' But the disowned Saviour "turned and looked upon Peter" (Luke 22: 61); it was a look of recognition, and it broke his heart, and brought him to himself; he "called to mind the word that Jesus said unto him, Before the cock crow twice, thou shalt deny Me thrice. And when he thought thereon, he wept." The judgment of the priests was not so bitter to Christ as Peter's denial, yet the condemned Jesus forgave him, even in that hour.

Prophetic Studies. A Report of the Address

delivered at the Prophetic Conference at Chicago, with portraits of some of the speakers. It contains 216 pages. Fifty cents in paper covers, including postage. Address Manager, 63 Bible House, New York.

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman

(London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 71 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles, among others, are contained in the number for May:

Three Days' Prophetic Conference in Melbourne, Australia. Stars and Prophecy. By W. Appleford. Prophetic Lectures at Birmingham. Historical Fulfilment of the Fourth Trumpet. Prophetic Lectures at Brighton. Primary 2,345 Years from Ezra's Reforms in Nisan, B. C. 457 to Nisan A. D., 1889. Coming and Kingdom of the Lord Jesus. Will General Boulanger be the French Cæsar (Gallo-Kaiser) of Scripture Prophecy. Antichrist's Future: Acting; Described in Dan. 11: 21-45. Passing Events Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

THE HIGHEST PLACE.

It may be wrong, and yet I would not be An angel, formed in spotless purity;
It may seem strange, yet with my sins and cares,
I would not change my lot in Christ for theirs.
They in the light of God will ever glow,
Yet joys are mine which they can never know.
They, since He made them first, have ever been Viewing His love, no earthly veil between;
In that, from age to age, they still abide,
Drink of its fullness, and are satisfied;
Yet even they bend down new depths to see,
New depths of love, the love that ransomed me.
Sweet are their songs, yet not to them is given
To sing the song of the redeemed in heaven.
Bright are their crowns, their harps are shining gold,

Yet, in their hands no victor's palm they hold,
No wreath they wear such as shall clasp the brow

Of those who pass through tribulation now.
Their robes are white, yet they shall fade beside
The robes that Jesus' blood hath purified.
They near Him stand, but for His Bride alone
Remains the place the nearest to the throne;
To her, alone, it shall be given to rest
Upon His arm, and lean upon His breast!

Blest thought! each conflict here, each bitter strife,
Shall but add sweetness to the cup of life,
Each heavy stroke shall but God's child prepare
To be a pillar in His temple there;
There, where the things which darkly now I see,
Shall be in perfect light revealed to me.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher: 77 Bible House, New York,
will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets
assorted (no two alike) will be sent, post-paid, for 10
cts., or 100 for 20 cts. Postage stamps taken.

For Nervous Diseases
Use Horford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. F. G. KELLY, Alderton, W. T., says: "I have prescribed it in a large number of cases of restlessness at night, and nervous diseases generally, and also in cases of indigestion caused by lack of sufficient gastric juice of the stomach, with marked success, and consider it one of the best remedies known to the professional world."

The latest and best imperial Photographs of
Dr. Talmage and Rev. C. H. Spurgeon,
with their fac-simile autograph, and also imperial photograph of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher,
can be obtained from J. E. Jewett, 77 Bible House, New York. Sent postpaid for twenty-five cents each. Postage stamps taken.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico
are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to
the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH
43 Bible House, New York.

MINISTER'S POCKET RITUAL

A Hand-Book of Scripture Lesson and Forms of Service
for Marriage, Confirmation, The Lord's Supper, Visitation
of Sick, Burial of Dead, Dedication, Ordinations, Installations, Suggestions on various services. For all denominations. By Rev. Hiram M. Linton, D. D., 12 mo. Limp Morocco $1; Limp Maslin 50c. Mailed on receipt of price.
PERKINPINE & HIGGINS, 514 Arch St., Philada.

PHOTOS OF THE FAR WEST. Finest collection in America of Columbia River Views, Cascades, Government
Locks and Buildings at Upper Cascades, Oreg., Old Black-house where Grant and Sherman where when fighting Indians, Government Barracks, at Vancouver and Willamette Falls at Oregon City, etc., etc. Hand-somerily furnished and mounted on Cards 30 cents each, or $5.00 a dozen. THE PHILIP S. BATES PHOTOGRAPH CO., Box 290, Portland, Oregon.

WANTED AGENTS to sell "The Chris-
tian's Legacy." Introduction
by Rev. A. T. Pierson, D. D. One agent sold and delivered 200 copies in six weeks.
W. J. HOLLAND, 150 Nassau St., New York.
E. E. HOLLAND, 40 Dearborn St., Chicago.

$500 A YEAR GUARANTEED SALARY, and commission extra to one canvasser in each County. Business prominent and worth $1000 a year.
No capital or experience necessary. Write for particulars.
CINCINNATI PUBLISHING CO., 169 Elm St., Cincinnati, O.

LADIES Follow Directions CAREFULLY
Purifier of the STOMACH ENLARGES
No Harm
No Pain
No Disturbance
No Loss of Time
No Loss of Money
No Loss of Health
No Loss of Beauty
No Loss of Vitality
No Loss of Energy
No Loss of Strength
No Loss of Endurance
No Loss of Longevity
No Loss of Happiness
No Loss of Peace
No Loss of Joy
No Loss of Love
No Loss of Life

The Table How to Buy Food;
How to Cook It,
and
How to Serve It.

By Alessandro Filippini, who has been 24 years with the Delmonico's. The work is endorsed by the Delmonico's. Menus for every day of the year.
The greatest book on culinary art ever published.
Throw all other cook books away; this embraces and exceeds them all.

IT IS A MASTERPIECE OF ITS KIND.

Agents Wanted to Introduce this Work into every Hotel, Restaurant and Private Family in the U. S.

READ THIS CAREFULLY:

Mr. Manning sold 164 in 9 days, Miss Hanna 62 in 3 days, Miss Briggs 109 in 18 days, Mr. Hartner 33 in 8 days.
You can do as well. Every one wants it. Write for terms.

It is adopted to the humblest as well as the grandest style of living.

Bound in white Oil Cloth, dark edges.....$2.50
Bound in full Seal, Russia marbled edges.....$4.50

CHARLES L. WEBSTER & CO.,
3 East 14th Street, N. Y.

WORKS OF J. W. KIMBALL.

How to See Jesus with Fulness of Joy and Peace.

256 Pages. Cloth. Price 75 Cents.

Those who are familiar with the previous writings of this deeply devotional author, will gladly welcome this beautiful book. It is not an impetuous torrent of love, like "Augustine's Confessions." It is rather the calm and quiet flow of the "Imitation of Christ." He who reads it can scarcely fail to be spiritually enriched, and in very truth to "see Jesus with fulness of joy and peace."—Interior, Chicago.
Every page is fragrant with the love of Jesus. It is the best book of the kind we have read. Its sole purpose is to guide the believer into that closer communion for which he yearns, and to furnish wise counsel for a life of holiness.—Lutheran Observer.
It is full of the marrow of the gospel, presented in so simple, well-illustrated, and experimental a form that even the youngest disciple can apprehend its spiritual lessons and be led by it into the richest enjoyment of the fulfillment of the promises.—Christian Advocate.

Heaven: My Father's House.

252 Pages. Cloth. Price 75 Cents.

"Heaven—I have seen nothing on the subject which pleased me so much. The views are original, and I think just. Some of them I do not remember to have presented at all, and others not so well."—*Rev. Dr.
Mack Hopkins, Williams College, Mass.*
"Like his way of approaching the subject. The book develops in a very pleasing manner a line of thought peculiar and untouched by any of the many who have written on it."—Rev. Prof. Samuel Harris, Yale College, Conn.
"Death, as seen from Mr. K.'s point of view, is a natural event in the order of the Christian's life. Instead of recoiling from inevitable destiny, we are led by this more familiar view to look upon the change without fear, yea, with cheerfulness."—*Rev. Dr. H. B.
Hackett, Newton Theological Seminary.*

NEW ENLARGED EDITION.

Encouragements to Faith.

207 Pages. Cloth. Price 75 Cents.

The Rev. ANDREW MURRAY, in his popular work "Abide in Christ," has mentioned this book as one especially to be recommended for young, weak, or doubting Christians.

Here is a warm hand and a loving heart tendered you, in the name of the Lord, from one who harbors no doubts, and would gladly help you to break away from them. This book has greatly helped many Christians to a stronger faith in the blessed Lord Jesus; we earnestly hope that many more may be benefited by it.—Pittsburg.

"This volume by J. W. Kimball, seems to be precisely such a one as a Christian would desire to put into the hands of any young man or woman troubled with doubts concerning the religious life. It has reference to the experience of the soul rather than the mind, and is in fact, a tender, confidential exhortation, having its motive in love to cultivate faith in God."—Boston Advertiser.

Either of the above books sent by mail, post-paid on receipt of price, or the three books together for $2.00
by J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York.

SAFE INVESTMENT
FARRAND & VOTEY ORGANS
DETROIT, MICH. U.S.A.

LADIES! Curl or Frizz your Hair with our
NEW HAIR CURLER.
No Linting or Soiling the Hair or Hands.
Never recognized if not satisfactory.
AGENTS WANTED. Sample by mail, 15c., 1 doz. $1. Address—
W. J. PETTIS, Box 1211,
Providence, R. I.

THE GREAT ENGLISH REMEDY.
Beecham's Pills
For Bilious and Nervous Disorders.
"Worth a Guinea a Box"—but sold for 25 cents,
BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

SEND 6 CENTS for samples of the famous custom-made Plymouth Rock $3 Pants. Rules for self-measurement and a cloth tape measure included.
Every pair guaranteed or money refunded. Plymouth Rock Pants Co., 11 to 17 Eliot St., Boston, Mass.

HENRY'S COMMENTARY for $8.00

*Henry's Commentary on the Bible, 3 vols., 4to, cloth.....$8.00

*Another edition in large type, 5 vols., 4to, cloth.....15.00

*Still another edition, 9 vols., 8vo, cloth.....20.00

Persons desiring to purchase this Commentary can have a circular sent them, without charge, giving a specimen page from each of these editions, by sending us their address.

"King of Bible explorers yet."—Cuyler.

"First among the mighty, for general usefulness, we are bound to mention Matthew Henry."— Spurgeon.

"Sparkles with jewels of wisdom and incisive humor."—Rev. Dr. W. M. Taylor.

Kitto's Bible Illustrations.
8 vols.....7.00

Ryle on the Gospels. 7 vols.....10.50

Dr. Hodge's Commentaries on Romans, Corinthians, and Ephesians. 4 vols.....7.00

Arnot on Acts, The Church in the House.....1.50

The Credentials of Science;
the Warrant of Faith, by Prof. Josiah
Parsons Cooke, LL.D. 12mo.....1.75

ROBERT CARTER & BROTHERS,
530 Broadway, New York.

HIRES
25c HIRES' IMPROVED 25c
ROOT BEER!
IN LIQUID NO BOILING EASILY MADE THIS PACKAGE MAKES FIVE GALLONS MAKES FIVE GALLONS
DELICIOUS AND SPARKLING
ROOT BEER
The most APPETIZING and WHOLESOME
TEMPERANCE DRINK in the world. TRY IT.
Ask your Druggist or Grocer for it.
C. E. HIRES, PHILADELPHIA.

THE NEW MODEL, OUR LATEST and BEST
MOWER.
For Simplicity and durability,
and quality of
work, it is unequalled, while for lightness of draft
it exceeds by a large percentage any other Lawn Mower
made. Send for circular and price-list.
CHADBORN
& COLDWELL MANUFACTG CO.,
NEWBURGH, N. Y.

BAILEY'S Controlled light-spreading silver-plated Corrugated Glass
REFLECTORS.
A wonderful invention for lighting CHURCHES, Halls, etc. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed.
Catalogue and price
free. BAILEY REFLECTOR CO.,
113 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa.

PLANTS Transplanted MAIL or EXPRESS
Large, Smooth Red Tomato 25c. p. doz. $1 p. 100.
Egg Plants, 50c. per doz. Cabbage & Lettuce, 50c. per 100. Cauliflower, Early Snowball, 25c. per doz. $1 per
100. JOHN BOLGIANO, Waverly, Md.

SAMPLE PAGES FROM THE LATEST
SUNDAY SCHOOL SONG BOOKS FREE.

Bed Spreads & Summer Blankets

JAMES McCREERY &
Have bought a manu-rurer's stock of Sum-Blankets, at prices enable them to offer to customers decided gains. They compris-sizes, and range in p-from $3.50 to $6.50 pair.

5,000 extra sized ported Marseilles Qu-
new handsome patteat $2.45 and $2.90 ea-formerly $3.50 and $- respectively.

Four numbers of Doi-Bed Crochet Quilts at cents, 85 cents, $1.10, $1.25 each.

Steamer Rugs -- mafacturers' samples -- offered at about one-their regular prices.

JAMES McCREERY &
Broadway & Eleventh
New York.

NOW IS THE TIME TO PAINT
EVERYBODY'S PAINT BOOK

A new work on INDOOR and OUTDOOR painting which is designed to teach people how to DO THEIR OWN PAINTING and save the expense of a professional painter. The most practical and valuable work of the kind ever issued. Full and plain directions are given for mixing paints for ALL PURPOSES. Tells all about PAPER HANGING, KAL-SOMING, STAINING,
VARNISHING, POLISH-
ING, as well as how to REVO-LUTE FURNITURE, so that it will look as good as new. Tells all about HOUSE-CLEANING.
Full directions are given for mixing and applying Kalsomine to cellings and walls. It tells how to make and use stencils for ornamenting ceilings. Gives detailed directions for PAPER HANGING so that every one can paper a room successfully. Tells how to make DA-MASK WALLS, etc. Tells how to paint a kitchen or chamber varnish OIL-CLOTHS, varnish WORK, restore CHROMOS and oil renovate PICTURE FRAMES.
MARBLE, etc. Many useful hints on AT WORK for HOME DECORATgiven. Full directions are given for beautiful SPATTER-WORK pictures the ladies are so much interested in.
Tells how OUTBUILDINGS, ROOFS, FARM ON'S FARM IMPLEMENTS, and RIAGES as well as how to polish a PI ORGAN--how to limt the GROUND GI-make paint for BLACKBOARDS-- ING in oak and black walnut, painting in of EBONY, MAHOGANY and FINE stain, GILDING, BRONZING and SI-ING. Elegantly printed, handsomely bound in cloth, with ink and gold, contains a large of illustrations; will save its cost in time. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt $1.00. Five books for $4.00. Get four friend-with you and thus get your book free. Add-J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New

THE GREAT AMERICAN
TO LADIES
Greatest offer. Now's to get orders for our Teas, Coffees, and Powder, and secure a
Gold Band or Moss Rose
Set, Dinner Set, Gold Band Moss Rose Toilet Brass Lamp, Casket, or Webster's Dictionary
Get Premium No. 27. For particulars
66 and 68 CHURCH STREET, N. Y.

SHOTS and SUNDRY
TARGETS
Aimed at Wrongs 25 Righted, Follies 25 Shugers 25 Avoided, Sorrows 25 Mitigated, Victori-A treasury of his best thoughts. Beautifully 702 pages, $2.75. E. B. TREAT, NEW BERCHAM'S PILLS cure bilious and nervous

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1889, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

This Journal contains every week a Portrait and Biography of some eminent person; a new Sermon by the Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, of London, and the Rev. Dr. TALMAGE'S latest Sunday morning Sermon; also always a Prophetic Article, and a Summary of Current Events, as well as Stories, Anecdotes, etc.

Vol. XII., No. 20. Office, 71 Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 15, 1889.

Price, 3 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

THE CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION OF WASHINGTON'S INAUGURATION: PICTURES OF THE PARADE AND DECORATIONS.

A POISONED DINNER. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday Morning.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF THE RT. REV. H. O. POTTER, D. D., LL. D., Bishop of New York, Preacher of the Centennial Sermon.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

THE PROPHETIC PARABLES OF THE TARES, THE LEAVEN, AND THE SEED.

A Dedication Abjured—A Prodigal Rejected—A Millionaire's Motive—Fruit After Thirty Years—A Persecuted Chinaman—The Conversion of Bear's Tooth—Work in the Zenanas of India—Incidents of Work Among Indians.

MAN UNKNOWN TO MAN. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

Gems from New Books: The Boy-King's Friends—A Momentous Discovery—The Royal Tragedy.

PICTURES OF THREE FLOATS IN THE CIVIC CENTENNIAL PARADE ON MAY 1.

ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS. An Autobiographical Story by Mrs. Stenhouse. (Continued).

JESUS BETRAYED. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

THE CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION IN NEW YORK ON APRIL 30, 1889, OF THE INAUGURATION OF WASHINGTON, ON APRIL 30, 1789.

THE CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION

On April 30 in New York.

The Illustrations—The Procession to St. Paul's—The Old Church Decorated—Bishop Potter's Prayer—A Tribute to Washington—The Exercises at the Sub-Treasury—Mr. Whittier's Centennial Poem—Mr. Depew's Speech—President Harrison's Remarks—The Procession—Fifty Thousand Men in Line—A Parade Eleven Miles Long—The Contingents from the States.

THE last of the Centennial celebrations of the past fifteen years, stretching from Lexington and Concord to the inauguration of Washington, was unquestionably the greatest. Not even the demonstration of 1876 approached in magnificence, outlay, or enthusiasm the marvellous pageant of April 30 and May 1, 1889, in New York. Some slight suggestion of the most notable features of it is given in on the preceding page. The first, representing the scene at the Sub-Treasury building in Wall Street, is the most interesting. That was the spot on which Washington stood to take the oath of office a century ago, and it was appropriate that it should be the centre of interest in the celebration. The building occupies the site of the old Federal Hall. From the highest peak of the roof floated a huge flag, and from the guy ropes to its staff hung the international-code flags, spelling the motto, "First in war, first in peace, first in the hearts of his countrymen." The pediment was decorated with a golden eagle, surrounded with a drapery of flags. Beneath, in a row, were the coats-of-arms of the thirteen original States, with the escutcheon of New York in the centre. The platform erected over the steps bore on its blue drapery forty-two alternate stripes of red and white, each of which was emblazoned with the coat-of-arms of a State. These were so arranged that President Harrison would stand over the escutcheon of Indiana, with that of New York on his right, and that of Virginia on his left.

The Illustrations

The second illustration represents the triumphal arch at Madison Square. It was built of wood from the designs of a committee of artists. On its centre was a huge equestrian statue of Washington, and on its left support was a medallion portrait of Washington, under the date 1789, and on its right support a medallion portrait of Harrison under the date 1889. Each support was surmounted by four miniature turrets bearing pennants. Under the statue was a gold eagle with draped flags, and more flags were draped at the corners and festooned under the arch. The third and lower illustration represents the procession of the governors of the States, with their staffs and militia proceeding up Broadway to pass the reviewing stand in Madison Square. The cost of the celebration is estimated at a little over two million dollars, and the number who took part in it and witnessed it, must have been near four million persons.

The Opening Ceremony

was the church service in St. Paul's Church at 9 o'clock. It was preceded by the ringing of the bells in all the churches that had them. There were services in many churches, notably in the Episcopal and the Dutch Reformed. The old Dutch Church, which now worships at Twenty-ninth Street and Fifth Avenue, sounded its thanksgiving with a bell cast in Amsterdam in 1731. The Dutch Church was the loyal one in the dark days of the Revolution; the Episcopal Church was a Tory body. It necessarily was so, for its clergy had received their ordination in England, and most of them came from there. George Washington was a churchman, however, and that is why he went to St. Paul's 100 years ago, and why there were especial exercises there at the celebration. The Episcopalians were as jubilant as if they had been on the popular side in this city in 1789.

Punctually to the moment a notable procession left the Fifth Avenue Hotel, and proceeded to the old church corner of Vesey Street and Broadway. In it were the President, Vice-President, Supreme Court Justices, Governor Hill, Mayor Grant, ex-Presidents Grover Cleveland and Rutherford B. Hayes, Senators Evarts and Hiscock, the Cabinet Secretaries, the bishops of New York, Long Island, Iowa, and Tennessee; Mrs. Harrison, Senator John Sherman, General Sherman, Senator Ingalls, ex-Secretary Bayard, and many others. The church was beautifully decorated with flags and flowers. The old thirteen-star flag was conspicuous in association with the royal standard of France, in recognition of the help England's ancient enemy was ready a century ago to give to the young nation in throwing off British rule.

In St. Paul's Church.

President Harrison and Vice-President Morton occupied the large pew in which the Father of His Country knelt to ask the assistance of that Divine Providence which so fortuitously guided him through the storms of political strife. Ex-President Cleveland and ex-President Hayes sat beside each other, the only living ex-Presidents, in a front pew, with Senator Evarts and ex-Secretary Bayard, and Lieutenant-Governor Jones on either side of them.

In the course of the service was the following prayer of praise prepared by the Bishop for the occasion: For raising up thy servant, George Washington, and giving him to be a leader and commander to the people; for vouchsafing to him victory over kings, and for bestowing upon him many excellent gifts; for inclining the hearts of men in Congress assembled to wise choices, and for granting them vision of the days to come: for a settled Constitution, and for equal laws; for freedom to do the thing that is right, and liberty to say the truth; for the spread of knowledge everywhere among us, and for the preservation of the faith; we bless and magnify Thy holy Name, humbly beseeching Thee to accept this our sacrifice of thanks and praise, through Jesus Christ, our only Saviour and Redeemer. Amen.

The Sermon was preached by the Right Rev. H. C. Potter, Bishop of New York. His main theme, as mentioned last week, was the degeneracy of modern days, but in his opening sentences he paid a glowing tribute to the hero of the day. He said: "One hundred years ago there knelt within these walls a man to whom, above all others in its history, this nation is indebted. An Englishman by race and lineage, he incarnated in his own person and character every best trait and attribute that have made the Anglo-Saxon name a glory to its children and a terror to its enemies throughout the world. But he was not so much an Englishman that, when the time came for him to be so, he was not even more an American; and in all that he was and did, a patriot so exalted, and a leader great and wise, that what men called him when he came here to be inaugurated as the first President of the United States the civilized world has not since then ceased to call him—the Father of his Country.

"We are here this morning to thank God for so great a gift to this people, to commemorate the incidents of which this day is the one hundredth anniversary, and to recognize the responsibilities which a century so eventful has laid upon us."

At the Sub-Treasury, to which the distinguished company adjourned after the completion of the services at St. Paul's, the ceremonies were opened with prayer by the Rev. R. S. Storrs, D. D., the venerable pastor of the Church of the Pilgrims, in Brooklyn. During the prayer President Harrison stood with uncovered head beside the clergyman, his hand resting on the old Bible on which Washington took the oath a century before. Then followed the reading of the Centennial poem, written by John Greenleaf Whittier, whose infirmities, consequent on his advanced age, prevented his being present to read it in person. As this poem deserves, not only on account of its occasion, but on account of its intrinsic beauty, to be treasured by every patriotic citizen, our readers will be glad to have it in full, so here it is:

THE VOW OF WASHINGTON.

The sword was sheathed; in April's sun
Lay green the fields by Freedom won;
And severed sections, weary of debates,
Joined hands at last, and were United States.

O City sitting by the Sea!
How proud the day that dawned on thee,
When the new era, long desired, began,
And, in its need, the hour had found the man!

One thought the cannon salvos spoke;
The resonant bell-tower's vibrant stroke,
The voiceful streets, the plaudit-echoing halls,
And prayer and hymn borne heavenward from St. Paul's!

How felt the land in every part,
The strong throb of a Nation's heart,
As its great leader gave, with reverent awe,
His pledge to Union, Liberty, and Law!

That pledge the heavens above him heard,
That vow the sleep of centuries stirred;
In world-wide wonder listening peoples bent
Their gaze on Freedom's great experiment.

Could it succeed? Of honor sold
And hopes deceived all history told.
Above the wrecks that strewed the mournful past,
Was the long dream of ages true at last?

Thank God! the people's choice was just,
The one man equal to his trust;
Wise beyond lore, and without weakness, good,
Calm in the strength of flawless rectitude.

His rule of justice, order, peace,
Made possible the world's release;
Taught prince and serf that power is but a trust
And rule, alone, which serves the ruled, is just;

That Freedom generous is, but strong
In hate of fraud and selfish wrong;
Pretense, that turns her holy truths to lies,
And lawless license masking in her guise.

Land of his love! with one glad voice
Let thy great sisterhood rejoice;
A century's suns o'er thee have risen and set,
And, God be praised, we are one Nation yet!

And still, we trust, the years to be Shall prove his hope was destiny,
Leaving our flag with all its added stars
Unrent by faction and unstained by wars!

Lo! where with patient toil he nursed
And trained the new-set plant at first,
The widening branches of a stately tree
Stretch from the sunrise to the sunset sea.

And in its broad and sheltering shade,
Sitting with none to make afraid,
Were we now silent, through each mighty limb,
The winds of heaven would sing the praise of him.

Our first and best!—his ashes lie
Beneath his own Virginian sky.
Forgive, forget, O true and just and brave,
The storm that swept above thy sacred grave!

For, ever in the awful strife
And dark hours of the Nation's life,
Through the fierce tumult pierced his warning word,
Their father's voice his erring children heard!

The change for which he prayed and sought
In that sharp agony was wrought;
No partial interest draws its alien line
'Twixt North and South, the cypress and the pine.

One people now, all doubt beyond,
His name shall be our Union-bond:
We lift our hands to heaven, and here and now
Take on our lips the old centennial vow.

For rule and trust must needs be ours;
Chooser and chosen both are powers
Equal in service as in rights; the claim
Of Duty rests on each and all the same.

Then let the sovereign millions, where
Our banner floats in sun and air,
From the warm palm-lands to Alaska's cold,
Repeat with us the pledge a century old!

The reading of the poem was followed by the eloquent oration of Mr Chauncey M. Depew, whose exhaustive survey of the progress of a century was listened to with rapt attention and sincere and deserved admiration. A speech was naturally expected from President Harrison, and he did not disappoint the expectant audience, but he discreetly limited his remarks to a few minutes. In the course of his speech he said:

We have come into the serious but always inspiring presence of Washington. He was the incarnation of duty, and he teaches us to-day his great lesson, that those who would associate their names with events that shall outlive a century can only do so by a high consecration to duty. Self-seeking has no public observance or anniversary. The captain who gives to the sea his cargo of rags, that he may give safety and deliverance to his imperilled fellow-men has won fame; he who only lands the cargo has earned wages. Washington seemed to come to the discharge of the duties of his high office impressed with a great sense of his familiarity with these new calls upon him, modestly doubtful of his own ability, but trusting implicitly in the sustaining helpfulness and grace of that God who rules the world, presides in the councils of nations and is able to supply every human defect."

The Procession

had been organized in the side streets during the exercises at the Treasury, and it entered the roadway as soon as the President's party set out for the reviewing stand. The spectators filled every inch of the sidewalk throughout the line of march, they filled the stands that had been erected for their accommodation, they crowded at every window and on all the roofs. While the boys climbed telegraph poles and lamp-posts and any other elevation on which they could balance themselves, regardless of risk to life and limb. Above the loftiest gatherings of people fluttered flags; by their sides at the windows fluttered flags, and even touching the heads of those who stood on sidewalks near the buildings more flags fluttered and flaunted. Unting was everywhere; streamers, festoons, medallion pictures of Washington, shields of the States, coats of arms of all nations, and merchant marine signal flags shone resplendent under the glorious rays of the sun.

Passing the Stand.

When the President's party was in its box the head of the parade appeared. It was just 1:10

P. M. when the first mounted policeman went past Harrison. Behind the following squad rode the Chief Marshal of the 52,000 men that tramped behind. This was Major-General Schofield, commanding General of the United States Army. He was resplendent in blue and gold, and his scintillating sword was waved most solemnly as he saluted Harrison. The President bowed and bowed his bared head. Behind the illustrious Schofield rode Colonel Cruger, chief of staff, and eighty-nine generals, colonels, majors and captains, the immediate staff of the Chief Marshal, and twenty-four more generals, colonels, and majors, the special representatives of twenty-four States.

Delaware, the first State of the Union, led the march of the Troops from the States.

Governor Briggs was at the head, and ten companies were in line. The Pennsylvania display nearly 8,000 men then came along. Governor Beaver, the hero with one leg lost on a battlefield, rode strapped to his horse, and got attention. The New Jersey contingent followed, and then came the men from Georgia. Following in the order named, came the delegations from Connecticut, Massachusetts, Maryland, South Carolina, New Hampshire, Virginia, New York, North Carolina, Rhode Island, Vermont, Kentucky, West Virginia, Ohio, Louisiana, Missouri, Michigan, Florida, and Texas.

It was approaching nightfall by the time the Army and Army of the Republic began to march at the reviewing stand. Many of the veterans came early in the morning from long distances, and had been on their feet all day, with little chance to get refreshment. Nevertheless they made a very creditable showing, and President Harrison paid them especial attention, raising his hat to every file that passed by, and scanning closely with his head uncovered the old tattered and shot-riddled battle flags that were lowered in passing salute.

The total number of men in line was 48,196 which with the mounted staffs and escorts of the Commander-in-Chief, and the Governors of States brought the number above 50,000. The line was eleven miles in length, and it was 7 o'clock before the last marchers had passed the reviewing stand. Such a military pageant had not been seen since the war, and all who witnessed it were impressed by the order, combined with enthusiasm, everywhere displayed. The glorious day closed with a general illumination and displays of fireworks.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

A Widow Comforted at the Wash-Tub.—A minister says: "One of the best compliments I ever got paid to me was by an old woman. 'Oh sir,' she said, 'after I lost my husband, and had to struggle for my children, I think I should have sunk under the burden if it had not been for the words of comfort and strength I received in church on Sunday. Right on through the whole week I would hear them ringing in my ears as I stooped over the wash-tub, supporting me under my difficulties, and showing me that Christ was the support of the widow, the father of the orphans.' I would rather have had that told me than receive the applause of thousands, or the wreath of eloquence."

Lending a Hand to a Fisherman.—The Rev. D. McGregor observes: "I was walking recently by the seashore one very rough, stormy day, when I saw a poor fisherman struggling with his boats and gear, trying to get them with all possible speed out of harm's way. Higher up on the shore was a group of strong young men, who stood calmly watching the fisherman, never thinking of helping him, but, on the contrary, laughing at his earnest efforts to secure his property. As I looked at the great strong fellows I was filled with indignation, and making my way down to the fisherman, I at once began to assist him, and shouted to the lazy fellows on the beach to lend a hand; and there we wrought for two hours until the whole of the man's boats and gear were in safety. What we need to-day is more of the fellow-man. When we show we can sympathize with every-day cares, then we shall obtain a better place in men's hearts, and better opportunities for doing our Master's work."

A Chinese Convert's Persecutions.—The Rev. Mr. George Smith, of Swatow, China, says: "There is living in Swatow to this day an old man who was converted more than thirty years ago by the German Mission laboring there, before it was obliged to retire on account of the disturbances. Poor man, he has come through much persecution. When his wife heard that he had forsaken the customs and gods of his fathers, she was much annoyed and chagrined. She pleaded with him to return to his old ways, threatening that if he did not she would destroy herself. In spite of the threat, which he knew had every probability of being fulfilled, as suicide is a common way in which Chinese women show their disappointment at the conduct of their husbands, he persevered in the strength of the Lord. The climax came. His wife hanged herself, and he had to mourn not only the loss of his wife, whom he dearly loved, but the knowledge that she had died a stranger to Christ, and by her own hand. This sad occurrence only served to incense his neighbors against him more than ever. But he stood firm through it all, trusting in Jesus."

Good Men on Their Knees.—Mr. Swanson, of China, says: "When I went out to China for the first time, my friend, Dr. Delaport saw me off, and as the ship was about to start, he said, 'When you get to the other side, you will see my old friend William Burns. He was the truest friend I ever had, but we were always disagreeing.' 'Indeed,' I replied, 'what about —?' 'Oh, the Calvinistic and the Arminian theories. But the queer thing about Burns was, though he was such a staunch Calvinist, whenever he got on his knees he was an Arminian!' I proceeded to China and there met William Burns. After being introduced to him, I remarked, 'My friend Dr. Delaport wished to be remembered to you.' 'Oh, yes,' was the hearty response, 'a fine man, but we could never agree on one point.' 'And what was that?' I asked, becoming interested. 'You see,' he continued, 'he was an Arminian, and I am a Calvinist, but the strange thing was, whenever he got on his knees he was a pure Calvinist!' These two men, holding such different doctrines, when on their knees before God, drew closer toward each other until there was really no radical difference. It is in the presence of God that Christians assimilate, and the nearer and nearer we get to Him, the less we see the various shades of difference that separate us. The more we approximate to Christ, the great Centre, the nearer we converge toward each other, till in Christ He, we, and they are all one."

An African Boy's Conquests for Christ.—The Rev. D. Doig Young, of Maion, South Africa, observes: "At one of my open-air meetings an African boy, who had been listening most attentively throughout the address, was very much impressed with what he had heard. I went to him and showed him how Christ had died for him, and how he was willing to save him. The little fellow was greatly comforted, and left professing to have accepted Christ. I did not see him again for three days, when he walked into the meeting, bringing with him his mother, to whom he had been speaking about Jesus. When I spoke to her she burst into tears, and asked me to show her Jesus, that she too might be saved. I read and talked to her about what her boy had already told her, and soon she also professed to accept Christ. They left that night, and in another three days they came back, bringing with them this time the father, who anxiously inquired what he had to do to get Jesus. That night he also accepted Christ, and they left, a happy and united family. That boy, whose heart Christ had touched, was instrumental in bringing within six days, both his father and mother to Christ."

Asleep on the Railway Line.—Mr. Willington observed: "I was preaching in the open air, aided by a Christian whom I had met for the first time. After our meeting he told me that at one time he was an engine-driver. 'Ah,' he said, 'well I remember an incident that happened to me when running on that line. It was a dark winter night, and I was driving a luggage train, thinking only how long it would be until I should reach my comfortable home, when my fireman surprised me by shouting out, 'There is something on the line.' Straining my eyes, and looking into the intense darkness, I discerned something on the line. Down went the brakes, the speed was retarded, slower and slower we went, and at last we stood still. Not a moment too soon. As I leaped from the engine I saw the form of a man lying right across the rails. I shook him, and strove to wake him, but with the drowsiness of drunkenness he resisted all my efforts, only growling as I dragged him off, 'Leave me alone and mind your own business.' I redoubled my efforts to arouse him to consciousness, and at last the poor fellow awoke. He glanced around him, and his eyes fell upon the engine. In an instant he realized the danger from which he had been snatched, and, quivering in every limb, he turned toward me, murmuring, 'Thank you, thank you, friend.' There are thousands of our fellow-creatures, their eyes blinded by the evil one, lulled to sleep by the potions of sin, lying right across the lines down which the chariot of God's law and justice will speedily thunder and crush all underneath it. Oh awake, thou that sleepest."

Prophetic Studies. A Report of the Address delivered at the Prophetic Conference at Chicago, with portraits of some of the speakers. It contains 216 pages. Fifty cents in paper covers, including postage. Address Manager, 63 Bible House, New York.

A POISONED DINNER.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached Last Sunday Morning, May 12, 1889.

"So they poured out for the men to eat. And it came to pass, as they were eating of the pottage, that they cried out, and said, O thou man of God, there is death in the pot. And they could not eat thereof." II Kings 4:40.

The Dinner for the Students—The Poisonous Ingredient—A Timely Warning—A Warning Needed in this Day—Immigrants Hunting Child-Eating Beasts—The Lurking-Places of Temptation—I. Undisciplined Homes—Scolding in the Home—The Roads from the Home Upward or Downward—A Forgetful Father at a Fire—A Wandering Son by His Mother's Bier—II. An Indolent Life—Pernicious Examples in the Cities—Four Ways of Getting Money—A Merchant's Clerk in Bad Company—III. The Dram Shop—The Revenue from the Traffic—A Drunkard's Wife—A Country Youth Killed in the City—Lorenzo de Medici's Dissolved Pearls—A More Costly Draught.

ELISHA had gone down to lecture to the students in the theological seminary at Gilgal. He found the students very hungry, as students are apt to be. It is very seldom the world makes large provision for those who give themselves to intellectual toil. In order that these students may be prepared to hear what Elisha says, he first feeds their hunger. He knew very well it is useless to talk, to preach, to lecture, with hungry men.

So Elisha, recognizing this common-sense principle, which every Christian ought to recognize, sends servants out to get food for these hungry students. They pick up some good, healthful herbs, but they happen to pick up also some coloquintida, a bitter, poisonous, deathful herb. They bring all these herbs, they put them into the boiling pot, they stir them up, and then a portion of this food is brought to the students and their professors. Seated at the table, one of the hungry students begins immediately to eat, and he happens to get hold of

Some of the Coloquintida.

He knew it by the taste. He cries out, "Poison! poison! O thou man of God, there is death in the pot!" Consternation is thrown over the whole group. What a fortunate thing it was that this student so early found the coloquintida in the mixture at the table! You will by reference find this story is precisely as I have mentioned it.

Well, in our day there are great caldrons of sin and death. Coloquintida of mighty temptation is pressed into it. Some dip it out and taste, and reject it and live. Others dip it out, taste it, keep on, and die. And it is the business of every minister of religion, and every man who wishes well to the human race, and who wants to keep the world back from its follies and its sufferings, to cry out, "Beware! poison, poison! Look out for this caldron! Stand back! Beware!"

Sin has done an awful work in our world. It has gone out through all the ages, it has mixed up a great caldron of trouble and suffering and poisoned in body, poisoned in mind, poisoned in soul. But blessed be God that the Gospel of Jesus Christ is the antidote, and where there was sin there shall be pardon, and where there was suffering there shall be comfort, and where there was death there shall be life.

The Whole Race is Poisoned—

Some time ago, you will remember, I persuaded you of the importance of being charitable in judgment of others. At the same time I said to you briefly what this morning I wish to say with great emphasis, that while we sympathize with the sinner we must denounce the sin, that while we pity the unfortunate we must be vehement against transgression. Sin is a jagged thing that needs to be roughly handled. You have no right to garland it with fine phrases or lustrous rhetoric. You cannot catch a buffalo with a silken lasso.

A group of immigrants settle in a wild region. The next day a wild beast comes down from the mountain and carries off one of the children.

The next day a wild beast comes down from the mountain and carries off another child. Forthwith all the neighbors band together, and they go out with torch in one hand and gun in the other to hunt these monsters down, to find their hiding place, to light up and ransack the caverns, and to destroy the invaders of their houses. So we want now not merely to talk about the sins and follies of the world, we want to go behind them, back of them. Down into the caverns where they hide we need to go with the torch of God's Word in one hand and the sword of God's eternal Spirit in the other to hunt out and slay these Iniquities in Their Hiding-Places.

Or, to come back to the figure suggested by my text, we want to find what are the caldrons of sin and death from which the iniquities of society are dipped out.

I. In the first place, I remark: that unhappy and undisciplined homes are the caldrons of great iniquity. Parents harsh and cruel on the one hand, or on the other hand loose in their government, wickedly loose in their government, are raising up a generation of vipers. A home where scolding and fretfulness are dominant is blood relation to the gallows and the penitentiary! Petulance is a serpent that crawls up into the family nursery sometimes and crushes everything. Why, there are parents who even make religion disgusting to their children. They scold them for not loving Christ. They have an exasperating way of doing their duty. The house is full of the war-whoop of contention, and from it husband and sons go out to die.

The Journey from the Home.

Oh, is there a Hagar leading away Ishmael into the desert to be smitten of the thirst and parched of the sand? In the solemn birth hour a voice fell to thee from the throne of God, saying: "Take this child and nurse it for me, and I will give thee thy wages." At even-time, when the angels of God hover over that home, do they hear the children lisping the name of Jesus? O traveller for eternity, your little ones gathered under your robes, are you leading them on the right road, or are you taking them out on the dangerous winding bridle-path, off which their inexperienced feet may slip, and up which comes the howling of the wolf and the sound of loosened ledge and tumbling avalanche? Blessed is the family altar at which the children kneel. Blessed is the cradle in which the Christian mother rocks the Christian child. Blessed is the song the little ones sing at nightfall when sleep is closing the eyes and loosening the hand from the toy on the pillow. Blessed is that mother whose every heart throb is a prayer for her children's welfare.

The world grows old, and the stars will cease to illuminate it, and the waters to refresh it, and the mountains to guard it, and the heavens to overspan it, and its long story of sin and shame and glory and triumph will soon turn to ashes; but influences that started in the early home roll on and roll up through all eternity—blooming in all the joy, waving in all the triumph, exulting in all the song, or shrinking back into all the darkness. Father, mother, which way are you leading your children?

A house took fire and the owner was very careful to get all his furniture out. He got all his books out, and he got all his pictures out, and he got all his valuable papers out, but he forgot to ask, until it was too late:

"Are My Children Safe?"

Oh, when the earth shall melt with fervent heat, and the mountains shall blaze, and the seas shall blaze, and the earth shall blaze, will your children be safe? Will your children be safe? Unhappy and undisciplined homes are the source of much of the wretchedness and sin of the world. I know there are exceptions to it sometimes. From a bright and beautiful Christian home a husband or a son will go out to die. Oh, how long you had that boy in your prayers! He does not know how many sleepless nights you have spent over him. He does not understand how many tears you have shed for his waywardness. Oh, it is hard, after you have toiled for a child, and given him every advantage and every kindness, to have him pay you back in ingratitude! As one Sabbath morning a father came to the foot of the pulpit as I stepped out of it, and said, "Oh my son, my son, my son!" There is many a young man proud of his mother, who would strike into the dust any man who would insult her, who is at this moment himself, by his evil doing and his bad habits, sharpening a dagger to plunge through that mother's heart. A telegram brought him from afar. He went bloated and scarred into the room and he stood by the lifeless form of his mother.

Her hair gray; it had turned gray in sorrow. Those eyes had wept floods of tears over his wandering. That still white hand had done him many a kindness and had written many a loving invitation and good counsel. He had broken her old heart. He came into the room and threw himself on the casket, and he sobbed outright: "Mother, mother!" but those lips that had kissed him in infancy and uttered so many kind words spake not; they were sealed. Rather than have such a memory come on my soul, I would prefer to have roll over on me the Alps and the Himalayas.

But while sometimes there are sons who turn out very badly coming from good homes, I want to tell you, for your encouragement, it is a great exception. Yet an unhappy and undisciplined home is the poisonous caldron from which a vast multitude drink their death.

II. I remark that a caldron of iniquity is An Indolent Life.

All the rail trains down the Hudson River yesterday, all the rail trains on the Pennsylvania route, all the trains on the Long Island road brought to these cities young men to begin commercial life. Some of them are here this morning, I doubt not. Do you know what one of your great temptations is going to be? It is the example of indolent people in our cities. They are in all our cities. They dress better than some who are industrious. They have access to all places of amusement—plenty of money, and yet idle. They hang around our great hotels—the Fifth Avenue, the Windsor, the Brunswick, the Stuyvesant, the Gilsey House—all our beautiful hotels; you find them around there any day—men who do nothing, never earn anything yet well dressed, having plenty. Why should they walk? Why should they work? Why drudge and toil in bank and shop and office, or on the scaffolding, or by the anvil, when these men get along so well and do not work?

Some of them hang around the City Halls of our great cities, toothpick in their mouth, waiting for some crumb to fall from the office-holder's table. Some of them hang around the City Hall for the city van bringing criminals from the station-houses. They stand there and gloat over it—really enjoy the disgrace and suffering of those poor creatures as they get out of the city van and go into the courts.

Where do they get their money? That is what you ask. That is what I ask. Only Four Ways of Getting Money—

only four: by inheritance, by earning it, by begging it, by stealing it; and there are a vast multitude among us who get their living not by inheritance, nor by earning it, nor by begging it. I do not like to take the responsibility of saying how they get it! Now, these men are a constant temptation. Why should I toil and wear myself out in the bank, or the office, or the store or the shop, or the factory? These men have nothing to do. They get along a great deal better. And that is the temptation under which a great many young men fall. They begin to consort with these men, these idlers, and they go down the same awful steep. The number of men in our cities who are trying to get their living by their wits and by sleight-of-hand is all the time increasing.

A New York merchant saw a young man, one of his clerks, in half disguise, going into a very low place of amusement. The merchant said

o himself: "I must look out for that clerk; he is going in bad company and going in bad places; I must look out for him." A few months passed on, and one morning the merchant entered his store, and this clerk of whom I have been speaking came up in assumed consternation and said: "Oh, sir, the store has been on fire; I have put out the fire, but there are a great many goods lost; we have had a great crowd of people coming and going." Then the merchant took the clerk by the collar and said: "I have had enough of this; you cannot deceive me; where are those goods you stole?" The young man instantly confessed his villainy.

Oh, the number of people in these great cities who are trying to get their living not honestly! And they are to the industrious young man, who cannot understand it. While these others have it so easy they have it so hard. Horatius of olden time was told that he could have just as much ground as he could plow around with a yoke of oxen in one day. He hooked up the oxen to the plow and he cut a very large circle and plowed until he came to the same point where he started, and all that property was his. But I have to tell you to-day that just so much financial, just so much moral, just so much spiritual, possession you will have as you compass with your own industries, and just so much as from the morning of your life to the evening of your life you can plow around with your own hard work. "Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise." One of the most awful calldons of death to-day is an indolent life. Thank God that you have to work.

A Mighty Temptation

III. Once more I remark: that

The Dram Shop

is a great caldron of iniquity in our time. Anaharsis said that the vine bore three grapes: the first was Pleasure, the next was Drunkenness, and the next Misery. Every saloon above ground or under ground is a fountain of iniquity. It may have a license and it may go along quite respectably for a while, but after a while the cover will fall off and the color of the iniquity will be displayed.

"Oh," says some one, "you ought to be easier on such a traffic when it pays such a large revenue to the Government, and helps support our schools and your great institutions of mercy." And then I think of what William E. Gladstone said—I think it was the first time he was Chancellor of the Exchequer—when men engaged in the ruinous traffic came to him and said their business ought to have more consideration from the fact that it paid such a large revenue to the English Government, Mr. Gladstone said: "Gentleman, don't worry yourselves about the revenue; give me thirty millions of other people, and we'll have revenue enough and a surplus."

We might in this country—this traffic perished—have less revenue, but we would have more happy homes, and we would have more peace, and we would have fewer people in the penitentiary, and there would be tens of thousands of men who are now

On the Road to Hell

who would start on the road to heaven. But the financial ruin is a very small part of it. This iniquity of which I speak takes everything that is sacred out of the family, everything that is holy in religion, everything that is infinite in the soul, and tramples it under foot. The marriage day has come. The twain are at the altar. Lights flash. Music sounds. Gay feet go up and down the drawing-room. Did ever a vessel launch on such a bright and beautiful sea? The scene changes. Dingy garret. No fire. On a broken chair a sorrowful wife. Last hope gone. Poor, forsaken, trodden under foot, she knows all the sorrow of being a drunkard's wife. "Oh," he says, "he was the kindest man that ever lived, he was so noble, he was so good! God never made a grander man than he was, but the drink did it, the drink did it!" Some day she will press her hands against her temples and cry: "Oh, my brain, my brain!" or she will go out on the abutment of the bridge some moonlight night and look down on the glassy surface, and wonder if under that glassy surface there is not some rest for a broken heart.

A young man, through the intercession of metropolitan friends, gets a place in a bank or store. He is going to leave his country home. That morning they are up early in the old homestead. The trunk is on the wagon. Mother says: "My son, I put a Bible in the trunk; I hope you will read it often." She wipes the tears away with her apron. "Oh," he says, "come, don't you be worried; I know how to take care of myself. Don't be worried about me." The father says: "My son, be a good boy and write home often; your mother will be anxious to hear from you." Crack! goes the whip, and over the hills goes the wagon. Five years have passed on, and has done its work for that young man. There is a hearse coming up in front of the old homestead. The young men of the neighborhood who have stayed on the farm come in and say: "Is it possible? Why, he doesn't look natural, does he? Is that the fair brow we used to know? Is that the healthy cheek we used to know? It can't be possible that is him!" The parents stand looking at the gash on the forehead from which the life oozed out, and they lift their hands and say: "O my son Absalom, my son, my son Absalom! would God I had died for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son!"

A Dissipated Life

Lorenzo de Medici was very sick, and some of his superstitious friends thought if they could dissolve a certain number of pearls in a cup, and then he would drink them, it would cure him of the disease. So they went around and they gathered up all the beautiful pearls they could find, and they dissolved them in a cup, and the sick man drank them. Oh, it was an expensive draught. But I tell you of a more expensive draught than that. Drunkenness puts into its cup the pearl of physical health, the pearl of domestic happiness, the pearl of respectability, the pearl of Christian hope, the pearl of an everlasting heaven, and presses it to the lips.

I tell you the dram shop is

The Gate of Hell.

The trouble is they do not put up the right kind of a sign. They have a great many different kinds of signs now on places where strong drink is sold. One is called the "restaurant," and another is called the "saloon," and another is called the "hotel," and another is called the "wine cellar," and another is called the "sample room." What a name to give one of those places! A "sample room!" I saw a man on the steps of one of those "sample rooms" the other day, dead drunk. I said to myself: "I suppose that is a sample!" I tell you it is the gate of hell.

"Oh," says some man, "I am kind, I am indulgent to my family, I am right in many respects, I am very generous, and I have too grand and generous a moral nature to be overthrown in that way." Let me say that the persons who are in the most peril have the largest hearts, the best education, the brightest prospects. This sin chooses the fattest lambs for its sacrifice. The brightest garlands are by this carbuncled hand of drunkenness torn off the brow of the poet and the orator. Charles Lamb, answer! Thomas Hood, answer! Sheridan, the English orator, answer! Edgar A. Poe, answer! Junius Brutus Booth, answer!

Oh, come and look over into it while I draw off the cover—hang over it and look down into it, and see the seething, boiling, loathsome, smoking, agonizing, blaspheming hell of the drunkard. Young man,

Be Master of Your Appetites and passions There are hundreds—might I not say thousands?—of young men in this house this morning—young men of fair prospects. Put your trust in the Lord God, and all is well. But you will be tempted. Perhaps you may this moment be addressed on the first Sabbath of your coming to the great city, and I give you this brotherly counsel. I speak not in a perfunctory way. I speak as an older brother talks to a younger brother. I put my hand on your shoulder this day and commend you to Jesus Christ, who Himself was a young man, and died while yet a young man, and has sympathy for all young men. Oh be master, by the grace of God, of your appetites and passions!

I close with a peroration. Ministers and speakers are very apt to close with a peroration, and they generally roll up some grand imagery to express what they have to say. I close with a peroration mightier than was ever uttered by mere human lips. Two quotations. The first is this: "Who hath woe? who hath babbling? who hath wounds without cause? They that tarry long at the wine, they that go to seek mixed wine. Look not upon the wine when it is red, when it moveth itself aright in the cup, for at the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder." This is the other quotation. Make up your mind as to which is the more impressive. I think the last is the mightier: "Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth, and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk thou in the sight of thine own eyes; but know thou that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment."

[The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Dr. Talmage and Mr. Spurgeon especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

IN THE INDIAN ZENANAS.

THE difficulties in the way of reaching the women of India are vividly suggested by a letter that Miss Esther Patton sends to The Church. She says: "In Sakharpe we were invited to the home of one of Mr. Seiler's pupils, but his old father would only let us see the daughters-in-law. They came out when they were called like obedient girls, and let us look at them, and then went back out of sight. The men said it was not the custom for their women to speak before men. We asked them if we might not go to them, but they answered that they had work to do. As we came away, we found two widows in an adjoining house; and while Mrs. Seiler was talking to them, the women from the first house came and listened, and then the old man came out and argued awhile. He said that the Hindus really believe in our God, only we call Him by another name. He seemed to know a good deal about Christ's life on earth and his death, but felt no need of a Saviour.

The next day we were invited to go and take the children. Only the young man was there, and I asked him if he would not go away so that his wife and sisters-in-law could come out and talk to us. He said they had household duties to attend to, and had not time. We were coming away completely disheartened, when the old mother came forward and said, "Are you going away without singing or talking to us?" We told her we wanted to talk, but her son would not let us, and we went back gladly. When we were seated, he said, "You may sing, but do not talk." After the hymn, I talked to them, and in a little while the young man said, "Enough! enough!" But the women wanted more, and so we sang another hymn; and when Mrs. Seiler began to explain it, he said, "They understand well enough; say no more." But Mrs. Seiler said, "Oh yes, let me explain this hymn; I am going to, anyway." And she did, though the young man was exceedingly uneasy. When we were leaving, the women invited us to come again when we stop in Sakharpe.

Volume XI., of the Christian Herald, containing the numbers for 1888, with complete index, bound in cloth, may be had from this office; price, $2.50, including postage. A few volumes of 1884, 1885, and 1887 are also for sale. We can also furnish complete volumes for 1884, 1885, and 1888, unbound, price $1.50, including postage.

A DEDICATION ABJURED.

In a letter to the Missionary Herald the Rev. Henry Fairbank, who is laboring in India, thus refers to a boy in one of the schools of the Mission: "One of the three boys from Dedgaw had been offered up in his childhood to a god. The reason was that none of the boys who had been born in that family previously had lived. So the father vowed that if he had another son he would offer him to the service of the god. Before that boy became old enough to understand, and had learned enough in the school to show him the folly of Hinduism, he used to go around in the village begging, by reason of his being consecrated to the service of a god. But after being for some time in school he gave up all of that, and without doubt he will shortly join the church. The year 1889 will show a great increase in church membership. Already forty-one persons have been added to the church, and there are many inquirers that will come out during the remainder of the year. While we were there five men and six women, besides several children, were baptized. They came and gave me their gods, and seemed very hearty in their acceptance of Christ."

A REJECTED PRODIGAL.

AN incident connected with Miss Ada Leigh's homes in Paris, which were described in this journal last week, is told by one of the managers. It shows that when the love of Jesus fills the heart, it produces a love for suffering humanity which survives, when natural affection withers.

One day, an English girl was found dying of consumption in an attic in the Cité Pegalle. She was immediately removed to the Home, where her condition might be brightened by some tokens of Christian sympathy and love. She had left her parental home eleven years before through a family quarrel, and had come to Paris as a governess. Feeling her Heavenly Father's forgiveness so sweet, she longed to be at peace with those in her earthly home, and to die amongst them. Her yearning was so intense that, although the cords of her life were so fragile it was feared they might snap in the effort, it was not felt right to refuse her request. She was taken to London, where a relation promised to receive her, but told her, a few hours after her arrival, that she could not die there, and sent her alone, propped up with pillows, to her father, a man holding a respectable position. He said to her and the lady who followed to make inquiries after her, that "he could not recognize her in her destitute condition, and she could not come there." The girl returned to her cab, to seek mercy from an old school friend. Neither could she help. Here the lady who brought her from Paris met her. The yearning to lay her head in peace among those who had once loved her was her last earthly clinging, and it had failed her. "Only Jesus is left to me now," she sobbed. Truly, none else cared to own her. Very weary, she was taken to Guy's Hospital, where she soon passed beyond the reach of the need of man's forgiveness, and, with "only Jesus," entered where sin and want are no more.

A MILLIONAIRE'S MOTIVE.

AN admission made by a millionaire to Dr. George F. Pentecost shows how a man may become dominated by one supreme desire until he becomes its slave. Dr. Pentecost says: "On one occasion I casually met a young man who had begun life with me. As I spoke to him about Divine things he interrupted me by saying, 'Now, there is no use in preaching to me; you seem to think that I care for nothing but wealth. I can assure you that I do not care for money.' 'Indeed,' I said, in surprise; 'then what do you care about?' He answered: 'When I started life in a certain office, I went very frequently to the Exchange. The rich men there seemed to think that a boy was of no account, and I was hustled here and there, and from one corner into another. I did not at all like that sort of thing, and resolved one day to hustle them about, and I knew the only way to do so was to get money, for money was power.' He had bent his whole energy towards money-making for this purpose, and at that period, fifteen years from the time he was an office-boy, he was reputed to be worth a million of dollars. 'No,' he continued, 'I do not care for money; but it does me good every time I walk into the Exchange and see these very men who used to hustle me off the street to get me out of their way, take off their hats to me!' Love of power was that man's chief idol, and it kept him from God. He struggled and strove with all his might toward it; he obtained power, and in his turn he became powerful, but found that, save the gratifying of a whim, it did him no good, but incalculable evil in keeping him from God, who, if he had sought, would have satisfied him, and yet drawn him forward to still greater enjoyment which would never have cloyed upon him."

FRUIT AFTER THIRTY YEARS.

AN incident related by Mr. F. S. Arnot, whose portrait and life appeared in this journal on April 10, shows how efforts may be blessed of God, which, when they are made, seem to be fruitless. He says: "About thirty years ago, a number of missionaries who had been laboring in the Zambesi district of Africa, resolved to carry the gospel to the upper reaches of that great river. They set out, but everything seemed against them. The chief was hostile, and the country was very unhealthy, causing the death of two of their party. Very much dispirited the only surviving two returned, thinking they had done no good. But after the lapse of thirty years, when I was passing through that same tract of country, I was surprised by an aged woman coming up to me and saying, 'Tell me about Jesus, the King of Glory.' I regarded her with astonishment, for I did not think that anyone within hundreds of miles of me knew anything about that dear name. Then I thought that some one had told her to ask that question of the white stranger; but I discovered that her inquiry came from the depths of her heart. Thirty years before she had heard the gospel preached, but had not realized it in its fullness, and during all these years her hungry soul had been yearning for another draught of the living water. Taking the New Testament from my pocket, I began to read to her, and I could not have wished a more interested listener. Again and again she came to me to hear more of Jesus, and soon she confessed herself a Christian. She became a most zealous worker, and spoke to all she met about Jesus. Her zeal got her into trouble. She brought one of the king's wives to hear me, and for that crime was made a slave, and banished from the country; and bravely she suffered persecution for righteousness' sake."

A PERSECUTED CHINAMAN.

A JOURNEY of thirty miles was undertaken by a Chinaman in the district of Yan King to obtain Christian instruction. Mr. Cooper, one of the China Inland missionaries, thus describes the result: The man presented himself at the door of a Christian house and said, "Is there any one here that can tell me about this Jesus religion—this Jesus doctrine?" They said, "Yes, come in;" and he went in. He said, "I have come from a place thirty miles distant because I have received a Book which tells me that my idols are false and useless, and I want to know more about this." And these dear Christian friends took him in. They had never seen him before. They kept him for a whole week in their house, teaching and instructing him, and the man became thoroughly changed. He determined to be a follower of Christ. He said: "I will go home now, and be a follower of this Saviour, and have done with idolatry." He bought a copy of the New Testament and a hymn-book, and went back to his house. The first thing he did there was to destroy his idols and his idolatrous scroll; he took away the candlesticks and all the incense vases, and his ancestral tablet he split to pieces, and cast on one side. He became a follower of the Lord Jesus Christ. I happened to be there shortly afterwards, and I found his idol amongst some rubbish. It was one of the things which were worshipped by that man for years. He cast it away, and now he is worshipping the living and true God. A day or two later one of his nephews came and saw the bare place on the wall. He said, "Uncle, where are your idols gone?" The man replied, "I have destroyed them. They are all false, and of no use whatever." The little boy became frightened, and ran away to his home, and said, "Uncle has gone mad. He has destroyed his idols." I cannot tell you all that that man had to endure. His neighbors beat him most unmercifully, and almost killed him. They threatened to take from him his house and land, and they said, "If you do not give up this Jesus we will kill you." He replied, "You can take my house, you can take my land, you can take my life, if you will, but I will never give up Jesus! I will never give up Jesus!"

THE CONVERSION OF BEAR'S TOOTH.

AN Indian of the Gros-Ventre tribe, who died recently, had an affecting history, which is related in a communication to the American Missionary by the Rev. C. L. Hall, of Fort Berthold, Dakota, from which the following facts are taken: Dahpitsishesh, or Bear's Tooth, first presented himself at the day school at Berthold in the fall of 1879. He was a curious and not very attractive figure. He wore his long hair braided behind, and banded and plastered with clay in front so that it stood upright, and he dressed in blanket, breech-clout, leggings, and moccasins, and the lower joints of several of his fingers were cut off in accordance with the Indian custom of mutilating themselves at the burial of a friend. His first appearance to a new teacher who came the following spring caused her no little trepidation, but she soon learned to prize him as her best pupil. He attended the day school regularly all the next winter, showed much intelligence, and rendered great assistance to the missionary in translating parts of the Bible into the Gros-Ventre language.

"From that time on," says Mr. Hall, "we hoped he would take a decided stand for Christ. As yet, none among his people had been converted. A few passages of the Bible and a few words of song had been given to the Gros-Ventres in their own tongue, and every Sabbath there were attentive Indian listeners, but would there ever be a Gros-Ventre convert?" Bear's Tooth manifested a deep interest in the Word, and would sit for hours reading it with a lady teacher, who has since gone to her reward and whose unceasing prayer it was that he might be brought to Christ. He continued to come in spite of the jeers and persecutions of his people; yet he would take no stand for Christ. After a time he married and removed to a claim forty miles away from our station, and we feared that he was lost to us. But when he came for his government rations, he would call and ask questions which showed that he was still concerned about his soul.

One day, in 1887, eight years after he first came to the school, he called, and sitting with the missionary in his garden, he said: "Good Voice, now I can; I will be faithful to my own wife, I will keep Sunday, I will pray, and avoid the dances and other heathen customs; when you think best I will come down and be received into the Church." "That was a glad moment," says Mr. Hall. "To clasp the hand of the first Gros-Ventre brother in Christ was indeed a delight. I said, 'Bring your wife and friends with you to Christ.' He went home, but soon returned, saying sorrowfully: 'My wife and my friends are none of them willing. If I join I think it must be alone.' 'Well,' I said, 'let it be so,' and it was. His clothes were second-hand and old, and he had no natural attractiveness of appearance, but in a simple, manly, determined way he made his confession, and was baptized before an audience of Indians in the little mission chapel (July, 1887), a poor Indian, but another Daniel standing alone."

Bear's Tooth was faithful to his profession, and with the missionary's help went among his neighbors reading and teaching. His health must have broken down suddenly, for the first intimation Mr. Hall received of anything being wrong was that he was dead. He went to his place and found that Bear's Tooth had died in faith, with his Bible in his hand, and his last words were, "I am going above: it is only a short way." There are other converts now, and among them the wife of Bear's Tooth, who was brought in through the influence of her husband's consistent life.

THE LEAVEN, THE TARES, AND THE SEED.

By a London Preacher.

Erroneous Reading of the Parables—The Tares Evil Men—Leaven Always a Type of Evil—Anti-Christian Craft—Semblance to Truth—The Work Left to the Woman—The Terrible Apostasy—The World Purchased by Christ—For the Sake of the Treasure.

It depends altogether on what view we take of the nature of things at present, and what glasses we read the Word with, whether or not we understand the meaning of the seven parables in the thirteenth chapter of Matthew's gospel. Do we read them simply as Christ spoke them? Or do we come, as many people do, with a prejudice and preconception? If so, our judgment of truth and error will be biased by a prejudgment on different grounds. "Oh, yes, very beautiful," some have said; "here is the spread of Christianity over the whole world, for the field is the world. True, many do not receive it, but the good ground does; and see how it spreads and prevails! Behold how fruitful—thirty and sixty and a hundredfold."

But the second parable ought to give such thinkers pause. There Jesus tells

How the Enemy Comes

and sows tares, which spring up; endangering the fruitfulness of the wheat, robbing it of its sunshine from above and moisture from beneath, so that its very continuance is imperilled. And we know, from Christ's own explanation, that the devil introduces, not bad principles merely, but bad men into the Church of Christ. Even in early days such men, introduced by the devil, "crept in unawares, who were before of old ordained to condemnation, ungodly men, turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and denying the only Lord God and our Lord Jesus Christ." Men who, for their own purpose, are careless of truth and righteousness. These men are roots of mischief, preparing for the evil.

Then there is the little grain of seed (verse 31), the mustard seed, proverbially the least of all seeds. We may, and do, find smaller seeds, but Jesus was speaking of facts intelligible to the people of that day, and in that land. Whatever we know, in our wider botanical knowledge, He spoke the language they knew and understood. This little seed grew and became a great tree, in which the birds of the air could find shelter. Aha! men say, thinking of the professing Christian Church, behold how Christianity has spread and covered the earth! Is not the parable fulfilled? Yes, but how? Do not forget what Jesus interprets the birds of the air to be—"the wicked one," the emissaries of Satan. That is the meaning in the first parable, it must be the same here. Many imagine that because Christianity has spread out so widely all is well. No, no, all is not well, as this parable clearly teaches. Next there is the woman with

The Leaven.

Here, then, say some, we have the spread of the influence of Christianity; the truth making the whole world like itself. It has not done so yet, and it is not likely or promising to do so. The gospel in the present dispensation will not Christianize the whole world, nor has leaven in scripture any such meaning as that of a good influence working secretly. Throughout Scripture it is ever used as the emblem of corruption. That it is so might be clear to all from the closing parable, where, even at the end, bad fish as well as good are taken in the drag net. Whatever leaven may represent, it does not represent Christian truth.

I well remember a very pungent article in a magazine some years ago which began, "Peace on earth, good will to men," and went on to sneer at the failure of Christianity. There is, we dare not deny, some ground for such criticism if the world was ever assured to be Christianized by good principles working secretly. Surely this ought to give pause to some who take that view. As a very thoughtful writer has said, "The secret scepticism of the eighteenth century has become the open Atheism of the nineteenth." Is it not true? How can you account for it if you expect Christianity to convert the world?

I was reading not many hours ago a German writer whose words seem almost prophetic. He says, "Herein consists the peculiar danger of that it comes in a Christian garb, under a Christian name; that it pretends to be a support to Christianity, such as the advancement of the age renders necessary; that it pretends to be the rational, spiritual mode of viewing Christianity, and, in short, to be Christianity purified and perfected. . . . The false prophet asserts that the forms and doctrines of Christianity are of no importance, that everything depends on the fundamental ideas. Under which specious pretext, however, he gets rid of everything in Christianity, which is from above and against this world, the supernatural facts of redemption, the Divine radical beginnings of life; in short, he gets rid of Christ, the Divine essence of Christianity."

Anti-Christian Wisdom,

That volume was published some twenty years ago, yet the writer seems to look on the present day. We have men within the Church who cut the very heart out of Scripture, who profess to be learned, yet acknowledge not the most fundamental facts of our faith, who deny the Lord that bought them, refuse to accept His sacrifice as that of the sinner's substitute, who profess to have learned of His Spirit, yet claim a human right to acceptance with God, putting away all thought of sin, yet claiming all the while to be presenting higher and nobler views of truth. The fact is, as our great adversary well knows, without a guise of truth apostasy won't succeed. Hence the

Studied Likeness to Truth

of much that is most deadly in modern teaching; and thus many are deluded into accepting such teaching and teachers as exponents of advanced conceptions of God. Is there not a terrible significance in the fact that he by whom the last great opponent of God succeeds in deceiving men is represented in the Revelation as a false prophet? That is, he pretends to be come for instruction, yet all the time he has come forth from the pit. No, I am afraid, the more we look at facts around us, as well as at the teaching of Scripture, the more will we be convinced this interpretation of leaven will not answer.

I would have you mark that four of the parables were spoken to the crowd, and three were spoken to the disciples in private. The first parable has primarily to do with the beginning of the present dispensation, although, at the same time, it indicates the whole character of the age from spring-time to harvest. The second is wider, going further onward. Good seed has been sown, but the enemy comes by night with his tares. Here we have the devil introducing evil men, not evil principles, as many commentators have interpreted it. Our Lord says expressly, "The tares are the children of the wicked one," who, being mingled by the devil among the children of the kingdom, or, in other words, introduced into the professing Church, are suffered to remain there until the harvest day.

Here notice the use of the phrase, "mystery of the kingdom." "The kingdom of heaven," the theme of the book of Matthew, is the rule of God, as from heaven. The mystery of the kingdom is connected with the course of this present dispensation, the progress of this professing kingdom, this Christendom which claims to be the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ. Into this kingdom are introduced the children of the devil, who soon produce results worthy of him who brought them in. Let evil men and seducers get in, and all confusion and corruption will follow, and all did follow in the early Church, and has continued to the present time. It is not a question of speculation as to the meaning of a word, but an historical fact.

But now observe that when we come to the fourth parable, that of the leaven, the enemy who sowed the tares disappears. Why so? In the first and third parables the devil is introduced, "as the birds of the air," and in the second as "sowing tares," but in the fourth there is no mention of him. Why? Because there is no need for him.

The Woman Does His Work, and does it well. How does she do it? By taking leaven, which in Scripture is always and everywhere emblematic of evil, and mingling it with the wholesome meal. She takes evil principles and mingles them with good, till the evil begins to ferment and corrupt, and the whole is leavened. What is this but just the history of the Church of Rome, beginning with the fourth and fifth centuries? The evil was even introduced much earlier in Pagan principles and Judaical principles brought in by false brethren and permitted to remain, spreading slowly among the pure meal, the truth of God, till the whole was leavened; i. e., the truth of God was perverted and corrupted in the mediæval Church. Thus the Spirit of God represents leaven to be evil, and evil only; and when we turn to the pages of history we read the same fact there, and cannot deny that evil, false principles, and human philosophies, from Paganism and Judaism, mingled with the truth of God until the whole was perverted.

That is the end, so far as the outward body of the professing Church is concerned, but not the end in God's sight. We know, from II Thess. 2, and other Scriptures which deal with

The Terrible Apostasy

of the last days, that some great head of evil, the Man of Sin, the Antichrist, is yet to arise, and will have such a full and final manifestation that nothing remains but destruction from the presence of the Lord and at the brightness of His coming. If we read rightly the signs of the times around us, do we not behold springing up in Christendom that terrible apostasy which is to lead up to such a solemn close?

But meanwhile there are within the Church (for these parables are spoken to the disciples only) two things represented in the fifth and sixth parables by different symbols, but probably indicating the same thing at different times.

The kingdom of heaven is like unto treasure hid in a field. Jesus is the Husbandman, and for the sake of those whom He loves and has chosen He buys the field. The field is the world, for which Jesus gives Himself for love of the few hidden therein. That He might bring out His own hidden and dear ones into separate-ness He buys the field, and with it the treasures therein discovered.

But next comes the parable of the pearl, in which the Church of Christ, in its unity, beauty, rarity, and peculiarity, is shown as prized by Him who loves it, and gives Himself and all that He possesses for it, that it may become altogether His own. Thus in the sight of God His Church is a treasure and a pearl; while in the sight of men the professing Church is as a great tree sprung from a very small seed.

An Invaluable Work on Prophecy by G. H.

Pember, M. A., entitled "The Great Prophecies concerning the Jews the Gentiles, and the Church of God," is for sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York. It is written in a most popular and eloquent style, and describes the impending fulfilment of Revelation and Daniel, and is illustrated by a colored chart. 458 pages. Price, including postage, $1.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICE, 71 AND 73 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 3 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

The Business Office of the Christian Herald is now 71 and 73 Bible House. Correspondents will please note this change of address.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Two Important Appointments were Made by the President on May 7. They were to fill the two vacancies in the Civil Service Commission which have so long existed. The law required that one place should be given to a Republican, and the other to a Democrat. In both cases the President made an excellent choice. The Republican commissioner is Mr. Theodore Roosevelt, of New York, and the Democratic is Mr. Hugh S. Thompson, of South Carolina. Both men are consistent reformers, and strong believers in the value of the existing law. Mr. Roosevelt is highly respected among his party in New York, and has written and spoken exhaustively on the subject of the system he is now called to administer. Mr. Thompson has been Governor of his State and Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. President Cleveland nominated him for the same seat on the commission, but the Senate abstained from confirming the nomination. The new members of the commission, with Mr. Lyman, who is retained for the present, will compose a board that will command the confidence of the public.

The Scandal at Albany, N. Y., in Connection with the ceiling of the Capitol appears to have been of the common New York type. The committee appointed to investigate it, reported last week, and, though the report was softened in tone from its first draft, it does not conceal some very disgraceful facts. The committee find that the contractors and the Superintendent of Public Buildings conspired to procure a contract for the work at a price greatly in excess of its value. The work was worth $165,000, while $231,063 has already been paid, and the contractors claim $39,086 as still due them. The committee also charges the architect with being in the conspiracy. All the money has been traced except $26,000, and the destination of that amount, which was not disbursed in legitimate expenditure, is not much of a mystery to persons familiar with Albany methods. The committee call the attention of the Attorney-General to the facts disclosed and recommend him to lay the evidence before the Grand jury and procure indictments, and also to proceed against the bondsmen of the contractors for the recovery of the money of which the State has been defrauded. It is a significant and suggestive fact that up to the close of last week Governor Hill had not removed the Superintendent of Public Buildings from office.

A Practical Suggestion for the Reform of our divorce laws comes from the Rev. Samuel Dike, Corresponding Secretary of the National Divorce Reform League. It has long been urged that Congress should acquire power to deal with the question so as to secure a uniform law for the whole country. Under the existing system, divorces are granted in some States for causes which the laws of other States do not recognize. The result has been that persons seeking divorce go to the States where the divorce laws are most lax and acquire residence there for the mere purpose of bringing the suit. In some cases this has been done without the knowledge of the other party to the suit. Mr. Dike appears to doubt whether legislation by Congress might not make matters worse by passing a law making divorce more easy than it now is in many States. He suggests that before power is given to Congress to legislate in the matter for States, it should show its capacity for dealing with it in the Territories where it has already power to act. He points out that no State needs reform so badly as do some of the Territories and the District of Columbia. If a really good and statesman-like law were enacted in those cases, the Legislatures of the various States might adopt it voluntarily, and the reform would thus be effected without enlarging the powers of Congress.

An Attempt to appropriate Niagara Falls by a private corporation is being made in the New York Legislature. It is proposed to construct cofferdams above the fall so as to interrupt and turn aside the flow of water, and then proceed to excavate below and set up machinery for the purpose of generating "electricity and other power." A bill conferring this power has been favorably reported in the Senate and Assembly, and there is no ground in the character of the Legislature for hoping that it will not pass. As the State has expended about a million and a half of dollars to acquire the lands constituting the reservation at Niagara, and has specifically declared that "they shall forever be reserved by the State for the purpose of restoring the scenery of the Falls of Niagara to and preserving it in its natural condition," and shall be forever kept open and free of access without fee or charge, the bill now reported cannot be passed without a breach of faith.

An Elaborate Defence of the Spoils System appeared in a New York journal last week over the signature of Thomas C. Platt, who for a short time was a United States Senator. Mr. Platt says, "It may be seriously questioned whether the distribution of public offices carries with it any considerable element of political power." That is true. There is no doubt such a question might be raised, as any other silly question might, but no one, least of all Mr. Platt, would have any difficulty in answering it. He knows perfectly well that the system of reform inaugurated by the present law curtails materially the power of the political bosses to reward workers with the public offices, and the knowledge in some measure explains his attack on the law. The public should not be deceived about the law. It has operated beneficially. There is no better proof of the fact than the reports of the heads of departments, which are uniformly in its favor. It has secured, as they testify, efficient service and an intelligent set of employees, which is what is most needed. The people are aware that it does not suit politicians of the Platt type, who are to be found in the Democratic as well as in the Republican party, but it may be well for the nation that they should not be suited. Their complaints should not be heeded, and the Government should insist on appointing and retaining in office the men who are best able to perform the duties of office, without regard to the extent of the service they render in their respective States to their local patrons.

The Death of Father Damien, of Leprosy, is reported. He is the devoted priest who, sixteen years ago, went to Hawaii, and voluntarily took up his abode in the leper colony at Kalawao that he might minister to the wants of the sufferers, and, if possible, reclaim them from the drunkenness and vice to which they were addicted. He was warned that if he went he would not be allowed to leave the island, as he would inevitably contract the disease. This did not deter him, and he has since then lived on the island. The white residents of Honolulu, chiefly Protestants, were so impressed with his heroic self-sacrifice that they subscribed a fund to buy lumber with which to erect a hut for him, and about $120 to purchase other necessities. He adopted such precautions as he could to avoid taking the disease, though he knew that, sooner or later, he would fall a victim. No symptoms appeared until four years ago, when he wrote to a friend that he had detected the fatal microbes in one of his legs. He died on April 10 at the age of forty-nine. There are now about fifteen hundred lepers on the island. During Father Damien's residence on the island he had attended over two thousand deathbeds.

The Paris Exposition was Formally Opened by the President of the French Republic on May 6. The ceremony was interesting from the fact that the representatives of foreign courts were conspicuous by their absence. The United States alone officially participated in the inauguration. The European royalties were averse to officially recognize a pageant avowedly organized to commemorate the centennial of the revolution of 1789. The ceremony, however, was not spoiled by their absence. A more directly commemorative exercise took place, in accordance with French irreligious custom, on the previous day, when the President went to Versailles and dedicated a tablet affixed to the walls of the building in which the States General assembled one hundred years ago. A poor crazy man caused some excitement on the occasion by firing a pistol at him. The pistol contained only blank cartridges, and as the man who fired it was evidently insane the agitation of the people was soon calmed. The President is not an orator, but he made a simple appropriate speech of a hopeful tone. At the Exposition on Monday he made a speech of similar tenor. There was a marked absence of enthusiastic feeling on the part of the people due probably to the unpopularity of the Government, produced by the prosecution of General Boulanger. After the inaugural ceremony the President made a tour of the departments. He congratulated the United States Commissioner on the excellence of the exhibits.

The Parnell Commission, on Resuming its sessions on May 7, listened to a statement from Mr. Parnell, who asked permission to correct that part of his evidence given on May 3 in relation to the statement made by him in the House of Commons concerning the non-existence of secret societies in Ireland. Upon referring to the authorized reports of the proceedings of the House of Commons, he found that his remarks, which had been quoted by Attorney-General Webster, referred particularly to Ribbonism, and not to secret conspiracies generally. His remarks, therefore, were a fairly accurate statement of the facts, as Ribbonism at that time practically did not exist in Ireland. It was, however, too late to remove the impression which his remarks had produced. He will probably be often taunted with his confession that he meant to deceive the House. Archbishop Walsh, who followed Mr. Parnell as a witness, testified that facts that had come to his knowledge proved that the League tended to diminish crime. There had been a gradual decadence in the secret societies in Ireland since 1866.

The Conference on Samoan Affairs in Berlin is said to be progressing favorably, though its debates are kept secret. The Berlin correspondent of the New York Herald however cables a statement of the situation which he says was imparted to him on excellent authority, and which has the merit of probability. He declares that if the United States will purchase the plantations owned by the German Company, or if the Samoans themselves will purchase these plantations, payment being guaranteed by the United States, Germany will not make the slightest opposition to the installation of Malietoa or some one of the minor chiefs not hitherto named. They also probably urged the punishment of Mataafa, say, by imprisonment for a time on board a German man-of-war, or on an island under the German flag. They may waive this condition in consideration of a round sum paid to the widows and orphans or the nearest relations of the Germans slain on the island. The third condition, equally acceptable to each of the three Powers, is that the three guarantee the neutrality of Samoa.

Contributions to the Fund for Supplying Colored ministers in the South with this journal have been received since our last acknowledgment to the amount of $27. They are: from Carleton Place, Ont., Can., 50 cents; a friend, 50 cents; Danbury, Conn., $5; Warner, Ill., $9; Belleville, Mo., $1; Kansasville, Wis., $10; Heislerville, N. J., $1. For this amount we add to our list the names of twenty-seven of the seventy ministers who are prayerfully waiting. All of them had the paper last year, and are earnestly desiring its continuance. It will give us great pleasure to send it to all the others, as well as to many new applicants whose claims are weighty, if we are enabled to do so by Christians who realize our responsibilities to the colored race, and understand how helpful this journal is to their recognized teachers.

A Noble and Interesting Experiment is to be made this fall in New York. A house has been secured in one of the most squalid tenement districts of the city, and by next October, if all the arrangements can be perfected, a colony of girls from Vassar, Wellesley, and Smith colleges will take up their abode there. Miss Jeanette Gurney Fine, who has devoted her life to the work of helping the poor, will preside over the institution, and her helpers will come to her for not less a period than three months at a time. They believe that by living among the poor creatures who exist in those wretched streets, they will learn their needs and their troubles, and by sympathy, kindness, and the force of example, help them to better ways of life. Free baths, free instruction in singing, sewing, and cooking, unlimited hospitality and neighborly help, will, they hope, brighten many lives, and counteract the temptations to vicious life. There will be a free reading-room and library, and such other attractions as experience may suggest. Dr. W. S. Rainsford, Edward Everett Hale, and other well-known friends of the poor, will give advice and help. Every true-hearted Christian will wish these brave, educated girls success in their noble work, which has for its pattern the life of Him who, eighteen centuries ago, came from heaven to live among men.

A Wealthy Pauper Died in the United States Marine Hospital, Baltimore, recently. A clergyman who visits that institution regularly noticed, on one of his visits, a man about forty years old who was suffering from Bright's disease. He gained his confidence, and the patient told him the story of his life. He said he was a native of New Haven, Conn., but had left that town when he was twenty years old to go to sea. He had never communicated with his family afterward. He continued his seafaring life until he was stricken with the disease, and then, having no money saved, he applied for admission to the hospital and was taken care of there. The clergyman urged him to apply to his family for help, but he refused, saying that he did not deserve aid from them. The man died, and would have been buried in Potter's Field had not a charitable organization taken charge of the funeral. Inquiries were subsequently made about the dead man's family, and it was found that they had all been dead for some time, and that when the man was lying destitute in the hospital he was really sole heir to a large estate, and he died in ignorance of the fact. There are many men who are similarly missing a heavenly inheritance. Like the sailor, they are conscious that they do not deserve it, but, as it is never won by merit, they, like better men, might gain it through Christ by repentance and faith. (Eph. 2: 7, 8.)

A Lawsuit Over a Goose Has Involved a loss of three hundred dollars to a widow in Kentucky. In a village in Metcalfe County in that State live two widows who occupy adjoining farms. One of them keeps a flock of geese, and the other widow has been annoyed for a long time by their straying into her garden and destroying the plants. She warned her neighbor that if she did not keep them on her own place she should take measures to protect herself from their depredations. The warning was not heeded, and one day the widow saw her neighbor's geese in her garden again. She went to her wood-pile and threw heavy billets of wood at the intruders. One goose was killed before they were all driven out. The owner of the goose sent in a bill of forty cents for the dead goose, but the other widow refused to pay. Suit was then brought for the forty cents, and the plaintiff engaged the best lawyer in the district. The defendant also secured a good lawyer, and instructed him to fight the case with all his skill. Both women declared they would spend their last cent rather than yield. After several mistrials and continuances, prolonged over three years, the case was decided last week by a judgment for the defendant. The court fees and the lawyers' costs on both sides were in the aggregate over three hundred dollars. Even from a worldly standpoint the expenditure of so much over so paltry a claim was silly; but it has a more serious aspect in the light of Christ's explicit command. They who pride themselves on "standing up for their rights," and contending against injustice, forget that Christians are enjoined not to resist evil, but to suffer wrong rather than go to law. (Matt. 5: 39, 40.)

A Boy Adrift with a Lunatic in an Open boat on the Bay of New York had several narrow escapes from death on May 6. On Tuesday of last week a policeman brought to the station-house a man and a boy, and said he believed the man was crazy. On examination his diagnosis proved correct, and the man was sent to the asylum. The boy told a remarkable story. He said that his mother was dead and the crazy man was his stepfather. At sunset on the previous day his stepfather took him out and hired an open boat, put him in and rowed with him toward the lighthouse. Then he rowed to the Statue of Liberty, and finally drew in his oars and let the boat drift about the bay. The boy begged to be rowed ashore, as he was cold and hungry, and was afraid every minute that some vessel would run the boat down. The man, however, paid no heed to his entreaties. He sang and shouted, and acted foolishly. The boat drifted about all night, and the boy's terror kept him wide awake. When the sun rose, the man took the oars and rowed ashore. He continued shouting and singing on the streets until he was arrested. Doubtless the boy will never forget that night of terror as long as he lives. As his stepfather is in the asylum, the boy is safe from like perils from that cause. It may be hoped that he will be saved, too, from drifting about through life under the guidance of the enemy of souls, whose malignity is more to be dreaded even than the imbecility of the stepfather. (11 Cor. 2: 11.)

A Nursemaid's Devotion to her Child is curiously displayed in New York. Two ladies were crossing one of the city parks when they met a child gorgeously attired accompanied by a nurse. One of the ladies nodded to the nurse, and the other asked in whose employ the nurse was. "She is not in the employ of any one," was the reply, "that is her own child." "And yet she wears the nurse's cap and dress?" said the other lady. Then the matter was explained. The nurse left her employer to marry a coachman, and after a time became the mother of a beautiful boy. She lavished all her love upon the babe, and as he grew older she dressed him in the finest and most dainty clothes she could procure. She could not afford to dress herself to correspond, so she resumed her nurse's livery for her own child, and is proud to have passers-by stop and admire him as some favored darling of a wealthy home. It is a strange way of acting, and, if she continues it, may not prove a very wise one for the child in the end. He may grow up proud and vain, and be mortified at finding that though his mother could give him fine clothes she cannot give him the wealth they are supposed to imply. The love the mother thus shows, however, may remind us of Him who took upon Him the form of a servant and became poor, that they who love Him might become rich, and no mortifying discovery awaits them. (Phil. 2: 7.)

The Disastrous Results of a Boyish Amusement are reported from Chicago. On May 8 several boys were playing in an open lot in the town of Moreland, which was recently annexed to Chicago. One of them suggested that they should make a bonfire, and some scraps of wood were soon collected from an unfinished building for the purpose. It blazed up merrily, and the boys were delighted. But a gale rose and carried the sparks to the new Presbyterian church near by, and set it on fire. From that the fire spread to a row of seven houses, and they too were burned. There is no fire department in Moreland, but the people turned out and worked hard with buckets and axes until help arrived from Chicago. It was three hours after the fire started before it was under control. The church and forty-six houses had by that time been destroyed, three hundred persons were homeless, $200,000 had gone up in flame, and several firemen had been severely burned. Probably the boys who heedlessly started the fire were themselves appalled by the consequence of their own thoughtlessness. They, and all who hear of the calamity, will appreciate the apostolic warning against another kind of heedlessness, the results of which are likened to just such a catastrophe. (James 3: 5, 6.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Major J. H. Cole has commenced services at Little Rock, Ark. The attendance is already large and the interest is increasing.

The twenty-fourth anniversary of the National Temperance Society was held on Tuesday, May 14, in the Broadway Tabernacle, New York.

Rev. Dr. George Thurston Bedell, P. E. Bishop of Ohio, has resigned on account of ill health. His successor will be chosen this month at Toledo.

In a series of union meetings at Carthage, N. Y., under the leadership of Mrs. John W. Dean, the Quaker evangelist, about seventy-five have been converted.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Societies will hold a joint meeting in connection with the anniversaries at Boston, to be addressed by missionary women, on Friday morning, May 17, at 9:30.

Mr. Charles W. Sawyer is holding successful meetings in the Bushwick Avenue Congregational Church, Brooklyn, N. Y. Several remarkable conversions of drunkards and gamblers have occurred.

Mr. George W. Fulton, a licentiate of Washington Presbytery, who is appointed by the Presbyterian Board to labor as a missionary in Japan, was ordained on April 24, in the Second Church of Washington, Pa.

The disgraceful spectacle at the Centennial ball in New York was a strong argument for prohibition. Notwithstanding the presence of the President, the Cabinet, and Governors of States the drunken revelry was disgusting.

At the meeting of the American Institute of Christian Philosophy, held in Winthrop Place, New York, on May 2, the Rev. Dr. Richard Wheatley, of Cornwall, N. Y., read a paper on "The Philosophical Basis of Theological Belief."

The American delegates to the Paris Peace Convention are, Judge Charles A. Peabody, of New York; Dr. Richard H. Thomas, of Baltimore; Professor J. Rendel Harris, of Haverford College, Pa.; Justus C. Strawberry and John B. Wood, of Philadelphia.

Dr. L. W. Munhall's work at Macon, Ga., is being vigorously taken up by the pastors of the churches who invited him to the city. Since he left, the converts have been carefully looked after and many additions have been made to their number. Dr. Munhall's visit will never be forgotten in Macon.

The Methodist Episcopal Church at Marinette, Wis., which has long been burdened with debt is now clear. On Easter Sunday the pastor, the Rev. Henry Ostrom, preached on the evil of debt, and at the conclusion of the service the members of the church subscribed $2,500, which was sufficient to clear the debt and make repairs.

About $35,000 has been spent the past year by the American Seamen's Friend Society in missionary work, publications, loan libraries, and other aids. Altogether 9,221 new libraries have been given out to vessels; over 10,000 have been reshipped, making 500,000 books, which have been put within reach of about 350,000 men.

Five Mormon missionaries have been holding meetings in Dale County, Ala., and had been so successful as to have formed a colony, which was soon to start for Utah. The plan has been delayed, if not frustrated, by an indignation meeting of citizens of the county, from which a deputation went to the house where the missionaries were, and drove them out of the State.

MAN UNKNOWN TO MAN.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"The heart knoweth its own bitterness; and a stranger doth not intermeddle with his joy." Prov. 14: 10.

Every Man a Microcosm—The Solidarity and Individuality of the Race—No Man Fully Knows Himself—No Man Has his Exact Counterpart—Men Incompetent to Judge Each Other—Universal Need of Sympathy—I. Every Heart Has a Bitterness Peculiar to Itself—True of the Godless Man—Of the Awakened Man—Of the Backslider—Of the Tried Believer—The Cure for Bitterness of Heart—II. The Heart's Peculiar Joys—The Joy of Pardoned Sin—Of Vanquished Evil—Of Answered Prayer—Of Peace in Trouble—Of Communion with God—Towers Visible on Sunday Only.

You lift up your eyes, and you behold the stars. Surely it is no idle imagination that these heavenly lights are distant worlds; but they are entirely separated from the inhabitants of this globe. You may peer at them through the telescope as long as you will, but you cannot enter into the feelings and pursuits of the dwellers in those worlds. There is a great gulf fixed, and we who would pass to them, cannot, neither can they pass to us who would come from thence. In a great measure, such is our relation to our fellow-men. Men are microcosms, or little worlds; each man has his distinct sphere, wherein he dwells apart. We are so many worlds, and no one world of man exactly overlaps another. You cannot completely know your fellow-man. There is a bitterness which each man feels alone, and a sweetness with which none can intermeddle. Every man is, in a measure, self-contained.

His Being is Detached from other beings in certain matters. There are bonds which unite us to our fellow-man, and there is a solidarity about the race; but, for all that, each man is a distinct atom and item, and there are portions of his nature in which he does not touch his fellow-men at all, but displays his own individuality and personality. Alone are we born, one by one; alone do we die, one by one. Though we shall stand with the great multitude before the throne of God, yet that judgment will be of individuals, and the sentence will be passed upon us one by one. Heaven will be an enjoyment which the believer himself possesses, or hell a misery which the impenitent himself endures. No one can merge himself in another man, nor so blend himself with the mass as to cease to be an individual existence. For weal or woe we are each one launched on the ocean of life in his own vessel. "Every man shall bear his own burden."

It is not surprising that we must be in a measure unknown to others, since we do not even fully know ourselves. Mysteries exist within our own bosoms, and abysses which we have never yet explored. Their own personal humanity is to many an utterly unknown land, and none know themselves so fully as they think. "Man, know thyself," is a precept much more profound than it appears. If we do not know ourselves, how shall we know our fellows?

Besides, there are points of individuality in each man which render him distinct from every other. No two women, although they be born of the same parents, have been trained in the same home, and have lived together in close companionship, will be found to be precisely alike. No man could find his exact counterpart among all the millions of the race. In some point or points each man is inscrutable by his companions. Either from one peculiar element which is in him, or from the peculiar proportions in which qualities are blended in his constitution, each man is a being after his own kind. How can we know beings so strangely

Diverse from Each Other?

What is the practical use of these facts? We learn, I think, first, that we may not judge our brethren as though we understood them, and were competent to give a verdict upon them. Why do you sit down and write bitter things against your fellow-man? Be not sure that you can accurately judge any of his actions. Seen upon its surface, and by itself, his act may appear blameworthy; but the motive behind, if known to you, would soften your censure, or even win your praise. Before the great Searcher of all hearts, things are not what they seem. As our law condemneth no man before it hears him, so let us not hasten to give sentence, since we have not heard, and in all probability never shall hear, all the ins and outs of his behavior. "Judge not, that ye be not judged."

Especially judge not the sons and daughters of sorrow. Allow no

Ungenerous Suspicions

of the afflicted, poor, and the despondent. Do not hastily say they ought to be more brave, and exhibit a greater faith. Ask not—Why are they so nervous and so absurdly fearful? It is not easy to be effectively sympathetic: some cannot manifest tenderness, even when they have a mind to do so. I once knew a minister who had never suffered pain or illness in his life. I was unwell in his house, and he most kindly tried to sympathize with me. He did it almost as wonderfully as an elephant picks up a pin. It was a marvel that he could attempt a thing so altogether out of his line. Many of the trials which are experienced by Christians are sent as an education in the art of sympathy. Be thankful for that which enables you to be a minister of consolation to your fellow-men; but feel that in this matter you are a learner yet, and will frequently meet with sorrows and with joys into which you cannot enter.

One other lesson, and that is the great one we want, all of us, to learn.

We All Need Sympathy;

and as it is impossible that we should ever perfectly obtain it from our fellow-men, there remains but One who can give it to us. There is One who can enter the closet where the skeleton is locked up; One who is in touch with our unmentionable grief. He weighs and measures that which is too heavy for us to bear. That blessed One! Oh, that we may each one have Him for our friend!

The general doctrine of the gospel has great power in it, but the sweetness lies in the particular application of it. What though the city be full of bread? if there be none upon thy table, thou wilt starve! What though the coffers of the bank should overflow with gold? yet, if thou hast nothing wherewith to purchase the necessities of life, thou wilt perish in thy poverty! Be not deceived into joint-stock godliness: each man must come into individual relation with the living God in Christ Jesus.

Having already handled its general principle, we will now come close to our text in its two parts: the heart knows a bitterness peculiar to itself; and, secondly, the heart also knows a sweetness peculiar to itself.

I. The heart knowethits own Bitterness.

Concerning any man this is true. The shoe pinches on every foot, and that foot only knows where the pinch is felt by itself. Every shoulder bears its load, and that load is its own. Envy no man. He who seems most happy may be more fit for pity than for envy. His heart knows its own bitterness. Do not intrude into the hidden sorrows of any: it is enough for one heart to know its bitterness. May be, thou wilt increase misery if thou meddle with it. Leave that alone which thou canst not relieve. If thou canst help, lend thine attentive ear; but if thou canst not help, keep thy finger from the wound. You may cheer the heart of the burden-bearer, but his trouble is still the same—there is no dividing his grief.

Most solemnly this is true concerning the godless man. Of the irreligious man, the unbelieving man, it is surely true that "The heart knoweth its own bitterness." The boy going through the churchyard at night, whistles to keep his courage up; and many of the braggart speeches of infidels are merely an attempt to conceal the unrest of heart which they would not like to confess. They are not happy: they cannot be happy. Be not afraid to approach them with the gospel: they are more ready to receive it than we imagine. When they roar most loudly there is little of the lion about them except the skin. Fear them not. They need the gospel even more than other people, and their attempt to bully their own consciences proves that they are aware of their want.

Next, how true this is concerning

An Awakened Man!

When conscience at last starts up from its dream, when the Holy Spirit begins to convince the man of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment; ah! then, beloved, "the heart knoweth its own bitterness." I could not have told you, if you had bribed me to disclose the secret, the inward grief I felt when day and night God's hand was heavy upon me on account of sin. Before I found a Saviour, the agony of my mind was at times indescribable, for I felt the pressure of the wrath of God, justly incurred by my iniquity. Have any of you to whom I now speak at last come to your senses; and do you wish to escape from the wrath of God, but cannot? I am grieved for you, my brother; but yet I am thankful that by such self-despair men are brought at last to trust in Jesus, cut off from sin by a terrible discovery of its evil, cut off from self by utter despair, and driven to cast themselves on the merit of the Saviour. Fly to Jesus, and you shall be saved; but till you do so, your heart will be filled with a bitterness beyond expression.

Our text is certainly true concerning the backslider. "The heart knoweth its own bitterness." One of the most intense bitteresses that is ever experienced out of hell, is that of one who is awakened to see his heinous criminality, when having known the truth, and enjoyed meetings for prayer, and having been accustomed to speak about his own conversion, and to labor for the salvation of others, having known rapt fellowship with God, and having stood to the front in holy effort, after all, he has turned aside to filthiness, and dishonored the sacred name by which he was called. Alas! even when he is restored, and grace has cleansed the stain, his old wounds will be sadly apt to bleed afresh.

Concerning the tried believer, this is very true. The afflicted is one whose heart knows its own bitterness. Brethren, many of the excellent of the earth are Constitutionally Sorrowful.

Certain of our friends are always happy, not so much the result of grace as the effect of nature. Many plants flourish best in the sunshine, but others love the shade. I have seen a fern which grows best in drip and gloom. God has made each one for its place. Bid all those who are timorous and sad to lift up their hearts and rejoice in God. But oh, do not condemn them while you encourage them! Cheer them, but do not censure them. The Lord knows that there may, in each case, be something about the body, something about the mind, or something about the condition, which makes it far less evil in these persons to be desponding than it might be in our cases—"The heart knoweth its own bitterness."

Afflicted Saints.

Possibly there may be present among us servants of God who are wading through rivers of trouble. We do not know, dear friends, in the hey-day of our joy, how closely we may be sitting to "a woman of a sorrowful spirit," or, "a man that hath seen affliction." We little know the burdens which are bowing our neighbors' backs. Patience gives them smiling faces, but pain wrings their hearts. Great losses and great crosses fall to the lot of great saints. Sickness is often a means of grace: those who have much grace may be called to endure much disease. There is a bitterness which some of you can scarcely understand: it is the loss of beloved children, especially the loss of an only child. Bereavement of our loved ones is a heavy trial.

You see, then, that in the whole range of human society each heart knoweth its own bitterness; and I want to say this to you—the singularity of sorrow is

A Dream of the Sufferer.

Thou sittest alone and keepest silence, and thou sayest in thy heart, "I am the man that hath seen affliction," but a host of others have seen afflictions as well as thyself. Come down from thine elevation of special woe; indulge no longer the egotism of despair. Thou art but one pilgrim along the well-trodden Via Dolorosa. The stair-way of grief is never without its passengers, and at their head is "a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief."

Next, let me say, know thy sorrow well. "The heart knoweth its own bitterness." It is always well when it does know it. If you can write down your grief in black and white, and describe it to yourself, the half of it will evaporate. A large proportion of our despondency is mythical: it is a kind of smoke or mist, which will disappear as the light falls on it. "Why art thou cast down, O my soul? Why art thou disquieted in me?" If you are wise, you will press home those two "whys," till you say to yourself, "There is no reason for being disquieted: 'hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise Him!'"

Above all, remember that the cure for bitterness of heart is to take it to your Lord at once. Remember this word: "In all their affliction He was afflicted." No drop of gall was too bitter for His mouth: He tasted death itself. There is no corner in thy heart so dark but Christ hath been in as dark a room as that. All the thorns that pierce thy feet once pierced His head. Go thou to Him with the full vessel of thy woe. "Ye people, pour out your hearts before Him: God is a refuge for us." Then shall you sing for joy of heart.

II. I wish I had an hour in which to speak to the full upon the second part of our subject. The heart knows a Sweetness All Its Own.

I will go into one or two of the forms of this sweetness. You have tasted, many of you, the joy of pardoned sin. Do you remember when you were, for the first time, sure that God, for Christ's sake, had forgiven you? Could you tell anybody the joy you then felt? In proportion as you were burdened before, you felt the bliss of rest. In proportion as the iron had entered into your soul before, the joy came leaping into your heart. Truly a stranger intermeddled not with such joy. Only the pardoned know the joy of pardon. I dare say, when you were first saved, others said that you were off your head. In the family it was suspected that poor John was not himself at all; he was so different from what he used to be. Oh, yes, the joy of pardoned sin is one with which a stranger cannot intermeddle.

Some time after your pardon you knew the bliss of vanquished evil. To be forgiven was not enough; you longed to be free from the dominion of sin. I do not know what your peculiar sin may have been, but, after a struggle, you overcame it, and you felt that the very desire for that sin was dead: you loathed it now as much as you loved it before. What a joy that was to you! It was like the triumph of Israel when they had come out of Egypt, and Egypt itself had been overthrown at the Red Sea. The depths had covered them, there was not one of them left. The mighty waters swept away Pharaoh and his captains. Do you recollect when the habit of drunkenness went down into the sea? Do you remember when another vile propensity sank as lead in the mighty waters? Joy over a conquered evil is a joy worth worlds, and no stranger can deprive us of it.

Another great joy is that of Answered Prayer.

When the Lord has heard our petitions, and given us the desire of our hearts, what joy fills our souls! It must have been a stern joy which filled Elijah when he stood at the altar, after the priests of Baal and their clatter had all failed; when he stood up and said, "Let it be known, O Lord, that I have done all these things at Thy word." When the live lightning leaped from heaven, and the sacrifice went up in sheets of flame, then I do not wonder that exhilaration lifted him out of himself, and he could do anything in the joy of his heart, because of his answered prayer. A stranger to prayer cannot know the joy of success. He who knows what it is to wrestle will understand what it is to prevail.

Further, dear brethren, there is about usefulness. This is a joy which, thank God, I do know; but unless you know it, I cannot communicate its sweetness to you. It was but a poor child, or a servant girl, or a working-man in his fustian jacket; but as he took my hand and looked into my face, he said, "God Almighty bless you! You brought me to the Saviour." I get registered letters containing money for the Lord's work; but the letters which are most precious are those which tell of conversions from great sin to the Lord Jesus, through the printed sermons. These are my golden wages. If I say much about this, some one will charge me with blowing my own trumpet; but truly this sacred bliss is one which the successful worker has all to himself, and a stranger intermeddles not therewith. You Sunday-school teachers and workers know what I mean. Pray that you may have more of it!

A Very Extraordinary Joy

There is a joy in the heart, with which no stranger intermeddles, of another kind, namely, peace in the time of trouble. A painful operation is needful, and the patient hears the sad news without a murmur. I remember the picture of "The Sleep of Argyle," who is to be executed in the morning, and he is found fast wrapt in sweet slumber when the gaoler enters the cell. Remember the martyr who had to be burned early in the morning, but needed to be shaken to awake him. Fancy being shaken in the morning with, "Get up and be burned!" How blessed to leave all with the Lord, and bear His will with gladsome readiness. To be calm in the presence of pain, bereavement, slander, ridicule! This is delightful. The worldling cannot understand this! The saint is neither careless nor callous; he has both sense and sensitiveness; and yet he lives apart from carking care, and throws aside the fret which else would eat into his heart.

One other joy I must not overlook; it is the highest of all, and that is,

The Joy of Communion

with God. About this I hardly dare to speak. If you have ever read Rutherford's Letters, I will very much judge of you by how you judge of them. If you know nothing at all about communion with God you will say, "The man is fanatical, carried away with rhapsodies. He almost utters blasphemy at times in his daring language." But if you have trodden the crests of the mountains of fellowship, and have bathed your forehead in the eternal sunlight, you will know that he does not exaggerate, but that he even falls short of the indescribable bliss of fellowship with God. Do you know what this means? If you do not, I could not tell you, for I should seem as one that talketh in a dream. Yet, whether you know it or not, some of us find heaven begun below. If you have ever tasted fellowship with God then there is a joy, as you know, with which no stranger intermeddles.

Beloved, if it be so, be much in the enjoyment of these delights! There is a secret parlor in the house of manhood, into which none can go but yourself and your Lord. Be sure that you enter there! Lock yourself in. I wish I might do so, and never come out again. Why should you always be moping down in the cellar? If you have a good house, why do you grope in the basement among the coals and the rats? If there be a room in the house that has a fine view, make it your sitting-room. I remember at Newcastle a person said, when letting a house, "You can from the upper window see Durham Cathedral on a Sunday." "Why on a Sunday? Cannot you see it on a Monday?" "No, because then the smoke of the furnaces darkens the air." There is a room in my heart from which I can see heaven at choice Sabbath times, when I can get alone with my God, and forget the cares both of the church and of the world. If you have never known these joys, I pray you seek them for yourself, each man, each woman of you. Remember, you must come to God alone, by the exercise of personal faith and personal repentance; for neither in your sorrow, nor in your joy, can another man exactly fit with you. Therefore, come alone to the Lord Jesus, and come at once. Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

THE BOY-KING'S FRIEND.*

WOULD that we knew something more definite about Jeremiah's friendships! But we can at least fill up our mental image of them by conjecture. It seems to me, then, not out of place to recollect here the words of Roger Ascham in "The Scholemaster" respecting the English boy-king, Edward VI. "If King Edward," he says, "had lived a little longer, his only example had bred such a race of worthie, learned gentlemen as this Realme neuer yet did affourde." Surely it is probable enough that the person of the Jewish boy-king formed in like manner the centre of a little society of kindred spirits, for we know that Jewish kings were not idolized as divine, like the Egyptian Pharaohs—a society of which Jeremiah was a youthful member, and the two Hilkiahs (one the high priest, and the other also a priest, and the father of Jeremiah) were among the recognized leaders. The probability amounts almost to a certainty in the case of the high priest, for it was he who, later on, brought the book of the law to the notice of the king; it is something less than this in the case of Jeremiah's father, and yet, considering the conditions of education at this period, it is scarcely credible that the religious ideas of the son should not have been largely derived from the father.

A Momentous Discovery.

Let us now transport ourselves in imagination to the year 622 B. C.—the eighteenth year of the reign of Josiah—and try to realize the religious condition of the people of Judah. How much there was that needed reform! The most honored sanctuary of Jehovah was still polluted by idolatrous, polytheistic emblems. Altars still smoked both to Him and to idols under every green tree and upon every hill. Children were still sacrificed to the cruel fire-god in the torrent-valleys, like that of Hinnom, under the clefts of the rocks. Worship was still offered to the host of heaven upon the housetops, while at every street corner in the larger towns there were shrines of Jehovah, side by side with Baal and the "Queen of Heaven." Josiah, and those who sympathized with him, had still to endure those painful sights and sounds, for no plan of reform had as yet commended itself to the practical mind of the king. Such was the state of affairs when a lightning-flash all at once illumined the scene. A messenger had been sent by Josiah to the temple on business connected with the repairs of the building. The messenger was Shaphan, the scribe or chancellor; we must accompany him to his royal master, and watch the effect of the tidings which he bears from the temple, where a discovery has just been made by Hilkiah, the priest. It is a book which has been found, containing directions on religious and moral points, which cut at the root of many popular customs and practices. There can be no longer any doubt that the book found in the temple was substantially the same as our Book of Deuteronomy.

The Royal Tragedy.

It was on the battle-field of Megiddo, famous

* From "Jeremiah: His Life and Times." By Rev. T. K. Cheyne, M. A., D. D. One of the volumes of the valuable series entitled Men of the Bible. These books have shed much light on the lives of the Scripture characters, modern research having enabled the authors to draw graphic pictures of their surroundings and contemporaries. Pp. 205; price 5s.; published by Anson D. F. Randolph & Co., 38 West Twenty-third Street, New York.

MASSACHUSETTS, 1620.

VALLEY FORGE, 1777.

MARYLAND, 1634.

Three Symbolic Floats in the Centennial Celebration in New York on May 1.

already in the poetry of Israel by the defeat of Jabin and Sisera, and not less celebrated in Apocalyptic vision (Rev. 16: 16), that the unequal struggle between Neco and Josiah took place. Alas! the men of Israel fled at the very beginning of the battle; it was as if the aspect of the angry Egyptian king had scattered his enemies. The fate of Ahab became that of Josiah. "A certain man drew a bow at a venture and smote the king of Israel." He was brought to Jerusalem to die. What were his last thoughts? Did he still trust God? None can answer that question; but that the faith of many of his subjects was shaken we may be certain. The problem of a perfect and upright man given into the hand of the Satan became from this time forth the problem of Jewish wisdom—the problem of which there is but a faintly hinted solution in the noblest monument of that wisdom, the Book of Job. That blessed results accrued in the long-run to the Jewish Church from this great calamity could easily be shown. From Megiddo the eye turns instinctively to the hillside on which, twelve miles distant, Nazareth stands. But who thought of looking beyond the sad sights of the immediate present? Faith was paralyzed; the heart of the nation seemed to stand still.

THE CIVIC CENTENNIAL PARADE.

ON this page appear pictures of three of the most notable floats which were drawn in the civic procession by which, on May 1, the Centennial of Washington's inauguration was celebrated in New York. The first represented the landing of the Pilgrims of the Mayflower; the second represented Washington at Valley Forge; and the third, the arrival of the Dove in 1634, with the settlers of the Maryland colony.

The procession was an effort to mark the progress of the nation, during the century, in commerce, manufacture, science, and art, and much ingenuity had been exercised in devising appropriate symbolic representations, which were set upon wheels and drawn between the various delegations of the trades. At 10 o'clock the President, Vice-President, the members of the Cabinet, the two ex-Presidents and the Senators and other distinguished guests resumed the places on the reviewing stand which they had occupied so many hours on the preceding day. The Mayor then presented seventy representatives of societies and trade organizations, among which were the Bible Society, the New England Society, the Huguenots, the Historical and Geographical Society, the Architects, the Artists, the Bar, the Board of Trade and the various Exchanges, the painters, plumbers, etc., etc. They handed the President a silver cylinder containing a congratulatory address signed by the President of each society.

The procession was headed by the students of the colleges, followed by some of the pupils in the public schools. Then came the Knights of Pythias, the Knights of Temperance under Grand Commander Robert Graham, and the Sons of Veterans. The firemen made up the next division. The Hungarian contingent followed, and after that came the Tammany Hall delegation, and then the German societies. The interest grew as the first floats appeared. After that each section was cheered as the symbolic representation was understood and appreciated. The Press with its pretty figure of Minerva, the singing societies with Arion, their patron saint, and many others, were heartily cheered. It was noteworthy that when the wine-making industry's delegation came to the stand, a glass was filled and offered to President Harrison. Thousands of eyes were watching to see him drink it, but he declined, and the page, who offered it, emptied the liquor on the floor of the float, while the temperance men around sent up a ringing cheer for the President.

Until 3 o'clock the procession went steadily past the reviewing stand, the forty-nine trade societies alone being represented by fourteen thousand men. Some 25,000 in all must have marched past and over the four miles of the route before the procession ended and the great pageant closed.

AMONG THE INDIANS.

IN connection with the work among the Indians of the Rev. Egerton R. Young, whose portrait and life appeared in this journal on March 13, the following incidents are told:

A few years ago a company of Indians were captured on the Western frontier. Among them were a number of stolen children. They had been with the savages for years. Word was sent throughout the region inviting all who had lost children to come and see if among the little captives they could recognize their own. A long way off was a woman who had been robbed of her darlings, a boy and girl. With mingled hope and fear she came. With fast-throbbing heart she approached the group. They were strange to her. She came nearer, and with eyes filled with mother-love and earnestness, peered into their faces, one after another; but there was nothing in any that she could claim. Nor was there anything in her to light up their cold faces. With the dull pain of despair at her heart she was turning away, when she paused, choked back the tears, and in soft tones began to sing a sweet Christian hymn, which she had long been accustomed to sing to her little ones. The first stanza was not completed before a tall boy and a fine girl left the group and ran up to her, exclaiming, "Mamma! mamma!" and she folded her long-lost ones to her bosom.

The Dying Indian and His Bible.

"I found him," says the missionary, "dying of consumption, and in a state of the most shocking poverty and destitution, in a small birch-rind-covered hut, with nothing but a few fern leaves under him, and an old blanket over him. After recovering somewhat from my surprise, I asked him concerning the state of his mind, when he replied that he was very happy; that Jesus Christ, the Lord of Glory, had died to save him, and that he had the most perfect confidence in Him. Observing a small Bible under the corner of his blanket, I said: 'Jack, you have a friend there; I am glad to see that; I hope you find something good there.' Weak as he was, he raised himself on his elbow, held it in his attenuated hand, while a smile played on his countenance, and slowly said,

'This, Sir, is My Dear Friend

You gave it to me. For a long time I read it much, and often thought of the wonders it told, and I thought I should have it buried with me, but I have thought since that I had better give it to you when I am gone, and it may do some one else good."

THE RIGHT REV. H. C. POTTER, D. D., LL. D.

THE sermon preached at the Centennial Celebration in New York on April 30 by the Bishop of New York, has brought his name into more than its usual prominence throughout the country. "It was inappropriate," say some persons indignantly writing to the newspapers. "It is not historically true, and if it had been, that was not the right time to preach it," say others. "The Bishop," say thoughtful and observant men, "knew what he was talking about, and having before him representative men entrusted with the executive, legislative, and judicial departments of the Government, acted wisely and courageously in calling their attention to the deterioration of the times, and the danger menacing the country." The Bishop preserves a dignified silence. He has uttered his warning, and he has the assurance which God gave long ago to the watchman of Israel: "If thou warn the wicked of his way to turn from it; if he do not turn from his way, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul" (Ezek. 33: 9). It is rare indeed that an opportunity comes to a preacher when he has an audience composed of statesmen of both the Republican and Democratic parties, men in office, men who have been in office, and men who may be in office in the future, and the Bishop wisely seized it to preach to them about the evils which they, and they alone, have the power to eliminate from our national life. All honor to the brave man for his wisdom and courage!

The Right Rev. Henry Codman Potter, D. D., LL. D., Bishop of New York, is fifty-three years of age. He was born at Schenectady, N. Y., in 1836. His father, Dr. Alonzo Potter was at that time Vice-President of Union College, of which his father-in-law, Dr. Eliphalet Nott, was President. Ten years later Dr. Alonzo Potter became Bishop of Pennsylvania. In addition to the honor that came to him from a most efficient conduct of the affairs of his diocese, he had the honor of being the pioneer temperance bishop. He was a total abstainer, which in those days was equivalent to being a fanatic. Though total abstinence brought him some ridicule, he continued to practice and advocate it, on the high ground of Christian principle, to the last, and his distinguished son follows his example.

The Bishop sent his son to the Episcopal Academy of Philadelphia to acquire the rudiments of education, and afterward he became a student in Union College. His first occupation after graduating was that of a clerk. The time thus spent was not lost. He learned at his desk something of the difficulties and temptations of business life, and in after years when he came to preach to business-men he was preserved by his experience from talking the nonsense which we so frequently hear and read in sermons on business life from some pulpits. The piety and talents of the young man, however, indicated a call to complete consecration to Christ's service. He desired to devote the whole of his time to church work, and he therefore applied for admission to the Episcopal Seminary, Fairfax County, Virginia, to study for the ministry. He graduated there in 1857, and was ordained at the age of twenty-two.

His first charge was the small parish of Greensburg, Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, whence two years later he was called to Troy, N. Y. There he labored with much blessing for seven years, after which he removed to Boston, Mass., as assistant rector of Trinity Church. In May, 1868 he received a call to Grace Church, New York, with which his name became closely identified. It was there that the most prominent characteristics of Dr. Potter found their most appropriate sphere. The congregation was wealthy, fashionable, and aristocratic, but within half a score of blocks on every side of the church, bitter, squalid poverty abounded. Dr. Potter realized the responsibilities of himself and his church in the circumstances, and soon, in incisive, ringing utterance, the people who assembled in Grace Church heard what the rector meant to do, and how they might help him in doing it. The congregation responded liberally. The average contributions of the following ten years were $150,000 a year. With this sum, after setting aside over five thousand dollars for foreign missions, the rector proceeded to establish mission chapels in the needy districts, and to organize an efficient corps of workers.

In 1883 Dr. Potter's uncle, Dr. Horatio Potter, Bishop of New York, had attained the age of eighty-one years, and had been Bishop twenty-nine years. The needs of the diocese had grown beyond his power of meeting them, and as all hints of resignation were met by earnest protest, it was necessary that an assistant bishop should be elected. The choice fell upon the rector of Grace Church, and on October 20, 1883, he was solemnly consecrated. It is significant that the first sermon the new bishop preached after his consecration—and it was thoroughly characteristic of the man—was not to the wealthy and aristocratic people of his diocese, but to a congregation of convicts in the Penitentiary on Blackwell's Island. "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow," was the burden of the message he delivered, and his audience melted in unaccustomed tears as he pleaded with them. On January 2, 1887, the venerable Bishop, Dr. Horatio Potter, was called to his reward, and Dr. Henry C. Potter was installed in his place.

The Rt. Rev. H. C. Potter, Bishop of New York.

ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS.

A Life Story: By Mrs. Stenhouse.

For More than Twenty-five Years the Wife of a Mormon Missionary and Elder.

(Continued from page 303.)

The End of the Journey.

How my heart ached with sympathy as I read this pathetic story of the suffering of Mary Burton and her fellow travellers! Only a few pages of her letter remained, and I resumed the reading with anxiety. She thus concluded her painful story:

"The third day came, and still no relief. There are mysterious powers of endurance in human nature, weak as we often deem it, but there is a point beyond which the bow, however flexible, will not bend. It was evident that if no help arrived speedily, the end was not far off. The sun was sinking behind the distant western hills, in all the glory of the clear frosty atmosphere of the desert, and many who gazed upon its beauty did so with a mournful interest, believing that they would never again behold the light of day. But at that moment some who were anxiously watching with a last hope—watching for what they hardly dared expect to see—raised a shout of joy. We knew what it was. Men, women, and children rushed from their tents to welcome the approaching wagons and our friends in time of need.

"Captain Willie and the other elder had found the rescue from Salt Lake overtaken by the storm just as we were, but he had told them of our terrible situation, and they had hastened on without a moment's delay. It was he and they, conveying good supplies, who now approached us. The poor creatures shouted wildly for joy; even the strong men shed tears; and the sisters, overcome with the sudden change from death to life, flung themselves into the arms of the brethren as they came into the camp and covered them with kisses. Such happiness you never saw—everyone shaking hands and speaking joyfully—every one saying 'God bless you!' with an intense meaning such as is seldom attached to those words.

"The supplies were to us more than food and clothing—they were life itself. Elder John Chislett was appointed to distribute the provisions and clothing, and everything was placed in his hands. He gave us all that was immediately necessary, but strongly cautioned us to be very moderate in what we ate, as it was dangerous to go from the extreme of fasting to a full meal. After supper the clothing and bedding was fairly divided, and we felt more thankful for those little comforts than a person who had never endured as we had would have felt had he become suddenly the recipient of boundless luxury.

"Two of the elders who had held forth such delusive hopes to the company, not long before, as I have already told you, were with the brethren who came to our relief. I have never ventured to ask how it was that they could hold out to us, in God's name, such promises, when they must have known, after a moment's reflection, that they were utterly baseless; but I think that probably they left their comfortable homes in Salt Lake City, and came across the desert with supplies to meet us, only to show practically how anxious they were to atone for having led us astray. Next morning Elder Grant went east to meet the company following us, but Elder W. H. Kimball took command of our company for the rest of the way.

"We could now journey but very slowly, for the road was bad; the sick and weakly were, however, able to ride, and altogether we suffered less. To some this change for the better arrived too late—the mental and physical sufferings which they had endured were too much for them. Poor souls! they alone and their Father in heaven knew what they had passed through. They seemed to have lost all consciousness, as if their faculties had been numbed and stupefied. We talked to them of the past, but they looked at us with unmeaning eyes, as if we spoke of something in which they had no interest; we tried to lead their thoughts to the promises of the Lord; but it was all in vain. They turned from us with a look of terrible apathy; and one or two who partly seemed to understand, only replied with an indifference painful to witness—'Too late! too late!'

"As we journeyed, the weather every day grew colder. Many of the unfortunate people lost their fingers and toes, others their ears; one poor woman lost her sight, and I was told of a poor sick man who held on to the wagon-bars to save himself from jolting, and had all his fingers frozen off. Few, if any, of the people recovered from the effects of that frost. One morning they found a poor old man who had vainly tried the evening before to keep up with the rest. His corpse was not far from the camp, but it had been sadly mangled by the wolves. Then there came another snow-storm, only worse in proportion as the weather was colder, and it was with the utmost difficulty that we could keep from freezing. We wrapped blankets and anything else we could get around us, but the cold wind penetrated to our very bones. I was told that some of the people, even women and children, who lagged behind, were whipped so as to make them keep up, and to keep life in them. I did not see this myself; but I believe, if the story was true, it was an act of mercy, and not of cruelty, for to delay a moment was fatal.

"The captain of our hundred more than once stayed behind the company to bury some unfortunate person who died on the road: how he ever got up with us again I cannot tell, but he seemed to be as indefatigable in his labors as he was wonderfully preserved.

"Sometimes the carts came to a dead standstill, and several had to be fastened together and drawn by a united effort, and in more than one instance the poor people gave up altogether—they were carried on, while they lived, as well as we could; but their carts were abandoned. The stragglers came in slowly to camp the night of the storm—the people from the valley even went back to fetch some in—and it was nearly 6 o'clock in the morning before the last arrived.

"The next day we remained in camp, for there were so many sick and dying that we could not proceed. Early in the morning Elder Chislett and three other elders went round to see who was dead, that they might be buried. They found in the tents fifteen corpses, all stiff and frozen. Two more died during the day. A large square hole was dug, and they were buried in it three abreast, and then they were covered with leaves and earth, every precaution being taken to keep them from the wolves.

"As we drew nearer to Salt Lake Valley we met more of the brethren coming to our assistance. They supplied us with all we needed, and then hastened on to meet those who followed us. The atmosphere seemed to become sensibly warmer, and our sufferings were proportionately less as we approached Salt Lake. What the feelings of others might have been when they first saw the goal of our hopes—the fulfilment of our prayers and songs—I cannot tell. Weary, oh so weary, I felt, but thankful, more than thankful, that my husband's life had been spared. He was pale and exceedingly ill, but he was with us still.

"I have written too much already, Sister Stenhouse. I cannot tell you more now, but I may as well add that when we left Iowa City we were about five hundred in all. Some left us on the way. When we left Florence, and began the journey across the plains, we were over four hundred and twenty, of which number we buried sixty-seven—a sixth of the whole. The company which followed us, and to which I have frequently alluded, fared worse than we. They numbered six hundred when they started, but they buried one hundred and fifty on the journey—one in every four. May God grant that I may never again see such a sight as was presented by the miserable remnant of that last company as they came on slowly through the cañon towards Salt Lake Valley."

Such were the contents of Mary's letter, but the iniquity of those responsible for the troubles she knew but little of. We get some light on this subject from a narrative furnished to my husband by a gentleman who followed in the ox-train that accompanied the last of the hand-cart companies, and who was himself an eyewitness and sufferer. The narrative is too long to give in full, so we will give a few extracts only:

"Iowa City was selected for an outfitting point for Salt Lake Valley—the haven of rest for the travel-tired saints. There were four apostles and elders who had charge of the emigration, which caused some trouble among them as to who was chief, which occasioned much delay. To this difference are attributable the suffering and death of so many persons which occurred later in the season.

"Elder Webb bought the wagon and the material for making the hand-carts. The artisans were selected from among the emigrants, and were required to work without wages; but while thus working without pay, they were insufficiently rationed, which caused great dissatisfaction, resulting in a refusal to continue their labors unless they were properly supplied. The hand-carts were fitted up on a most economical plan, and so far was parsimony carried that the wheels had no tires, and to preserve the felloes the emigrants wound them with rawhide while en route. This defect was afterwards partially remedied by putting on a rim of hoop-iron and rivetting where it lapped.

"Elder John Van Cott was deputed to buy and bring up cattle and mules—which he did, I believe, from Missouri. When the cattle arrived they were entrusted to the hand-cart emigrants to herd, and this part of the business was very badly managed. The hand-cart folks had no interest whatever in the oxen, beside which they were new to the business, and were inefficiently directed. The consequence was, that lot after lot of the stock was lost, and a proportionately greater price was put on what was left to cover the deficiency—the good saints being forbidden to buy from settlers. The independent companies wanted to purchase their own stock, with the privilege of taking care of it themselves, but this was not allowed. From the above causes the cattle increased in value, I think, three times, and were finally delivered to the emigrants at much higher prices than they could have been bought for in the neighborhood.

"In this way the independent companies were kept back, in order that they, with their teams, might relieve the hand-carts, if needed. The last hand-cart train, under Tyler and Martin, arrived at Florence toward the middle of August, and, to cheer the people, the Elder prophesied that 'the Indians, the seasons, nay, the very elements, would be controlled for their benefit, and after they got through, they would hear of storms on the right and on the left, of which they in their travelling would know nothing.'

"The last ox-team—of which John A. Hunt had charge—was dispatched soon after. It was a sort of church train—that is, it consisted of wagons belonging to the returning missionaries. The wool or cotton machinery bought by John Halliday was in this train, and also a harp belonging to a poor old blind man, named Giles, which, as he was unable to pay freight upon it, had 'donated' it to Brigham Young. He was afterwards accorded the privilege of going to Brigham Young's mansion and playing upon his own instrument sometimes, of which privilege he gladly availed himself. It is said that the poor, afflicted old man would play there for hours at a time, while the hot tears streamed down his face, as thoughts that would not be controlled rose unbidden in his mind. He afterwards got possession of his much-loved instrument; he may have bought it, or Young may have given it to him, as no one of his household could play on it then.

"John A. Hunt had instructions on no account to pass Tyler's hand-cart train—a conclusive proof that what the Elders had told the Saints with so much earnestness about the heavens protecting them against the storms, was an assurance they did not themselves believe.

"One morning one of the men was found close to the camp, dead, and partly eaten by the wolves. He had gone out, and was perhaps too tired or too careless of life, or, possibly, was unable to return. It was at this place that Tyler, when asked to lend his riding mule for the purpose of helping to take the sick and the aged men and women across the river, refused—assigning as a reason that he did not want his mules worn out.

"On arrival at Devil's Gate, on the Sweetwater, where we found five or six log houses in a dilapidated condition, it was concluded that the hand-carts should go no further. A temporary halt was therefore made, and a remodelling of both trains was made. The wagons were unloaded and the contents stored in two of the log-houses; the hand-carts were unloaded, and as many of the people were put into the wagons as the teams could move, and the remainder were left behind. Assistance was constantly arriving from Salt Lake, and those fresh teams helped wonderfully.

"The track of the emigrants was marked by graves, and many of the living suffered almost worse than death. The intensity of the cold was almost incredible. Men and women sitting on a wagon-tongue, on the ground, or leaning against their fragile carts while eating their scanty fare, would in an instant die without an evidence of coming change. With a morsel of bread or biscuit in their hands, nearing it to their mouths, could be seen men, hale-looking, and apparently strong, stiff in death.

"Such scenes can hardly be imagined by those who did not witness them, but to the hundreds of men and women who had fled from 'merry England' to escape the destruction which they were taught was coming on the Gentile nations, what a commentary was there upon the predictions of men who claimed to be the inspired servants of the Most High, in that bitter struggle for life.

"What remained of the last hand-cart and ox-train companies for that season were got into Salt Lake by the exercise of almost superhuman exertions, and numbers died after their arrival. Those left at the Devil's Gate—of whom there were twenty—were at once put on rations of flour, but of meat they at first had enough, such as it was. The snow fell deep, and the wolves soon began to make sad havoc among the poor stock, and what the wolves spared the season threatened to kill. The remainder was therefore driven up, killed, and the meat frozen. The flour was soon consumed, and meat without salt was the only article of food, and even that began to run short. There was very little game, and only a buffalo, a deer, and a few rabbits were shot. Finally, the meat was consumed; then the hides were eaten, as also all the hide wrapped round the wheels of the hand-carts, and every scrap about the wagons and the neck-piece of the buffalo-skin, which had already done service as a door-mat for two months. In the spring they subsisted on thistle-roots, segoes, and a species of wild garlic, until flour came down from Salt Lake. But to cut a long story short, the twenty men eventually got safely through; terribly emaciated it is true, but still safely. Such was the end of the 'Divine plan' for emigrating the poor in the year 1856."

It was with strange feelings of doubt and unrest that I read that painful story; but I folded up Mary Burton's letter and stored it carefully away in my desk, and then I began to think. Certainly I was still a Mormon—at least I was nothing else—but I was not now so firmly grounded in my faith as once I was, and these terrible stories completely unsettled my mind. Then, too, I was well aware that, before long, my husband and myself would be called upon to cross the Plains to the Mormon Zion, and I felt that if our experience were anything like that of Mary Burton—I and my children would never reach Salt Lake. The prospect was not cheering.

(To be Continued).

JESUS BETRAYED.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for May 26, Mark 14: 43-54, Golden Text, Luke 23: 48.

The Injunction to Sit Still—Jesus Pleading—The Case Safe in His Hands—His Breaking Heart—A Premature Death Struggle—His Dread of Dying Before His Mission was Accomplished—The Disciples Sleeping While He Struggled—His Reproach and Excuse—A Terrible Awakening—The Traitor's Arrival—A Voluntary Surrender—Patience Under Indignities—Recognition of His Father's Hand—The Token of Love as a Sign—How Jesus is Betrayed Afresh.

AFTER the last supper Jesus and His disciples went to the Mount of Olives, one of His favorite haunts for prayer. "And they came to a place which was named Gethsemane; and He saith to His disciples, Sit ye here, while I shall pray." What a message this is to an anxious, burdened soul, "Sit ye here," be still, mightier hands than yours are taking your case in hand; "I shall pray." While Jesus pleads our case with the Father we may well sit still; while Jesus obtains victory over the devil, we may well sit still. "He that is entered into His rest, He also hath ceased from His own works, as God did from His." (Heb. 4: 10.) "He ever liveth to make intercession for" us. (Heb. 7: 25; Rom. 8: 34.) Let us trust the intercession of Jesus, and not dishonor Him by worry and anxiety, which imply a doubt of His prevailing.

He took with Him those whom He could best trust—the three witnesses of His first raising from the dead, and of His transfiguration. Not Thomas, who doubted Him; not Philip, who was staggered at the thought of how many must be fed with five loaves and two fishes (John 6: 5-7); but Peter, who, despite his many faults, walked on the water to go to Him; John, "whom Jesus loved," James, who was the second to die for him. (Acts 12: 2.) He "began to be sore amazed, and to be very heavy, and said unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful unto death; tarry ye here, and watch."

The Heart of Jesus was Breaking.

Sin, and all its consequences, sorrow, sickness, death, lay before Him. He "knew no sin" (11 Cor. 5: 21); "neither was guile found in His mouth" (1 Pet. 2: 22); yet He must be "made sin," must take our infirmities, and bear our sicknesses (Matt. 8: 17), must die, "the just for the unjust." (1 Pet. 3: 18.)

He did not shrink from the cross; it was His own choice to give Himself for us; but the frail earthen vessel was breaking under the weight of a world's sin.

Even the chosen three might not be witnesses of that awful moment when a premature death-struggle was taking place between the Prince of life and the prince of darkness. He "became obedient unto death" by His own free will, but it was to be "even the death of the cross." Now, in this awful hour, death drew near, and His mission was not yet accomplished. "He went forward a little" where no human eye could see Him, "and fell on the ground, and prayed that, if it were possible, the hour might pass from Him." What! that He should not die in our stead? Was this His prayer? Surely not. But that He might not die in Gethsemane before He could bear our sins in His own body to the ree. (1 Pet. 2: 24, R. V. marg.) "His sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground" (Luke 22: 44); life was ebbing away, and our sins were

Not Yet Atoned For.

But He "offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears unto Him that was able to save Him from death, and was heard in that He feared" (Heb. 5: 7), was saved from death in Gethsemane, and allowed to carry out His purpose, and the purpose of His Father on the cross. But before His prayer was answered Jesus manifested the most perfect trust and submission even here, even when it seemed as though redemption might be lost by it. He said, "Abba, Father, all things are possible unto thee; take away this cup from Me; nevertheless, not what I will, but what Thou wilt."

At such a moment, "He cometh to the disciples, and findeth them sleeping." He says to Peter, the first witness among them that He was the Christ, the disciple who had walked on the water, the man who had said, "Though I should die with Thee, yet will I not deny Thee." "Simon, sleepest thou? Couldst not thou watch one hour? Watch ye and pray, lest ye enter into temptation."

Jesus was Awake.

awake to the value of every soul He was about to die for, intensely awake to what redemption cost. Who can enter into the conception of the Infinite in His boundless loathing of sin, or know what it was to Him when the Lord "laid on Him the iniquity of us all"? (Isa. 53: 6.) And Jesus was man, and could of Himself do nothing (John 5: 30), and could of Himself bear nothing, and so at this hour He leaned all the weakness of His humanity on the all might of His Father. Oh how He felt His own dependence! He said, from His own experience, "Tempted in all points like as we are." "Watch ye and pray"—as I am watching and praying—"that ye enter not into temptation." And then He spoke again a deep truth, but such a tender one for those sleeping disciples, "The spirit truly is ready, but the flesh is weak." The moments when we are racked with pain or wrung with mental anguish are not those in which we are most given to excuse the weakness of others; yet so it was with Jesus.

"And again He went away, and prayed, and spake the same words. And when He returned He found them asleep again (for their eyes were heavy)." Transactions were going on so close to them between God the Father and God the Son, and they were unconscious! Battles were being fought, and victories gained, in which the destinies of a world were being settled, and they were asleep! Oh how heavy we disciples are about heavenly things, taken up with our little circle of interests, leaving Jesus alone in His great conflicts. The third time, Jesus said to them, "Sleep on now, and take your rest; it is enough, the hour is come; behold, the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners. Rise up, let us go; lo, he that betrayeth me is at hand." And they awoke from their slumbers to see their fellow disciple, Judas, at the head of an armed band to apprehend their Lord! What an awakening! A great multitude, all armed, and headed by a disciple, were come

To Take Jesus!

Again and again men had sought to lay hands on Him in vain. At Nazareth the offended worshippers in the synagogue—who were one moment thrilled by "the gracious words which proceeded out of His mouth," and another moment scandalized when they remembered His humble parentage, "rose up, and thrust Him out of the city, and led Him unto the brow of the hill whereon their city was built, that they might cast Him down headlong." But they were foiled in their purpose; the Son of man, "passing through the midst of them, went His way." (Luke 4: 29, 30.) No man would take Jesus, except the Father permit it. Again, when Jesus was teaching in the temple, and some said, "This is the Christ," "some of them would have taken Him; but no man laid hands on Him;" and when the chief priests and Pharisees demanded of the officers, "Why have ye not brought Him?" they replied, "Never man spake like this Man," and Jesus remained free, for His hour was not yet come. (John 7: 40-46.) When, another time, they took up stones to cast at Him, He "hid Himself, and went out of the temple, going through the midst of them, and so passed by." (John 8: 59.) Once again, when He had declared, "I and My Father are one," "the Jews took up stones again to stone Him;" and "they sought again to take Him: but He escaped out of their hand." (John 10: 30-39.) But His own word, spoken later on to Pilate, was as true of all who were against Him. "Thou couldst have no power at all against Me except it were given thee from above." (John 19: 11.)

But now His hour was come, with a heroism born only in the heart of God, He said, "The hour is come that the Son of man should be glorified" (John 12: 23); and again, "Father,

The Hour is Come.

glorify thy Son, that thy Son also may glorify Thee." (John 17: 1.) But the glory was to be other than earthly glory—shame, spitting, condemnation, death, but all to save man! The first indignity was that they used force to take Him "who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil" (Acts 10: 38); who was "meek and lowly in heart," and their very doing so implied that He had been guilty of insurrection. What a libel upon Jesus! Yet, instead of vehemently defending Himself, and pleading His own innocence, He, "when He was reviled, reviled not again; when He suffered, He threatened not, but committed Himself to Him that judgeth righteously." (1 Peter 2: 23.) He only said, "Are ye come out as against a thief, with swords and with staves to take Me? I was daily with you in the temple teaching, and ye took Me not; but the Scriptures must be fulfilled." Thus He recognized His Father's hand in permitting all that happened; He saw everything from above, as permitted and overruled by His Father, and not level with His human nature, as though man had power of himself to do anything to Him. It is this recognition of God which is our privilege at all times; this is

The True Life of Faith;

this it is which even enables us to say with David, "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble, therefore will we not fear, though the earth be removed and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the seas." (Ps. 46: 1, 2.)

And he that betrayed Him had given them a token, saying, "Whomsoever I shall kiss, that same is He; take Him, and lead Him away safely." It was the token and expression of love which did it. Oh if Jesus were betrayed by enemies it would not be so bitter; but when one who has kissed His feet, received His pardon, and tasted His love, betrays Him to His enemies, this is crucifying the Son of Man afresh, and putting Him to an open shame. (Heb. 6: 6.) When a disciple, a child of God, loves money more than God, he betrays Jesus, and gives the ungodly the advantage of saying there is no difference between a child of God and the worldling. When a child of God is untruthful, he betrays Jesus; when he is selfish, he betrays Jesus; when he is proud he betrays Jesus. When Judas was come, he went straightway to Jesus, and saith, "Hail Master, and kissed Him."

The Deed Was Done

so quickly, and yet it was irrevocable, the blackest deed which Satan ever put in a human heart; good had it been for Judas if he had never been born. He alone and the "man of sin" who shall arise at the end of this age, perhaps very soon, are called "The son of perdition." (John 17: 12; 11 Thess. 2: 3.) Alas, the betrayal was infectious! One zealous soul in a house sets many others on fire; one who betrays Jesus by his false, untrue love, deadens those around him. "They all forsook Him and fled." One of them was so eager to get away from his betrayed Lord that he left his clothing behind him! Thus Jesus was betrayed; thus Jesus was forsaken. Is He treated better at our hands? "Search me, O God, and know my heart" on this solemn question.

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION—1888.

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God.

In pastures green? Not always; sometimes He Who knoweth best, in kindness leadeth me
In weary ways, where heavy shadows be—

Out of the sunshine warm and soft and bright,
Out of the sunshine into darkest night:
I oft would faint with sorrow and affright—

Only for this—I know He holds my hand,
So whether in the green or desert land,
I trust, although I may not understand.

And by still waters? No, not always so;
Ofttimes the heavy tempests round me blow,
And o'er my soul the waves and billows go.

But when the storms beat loudest, and I cry Aloud for help, the Master standeth by,
And whispers to my soul, "Lo, it is I."

Above the tempest wild I hear Him say,
"Beyond this darkness lies the perfect day,
In every path of thine I lead the way."

So, whether on the hill-tops high and fair
I dwell, or in the sunless valleys where The shadows lie—what matter? He is there.

And more than this; where'er the pathway lead,
He gives to me no helpless, broken reed,
But His own hand, sufficient for my need.

So where He leads me I can safely go;
And in the blest hereafter I shall know
Why in His wisdom He hath led me so.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher: 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets is assorted (no two alike) will be sent, post-paid, for 10
cts., or 100 for 20 cts. Postage stamps taken.

Morsford's Acid Phosphate Makes Delicious Lemonade.

A teaspoonful added to a glass of hot or cold water, and sweetened to the taste, will be found refreshing and invigorating.

All Ladies are Interested.

The following letter shows very clearly how well satisfied those are who buy their silk dresses of O. S. Chaffee & Son, Mansfield Centre, Conn. Our readers will remember this firm manufacture silk and satin goods and sell direct from their great factory to buyers, saving all intermediate expenses:

Office of BIBLICAL RECORDER,
RALPH H. C. N. C.,
December 17, 1888.

MESSRS. O. S. CHAFFEE & SON:

Dear Sirs—The package of silk for my wife came safely and soundly to hand to-day. She is delighted with it and pleased that you were so prompt and generous with her. I highly appreciate the compliment myself, and enclose check for the $25.50.

With very best wishes,
C. T. BAILEY.

Send your name and address on a postal card to O. S. Chaffee & Son, Mansfield Centre, Conn.
They will mail you samples of silk and full descriptive circulars free.

SHOPPELL'S CLASSIFIED PORTFOLIO of Building Designs, advertised in this issue, are truly called perfect aids to intending builders.

The latest and best Imperial Photographs of Dr. Talmage and Rev. C. M. Spurgeon, with their facsimile autograph, and also imperial photograph of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher,
can be obtained from J. E. Jewett, 77 Bible House, New York. Sent postpaid for twenty-five cents each. Postage stamps taken.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico
are most pressing needed, and can be mailed to
the address of
BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH
43 Bible House, New York.

MINISTER'S POCKET RITUAL

A Hand-Book of Scripture Lessons and Forms of Service
for Marriage Confirmation, The Lord's Supper, Visitation
of Sick, Burial of Dead, Dedication, Ordinations, Installations. Suggestions on various services. For all denominations. By Rev. Henry W. Hutton, D. D., 12 mo. Limp Morocco, 81. Limp Muslin 60c. Mailed on receipt of price.
PERKINPINE & BIGGINS, 914 Arch St., Philada.

PLANTS Transplanted MAIL or EXPRESS
LARGE, Smooth Delivered FREE.
Red Tomato 25c. p. doz. $1 p. 100.
Egg Plants, 50c. per doz. Cabbage & Lettuce, 50c. per 100. Cauliflower, Early Snowball, 25c. per doz.; $1 per
100. JOHN BOLDIANO, Waverly, Md.

SAMPLE PAGES FROM THE LATEST
SUNDAY SCHOOL SONG BOOKS FREE,
THE ECHO MUSIC CO., La Fayette, Indiana

A MODEL $1,000 COTTAGE

BY
R. W. SHOPPELL, ARCHITECT.

Also Model House Designs of other Sizes and Costs. The most helpful aids ever devised for intending builders.

A large view (showing details), also large floor plans and a full description of the above design, and of 24 other designs, each of which can be built for $1,000, all beautifully printed on plate paper and enclosed in a handsome cloth portfolio, will be sent by express, prepaid, on receipt of $2. I have, also, the following:

Portfolio of $1,500 Houses, 25 designs, Price $2
" 2,000 "	25 "	"
" 2,500 "	25 "	"
" 3,000 "	28 "	"
" 3,500 "	32 "	"
" 4,000 "	26 "	"
" 5,000 "	25 "	"
" 6,000 "	22 "	"
" 7,500 "	20 "	"
" 10,000 "	16 "	"
" Stables, "	16 "	"

Any 3 of the above Portfolios for $5; any 7 for $10; the complete set (12) for $15. Pamphlet of specimen pages, 25c. Address R. W.
Shoppell, 63 Broadway, New York. Mention this paper.

FITS!

They Say we give the whole trade fits;
That all our Specialties are hits;
Our Fits they suit, our Suits they fit;
And that's the long and short of it.

TO OBTAIN the Famous Custom-made
Plymouth Rock $3,
$4 and $5 Pants, first
send 6 cts., for which we will mail you 20 samples,
self-measurement blanks, and linen tape-measure,
provided you MENTION THIS PAPER; or if you cannot wait for samples, tell us about the color preferred, with waist, inside leg and hip measures, remit $3, together with 35 cents to cover cost of ex-
pressage or postage, and we will forward the goods prepared to any address in the U. S., guaranteeing safe delivery and entire satisfaction or money refunded.
Remember, also, that we make to your order, Full Suits, $13.25, $16.75, $20.50; Overcoats, $12.00; and that
for any cause we refund money at buyer's request,
upon return of goods, or make alterations or new garments free of extra charge.

PLYMOUTH ROCK PANTS CO.

Address all mail to

11 to 17 Eliot St., or 18 Summer St., Boston, Mass.

BRANCH OFFICES:—285 Broadway, New York; Burnside Building, Worcester, Mass.; Gilmore House, Springfield, Mass.; 60 Market St., Lynn, Mass.; Butler's Exchange,
Providence, R. I.; Old Register Building,
New Haven, Conn.; 943 Penns. Av.,
Washington, D. C.; 72 Adams St., Chicago,
Ill.

Any one wishing to learn of our responsibility, may write the American Express Co., at Boston (capital $20,000,000), or consult the commercial agencies.

THE NEW MODEL, OUR LATEST and BEST MOWER.

For Simplicity and durability,
and quality of work, it is unequalled, while for Lightness of draft
it excels by a large percentage any other Lawn Mower
made. Send for circular and price-list.
CHADBORN
& COLDWELL MANUFACTURING CO.,
NEWBURGH, N. Y.

FOR PLAYING ACCOMPANIMENTS

Just out. 165 Chords arranged so any one can play at once every accompaniment on Piano or Organ. Mailed for 25c. silver. C. C. St. John & Co., 325 Wash. St., Boston.

BONANZA to AGENTS SAMPLES FREE
GEO. A. SCOTT, New York City

SUMMER DRESSES.

We call attention to the following specialties for this week:

Black and White Striped Armure Royale, at 80 cts.;
regular price $1.15.

Black Satin Princess,
$1.00; regularly $1.25.

1,000 yards Pekin Printed Foule, at 75 cents per yard, case price $1.25.

1,500 yards Bengaline, at 75 cents, former price $1.25.

1,750 yards Silk Warp Henrietta, at 75 cts., usual
price $1.00.

These fabrics are all peculiarly adapted for use at this season of the year.
Samples sent on request.

James McCreery & Co

Broadway, cor. Eleventh St.,
NEW YORK.

PIANOS UNIVERSITY ORGANS

$150 to $1500 Guaranteed 6 years.
They Lead the World.
We sell direct to families, and send for trial in your own
home before you buy.
Catalogue Free.
Estab. 1859. Incor. 1877.
MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO.,
235 East 21st Street, N. Y.

SEATTLE No blizzards, heavy snows or cyclones.
Average winter temperature 43° above zero. Seattle, largest city in Washington on Terry. Population 25,000. Commercial, educational and financial center of Puget Sound Country. Full information of open season. CHAS. H. KITTING, 11
CITY SE-AT-TLE, Seattle, Wash. Territory

PAINLESS BEECHAM'S THE GREAT ENGLISH PILLS MEDICINE WORTH A GUINEA A BOX

For Bilious and Nervous Disorders, such as Wind and Pain in the Stomach, St Headache, Giddiness, Faintness, and Swelling after Meals, Dizziness and Drowsiness Cold Chills, Flushings of Heat, Loss of Appetite, Shortness of Breath, Costiveness Scurry, Blisters on the Skin, Disturbed Sleep, Frightful Dreams, and all Nerve and Trembling Sensations, &c. THE FIRST DOSE WILL GIVE RELIEF IN TWENTY MINUTES. This is no fiction. Every sufferer is earnestly invited to try one Box of these Pills and they will be acknowledged to be a Wonderful Medicine.—"Worth a guinea a box."
BEECHAM'S PILLS, taken as directed, will quickly restore females to complete health. For

WEAK STOMACH; IMPAIRED DIGESTION; DISORDERED LIVER
they ACT LIKE MAGIC:—a few doses will work wonders upon the Vital Organs, Strengthening the muscular System; restoring long-lost Complexion; bringing back the keen edge appetite, and arousing with the ROSEBUD OF HEALTH the whole physical energy of human frame. These are "facts" admitted by thousands, in all classes of society, and one of the best guarantees to the Nervous and Debilitated is that BEECHAM'S PILLS HAVE THE LARGEST SA-LE OF ANY PATENT MEDICINE IN THE WORLD. Full directions with each Box.

Prepared only by THOS. BEECHAM, St. Helens, Lancashire, England.
Sold by Druggists generally. B. F. ALLEN & CO., 365 and 367 Canal St., New York
Sole Agents for the United States, who (inquire first), if your druggist does not keep them,
WILL MAIL BEECHAM'S PILLS ON RECEIPT OF PRICE, 25 CENTS A BOX.

BUNYAN'S PILGRIM'S PROGRESS AND THE HOLY WAR.

A New Large Type Edition, Illustrated,
with Marginal Notes and References,
printed from new plates, and beautifully
bound in rich English muslin, with beveled edges and gilt back and side. This is the complete edition of the Pilgrim's Progress,
The Holy War, and a Memoir of John Bun-
yan, all bound in one volume of over 700
pages. Price, $1.50, sent postpaid to any address on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, N. Y.

$500 A YEAR GUARANTEED SALARY, and continuous extra to
one canvasser in each County. Business permanent and worth $1000 to $2000 a year.
No capital or experience necessary. Write for particulars,
CINCINNATI PUBLISHING CO., 109 Elm St., Cincinnati, O.

EVERY LADY WANTS A SILK DRESS

This is your opportunity. A new J. parture. SILKS
rect from the ma-
facturers to you
Our reduced pribring the b goods with reach of all.
are the only m manufacturers in U. S. selling e rect to co
sumers.
You take risk. We rant ev piece of g as repres
ed, or mo refunded.
our refer ces. We the olde Silk Manuf
ers in the U.
established in with over 60 ye experience.
We guarantee
CHAFFEE DRESS SILK for richness color, superior ish and wear qualities, to unexcelled any make

O. S. CHAFFEE & SON
Mansfield Centre, Conn.

Refer, by permission, to First National Bank, W ham National Bank, Dime Savings Bank, Williams Savings Institute, of Williamantic, Conn.

with each Dress Pattern we sent the buyer with 1000 Y
Sewing Silk, and enough
Braid to bind bottom of d

Recollect
THE GOODS are Delivered to ALL CARRYIN
CHARGES PREPAID

COOD NEW TO LADIES

Greatest offer. Now's your to get orders for our celeb Teas, Coffees, and Ha Powder, and secure a bea
Gold Band or Moss Rose Chin
Brass Lamp, Castor, or Webster's Dictionary, Set M Get Premium No. 27. For particulars add 66 and 68 CHURCH STREET, N. Y. P. O. Bo

T. DeWitt Talmage's New Book, Pen, Pulpit and P

SHOTS SUNDRY at TARGET

Aimed at Wrongs 2 B Righted, Follies 2 B Shunned
gers 2 B Avoided, Sorrows 2 B Mitigated, Victories 2 B
A treasury of his best thoughts. Beautifully illus-
700 pages, $2.75. E. B. TREAT, NEW YORK

BEECHAM'S PILLS act like magic on a weak sto-
FOR A DISORDERED LIVER try BEECHAM'S PILLS

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1889. In the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. XII., No. 19. Office, 63 Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 8, 1889.

Price, 3 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

DR. T. LEWIS, BISHOP OF ONTARIO.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.
PORTRAITS AND LIVES OF THE RIGHT REV. T. LEWIS, D. D., AND MISS ADA LEIGH.
OTHER DAYS LIVED OVER. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday.
ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.
PROPHECIES MISUNDERSTOOD.
 A Test by Insult—A Cripple Healed—The Boy Missionary—A Japanese Martyr—The Famine in China.
THE BELIEVING THIEF. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
 Gems from New Books: The Pious Soldier—Landlord—The Call from God—Irish Tenants.
PICTURE OF THE BIRTHPLACE OF THE WESLEYS.
PORTRAIT OF MR. JOHN G. WHITTIER, the Quaker Poet.
PICTURE OF THE UNIVERSITY OF LONDON, ONTARIO.
ADA BRISTOWE'S MOMENTOUS SICKNESS. (With Illustration.)
ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS. An Autobiographical Story by Mrs. Stenhouse. (Continued.)
THE LORD'S SUPPER. By Mrs. Baxter.

MISS ADA LEIGH, OF PARIS.

THE BISHOP OF ONTARIO AND HIS BRIDE—A Moonlight Excursion on Snow-Shoes.

THE BISHOP OF ONTARIO AND MISS ADA LEIGH.

The Bishop's Personal History—His Marriage on February 20—Miss Leigh's Homes in Paris—Her Visit to a Shop-Girl in 1861—Begins Her Bible-Class in 1868—Memorable Meeting with a Scotch Girl—The Young Women's Christian Association Established—The Rise and Growth of the Home—Valuable Branches—Cases of Good Accomplished—Origin of the Orphanage—M. Galignani's Munificent Kindness—Baronne Rothschild's Gift—The Young Men's Home.

FEW marriages have awakened so much interest amongst young and friendless women in France, as that which on February 20, 1889, united the Lord Bishop of Ontario, Canada, to Miss Ada Leigh, of Paris, whose portraits are given this week on our first page.

Dr. Tarver Lewis, Bishop of Ontario, is a native of Cork, Ireland, and is about fifty-five years of age. He has been forty years in Ontario, and having been consecrated when quite young Bishop of that distant and extensive diocese, has held the office for twenty-seven years. He has the reputation of being a man of deep religious thought, and varied powers. It was owing to his action when the Episcopal Church was convulsed and agitated by certain rationalistic writings of the late Bishop Colenso, of South Africa, twenty-five years ago, that the first Lambeth Conference of Bishops was initiated, Bishop Tarver Lewis feeling that such a conference would be a strong link in binding the colonial Churches to the mother-Church in England, and so do much to prevent their drifting into error. The Bishop of Ontario has been repeatedly styled by his admiring brother bishops of the great Dominion in labors most abundant and in perils oft. He is deeply beloved by his clergy, his diocese having gained the deserved distinction of being one of the best organized and most efficient in Canada, while he has earned the high honor of never having once failed to keep an appointment, in spite of the difficulties and dangers of transit from snow and storm.

"The St. Paul of Canada"

The marriage took place at the British Embassy, Paris, Lady Lytton and her beautiful daughters evidencing the esteem in which they hold the bride by attending the wedding. A feature very unusual at a bishop's wedding was the bride's cortège, which consisted of the children of her Orphanage old enough to attend. One who was present says they looked

A Bright-Eyed, Rosy-Cheeked Brigade, and before the ceremony commenced Lady Lytton complimented the teacher on their charming appearance. The little girls were dressed in dark blue cloth frocks, mantles, and hoods, and they had posies of various hues in their bosoms. When Miss Leigh entered the chapel, they formed a procession, and followed behind her like bridesmaids. The Bishop of Quebec officiated, and the Hon. Hector Fabre, the Canadian Commissioner in Paris, and other distinguished Canadians were present. In the afternoon the Bishop of Ontario and Mrs. Lewis received their friends at the Orphanage.

"Miss Leigh's Homes" in Paris.

It is always pleasant and encouraging to hear of the small beginning from which great and beneficent works have had their rise. On December 17, 1861, an ever-memorable day to her, and to all who have been helped by her, an English young lady, about nineteen years of age, "finishing her education," paid her first visit to an English shop-girl in the Faubourg St. Honoré. She had obtained leave to come and read the Bible to her on Sunday afternoons.

A School-Girl's Loving Thought

for a friendless countrywoman in a foreign land, far from home, far from all her earliest Sabbath influences, was destined to have momentous results. The opportunity seized, there came with it an evident, and as yet unentered, door for much more work of the same kind. An indefinable yearning to do good was felt with increasing intensity, and to win souls to Christ.

In the years 1868-69 Miss Leigh was drawn from her home in England to revisit Paris by the spell of this happy recollection, and encouraged by the belief that there would be found in the very heart of the French capital a great and providential opening for A Hitherto Unattempted Work.

Miss Leigh and her sister wrote some hundreds of little notes, and finding out where English girls resided or lodged, sent them affectionate invitations to come and spend a quiet hour together in the afternoon of the following Sunday.

Very few people had any idea of the number of young Englishwomen who go to Paris in quest of employment, or lured thither by doubtful advertisements. I many cases it is a great and perilous venture. Some of gentle birth and of good education, suddenly deprived by their parents' death of home and resources, have gone in the hope of finding employment in the capacity of companion or governess, only to discover after painful search, either no opening at all, or else that the conditions on which they are received are such as to make their remaining unremunerative, if not honestly impossible. Some such have been known to walk the streets at night in Paris, homeless, penniless, heart-broken, despairing.

One afternoon in the Rue de Luxembourg, two pretty, graceful girls, one English and the other Scotch, crossed Miss Leigh's path, and she heard one of them—the Scotch girl—despairingly say, "I do not care what becomes of me!" Miss Leigh placed her hand on the desperate girl's shoulder and kindly said, "But I do!" and at the same time gave her a little note of invitation to her Sunday-afternoon meeting. Its signature, "One who cares for you" touched the heart of the unhappy girl, who, from the early age of twelve, had made her own way in the world. She appreciated the opportune and unanticipated consideration shown for her, and soon became a most earnest and deeply interested attendant at the Bible-class. Four years later it was this girl's offering of a franc (20c.) as a gift of faith and grateful love, which gave the original impulse toward the founding of Miss Leigh's now well-known excellent and extensive mission-home.

The Bible-Class

to which reference has been made, was far from encouraging at first, as for three Sundays the teacher sat alone; but on the fourth Sunday two or three timidly, and with evident curiosity, attended; but after that it rapidly increased in numbers; and the efforts thus initiated, have, through God's manifold and enriching blessing, resulted in the establishment of

The Y. W. C. A.

at 88 Faubourg St. Honoré, where free food is given on Sundays, and where the crowded rooms bear witness to the interest felt in the teaching received. Two ladies now live at these rooms, and spend their time in visiting the scattered English girls throughout Paris. Many girls attend who go to no place of worship, others to seek the only refuge open to them between their own miserable attics and the crowded Boulevard. It seems oftentimes to bring back to them the thought of childhood's home. After dinner, which to many is the only good meal they partake of in the week, a gospel address is given, and favorite hymns are sung.

The Home

at 77 Avenue Wagram, which was the earliest and almost immediate outcome of the Bible-class and the Young Women's Christian Association, was opened on December 20, 1872. It commenced with twelve beds, all of which were quickly occupied. The number soon increased to twenty-six, and then to thirty-six, as fresh apartments were added. In 1874 circumstances occurred which necessitated the immediate purchase of the Home. The responsibility of collecting the amount required (about $50,000) was undertaken in simple faith and prayer. The deed of contract was signed, engaging to pay the sum within a stipulated time. Some two months before that time expired the last instalment was paid in; and so the faith and love which had inspired the Scotch girl's gift of the franc had surely brought down an acknowledgment from the God of faith and love Himself. Since its opening this Home has brightened and effectually helped the lives of not fewer than 5,500 of Young Girls.

The house consists of eight étages, or floors, with about seventy rooms. It is divided into five Homes: 1. For Daily and Unemployed Governesses—2. For shop-girls, and others, employed in the day. 3. For Ladies'-maids, Nurses, etc., seeking situations, for all of whom a free registry is kept. 4. A crèche. 5. A Sanatorium. Besides all this, a mission-service is held twice a week, and classes for men, women, and children have been successfully carried on. A soup-kitchen is opened during the winter months, which has kept many from starvation. A home for apprentices in shops, at 26 Faubourg St. Honoré, was opened by Miss Leigh, February 10, 1873; and a Home for Governesses and Artists, now at 153 Faubourg St. Honoré, by the late Earl of Shaftesbury, May 8, 1878.

The work of the Home must be considered as a preventive work, as was pleaded by a girl in her dying agony, when one night she had sent a message to the Home to ask to be visited. She asked, "Do you remember me?" "No," was the answer. "You spoke to me when you were in Paris some years ago, and invited me to your Bible-class. I heard you had formed a Home for us, but I did not feel it right to ask for admission. I am dying! You know I am not on good terms with Christian people, because all that they give is good advice. They do not know and save her. They build fine institutions for us when we are lost, but who will build one to prevent our being so? Do they know that many a girl sins to live?" Words can never express the dying energy with which these words were spoken, or the bitterness with which they sank into the heart of the only one, save God, who heard them. This poor girl, a wreck at twenty-seven, was living, or rather dying, on her pledged clothing. All that was possible was procured for her. She made a touching request to the lady who visited her: "Let me die on something of yours—the pillow on which your own head rests." It was readily granted, and upon it the poor weary one breathed her last; her soul, it was believed, daring to rest on Jesus.

How to Take a Girl by the Hand

The Saving Work of the Institution can scarcely be overrated. One who had been brought to Paris on false pretenses, and found herself homeless in the great city, had attempted her life, but was mercifully rescued before it was too late, and brought to the Home. On being asked why she had done so, she replied, "Ah! it was not that I wished to die, but that I did not know how to live. If only a dog had pulled my skirts I would have come back!" The utter exhaustion of mind and body ended in a long illness, of which it was difficult to foretell the issue; but saddest of all were the hard thoughts she entertained of Him who longed to bear her burden. She refused all comfort, and desired as a favor that none would pray for her. One evening, four children, who had been brought into the Home the same day as she was, were singing English hymns in an adjoining room; and she asked if they might come and sing to her. The words which the children had sung did not die away with the tune, but evidently sank deeply into the poor young woman's heart. That night, as Miss Leigh was watching by her for the first part of the night, her mind wandered back to one of the sweet hymns the children had sung—"I heard the voice of Jesus say;" and coming to the words, "Weary, and worn, and sad,"

She Moaned, "That's Me!"

What did He do? Fill it up! fill it up! and never rested till she had heard the whole of the beautiful story which tells how Jesus gives the "weary, worn, and sad," "rest." By-and-by advent, and by the consummation of all things before His judgment throne, we should better understand Paul's mystical exhortation: "It remaineth that both they that have wives be as though they had none; and they that weep as though they wept not; and they that rejoice as though they rejoiced not; and they that buy as though they possessed not; and they that use this world as not abusing it." So may each one of us be moved to live, henceforth, from the devout and careful study of this hope and warning of Christ; ever looking for the blessed hope and the glorious appearance of our great God and Saviour, with this prayer ever in our hearts: Even so, Lord Jesus, come quickly.

A TEST BY INSULT.

THE conversion of an abandoned scoffer is described by Mr. C. J. Lanphier, founder of the Fulton Street Prayer-meeting, whose portrait and life were published in this journal on January 23. Some time ago a poor debased drunkard, a leader among the toughs, was reclaimed, and became an evangelist. He was announced to hold a meeting, and the building was crowded by his old associates, some of whom believed his conversion was not sincere. One especially was indignant at what he believed his hypocritical pretences, and swore he would denounce him to his face. At the close of the meeting this one went on the platform, and said to the speaker, "Do you know me?" "Yes," was the reply; "we have worked together in the mines." "And do you know what I think of you?" was the question; but before there was any reply, the scoffer answered his own question by deliberately spitting in the evangelist's face. "Jim," said the insulted man "when we worked together before I was converted, did you think me a coward?" "No, you were plucky enough." "If you had done then what you have done now, wouldn't it have cost you your life?" "I suppose it would." "Well, then, Jim, I forgive you as my Master forgave those who spat on Him." The ruffian slunk abashed from the platform, and out of the hall. That night the evangelist was called out of his bed to pray with his assailant, whose shame at what he had done, and his amazement at the manner in which his insult had been received, had passed on, under the Spirit's influence, into concern about his own soul, and terror at his danger. Before morning he had found peace through Christ.

A CRIPPLE HEALED.

A FRIEND in Florida sends us the following account of the remarkable healing of a cripple: A man of about forty years of age completely lost the use of his lower limbs. His life for over four years was a burden to himself. He could move from room to room only by dragging himself along with his hands. He had been fond of gardening, and it grieved him to see the little patch behind his house overgrown with weeds. His ingenuity at last found a way of overcoming the difficulty. He had stout hooks driven in the fence, to which ropes were attached. By clinging to these ropes with his hands he was able to pull his poor, helpless body along the paths between the beds, and in a sitting posture pull up the weeds. Still, his helplessness preyed upon his mind, and one day he became so depressed that he prayed earnestly that God would take him to Himself, as he was only a burden on his family. His prayer suggested to him another thought. If, as he knew, life and death were in the hands of God, health was also in His hands, and nothing was impossible with Him. He took his Bible, and carefully read all the recorded instances of healing, and was convinced that in his own case there were no greater difficulties than in those which Jesus had healed. He sent for his minister, and told him of the conclusion he had reached, and implored him to have a special service of prayer in the church for him. The minister was impressed by the poor cripple's faith, and could not resist his reasoning that Jesus, being as accessible now as when on earth, and having fully as great power now as then, would surely exercise it. Still he shrank from the public test. He offered to hold a prayer-meeting, and pray for the cripple's recovery, but he did not like having the man brought there, and laid before the altar for healing. He feared that if there were no healing, scoffers would ridicule all concerned. The cripple, however, had stronger faith, and was so earnest, and withal so logical, that eventually the minister yielded.

The meeting was held. At first he was laid in the aisle, but as the service proceeded he asked to be carried to the altar. When the men lifted him his lower limbs hung helplessly from his body, as if they did not belong to him. He was laid at the altar, and there was an interval of silent prayer. After a short time the man made an effort to rise. Some friends went to his assistance; but he said, "No, the Lord will give me power: keep on praying. I feel the blood coursing through my legs. They are throbbing with life." After three efforts the man rose, and in a loud voice gave glory to God. He walked unassisted from the church to his home, and the whole congregation followed him, wondering at the great things which had been done.

THE BOY MISSIONARY.

A VERY sorrowful funeral service was held in London on April 9. A bereaved father, who is an African missionary, accompanied by representatives of three missionary societies, stood by the grave of a little fellow of seven summers, who has been himself a true missionary of Christ in the heart of Africa. "Little Jack," as he was lovingly called, was the son of Captain Edward C. Howe, of the London Missionary Society, and went out with his father and mother when he was a baby of three months. There, far away from any white people, Jack learned to speak in the native language, and, until he returned with his parents to England in October last, he knew but a very few words of English. He was taught in the mission school with the native children, and had these for his only playmates. Young as he was, Jack had a deep sense of religion. He was present at all the mission meetings, and the winsome little fellow was petted and loved by children and their parents alike. He was himself an extraordinary attraction, and gave by his very presence a wonderful impulse to the work of his father and mother. But his influence was by no means confined to this. Little Jack would talk seriously and affectionately to the children, with his arm around their necks or their waists, of the good Father in heaven, and the Lord Jesus who died to save them from their sins. "Even the Arab slave-traders loved him," says the sorrowing father. An Arab cloth presented to Jack by one of these men was used as his funeral pall. The station at Lake Tanganyika was an exceptionally healthy one, and Jack from a delicate child grew well and strong. There was no symptom of illness on his return to England until a few days before his death, when he caught a fatal chill. Since his return to England Jack was busy in his home at Highgate learning his native language.

A JAPANESE MARTYR.

IN a letter to the Interior from Osaka, Japan, Mr. B. C. Haworth gives the sad details of the assassination of Count Mori, who has been prominent in the work of religious and political reform in Japan. This enlightened statesman was murdered on February 11, this year, the day on which the new constitution was proclaimed. He was the Minister of Education in the Emperor's Cabinet, and had done more than any others to bring about the civil and religious liberty granted under the new constitution. Mr. Haworth says: "It is customary for the emperor, on every national holiday, to depute some of his court to visit the shrines of his ancestors and other sacred places, to worship at the cenotaphs according to ancient Shinto rites. It is said that Viscount Mori had once expressed the opinion that it was time Japan gave up such nonsense, and that this remark led to his assassination. Probably the truer reason is that once he entered the sacred shrine at Shiba without removing his boots, a glaring offence against the purity of the temple and the glory of a revered ancestry. His assassin was a religious fanatic, and doubtless thought he was doing true service for the gods of Japan.

"The day for this dark deed was well chosen. When could a better day be found to record a bloody protest against the changes now so seriously threatening the old religion? All Japan had assembled, in the person of its official representatives, to receive from the "Son of Heaven" the instrument which put an end formally and forever to the old order of things. The Viscount Mori was busily engaged preparing for the scenes of that eventful morning. A young man urged his way in, asking an interview with him and refusing to give his message to the attendants. Presently the distinguished nobleman appeared, and the murderer, pressing near to him, apparently in earnest conversation threw his left arm around the unsuspecting Mori, and with his right thrust a knife into his victim's side. The murderer was instantly killed by the sword of one of the guards, but his work had been too well done. The Count died the next day and was buried with all the honors of state, according to the rites of the Shinto religion. Heathenism is yet far from relinquishing its hold upon the Japanese people.

THE FAMINE IN CHINA.

THE latest reports from the famine-stricken provinces state that total absence of food is causing the death of multitudes daily. Distressing accounts are constantly arriving from Shantung, Newchang, and Monkden, in the Shanghai district. Relief works are in full operation, saving lives, and helping to prepare for the spring harvest in May. At Newchang a relief expedition has been organized by one of the missionaries who are devoting themselves to this work in a climate where the thermometer stands constantly below zero. Many families, whose clothing and furniture have been sold or burnt for fuel, live on a broth made of chopped willow leaves, or the husks of millet. Some families have not even this, and are starving to death. The distributors of relief, too, run no little risk. The writer says: "The people in most cases are driven almost to madness by hunger; and when one is in their midst alone, with just sufficient knowledge of the language to make one's self understood, the position is not an enviable one, quite apart from the ghastly sights and the unwholesome smells." Some Catholic priests who have arrived at Shanghai report the existence of severe famine in many parts of Anhui and Kiangsu, and state that as many as ten million lives are in danger; but they strongly urge that the distribution of relief funds should on no account be entrusted to Chinese hands. The Rev. Thomas Bramfitt says: "The present famine is terrible indeed. Multitudes perish daily, and there is not much prospect of any material mitigation of its horrors for some months to come. Fortunately, the scene of the distress is easily accessible by water, via the Yang Tse River, and the Grand Canal, and the Northern Lakes, and there is every reason to expect that the greater part of the supplies forwarded will reach the starving crowds, and that untold thousands will be saved from a terrible death. If the Church of Christ does her duty in this present distress the result will be the firm establishment of Christianity in Honan—a province which has hitherto been one of the most anti-foreign and idolatrous in all China, and where our brethren of the Inland Mission have hitherto with difficulty obtained the very scantiest footing." One cent a day is sufficient to keep a Chinaman alive,

Prophetic Studies. A Report of the Address

delivered at the Prophetic Conference at Chicago, with portraits of some of the speakers. It contains 216 pages. Fifty cents in paper covers, including postage. Address Manager, 63 Bible House, New York.

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 3 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Centenary of Washington's Inauguration was celebrated on Tuesday and Wednesday of last week in a manner worthy of the occasion. New York has probably never witnessed before in her history so magnificent a pageant, as she has certainly never before entertained so many guests. Every State in the Union sent a deputation headed by its Governor. It is believed that fully a million visitors came to take part in or to witness the ceremonies. The President, accompanied by the Vice-President, and all the members of his Cabinet except Mr. Blaine, arrived on Monday, April 28, and was splendidly received and entertained. On Tuesday the celebration commenced by a service in St. Paul's Church at 9 A. M., at which President Harrison attended, as Washington did a hundred years ago, and he sat in the pew Washington used to occupy. Thence the party adjourned to the steps of the Sub-Treasury building, where, after prayer had been offered, Mr. Whittier's beautiful poem was read. It was a disappointment that the venerable author was unable to be present to read it himself. Mr. Chauncey M. Depew then delivered an oration, reviewing the history of the country during the past hundred years. Mr. Harrison made a brief speech, and then the party left for the reviewing stand, past which the procession of the Governors and militia of the States filed, 50,000 strong. It took six hours to pass the reviewing stand. Along the line of march the buildings were gaily decorated, and triumphal arches had been erected in Washington Square and Madison Square. At night the city was illuminated, and there were displays of fireworks in the parks. On Wednesday a still more interesting procession occupied the same route. Fully 100,000 men, representing the trades of the country, marched past the President, the various contingents headed by floats on wheels, emblematically representing the respective occupations. In our next number we hope to publish pictures of some of the features of the celebration.

The Address of Bishop Potter at the Service in St. Paul's Church on April 30 was remarkable for plainness of speech, and for a view of the situation in marked contrast with the congratulatory speeches delivered elsewhere and at other times during the celebration. Other speakers were eloquent on the advance the nation had made during the century, and when 1789 was contrasted with 1889, it was to show the superiority of the latter over the former. Bishop Potter was at some pains to show that whatever the material progress might have been, the Government and the nation had little cause to rejoice over moral progress. Some who listened to the Bishop must have felt uncomfortable when he said: "The conception of the national Government as a huge machine, existing mainly for the purpose of rewarding partisan service—this was a conception so alien to the character and conduct of Washington and his associates that it seems grotesque even to speak of it. It would be interesting to imagine the first President of the United States confronted with some one who had ventured to approach him upon the basis of what are now commonly known as practical politics. But the conception is impossible." And again, as if the Bishop foresaw the character of the speeches that would be made about our increased wealth, words were uttered in solemn warning. He said: "Another enormous difference between this day and that of which it is the anniversary, is seen in the enormous difference in the nature and influence of the forces that determine our national and political destiny. Then ideas ruled the hour. To-day there are indeed ideas that rule our hour, but they must be merchantable ideas. The growth of wealth, the prevalence of luxury, the massing of large material forces, which by their very existence are a standing menace to the freedom and integrity of the individual, the infinite swagger of our American speech and manners, mistaking bigness for greatness, and sadly confounding gain and godliness—all this is a contrast to the austere simplicity, the unpurchasable integrity, of the first days and first men of our republic." The Bishop has been blamed for uttering such words at such a time and before such an audience; but it would have been a dereliction of duty on his part if, believing what he said, he had failed to utter it when he had before him the men who are the official representatives of the nation, and whose influence for good or evil is felt throughout the land.

A Deplorable Railroad Catastrophe was a Sad incident connected with the Centennial Celebration. About 7 o'clock A. M., on Sunday, April 28, the limited express train from Chicago to New York was approaching Hamilton, Ont., when it ran off the track. The train was composed of ten cars, containing about 125 passengers from Detroit and western points who were going to New York to witness the centennial. It came down a steep grade which terminated in a double curve. The tracks were slippery and the train heavy, and being late the driver was anxious to make up time, so that it was running at a high rate of speed. At the bottom of the grade it turned the first curve safely, but instead of turning the next, it rushed straight on and struck the water tank. The wreck was terrible. The smoker and the leading day coach were telescoped, and imprisoned eighteen passengers—fifteen men and three women—in the cars, which immediately took fire, and they were burned to death. When taken from the wreck four hours afterward, the bodies were burned beyond recognition. Two other passengers were crushed to death. Eight of the ten cars were burned up, but the passengers in the rear cars escaped before the fire reached them. An examination of the debris resulted in the discovery that one of the engine axles was broken, and it is probable that it broke before the train was wrecked and may have been the cause of the catastrophe.

A Revival of Interest in the Proceedings of the Parnell Commission has been occasioned by the appearance of Mr. Parnell on the witness-stand. It was confidently predicted that his cross-examination would show him to have been cognizant of murderous plots, if he did not directly aid and abet the criminals. Up to the close of last week, however, no such admission was extracted from him. His manner under cross-examination was cool and wary, and every attempt to confuse him or to entrap him into a confession of complicity with the extreme section of his party was dexterously thwarted. He said that he had always repudiated the dynamiters and physical force party in America, and denounced them in the House of Commons. He quoted from his own speeches, at various dates, passages in which he had urged the people to respect the law and the constitution. He said he had endeavored to restrain Mr. O'Brien and other violent speakers and writers, but acknowledged that he had not been successful. He expressed his regret that he had not been more earnest and emphatic in denouncing outrages. He said he had not expected that they would be committed when he had heard threats of them. His plan was to buy out the landlords, not to shoot them. An important confession was, however, elicited from him on Friday. His attention was called to a statement he had made in 1881, in the House of Commons, to the effect that the Irish secret societies had ceased to exist. Mr. Parnell was asked if that was true. He said it was not, and under pressure he owned that he did not believe the statement when he made it, but had deliberately told the untruth to mislead the House. The effect of this admission on the court will be momentous. It will naturally be asked whether a man who deliberately lied in the House may not have done so on the witness-stand.

The Work of the Samoan Conference in Berlin is being mapped out by its sub-committee. The Berlin correspondent of the London Times expresses the opinion that the Conference will decide upon the appointment of a triumvirate body of administration or supervision in Samoa, composed of representatives of Germany, England, and the United States, which will act as a sort of council to the native sovereign, whoever he may be. This scheme is an improvement on the one about which the Washington Conference disagreed. That was to give the representative of Germany the right to act for the three powers. Meanwhile Germany has retraced another arrogant step by releasing King Malietoa, whom she has held prisoner. One of the most difficult of the questions before the Conference is that of the constitution of a tribunal to hear and adjudicate the claims on the land which are bringing natives and foreigners into antagonism.

General Boulanger's Welcome in London from the press has not been altogether cordial. The Standard spoke of him as an aspiring politician, and warned him that he could not make London his headquarters to plot against France, but that if he behaved himself he was welcome. The Pall Mall Gazette was still more outspoken and less friendly. It compared the General to that Napoleon who wrecked France in the name of the people, and said that Boulanger had a gang of plunderers in his suite such as would have adorned the Second Empire, and added that his word was of no value, since he had lied under less pressure on a matter less important. Lord Randolph Churchill and other celebrities have called upon him, and his organs in the French press have made all the capital they could out of the visits. Careful observers of the French people believe that his popularity is increasing, and that he is destined to play an important part in the future of France.

The Delicate Questions Involved in the Succession to the thrones of Holland and Luxemburg are not to be solved at present. To the surprise of the statesmen of Europe, who were discussing the future of the two countries under the impression that the King was near death, he has recovered sufficiently to resume his duties. On May 2 the Dutch Parliament, by a unanimous vote, passed a resolution restoring his power. The announcement was received with cheers. Parliament sent a message to the King congratulating him upon the favorable turn in his disease. The Duke of Nassau, now Regent of Luxemburg, has been notified politely that there is no further occasion for his services.

An Important Speech by a French Royalist leader was made in Paris on May 1. M. Duval, who is recognized as the most able of the followers of the Comte de Paris, the claimant of the French throne, earnestly warned his party against an alliance with Boulanger, which some of them are advocating. He contended that, as Boulanger professed to be a Republican, they could have no community of interests with him. He urged them to be faithful to the monarchy, which, he said, had always given France peace, a regular government, and free institutions in spite of all the crises it had traversed. He expressed a firm conviction that France would return to the monarchical principle, of which the Comte de Paris was the sole representative, and the one mean of salvation open to France and the French people, as it is on this only common ground that Conservatives and Liberals can unite.

The Many Friends of the Venerable Dr. Asah will be grieved to learn that he died at home in England on April 4. He was in his ninetieth year. Up till within a few hours of death, when he sank into unconsciousness, he was, in sweetness of Christian character and bearing, and happy trustfulness of heart, just as he had been for so many years past. His last hour of conscious life was spent in prayer for "a world of sinners lost," and that God would baptize His Church, and "send forth ten thousand missionaries" to carry the tidings of His grace.

A Reporter is Attracting Large Audiences in Charleston, S. C., by his preaching. A dispatch from that city says that on April 28 fifteen hundred people assembled at the Grand Opera House to hear a sermon by Henry D. Owen, a newspaper reporter. The newspaper men of the city were there in full force. However, the son of a Methodist minister, educated for the ministry in 1882, was engaged as a reporter in Charleston, S. C. He fell into dissipated ways, and has been drifting around from paper to paper ever since, but recently he has spent most of his time in the hospital, having had several narrow escapes from violent death. He related the story of his own life. He said he had been saved by grace, and that in thus publicly telling his story he was obeying the call to enter the service of God and temperance.

A Gay and Happy Scene on Shipboard was witnessed in the docks at Philadelphia on April 1. Captain Hamilton Murrell, of the steamer Missouri, held a reception on board his vessel. His friends and admirers, with such of the passengers he had rescued as remained in Philadelphia, went to bid him good-bye. The young captain was kept busy for three hours shaking hands with the crowds who thronged the vessel, and receiving the thanks of the people who had saved their lives to his exertions. At last he was overcome, and went below, and took refuge in his cabin until the time of sailing. After he started on his voyage it was disclosed that he and his officers had not taken their share of the handsome testimonial raised for them in Philadelphia, but had left it to be distributed among each of the Danmark's passengers as, having left their all in the wrecked steamer, were utterly destitute. His magnanimous conduct will increase the grateful affection the immigrants obviously felt for him. It may serve to remind them of another rescue and relief. Christ not only saves those who love Him from eternal death, but supplies their needs in life. (Eph. 4:8.)

A Bridegroom's Solution of a Puzzle Involved him in a mortifying separation from his bride recently. When the east bound train on the Central Railroad drew up at Utica, N. Y., on the evening of April 30, a young man, elegantly dressed, alighted, and entering the waiting-room, went to the candy counter and asked for two boxes of caramels. While they were being put up for him he picked up a new puzzle that was lying on the counter and tried to solve it. The thing seemed so simple that he expected to conquer it in a minute, but each time he was foiled, and his failure piqued him. He was determined to succeed, and at last accomplished it. "There," he said, triumphantly, "I've done it," and laying it down he picked up his caramels, paid for them, and went out on the platform to take his place in the car. It was too late, the train was steaming out of the depot. He was in utter consternation. He said he had been married only that morning, and his wife was on the train. They were on their wedding tour, and he had only left her a few moments to get the caramels, but he had been so absorbed with the childish puzzle that he had not noticed how time was flying. He was deeply mortified, but there was no going back that night, and all he could do was to telegraph to his wife at Albany that he would expect her as early as possible the next morning. Happily they who, when the cry is raised, behold the bridegroom cometh! are so absorbed in worldly business and pleasure that they are not ready to meet Him, have not even that consolation. Shame, sorrow, and the great tribulation lie between them and reunion. (Matt. 25:10.)

A Reporter's Voluntary Incarceration in a lunatic asylum in Chicago is leading to important results. For some time past it has been rumored that the patients in the asylum of Cook's County, Ill., were being cruelly treated. The charges were indignantly denied, but a reporter took a practical way of investigating them. He feigned madness, and did it so successfully that he was arrested on the street, was pronounced insane by the official physicians, and committed to the asylum. He remained there for two weeks, and was then liberated. He is now publishing a graphic account of what he endured and of what he witnessed. Among other statements, was one that he had seen a patient so brutally beaten by three attendants that the man died from the injuries they inflicted upon him. Inquiry was made, and an autopsy ordered. Though the death certificate stated that the patient died from natural causes, the autopsy proved that he had suffered just the injuries the reporter described. On April 29, the three attendants were arrested, and arraigned on the charge of murder. The discovery of this case and the reporter's story of his own sufferings will, it is expected, lead to a thorough reform of asylum abuses and the adoption of more humane methods. No more effective means of investigation and exposure could have been devised, but none but a heroic, self-sacrificing man would have executed it. That a sane man should have voluntarily lived among the insane that he might save them from brutality, reminds us of the far greater sacrifice which Christ made when He, the Sinless One, lived among sinners, suffered, and died that He might deliver them from death. (Heb. 5:7-9.)

The Selection of a Minister to Officiate at a wedding was based on somewhat incongruous grounds some years ago. The Lewiston (Me.) Journal, in the course of some reminiscences of Camp-meeting John Allen, says that Allen knew a man who belonged to a very large family. This man was frequently turning up with a request that Allen would officiate at the funeral of one or other of his relatives. Finally the man's wife died, and the famous evangelist attended her funeral too. In the course of time the widower resolved to take a second wife, proposed, was accepted, but, to the surprise of his friends, put off the marriage until Mr. Allen arrived. When the old man put in his appearance, the brother waited on him and asked him to tie the knot, at the same time remarking: "You see, brother Allen, I have got so used to having you around in times of trouble, that it just seemed to me I couldn't have the wedding till you come." Allen laughingly consented, and confessed afterward that he never had so much difficulty in keeping a demure face at a religious ceremony as when uniting that couple. He perceived that a cynical person would interpret the bridegroom's expression as implying that the wedding was one of the times of trouble when his services would be appropriate, though he doubtless understood his real meaning. The man wanted in his season of joy the ministrations of the friend whose sympathy had helped him in times of sorrow. That desire is not too common. There are many who go to Christ in their troubles, who forget Him when they are happy. (Deut. 8:13, 14.)

An Attempt to Cheat a Hotel-Keeper had a strange termination in Missouri some time ago. A gentleman, now in prosperous circumstances, relating some of his reminiscences to a party of friends in New York last week, said that when he was a young man he went West to seek his fortune, but failed miserably, and resolved to return to the East. On his way he lost the little money he had left, and was obliged to walk. One afternoon, after walking thirty miles that day, he found himself in a small town in Missouri. He could go no farther, he had disposed of his watch and ring, and had no way of raising enough money to pay for a night's lodging. He stood leaning listlessly against a fence considering what he should do, when a runaway team came along, and right in its way was a little child! He jumped forward and snatched the little one out of danger only just in time to save it from being crushed. Then he returned to the consideration of his problem. Finally he went boldly into the chief hotel of the town, ordered a good supper and a bed, and found to his joy that his manner and his good clothes made a sufficient impression of solvency to prevent a request for pre-payment. Early the next morning he slipped quietly out of the hotel, and walked hard. He was four miles away when he was overtaken by the landlord in a buggy. The traveller trembled with shame and apprehension. "Look here!" said the landlord, "you need not have gone off like that. Your bill was paid for you after you went to bed last night, by the lady whose child you saved. She is my sister, and I have followed you to make you a present, and he thrust four five-dollar bills into his hand. How many there are who, knowing the dread record standing against them, tremble when they think of meeting God, not knowing that Christ has secured its discharge by His death, and by believing on Him and pleading His merits they may anticipate that day of account with joy, and not with fear. (Heb. 10:17-20.)

BRIEF NOTES.

The Minnesota Legislature has passed a bill declaring drunkenness a crime and providing for its punishment.

Dr. Edward Judson, of New York, is conducting a series of special services at the Broadway Baptist Church, Louisville, Ky.

In the Baptist Home for the Aged in New York is a lady who was two years old when George Washington was inaugurated.

The Rev. Bradford Kenney Peirce, D. D., the well-known M. E. clergyman, died at his home at Newton, Mass., on April 19.

The income of the Baptist Missionary Union for the year ended April 1, 1889, was $398,394. The expenditures exceeded that amount by $8,173.

Ex-Gov. John S. Pillsbury, of Minnesota, has given $150,000 to the State University to relieve it of the difficulties arising from the deficient appropriation.

Mr. James B. Colgate, of New York, has commenced the erection of the new library building for Madison University. He expects to spend over $100,000 upon it.

The International Convention of Young Men's Christian Associations assembles this day in Philadelphia for its twenty-eighth annual session. The meetings will continue until May 12.

Major Whittle closed his services at Aberdeen, Scotland, on April 29. He is at Stirling this week, whence he goes to Inverness. His son, and Dr. Moxey, of Edinburgh, are assisting him.

Two Japanese youths are now studying in Roanoke College, Va. They are sons of distinguished officers in the Mikado's service. Their names are Hidei Fukuoka, and Toyoshiro Terashima.

The revival services conducted by the Rev. J. L. Howard at Lakewood, N. J., have been blessed to the conversion of many of the worst characters in the town, including some notorious gamblers and drunkards.

A Portuguese publisher named Cassel is about to issue an illustrated edition of the Bible in one-cent numbers, similar to those issued in Italy and Spain. Messrs. Cassel, of London and New York, supply the illustrations.

Dr. A. A. Miner, while advocating the prohibitory amendment at the Fast Day service in Boston, said that he knew of a single cheque for $10,000 which came from a place a thousand miles west of Boston, to assist in defeating the amendment.

A lady, the wife of a minister in the M. E. Church in New York, called at the Mission Rooms recently, and handed one of the Missionary Secretaries $100 as "a nest egg" toward providing a home for returned missionaries in or near New York.

Miss M. F. Cusack, who is better known as the Nun of Kenmare, attended a meeting in Mrs. Joseph Cook's parlors in Boston, Mass., on April 24. Dr. James B. Dunn, Dr. A. J. Gordon, and Dr. Selah Merrill were present, and listened attentively to her disclosures of the insidious methods of the Romish Church.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has ordered that no stamps be issued to liquor dealers intending to open business in Oklahoma. It is claimed that Oklahoma lies within the limits of the Indian Territory, and that the laws prohibiting the sale of liquor in the Territory apply in consequence to the Oklahoma section.

THE BELIEVING THIEF.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"And he said unto Jesus, Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom. And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, to-day shalt thou be with me in paradise." Luke 23 : 42, 43.

His Case Typical—Saved When Jesus was at His Lowest—His Power Greater Now—The Thief's Remarkable Faith—I. The Last Companion of Our Lord on Earth—A Man Convicted of Crime—A Man Newly Awakened—In the Last Extremity—Could do no Good Works—Simply Trusted, and was Saved—II. The Companion of Our Lord at the Gates of Paradise—Bringing a Specimen Sinner—A Dream of the Gates of Heaven—The Conversion of Victorinus—III. The Lord's Sermon—Two Thieves There, but Only One Saved—The Nearness of Eternal Things—Not an Exceptional Case.

SOME time ago I preached upon the whole story of the dying thief.* I do not propose to do the same to-day, but only to look at it from one particular point of view. The story of the salvation of the dying thief is a standing instance of the power of Christ to save, and of His abundant willingness to receive all that come to Him, in whatever plight they may be. The case of the dying thief is much more similar to our conversion than it is dissimilar; in point of fact, his case may be regarded as typical rather than as an extraordinary incident. So I shall use it at this time. May the Holy Spirit speak through it to the encouragement of Those Who Are Ready to Despair!

Remember, beloved friends, that our Lord Jesus, at the time He saved this malefactor, was at His lowest. His glory had been ebbing out in Gethsemane, and before Caiaphas and Herod and Pilate, but it had now reached the utmost low-water mark. Stripped of His garments, and nailed to the cross, our Lord was mocked by a ribald crowd, and was dying in agony; then was He "numbered with the transgressors," and made as the offscouring of all things. Yet while in that condition He achieved this marvellous deed of grace. If a dying Saviour saved the thief, my argument is that He can do even more now that He liveth and reigneth. All power is given unto Him in heaven and in earth; can anything at this present time surpass the power of His grace?

It is not only the weakness of our Lord which makes the salvation of the penitent thief memorable; it is the fact that the dying malefactor saw it before his very eyes. Can you put yourself into his place, and suppose yourself to be looking upon one who hangs in agony upon a cross? Could you readily believe Him to be the Lord of glory, who would soon come to His kingdom? That was no mean faith which, at such a moment, could believe in Jesus as Lord.

Recollect, also, that he was surrounded by scoffers. It is easy to swim with the current, and hard to go against the stream. This man heard the priests, in their pride, ridicule the Lord, and the great multitude of the common people, with one consent, joined in the scorning; his comrade caught the spirit of the hour, and mocked also, and perhaps he did the same for a while; but through the grace of God he was changed, and believed in the Lord Jesus in the teeth of all the scorn.

I. Carefully note that the crucified thief was on earth. What sorry company our Lord selected when He was here! He did not consort with the religious Pharisees or the philosophic Sadducees, but He was known as "the friend of publicans and sinners." How I rejoice at this! It gives me assurance that He will not refuse to associate with me. As the Great Physician, our Lord was much with the sick; He went where there was room for Him to exercise His healing art. The whole have no need of a physician; they cannot appreciate him, nor afford scope for his skill; and therefore He did not frequent their abodes. Yes, after all, our Lord did make a good choice when He saved you and me; for in us He has found abundant room for His mercy and grace.

Our Lord's Last Companion

Lest any here should be despairing, and say, "He will never deign to look on me," I want you to notice that the last companion of Christ on earth was a sinner, and

No Ordinary Sinner.

He had broken even the laws of man, for he was a convict, who had lain in the condemned cell, and was then undergoing execution for his crimes. A convicted felon was the person with whom our Lord last consorted upon earth. What a lover of the souls of guilty men is He! What a stoop He makes to the very lowest of mankind! To this most unworthy of men the Lord of glory, ere He quitted life, spoke with matchless grace. He spoke to him such wondrous words as never can be excelled if you search the Scriptures through: "To-day thou shalt be with Me in paradise." I do not suppose that anywhere in this Tabernacle there will be found a man who has been convicted before the law, or who is even chargeable with a crime against common honesty; but if there should be such a person among my hearers, I would invite him to find pardon and change of heart through our Lord Jesus Christ. You may come to Him whoever you may be; for this man did.

This man was not only a sinner; he was

A Sinner Newly Awakened.

I do not suppose that he had seriously thought of the Lord Jesus before. According to the other evangelists, he appears to have joined with his fellow thief in scoffing at Jesus: if he did not actually himself use opprobrious words, he was so far consenting thereunto, that the evangelist did him no injustice when he said, "The thieves also, which were crucified with Him, cast the same in His teeth." Yet, now, on a sudden, he wakes up to the conviction that the man who is dying at his side is something more than a man. He reads the title over His head, and believes it to be true—"This is Jesus, the King of the Jews." Thus believing, he makes his appeal to the Messiah, whom he had so newly found, and commits himself to His hands. My hearer, do you see this truth, that the moment a man knows Jesus to be the Christ of God, he may at once put his trust in Him, and be saved?

Once more: this man whom Christ saved at last was a man who Could Do No Good Works.

If salvation had been by good works, he could not have been saved; for he was fastened hand and foot to the tree of doom. It was all over with him as to act or deed of righteousness. He could say a good word or two, but that was all; he could perform no acts; and if his salvation had depended on an active life of usefulness, certainly he never could have been saved. He was a sinner also, who could not exhibit a long-enduring repentance for sin, for he had so short a time to live. He could not have experienced bitter convictions, lasting over months and years, for his time was measured by moments, and he was on the borders of the grave. His end was very near, and yet the Saviour could save him, and did save him so perfectly.

This sinner, whom I have painted to you in colors none too black was one who believed in Jesus, and confessed his faith. He did trust the Lord. Jesus was a man, and he called Him so; but he knew that He was also Lord, and he called Him so, and said, "Lord, remember me." He had such confidence in Jesus that, if He would but only think of him, if He would only remember him when He came into His kingdom, that would be all that he would ask of Him. Alas! my dear hearers, the trouble about some of you is that you know all about my Lord, and yet you do not trust Him.

Thus I have tried to describe the man; and, after having done my best, I shall fail of my object unless I make you see that whatever this thief was, he is a picture of what you are. Especially if you have been a great offender, and if you have been living long without caring for eternal things, you are like that malefactor; and yet you, even you, may do as that thief did: you may believe that Jesus is the Christ, and commit your souls into His hands, and He will save you as surely as He saved the condemned brigand. Jesus graciously says, "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." This means that if you come and trust Him, whoever you may be, He will for no reason, and on no ground, and under no circumstances, ever cast you out. Do you catch that thought? Do you feel that it belongs to you, and that if you come to Him, you shall find eternal life? I rejoice if you so far perceive the truth.

II. In the second place, note that this man was our Lord's companion

At the Gate of Paradise.

I am not going into any speculations as to when our Lord went when He quitted the body which hung on the cross. It would seem, from some Scriptures, that He descended into the lower parts of the earth, that He might fill all things. But He very rapidly traversed the regions of the dead. Remember that He died perhaps an hour or two before the thief, and during that time the eternal glory flamed through the under world, and was flashing through the gates of paradise just when the pardoned thief was entering the eternal world. Who is this that entereth the pearl-gate at the same moment as the King of glory? Who is this favored companion of the Redeemer? Is it some honored martyr? Is it a faithful apostle? Is it a patriarch, like Abraham; or a prince, like David. It is none of these. Behold, and be amazed at a sovereign grace. He that goeth in at the gate of paradise, with the King of glory, is a thief who was saved in the article of death. He is saved in no inferior way, and received into bliss in no secondary style. Verily, there are last which shall be first!

Here I would have you notice the condescension of our Lord's choice. The comrade of the Lord of glory, for whom the cherub turns aside his sword of fire, is no great one, but a newly converted malefactor. And why? I think the Saviour took him with Him as a specimen of what He meant to do. He seemed to say to all the heavenly powers, "I bring a sinner with me; he is a sample of the rest." Have you heard of

Him Who Dreamed

that he stood without the gate of heaven, and while there he heard sweet music from a band of venerable persons who were on their way to glory? They entered the celestial portals, and there were great rejoicing and shouts. Inquiring, "What are these?" he was told that they were the goodly fellowship of the prophets. He sighed, and said, "Alas! I am not one of those. He waited a while, and another band of shining ones drew nigh, who also entered heaven with hallelujahs, and when he inquired, "Who are these, and whence came they?" the answer was, "These are the glorious company of the apostles." Again he sighed and said, "I cannot enter with them." Then came another body of men, white-robed and bearing palms in their hands, who marched amid great acclamation into the golden city. These he learned were the noble army of martyrs; and again he wept and said, "I cannot enter with these." In the end he heard the voices of people, and saw advancing, among whom he perceived Rahab and Mary Magdalene, David and Peter, Manasseh and Saul of Tarsus, and he espied especially the thief, who died at the right hand of Jesus. These all entered in—a strange company. They eagerly inquired, "Who are these?" and they answered, "This is the host of sinners saved by grace." Then was he exceeding glad and said, "I can go with these." Yet, he thought there would be no shouting at the approach of this company, and that they would enter heaven without song; instead of which there seemed to rise a seven-fold hallelujah of praise unto the Lord of love; for there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over sinner that repent.

A Greater Multitude

* "The Dying Thief in a New Light." Published in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of February 18, 1886.

While we are handling this text, note well the blessedness of the place to which the Lord called this penitent. Jesus said, "To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise." Paradise means a garden, a garden filled with delights. The garden of Eden is the type of heaven. We know that paradise means heaven, for the apostle speaks of such a man caught up into paradise, and anon he calls it the third heaven. The next word is better still. Note the glory of the society to which this sinner is introduced: "To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise." If the Lord said, "To-day shalt thou be with me," we should not need Him to add another word; for where He is, is heaven to us. He added the word "paradise," because else none could have guessed where He was going.

The stress of the text lies in the speediness of all this. "Verily I say unto thee, To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise." "To-day." Thou shalt not lie in purgatory for ages, nor sleep in limbo for so many years; but thou shalt be ready for bliss at once, and at once thou shalt enjoy it. The sinner was hard by the gates of hell, but almighty mercy lifted him up, and the Lord said, "To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise."

What a Change from the Cross to the crown, from the anguish of Calvary to the glory of the New Jerusalem! Please notice, also, the majesty of the Lord's grace in this text. The Saviour said to him, "Verily I say unto thee, To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise." Our Lord gives His own will as the reason for saving this man. "I say." He says it who claims the right thus to speak.

I have thus shown you that our Lord passed within the pearly gate in company with one to whom He had pledged Himself. Why should not you and I pass through that pearl-gate in due time, clothed in His merit, washed in His blood, resting on His power? In the early Christian church, Marcus Caius Victorinus was converted; but he had reached so great an age, and had been so gross a sinner, that the pastor and church doubted him. He gave, however, clear proof of having undergone the divine change, and then there were great acclamations, and many shouts of "Victorinus has become a Christian!" Oh that some of you big sinners might be saved! How gladly would we rejoice!

III. Now I come to my third point: note
The Lord's Sermon

to us from all this. The devil wants to preach this morning a bit. Yes, Satan asks to come to the front and preach to you; but he cannot be allowed. Avaunt, thou deceiver! Yet I should not wonder if he gets at certain of you when the sermon is over, and whispers, "You see you can be saved at the very last. Put off repentance and faith; you may be forgiven on your death-bed." Sirs, you know who it is that would ruin you by this suggestion. Abhor his deceitful teaching. Do not be ungrateful because God is kind. Do not provoke the Lord because He is patient. Such conduct would be unworthy and ungrateful. Do not run an awful risk because one escaped the tremendous peril. The Lord will accept all who repent; but how do you know that you will repent? It is true that one thief was saved—but the other thief was lost; one is saved; and we may not despair. The other is lost, and

We May Not Presume.

This man believed that Jesus was the Christ. The next thing he did was to appropriate that Christ. He said, "Lord, remember me." Jesus might have said, "What have I to do with you, and what have you to do with Me? What has a thief to do with the perfect One?" Many of you, good people, try to get as far away as you can from the erring and fallen. They might infect your innocence! Society claims that we should not be familiar with people who have offended against its laws. We must not be seen associating with them, for it might discredit us. Infamous bosh! Can anything discredit sinners such as we are by nature and by practice? If we know ourselves before God we are degraded enough in and of ourselves. Is there anybody after all, in the world who is worse than we are when we see ourselves in the faithful glass of the Word? As soon as ever a man believes that Jesus is the Christ, let him hook himself on to Him. The moment you believe Jesus to be the Saviour, seize upon Him as your Saviour.

Next, notice the doctrine of faith in its immediate power. "To-day shalt thou be with Me in Paradise." He has no sooner believed, than Christ gives him the seal of his believing in the full assurance that he shall be with Him for ever in His glory. O, dear hearts, if you believe this morning, you shall be saved this morning! God grant that you, by His rich grace, may be brought into salvation here, on the spot, and at once! The next thing is

The Nearness of Eternal Things.

Think of that a minute. Heaven and hell are not places far away. Oh that we, instead of trifling about such things, because they seem so far away, would solemnly realize them, since they are so very near! This very day, before the sun goes down, some hearer, now sitting in this place, may see, in his own spirit, the realities of heaven or hell. It has frequently happened, in this large congregation, that some one of our audience has died ere the next Sabbath has come round; it may happen this week. Think of that, and let eternal things impress you all the more because they lie so near.

Furthermore, know that if you have believed in Jesus you are prepared for heaven. It may be that you will have to live on earth twenty, or thirty, or forty years to glorify Christ; and, if so, be thankful for the privilege; but if you do not live another hour, your instantaneous death would not alter the fact that he that believeth in the Son of God is meet for heaven. Surely, if anything beyond faith is needed to make us fit to enter paradise, the thief would have been kept a little longer here; but no, he is, in the morning, in the state of nature, at noon he enters the state of grace, and by sunset he is in the state of glory. The question never is whether a death-bed repentance is accepted if it be sincere: the question is—Is it sincere?

I conclude by again saying that this is

Not an Exceptional Case,

I began with that, and I want to finish with it, because so many demi-semi-gospelers are so terribly afraid of preaching free grace too fully. I read somewhere, and I think it is true, that some ministers preach the gospel in the same way as donkeys eat thistles, namely, very, very cautiously. On the contrary, I will preach it boldly. I have not the slightest alarm about the matter. If any of you misuse free-grace teaching, I cannot help it. He that will be damned can as well ruin himself by perverting the gospel as by anything else. I cannot help what base hearts may invent; but mine it is to set forth the gospel in all its fullness of grace, and I will do it. If the thief was an exceptional case—and our Lord does not usually act in such a way—there would have been a hint given of so important a fact. A hedge would have been set about this exception to all rules. Would not the Saviour have whispered quietly to the dying man, "You are the only one I am going to treat in this way"? Whenever I have to do an exceptional favor to a person, I have to say, "Do not mention this, or I shall have so many besieging me." Moreover, the inspired penman has recorded it. If it had been an exceptional case, it would not have been written in the Word of God. Men will not publish their actions in the newspapers if they feel that the record might lead others to expect from them what they cannot give. The Saviour had this wonder of grace reported in the daily news of the Gospel, because He means to repeat the marvel every day. The bulk shall be equal to sample, and therefore He sets the sample before you all. He is able to save to the uttermost, for He saved the dying thief. The case would not have been put there to encourage hopes which He cannot fulfil. Whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, and not for our disappointing. I pray you, therefore, if any of you have not yet trusted in my Lord Jesus, come and trust in Him now. Trust Him wholly; trust Him only; trust Him at once. Then will you sing with me—

"The dying thief rejoiced to see That fountain in his day,
And there have I, though vile as he,
Washed all my sins away."

[The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Dr. Talmage and Mr. Spurgeon especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.
THE PIOUS SOLDIER—LANDLORD.*

It has often been observed that if a soldier fall at all under spiritual influences, the effect upon him is peculiarly strong. At that moment a religious revival was spreading over England and Wales. Whitfield and the two Wesleys were the leaders whose names were brought specially before the world. But these distinguished men appealed to feelings that were already alive and awake. A wave of belief was passing through the minds of men like the sap in trees, which lies dormant, as if it was dead, and rises up again and clothes the branches with leaves and flowers. The Protestant spirit of the seventeenth century, which had shaken the British Constitution, overthrown the Church, and replaced the King by a Protector, was come back to life; come back in a milder form, no longer threatening wars and revolution, but with power to seize hold on the consciences of hundreds of thousands of human beings, and to make out of evangelical Christianity a practical rule of life.

Colonel Goring was one of those who became sensible of the new impulse, and became sensible of it as a call to devote himself to anything which presented itself as a duty. He had always been what is called a religious man in the sense that he believed that he would be called to account hereafter for his conduct. But his convictions had ripened from a consciousness of responsibility to an immediate and active sense that he was a servant of God, with definite work laid upon him to do. He carried his habits as a soldier into his relations with his Commander above. Under Cromwell he would have been the most devoted of the Ironsides. In default of an appointed leader to give him orders, he looked out for direct instructions to himself in Providential circumstances, and in any accident which might befall him he looked habitually to see whether perhaps there might be a guiding hand in it.

The Call From God.

Galway had for a few years been more than half Protestant. Now scarcely a Protestant was left within the limits, and as Galway was, so were most of the principal towns in Munster. This inheritance, as Colonel Goring thought of it, might be a special direction of Providence to him to stem the stream. The longer he reflected, the more this conclusion was borne in upon him. The estate had fallen to him as a Divine call, which he was not at liberty to disobey. As a landowner he would try whether it was possible to make the small section of the country which had fallen to himself cosmic and orderly. He believed himself to be living under God's orders, as a subaltern lives under the orders of

*From "The Two Chiefs of Dunboy." By James Anthony Froude. The typical struggle, described in this book, between a pious God-fearing Irish landlord and his two foes, one of which was the careless, stupid Government, and the other a brutalized, benighted peasantry, is well worthy of study. It throws a strong light on the governing methods and social conditions which have made Ireland the most miserable of nations. The author evidently believes that neither in Home Rule nor in mild English rule is there to be found the true remedy for Irish discontent. Pp. 456; price in paper covers, 50 cents, in cloth, $1. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, 743 Broadway, New York.

The Western University, London, Ont.

John G. Whittier.

John Wesley's Birthplace. (See page 293.)

his general. If he was called superstitious, it was only, if it is superstitious, to accept what the Bible told him, and implied nothing unreal.

His Tenants.

"You see these poor people," said Goring to his companion; "they have absolute confidence in me. They trust me with their lives and their properties. Everything that I tell them they do. Every judgment that I give they respect. They know that I mean them well. They believe in me, and, I suppose that, in their way, they have a regard for me. Yet, of all the men you have seen here to-day, there is hardly one who would not try to shoot me if he was so ordered by the secret societies! There is not one, man or woman, who, if I was killed by the smugglers, would help to bring the murderers to justice. They are taught from their cradles that English rule is the cause of all their miseries. They were as ill off under their own chiefs; but they would bear from their natural leaders what they will not bear from us, and if we have not made their lot more wretched, we have not made it any better. There is not a race in the world who would be happier or more loyal if they were governed with a firm and just hand. England has tried every other remedy. This, which is the only one that can succeed, she has never tried, and I fear she never will."

JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

No more striking proof of true genius was ever given than in the thrilling poem which Mr. Whittier produced on the Washington Centennial, and which was read at the celebration in New York last week. All the facts and all the words were in the possession of the millions of our people, but there was but one man in the nation who could write anything so true, so sweet, so beautiful, as those ringing stanzas. Among the thousands of writers who have done their best with this theme, only this one could write of the national hero:

Thank God, the people's choice was just
The one man equal to his trust—
Wise beyond lore, and without weakness good,
Calm in the strength of flawless rectitude!

Long after all other souvenirs and relics of the celebration are lost, this poem will be treasured as the one priceless gem it called into existence.

John Greenleaf Whittier is over eighty years old—having been born December 17, 1808, at Haverhill, Mass. His childhood was passed in laborious poverty. He worked on his father's farm, and eked out a livelihood in addition by shoemaking. But he was studious, and such scant opportunities as he had of obtaining an education he used to so good a purpose that at the age of twenty-two he was editing a newspaper in Boston. Before that he had attained "the dignity of print." Some of his lines, composed while he was following the plough, were printed in the Haverhill Gazette. Subsequently he became editor of the New England Review, and after that of the Pennsylvania Freeman. Later, he was one of the editors of the National Era. But it is as a poet that we best know and love the grand old Quaker. Since 1836, volume after volume of pure, sterling poetry has issued from his pen, every one, in varied form, teaching the one lesson of Christian love and brotherhood, which he has made it his life's work to impress on his generation.

More than any of our poets, he belongs to America. His themes are our themes, and his words are the words we use. All his thoughts and imagery are inspired by American life, and we are justly proud of the genius which does not need to go abroad for inspiration. His "Songs of Labor," "Home Ballads," "National Lyrics," "Hazel Blossoms," and many other volumes, are among the best treasures of our literature.

THE WESTERN UNIVERSITY AT LONDON, ONTARIO.

(See Illustration.)

ONE of the most important educational institutions in the Dominion is that of the Western University, a picture of which appears on this page. Though situated in the Province of Ontario, it is not under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Ontario, whose portrait appears on the first page, but under that of Dr. Baldwin, the Bishop of Huron, whose episcopal residence is at London. Its present prominence and efficiency is mainly due to the former Bishop of Huron, Dr. Isaac Hellmuth, who presided over the diocese from 1871 to 1883, when he resigned. He inherited a large private property during his episcopate, and desiring to consecrate it to Christ's service, he expended a large sum in extending and endowing the institution of learning, which has now accommodation for over a hundred students. At that time it was known as the Collegiate Institute, but after its enlargement it was called Hellmuth College, and in 1878 it was created a University by Act of Legislature, under the title of the Western University. It has the right of conferring degrees.

ADA BRISTOWE'S MOMENTOUS SICKNESS.

(See Illustration on page 301.)

"I MAY call to-morrow," said Walter Garton, as he assisted a young lady to alight from a carriage at the door of the Bristowe mansion some two hours after midnight.

"Oh, yes," said the lady, "I shall quite expect you; I feel tired and stupid now, but after a good long sleep I shall be all right. I think for once in my life I have had too many dances. I did not think that was possible."

A tender "good night," and a significant pressure of her hand, and Garton was striding briskly homeward. "This has been something like life," he said to himself as he walked through the deserted streets. "Now I wonder if there is a soul in all that New England village that could conceive of such pleasure as I have had in the last four hours. They are happy in their way; I was, at times, but how insipid all that seems now! If all life is the same in essence, and differs only in degree, they at home must be many degrees nearer the vegetable type than I. Great powers! what a revelation this has been of the capacity one has for unimagined ecstasy! And I shall see Ada to-morrow and get her answer. If it is only yes, my happiness will be complete."

But he did not see Ada that day, nor for many days. She was not well when he called. "A little over-tired," was the message her little sister Lois brought him. She was not able to rise, and begged him to excuse her. He was disappointed, but not worried that day; but when each day that he called the news of Ada grew more serious, then he grew wildly anxious and alarmed.

Walter Garton was the son of a New England clergyman. Brought up in the knowledge and fear of God, he had been kept from the temptations and allurements of the world until, having chosen the law as his profession, he was suddenly plunged into the whirl of city life. His handsome face, his talents, education, and his family connections, secured him an entrance into fashionable circles. His friends at first laughed at his scruples, but after a time they said how much he had improved. They met him at balls and at the theatre, and congratulated him on having outgrown the narrow Puritanical limits of his early training. He came at last to think that the rigid separation of the Church from the world, which his father preached and practiced, was unnecessary. Mr. Bristowe, who had won the respect which the father of a beautiful and attractive girl inspires in a young man, was a religious man, yet he went to the theatre occasionally, and did not object to Ada going to balls.

Garton was at a bachelor's party a few nights after that on which he had parted from Ada. There was plenty of fun and merriment, but he could not enjoy it. On his way thither he had called to inquire about Ada, and heard with alarm that she was much worse, and fears were entertained of her life. He was rallied on his gloomy mood, and some jokes that seemed to him rather silly were made about it. They evoked a great deal of laughter, and it surprised him to think that a short time ago he would have laughed too at just such empty jests. But now he wondered how people could be so easily amused when the solemn realities of life and death were so near. He left early, and went home in serious thought.

The next day Mr. Bristowe himself answered Garton's inquiry about Ada. Tears were in the father's eyes, and his voice was hoarse as he told the young man that the physicians gave little hope of her recovery.

"You are a cup too low," said a friend who met Garton a few blocks away from the Bristowe mansion. "Come and see Emmett; a hearty laugh will do you good."

Garton shuddered. The idea of listening to the silly buffooneries that passed for wit with the comedian's audiences was positively repulsive. He refused emphatically, and wandered he cared not where.

Presently the sound of music and singing fell upon his ear. It was a soft, plaintive air often sung in his father's church, and it attracted him.

He entered the building as the last stanza was being sung. A brief address followed. "Sooner or later," said the minister, "the emptiness of worldly pleasure must be discovered. They who choose the world for a friend are in a sad case, for it fails at the first touch of real sorrow, and gives no consolation when the need for it is greatest." Then he went on to speak of Jesus, the friend of the sorrowing and despairing, the unfathomable, inexhaustible love that in all circumstances of life satisfies the heart. Garton knew it all. He thought years ago that he had chosen Christ; but now he realized how far he had drifted. He waited to speak to the preacher, and told him how his own life confirmed the truth of the words he had spoken. That night Garton renewed his vow of consecration, and resolved to be true to it though it might cost him the loss of the girl who was so dear to him, and whose danger had been the cause of the sorrow that revealed to him the emptiness of his new life.

The next day Garton was cheered by hearing that Ada was better; the crisis had passed favorably, and from that time on she made progress daily.

"Would you like to see her?" asked little Lois one Sunday afternoon some weeks later, when Garton called. "She is sitting up now."

Garton eagerly accepted the invitation, and was ushered into the sitting-room where Ada sat, very wan and pale, but very beautiful. Mr. Bristowe sat beside her, watching his daughter with tender solicitude.

"That was my last ball," Ada said, after she had satisfied his eager inquiries; "I have been telling papa that I am going to begin a new life now. Things look very different, viewed from a sick-bed."

Garton leaned forward in an attitude of surprised attention which it was natural for Ada to misunderstand. She went on with an effort, as under the impulse of a resolution previously formed: "The old life was very pleasant, but I should find no pleasure in it now. Other things seem so much more important. When one comes near the threshold of the other world, time that might have been spent in working for Jesus and in helping other people seems to have been sadly wasted when it has been given to amusement. It is a revelation I can never forget."

Ada spoke abstractedly, with averted eyes, but Lois, who was watching Garton's face while her sister spoke was surprised at the joy and gladness that her words called up. "You thought Mr.

Ada Bristowe Announces Her Resolution.

Garton would be sorry at what you said, did you not, Ada?" she asked after the young man was gone. "Well, he wasn't at all, he was pleased. I saw it in his face. He'll tell you so when he sees you by yourself, or I'm mistaken."

"You do not know much about young men, Lois," said Ada. "It was polite of him to say he was pleased, but I do not think he liked it. But I was prepared for that. I am ready to leave all to follow Christ."

"You won't have to leave Mr. Garton: see if you do," said the little girl, with confidence.

The child proved a true prophet, and both the young people found in each other greater happiness from the fact that each had been brought to the pass at which the love of the other could be relinquished for Christ's sake.

ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS.

A Life Story: By Mrs. Stenhouse.

For More than Twenty-five Years the Wife of a Mormon Missionary and Elder.

(Continued from page 287.)

Toil, Famine, and Death.

My faith in the value of Brigham Young's revelations was, as I have intimated, much shaken before I came to America. If it had continued, it must have yielded when I had read that part of Mary Burton's letter already published. I almost trembled with apprehension as I went on reading her narrative of the suffering those poor creatures endured in drawing their wretched hand-carts across the plains in the winter months. If that fatal journey was the result of a revelation, from whom could that revelation have come? But let us proceed with Mary Burton's letter. She wrote:

"As death thinned our ranks, the labors of those who survived were increased, until at last there were hardly enough left with strength sufficient to pitch our tents at night. A great deal devolved upon the captain of our hundred, Elder Chislett. He is a very good man, and a devoted Saint; and I am glad to say that both he and a lady to whom he was betrothed, and who was also with our company, escaped with their lives. I have often seen him, when we stopped for the night, carrying the sick and feeble on his back from the wagon to the fire, and then working harder than a slave would work in putting things straight for the night. He showed a great many kindnesses both to my husband and myself.

"But individual efforts availed nothing against fatigue and hunger and the fearful cold. To the minds of all of us the end was fast approaching. Nothing but our faith sustained us; and foolish and misplaced as many people would think that faith, I am quite sure that but for it no living soul of all our company would have ever reached Salt Lake.

"At last the storm came, and the snow fell—I think it must have been at least five or six inches deep within half an hour. The wind was very keen and cutting, and it drifted the snow right into our faces; and thus blinded by the storm, and scarcely able to stand, we stumbled on that day for fully sixteen miles. What we suffered it would be useless for me to attempt to describe. Some of the scenes we witnessed were heartrending.

"There was a young girl, with whom I was very well acquainted, and who, I saw, was struggling in the snow, clinging to one of the hand-carts, and vainly trying to help in pushing it on, but really doing just the contrary. She is now in Salt Lake City, a helpless cripple, her limbs downwards having been frozen during that storm, and subsequently amputated. A poor old woman, too, whom I think you must have known in London, lingered behind later in the day. When night came on it was impossible for anyone to go back to search for her, but, in the morning, not far from the camp, some torn rags—the remains of her dress—were found, a few bones, a quantity of hair, and at a little distance a female skull, well gnawed, and with the marks of the wolf-fangs still wet upon it—the snow all around was much trodden and crimsoned with blood.

"I saw one poor man, whose health had evidently never been strong, draw the cart with his two little ones in it, as well as the baggage, mile after mile, until he could hardly drag his weary limbs a step further; his wife carried a little five-months-old baby in her bosom. This they did day after day, until disease attacked the husband, and it was evident that he could bear up no longer.

"The next morning I saw him pale as a corpse, bowed down, and shivering in every limb, but still stumbling on as best he could. Before the day was half over, the poor wife lagged behind with her babe, and the husband did not seem to notice her. This was not the result of heartlessness on his part; I believe that even then he had lost all consciousness. He did not know it, but he was dying. Still he stumbled on, until the short, wintry day came to a close, and we pitched our camp, and then I missed him. There was no time to inquire, and a chill came over my heart as I thought of what might be his fate.

"Presently my husband came to the tent and told me all. The poor man had dragged the cart up to the last moment, and, when the company halted for the night, he had turned aside, and sitting down he bowed his head between his knees, and never spoke again. Later still, the poor wife reached the camp, and I saw her then. There was no tear in her eyes, and she uttered neither cry nor moan, but there was upon her features a terrible expression of fixed despair which I dared not trust myself even to look upon.

"A few days after this, one morning as we were almost ready to start, I saw that poor mother in her tent, just as they had found her. She was cold and still—frozen to death—her sorrows were over at last, and her poor weary spirit was at rest; but on her bosom, still clasped in her arms, and still living, was her little child, quite unconscious of its mother's sad fate.

"We halted for a little while in the middle of that day, and, to our surprise and joy, Joseph A. Young and Elder Stephen Taylor drove into the camp. We found that when the returning missionaries, of whom I have already told you, left us by the Platte River, they made their way as speedily as they could to Salt Lake City. Joseph A., who felt deeply for our sufferings, although he had been away from home for two whole years, hastened to his father and reported to him the condition in which we were. Brigham Young was of course anxious to undo the mischief which had resulted from the people following his 'inspired' counsel, and at his son's earnest entreaty allowed him to return with provisions and clothing to meet us. Joseph A. lost no time, but pressed on to the rescue, and having told us that assistance was on the way, hastened eastward to meet the company that was following us.

"I cannot tell you what a relief this intelligence was to the minds of all, and how much the poor people felt encouraged by it. But as for me, at that time my heart was sad enough. For some time my husband's strength had been failing, and for the last two days I had felt very serious apprehensions on his behalf. He had been overtaken, and like the rest of us he was starving with cold and hunger, and I saw that he could not hold out much longer.

"My worst fears were speedily realized. We had not journeyed half a mile from the place where we rested at noon, when, blinded by the snow, and completely broken down, he dropped the rail of the cart, and I saw that he could go no further. How I felt, you, as a wife and mother, only can guess. In a moment my own weakness was forgotten; my love for my husband made me strong again. To leave him there or to delay would have been death to one if not all of us. So I called to those who shared the cart with us, and they helped me as well as they could to lift my husband up and put him under part of the bedding. It was the only chance of saving his life, for, as I before mentioned, some, previous to this, who had been overcome, and had lingered by the way, had been frozen to death or devoured by the wolves.

"I then took hold of the cross-bar or handle of the cart, and numbed with the cold, and trembling in every limb, it was as much as I could do to raise it from the ground. To move the cart was impossible, so I appealed to the old folks again, and they exerted all their strength to push it from behind, and our combined efforts at length succeeded; but the chief weight fell upon me. How gladly I bore it! how gladly I would have borne anything for the mere chance of saving my dear husband's life, your own heart can tell.

"The snow drifted wildly around us, and beat in our faces so blindingly that we could hardly proceed. The greater part of the train had passed on while we delayed on account of my husband, and now everyone was making the most desperate efforts to keep up with the rest; to be left behind was death. Had I been asked whether under any circumstances I could have dragged that heavy cart along in all that storm, I should certainly have replied that it would be utterly impossible; but until we were tried we do not know what we can bear. It was not until the night came on, and we pitched our tents, that I realized what I had passed through.

"They helped me to carry my husband to the tent, and there we laid him, and I tried to make him as easy as was possible under the circumstances, but comfort or rest was altogether out of the question. All that night I sat beside him, sometimes watching, sometimes falling into a fitful sleep. I did not believe that he would live through the night. In the morning he was by no means improved, and then I felt too truly the abject misery of our position.

"It is a painful thing to watch at the bedside of those we love when hope for their recovery is gone; but think what it must be to sit upon the cold earth in the tent, upon the open desert, with the piercing wind of winter penetrating to the very bones, and there before you, the dear one—your life, your all on earth—dying, and you without a drop of medicine, or even a morsel of the coarsest nourishment, to give him. Oh the bitterness of my soul at that moment! I tried to pray, but my heart was full of enmity; it seemed to me as if even God Himself was very far away and had forgotten us. The fearful misery of that dark hour has left on my soul itself a record as ineffaceable as the imprint of a burning iron upon the flesh.

"The morning broke at last, dark and dreary, and a thick, heavy mantle of snow covered all the camp; but we contrived to communicate with each other, and soon it was whispered that five poor creatures had been found dead in the tents. Want and weariness, and the bitter cold, had done their work, and we did not weep for them—they were at rest—but for ourselves we wept, that we were left behind—and we looked at one another, wistfully, wondering which of us would be taken next.

"We buried those five poor frozen corpses in one grave, wrapped in the clothing in which they died, and then we comforted each other as best we might, and left the dead, who were now beyond our reach, that we might do what we could for those who were fast following them to the grave. A meeting of the leaders was held, and it was resolved that we should remain where we were until the promised supplies reached us. We could not, in fact, do otherwise, for the snow was so deep that it was impossible for us to proceed, and the sick and dying demanded immediate attention.

"That morning, for the first time, no flour was distributed—there was none. All that remained, besides our miserable cattle, was a small quantity of hard biscuit which Captain Willie bought at Laramie, and a few pounds of rice and dried apples. Nearly all the biscuit was at once divided among the whole company, and the few pounds which remained, together with the rice and apples, were given to Elder Chislett for the use of the sick, and the very little children. They also killed two of the cattle, and divided the beef. Most of the people got through their miserable allowance that very morning, and then they had to fast.

"Captain Willie set out that morning with another elder to meet the coming supplies, and hasten them on, and as we saw them disappear in the distant West we almost felt as if our last hope departed with them, so many chances there were that we should never see them again. The whole of that long, long day I sat beside my husband in the tent—and I might almost say I did no more. There was nothing that I could do. The little bedding that was allowed for both of us I made up into a couch for him; but what a wretched makeshift it was! And I got from Elder Chislett a few of the dried apples which had been reserved for the sick; but it was not until nightfall that my husband was capable of swallowing anything—and then, what nourishment to give to a sick man! The day was freezing cold, and I had hardly anything on me, and had eaten nothing since the day before; for my mind was so agitated that I do not think the most delicate food would have tempted me. God alone knows the bitterness of my heart as I sat there during all the weary day. I never expected to see my husband open his eyes again, and I thought that when evening came I would lie down beside him, and we would take our last long sleep on earth together.

"When night came on and all was dark I still sat there; I dreaded to move lest I should learn the terrible truth—my husband dead! I looked towards the place where I knew he was lying, but I could see nothing. I listened, and I fancied that I heard a gentle breathing—but it was only fancy. Then, louder than the incessant moaning of the wind, I could hear in the distance a fearful cry—a cry which had often chilled our hearts at midnight on the plains—it was the wolves! The darkness grew darker still—so thick that one could almost feel it; the horror of death seemed stealing over all my senses. Oh that there might be one long eternal night to blot out for ever our miseries and our existence! I threw my hands wildly above me, and cried, 'Oh God, my God, let me die!'

"God was nearer to me than I thought. As my hand dropped lifelessly to the ground it touched some moving thing—it was my husband's hand—the same hand which I had watched in the twilight, stiffening, as I thought, in death. The long, thin fingers grasped my own, and though they were very, very cold, I felt that life was in them; and as I stooped down to kiss them I heard my husband's voice, very weak and feeble, saying in a whisper, 'Mary.' I threw myself upon his bosom. In a moment the fear of death—the longing for death—the wild and terrible thoughts, all had gone; the sound of that voice was life to me, and forgetful of his weakness, forgetful of everything but him, I threw myself in gratitude upon his bosom and wept tears of joy.

"Very carefully and gently I raised him up, and in the darkness every whispered word conveyed more meaning to my mind than all his eloquence in bygone times. After some time I persuaded him to take a little nourishment—miserable stuff that it was—and presently he fell asleep again. I laid his dear head upon the best pillow that I could make of some of my own clothes, and then I slept a little myself—not much, but it was more refreshing than any sleep that had visited my eyes for a long time past—hope had come again.

"The next morning my husband was evidently better, and I knelt down beside him and thanked God for the miracle that He had wrought; for was it not a miracle thus to raise my dead to life again? How many stronger, stouter men than he had I seen fall sick and die; but to me God had shown great mercy.

"We waited three long days for the return of Captain Willie. My heart was so full of thankfulness that my husband had been spared, that I certainly did not feel so acutely the misery with which I was surrounded as I otherwise should have done; I was like the prisoner who feels happy in a reprieve from death, but whose situation is nevertheless such as would appear to any other person the most wretched in which he could be placed. The misery that was suffered in that camp was beyond the power of words to describe. On the second day they gave us some more beef-rations, but they did us little good. The beef was, of course, of the poorest, and eaten alone it did not seem to satisfy hunger, and those who were prostrated by dysentery, although they ate it ravenously, suffered much in consequence afterwards.

"The number of the sick rapidly increased, and not a few died from exhaustion; and, really, those seemed happiest who were thus taken from the horrors which surrounded them. Had it not been for the intense frost, we should all probably have fallen victims to the intolerable atmosphere of the camp. I would not even allow my mind to recall some of the scenes which I witnessed at that time; scenes, the disgusting and filthy horrors of which no decent words could describe. When you consider the frightful condition in which we were, the hunger and cold which we endured, you may, perhaps, be able in a small degree to conjecture—as far as a person can conjecture who has not himself suffered such things—what we then passed through.

"I saw poor miserable creatures, utterly worn out, dying in the arms of other forlorn and hopeless creatures as wretched as themselves; I saw strong and honest, honorable men, or who had once been such, begging of the captain for the miserable scraps which had been saved for the sick and the helpless children; I saw poor heart-broken mothers freezing to death, but clasping as they died, in an agony of loving woe, the torn and wretched remnants of clothing which they still retained around the emaciated forms of their innocent babes—the mother-instinct strong in death; and sometimes at night when, all unbidden, I see again in dreams the awful sufferings of those poor unhappy people, I start in horror, and pray the Almighty rather to blot out from my mind the memory of all the past, than to let me ever recollect, if but in fancy, that fearful time.

(To be Continued)

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for May 19, Mark 14: 12-26. Golden Text, Luke 22: 19.

Specific Instructions—Nothing Left Uncertain—The Same Leading to be Had Now—Conditions of Receiving it—The Commemorative Ceremonies—Pointing Backward and Forward—The Homeless Saviour Entertained—The Guest Chamber He Claims Now—The Traitor at the Table—How Far His Heart Was Changed—The Balaams of the Church—A Self-Distrustful Question—The Broken Body—Its Sufficiency for All Wants—The Blood of the Covenant—The Life Springing from Death.

"THIS is My body which is given for you; this do in remembrance of Me." Break the bread which feeds you and which sustains your life, in remembrance of the breaking of My body who am the Lord of life. It was at the Passover feast, that Passover of Passovers in which the type met its fulfilment. "Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us." (1 Cor. 5: 7.) Jesus sent two of His disciples on the first day of unleavened bread, the day on which the lamb was to be slain, and "He saith unto them, go ye into the city, and there shall meet you a man bearing a pitcher of water: follow him. And whosoever he shall go in, say ye to the Goodman of the house, where is the guest chamber, where I shall eat the passover with My disciples? And he will show you a large upper room furnished and prepared; there make ready for us." Every direction was specific; Jesus did not leave His disciples in doubt as to what to do. Neither does He now leave in uncertainty those who are willing to be led by Him. They had asked Him the question, "Where wilt thou that we go and prepare that Thou mayest eat the Passover?" Oh, how little they knew how He was preparing a Passover for them! They "went forth, and came into the city, and found as He had said unto them; and they Made Ready the Passover."

It was the fourteenth day of the first month. A lamb, either given by some devoted follower of Jesus, or bought out of the slender resources of "the bag" which Judas carried, was slain, and, in memory of the passing over of the destroying angel in Egypt, the two side posts, and the upper door-post of that guest chamber were sprinkled with blood. Then unleavened bread was made like that which the children of Israel made for their journey on that night of haste, when they fled from Egypt amidst the wailings of the people over their dead first-born. (Ex. 12.) This was all they could do to make ready. But there had been a making ready long before this; that same Jesus with whom they had walked and talked was, in the purpose of His Father, and in His own blessed will, the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. (Rev. 13: 8.) He says in prophecy, "The Lord hath opened mine ear, I was not rebellious, neither turned away back," (Isa. 50: 5.) And again He says, "Therefore doth My Father love Me, because I lay down My life that I might take it again. No man taketh it from Me, but I lay it down of Myself, I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again." (John 10: 17, 18.) All was ready for the great Passover. But oh, how little the disciples understood, as their beloved Master passed under the blood-sprinkled lintel, that He was indeed, as John the Baptist had proclaimed Him, "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world!"

Jesus had no home on earth, He had "not where to lay His head;" this last Passover was held in the house of an acquaintance on whom the Son of man could count, one who He knew would bid Him welcome. There is on which Jesus makes a claim. He says of it, "Behold I stand at the door and knock, if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him and will sup with him, and he with Me." (Rev. 3: 29.) And these words "the Spirit saith unto the churches." Jesus asks not an outside, but an inside, place in the hearts and lives, the family and business, the social and the church life of His own people; and there He will sup with us, delight in us, unworthy though we be, and we with Him. He will feed us with Himself, nourish our faith with His, our love with His, our wisdom with His, our will with His, and as we feed upon Him, He will make it our meat as it was His, to do the will of our Father which is in heaven. (John 4: 34.)

A Guest Chamber

Jesus had passed through the blood-stained doorway which was to keep the destroying angel outside, but an emissary of Satan was within. "As they sat and did eat, Jesus said, Verily I say unto you, one of you which eateth with Me shall betray Me." When the Passover was instituted, it was ordained, "With bitter herbs they shall eat it." (Ex. 12: 8.) Jesus had His bitter herbs in the betrayal of one of His chosen twelve. The question is often asked,

"Was Judas Ever Really Converted?"

If he had been, could he have betrayed his Lord? To answer this we must define what is meant by conversion. No doubt he answered to the seed sown on stony ground, which sprung up quickly, and is like those who hear the word and anon with joy receive it, but "when affliction or persecution ariseth for the word's sake, immediately they are offended" (Mark 4: 16, 17), just as Balaam, the man whose eyes were open, "which heard the words of God, and knew the knowledge of the Most High, which saw the vision of the Almighty—falling into a trance, but having his eyes open" (Num. 24: 15, 16), and yet died fighting against God's people (Num. 31: 8); or Saul, to whom it was said, "God is with thee," and "God gave him another heart. . . . and the Spirit of God came upon him" (1 Sam. 10: 9, 10), and yet he turned away from God, and the Lord rejected him.

There are so many conversions of this type, where the hard rock of the natural heart has not been broken up and brought to nothingness, where the will has not been entirely surrendered to God, that we cannot but tremble for many who, if they were in the circumstances of Balaam, would curse Israel if it should increase their wealth; indeed they are now a curse to God's people by the way in which they get money; they betray their Lord, for they make people think that Christians will do any mean thing for money. They may have great spiritual gifts, as Balaam had; they may have wonderful opportunities, as Judas had, when he used to cast out devils, and to cure in the name of Christ; they may be called to high office as Saul was, but, most surely, if money, position, or earthly honor is more to them than Christ, the whole heart has not been changed; they are not new creatures in Christ Jesus; old things have not passed away, all things are not become new, and in the eyes of God they are not right, and cannot pass muster as born of God.

They began to be very sorrowful, and each one said to Him,

"Is it I?"

It is a good sign when a child of God has a tender conscience, and says, "Is it I?" And He said, "It is one of the twelve that dipeth with me in the dish," or as in John 13: 26, "He it is to whom I shall give a sop when I have dipped it. And when He had dipped the sop, He gave it to Judas Iscariot, the son of Simon." And Jesus said, "The Son of man indeed goeth as it is written of him; but woe to that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed! good were it for that man if he had never been born."

Poor miserable Judas! his fall did not come all at once. When he had been treasurer for Jesus and His disciples, he had failed in money matters; he was a thief (John 12: 6); he had been sinning again and again before it came to betraying his Lord, and now it was too late, and Jesus, whom he was about to betray, mourned over his lost soul. But even when troubled in spirit about him, Jesus could not save him unrighteously; He cannot save a soul who chooses sin (John 13: 21-27).

"And as they did eat, Jesus took bread, and blessed, and brake it, and gave it to them, and said, Take, eat, this is My body." They had seen Jesus take bread upon the mountain-side, and make it enough, though only five loaves, for the hungry five thousand, besides women and children. And now to those who would by faith receive Him, He would make that body of His, taken for our sakes, and yielded up to death for our sakes, enough for all the needs of our whole lives. "Present your bodies a living sacrifice" (Rom. 12: 1), but take My body, feed on it, feed on all it means for you. "The body is . . . for the Lord, and the Lord for the body." (1 Cor. 6: 13) "My flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed. He that eateth My flesh and drinketh My blood, dwelleth in Me, and I in him. As the living Father hath sent Me, and I live by the Father, so he that eateth Me, even he shall Live By Me."

(John 6: 55-57.) Our blessed Lord lived on His Father by constant communion; He took in His Father's thoughts, His will, His plans, His purposes; He drank in His Spirit just as we take in food and drink to our bodies. As we depend on food for strength and refreshment, so He depended on the Father, and there is no other way of strength and refreshment for our souls but in thus feeding upon Jesus.

"And He took the cup; and when He had given thanks, He gave it to them; and they all drank of it. And He said unto them, this is My blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many." Before Mount Sinai Moses took the blood of burnt offerings, and peace offerings, "and sprinkled it on the people, and said, of the covenant, which the Lord hath made with you concerning all these words." (Ex. 24: 8.) But this was a covenant of death. How different is the covenant of life, made through the blood-shedding of Jesus! The old covenant culminated in the words, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." (Ezek. 18: 4.) The new covenant culminates in the words, "I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more." (Heb. 8: 12.) His blood shed is our life, but it is life from the dead, life which springs from His death. His life in heaven needs no blood, nothing corruptible. The blood is the life of the flesh, but flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of heaven; we never read of blood in Christ's risen body. "We are members of His body, His flesh, and of His bones (but there is no mention of His blood)." So that, in drinking His blood, we are looking back to His blood poured out, whereby He gives life to the world. In this sacrament of the Lord's Supper we see how completely and utterly dependent we are on Him for everything, and at all times. As He lived by the Father, let us every hour live by Him.

Behold the Blood

NEW EDITION OF REV. M. BAXTER'S PAMPHLETS.

THREE PAMPHLETS IN ONE

1. Coming Wars from 1888 to 1891, and Translation of 144,000 living Christians on March 5, 1896, before the 3½ years' persecution by Napoleon, etc.

2. Twenty Predictions about Coming Wars, by Twenty Learned Expositors.

3. End of this Age by the Descent of Christ in Passover Week, April, 1901, being 45 years from the Crimean War Treaty of Peace in Passover Week, April, 1856, and 2,345 years from Passover Week, April, B. C. 444-5, as shown by Daniel's Dates.

The Three Pamphlets in an Illuminated Cover, 144 Pages, postage included.

Price Twenty Cents.

For sale at this office, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

"LORD, I BELIEVE."

Gentler than dew on Hermon fall
My tears to-day;
For Christ has washed my heart's deep stain
Of guilt away.

His tender voice, like winds that breathe
Through flowers at even,
Speaks to my soul the language sweet
"Thou art forgiven."

No more I now with troubled doubt
The Spirit grieve;
A new, a better word is mine,
"Lord, I believe."

Peace, like a river smooth and clear,
Now fills my soul;
And mirrored there, behold the Christ
In sweet control.

I close mine eyes in perfect rest,
Nor heed the way,
Though rough it be, through travel-dust,
And heat of day.

It is not that I can forget
The cross I bear;
But, bending low, I raise it up
By faith and prayer.

Bending, as bends the supple reed
To God's sweet will;
The heart pours forth its glad "Amen,"
And all is still.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher: 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets
assorted (no two alike) will be sent, post-paid, for 10
cts., or 100 for 20 cts. Postage stamps taken.

For Sick Headache

Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. M. W. GRAY, Cave Spring, Ga., says: "I have used it with perfect success in habitual sick headache."

Mrs. Burnett's New Story

"The story is one of those rare productions which will disappoint no one. It lingers in the memory because of its gentleness and beauty."— Washington Capital.

The Pretty Sister of Jose

"A vivid, bewitching tropical story, which leaves in one's memory a fragrance as of the flowers of the far South."—Boston Transcript.

Now in its 10th Thousand

"It is a romance full of the fire and poetry of Spain, and brilliant in color."—Boston Journal.

"No story issued of late is at once so dainty, so human, and so picturesque."—N. Y. Press.

Beautifully Illustrated. $1.00, postage free.

* * To any one ordering this book, and mentioning THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, the publishers will send a souvenir of Mrs. Burnett, containing her portrait, autograph, and a sketch telling who "Little Lord Fauntleroy" is, and how the story was written,—printed in color.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS,

743-745 Broadway, New York.

MINISTER'S POCKET RITUAL

A Hand-Book of Scripture Lessons and Forms of Service
for Marriage, Confirmation, The Lord's Supper, Visitation
of Sick, Burial of Dead, Dedications, Ordinations, Installations, Suggestions on various services. For all denominations. By Rev. Hiram Mattison, D.D. 12 mo. Limp
Morocco, $1; Limp Muslin 50c. Mailed on receipt of price.
PERKINPINE & HIGGINS, 914 Arch St., Philada.

SAFE INVESTMENT

FARRAND & VOTY
ORGANS
DETROIT, MICH. U.S.A.

$500 A YEAR GUARANTEED SALARY, and commissions extra, to
one canvasser in each County. Business permanent and worth $1000 to $2000 a year.
No capital or experience necessary. Write for particulars.
CINCINNATI PUBLISHING CO., 189 Elm St., Cincinnati, O.

SAMPLE PAGES FROM THE LATEST
SUNDAY SCHOOL SONG BOOKS FREE,
THE ECHO MUSIC CO., La Fayette, Indiana.

LADIES
Examine our Razors twice a year. They are a week and you have the finest polished razor in the country.

NELSON'S HOME

—AND—

SUNDAY-SCHOOL BOOKS.

BY EVELYN EVERETT-GREEN.

Dulcie's Little Brother; or, Doings at Little Monksholm. 12mo.
Cloth extra. $1.00.

"A sweet and charming story of child life."
—New York Observer.

Dulcie and Tottie; or, The Story
of an Old-Fashioned Pair. 12mo.
Cloth extra. $1.00.

A sequel to "Dulcie's Little Brother." An interesting tale, written in the simple, natural style, and pervaded by the high Christian spirit, common to the author's works.

Heiress of Wilmington (The).
12mo. Cloth extra. $1.25.

"There are some remarks in its pages with which sensible people of every creed and every shade of opinion can scarcely fail to sympathize." It is pleasantly and prettily told. —Saturday Review.

"It is a story girls will read with pleasure and with profit." —Scotsman.

True to the Last; or, My Boy-
hood's Hero. Cloth. $1.25.

A story for boys. The scene in England, A fine, manly, Christian character is developed and perfected by trials in early life.

Temple's Trial; or, For Life
and Death. 12mo. Cloth extra. $1.25.

An interesting study of character, going mainly to show the beauty of a quiet, manly Christian life; on the other hand the terrible moral degradation to which selfishness unchecked may lead, and the final triumph of integrity against cruel calumny and misunderstanding.

Winning the Victory; or, Di-Pennington's Reward. A Tale. 12mo. Cloth extra. $1.25.

"One of the best books for girls in their teens which have recently been written; and it is a pleasant story for reading aloud in the family." —Sunday-School Times.

"A good and helpful book for girls." —The Independent.

Vera's Trust. A Tale. 12mo. Cloth
extra. $1.25.

An intensely interesting book from beginning to end. It will captivate all readers.

For sale at all bookstores throughout the country, or will be sent postpaid on receipt of price by the publishers.

THOS. NELSON & SONS,
33 East 17th Street, New York.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico
are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to
the address of
BISHOP H. C. RILEY,

Care of J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

TO OUR CHRISTIAN FRIENDS:

As there is a regular monthly expense in connection with the work a regular monthly income is needed to meet that expense. We, therefore, specially ask for regular monthly contributions in its behalf. If many will each send a little every month, or quarter, or whenever they can, it will do great good. Remember, every little helps.

H. CHAUNCEY RILEY.

For Gas

BAILEY'S COMPOUND
Silver-Plated
CORRUGATED GLASS
REFLECTORS

A wonderful invention for lighting churches, halls, etc. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogues and price list free.

For Oil

Bailey Reflector Co.
113 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa.

BONANZA AGENTS SAMPLES FREE
both sexes. Write now
GEO. A. SCOTT, New York City

The Dingee & Conard Co's ROSES and SEEDS

Largest Rose Growers in America.

Over Five Hundred finest varieties of ROSES, all the Choicest New and Standard Sorts in mail and express sizes to suit all wants. Our NEW GUIDE, 120 pages, elegantly illustrated, is sent FREE TO ALL who write for it. It describes and TELLS HOW TO GROW over two thousand finest varieties of ROSES, HARDY PLANTS, and CLIMBING
VINES, New Summer FLOWERING BULBS, JAPAN LILIES, GLADIOLUS, TUBEROSES, CARNATIONS, New JAPAN CHRYSANTHE-MUMS, The WONDERFUL NEW MOON
FLOWERS, and the choicest NEW and RARE
FLOWER and VEGETABLE SEEDS
Goods sent everywhere by mail or express. Satisfaction Guaranteed. If you plant ANYTHING, it will pay you to have our New Guide before buying. Send it—free. Address THE DINGEE & CONARD CO.,
Rose Growers and West Grove, Pa.

COLORED SILKS.

We have just made one purchase of 35,000 yards of Plain Colored Silks, 1 1/2 in. wide, in 40 different shades. The entire lot has been placed this week in our Retail Silk Department. The price is 65 cents per yard; the goods are fully worth 95 cents.

We know of no occasion
when so large a quantity, and so excellent a quality, of Colored Silk has been offered at retail in New York City.

Samples sent on request.

James McCreery & Co

Broadway, cor. Eleventh St.,
NEW YORK.

Over 14 Millions sold in this Country Alone.
The Best Fitting and Best
Wearing Corset Ever Made.
SOLD EVERYWHERE.

For a DISORDERED LIVER
Try BEECHAM'S PILLS.
25cts. a Box.
OF ALL DRUGGISTS.

PLANTS Transplanted Large, Smooth Red Tomato 25c. p. doz. $1 p. 100
Egg Plants, 50c. per doz. Cabbage & Lettuce, 50c. per 100. Cauliflower, Early Snowball, 25c. per doz.; $1 per 100.
JOHN BOLGIANO, Waverly, Md.

A VEGETABLE WONDER

Copyright, 1888, by Peter Henderson & Co.

HENDERSON'S NEW

BUSH LIMA BEAN

Can and Should be Grown in every Garden on the Continent.

Of all the Novelties in Garden Prodever sent out, there is nothing so entirely distinct and valuable as this New Vegetable.
old Lima Bean can only be grown on a while the NEW BUSH LIMA grows a cultivated exactly like the common bush or bean (growing only 18 inches high), and the time of its bearing in July, produces abundance delicious Lima Beans throughout the entire season until frost. It has, besides additional value, in that it is two weeks earlier than any other Lima Bean, because for the table in from forty to fifty days time of planting.

Price (by mail) 25 cents per pack-
5 packets for $1.00, 12 packets $2.00 (12 packets sufficient for the season). Directions for growing on each pack-Remittances can be sent either by Office Order, Postal Note or Stamp $100.00 in Cash Prizes for single pl-bearing greatest number of pods.
conditions see Manual offered below.

Every purchaser of Henderson's
Lima Bean will be sent, without charge,
MANUAL OF EVERYTHING FOR THE GARDEN book of 140 pages, size, 9 x 11, containing ored plates (the price of which is 25 cents) the distinct understanding, however those ordering will say in what paper the this advertisement.

PETER HENDERSON &

35 & 37 Cortlandt Street, New York

THE NEW MODEL,

OUR LATEST and BEST
MOWER.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

GOOD NE
TO LADIES
Greatest offer. Now's y-
to get orders for our Teas, Coffees, and Powder, and secure a
Gold Band or Moss Rose t-
Brass Lamp, Castor, or Vebat-
Get Premium No. 27. For particulars
66 and 68 CHURCH STREET, N. Y. P. O.

T. DeWitt Talmage's New Book, Pen, Pulpit and

SHOTS SUNDRY
TARGETS

Aimed at Wrecks 2 B Righted, Follies 2 B Shun-
gers 2 B Avoided, Sorrows 2 B Mitigated, Victories
A treasury of his best thoughts. Beautifully 702 pages. $2.75. E. B. TREAT, NEW

Send 6 Cents for samples of the famous made Plymouth Rock 53 Paints.
self-measurement and a cloth tape measure.
Every pair guaranteed or money refunded. Ply-
Rock Paints Co., 31 to 37 Eliot St., Boston

BEECHAM'S PILLS cure bilious and nervous
BEECHAM'S PILLS cure sick-headache.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1889, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. XII., No. 18. Office, 63 Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 1, 1889.

Price, 3 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT OF GEORGE WASHINGTON and Description of his Inauguration.

THE NATION'S PROTECTOR. Dr. Talmage's Sermon last Sunday Morning.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT REGENT
EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

A Prayer about a Note—Medical Work on the Congo—A Lady in the Slums—A French Octogenarian's Death—Marketing in Africa.

PICTURE OF BADLU'S HOME IN INDIA.

PERSONAL RESPONSIBILITY. A New
Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

Gems from New Books: Zachary Taylor's Heroism—An Indian Legend.

PORTRAIT OF THE LATE DUCHESS OF CAMBRIDGE.

THE MERCHANT'S MISTAKEN KIND-NESS. (With Illustration.)

ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS. An Autobiographical Story by Mrs. Stenhouse.

THE ANOINTING IN BETHANY. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

GEORGE WASHINGTON—His Home at Mount Vernon—Crossing the Kill von Kull—Taking the Oath April 30, 1789—His Statue in New York.

THE INAUGURATION OF 1789.

A BRIEF summary has been given, in previous issues of this journal, of the programme of the ceremonies by which the centennial anniversary of the inauguration of the first President of the United States is celebrated this week in New York. This week we give an account of that inauguration, collected from the journals of a hundred years ago, and with it, on the first page, a portrait of Washington, with a picture of his home at Mount Vernon, a sketch of the procession of boats that accompanied him across the Kill von Kull to New York, a view of the inauguration at the old Federal Hall in Wall Street, New York, and a picture of the statue of Washington which now stands on the spot where the Father of his country stood when he took the oath of office.

The Election

had been made by only ten States. New York had begun the quarrels in the Legislature which have characterized her down to the present time, and a dead-lock having been developed, no electors were chosen in time to take part in the election. North Carolina and Rhode Island had not ratified the Constitution, and the election of President and Vice-President had, therefore, been left to the remaining ten States of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, South Carolina, and Georgia. These States were entitled to sixty-nine votes in the electoral college, and of the sixty-nine electors chosen not six were pledged how they should vote before the election. Each was to write the names of the two men of his choice on his ballot, without indicating which of the two was for President and which for Vice-President. The man receiving the greatest number of votes was to be President, and the next highest Vice-President. There could be but one choice for President, but if there had been a similar unanimity as to the Vice-President the choice would have devolved on the House of Representatives. Of that, however, there was no probability. No name except that of Washington had the charm necessary to secure the unanimous support of the States, and, accordingly, while every ballot bore his name, only thirty-four—or less than half—bore the name of John Adams.

Gen. Washington was declared elected to the Presidency on Monday, April 6, as appears from the following brief sketch of the most interesting of the proceedings of Congress, Monday, April 6, 1789:

"A quorum of both houses met, and on counting the votes for president and vice president, they appeared to be:

"For president—His excell. gen. Washington, 69.

"For vice president—Hon. John Adams, 34; John Jay, 9; R. R. Hanson, 6; John Rutledge, 6; John Hancock, 4; George Clinton, 3; Samuel Huntington, 2; John Milton, 2; James Armstrong, 1; Edward Telfair, 1; Benjamin Lincoln, 1.

"Upon which his excellency George Washington, esq., was announced president and the honorable John Adams, esq., vice president of the united states."

President Washington was eight days in coming from Mount Vernon to New York, starting on Thursday, April 16, from Alexandria, and reaching Baltimore the next afternoon. He seems to have been expected at the Delaware State line by the Philadelphians on Sunday, but did not arrive until the next day. The first of the descriptive articles is dated, "Baltimore, April 21, 1789," and runs as follows:

At Baltimore.

"The President of the United States arrived in this place on his way to congress on Friday afternoon, the 17th instant, with Charles Thompson, Esq., and Colonel Humphries. This great man was met some miles from town by a large body of respectable citizens on horseback, and conducted, under a discharge of cannon, to Mr. Grant's tavern, through crowds of admiring spectators. At six o'clock a committee chosen in consequence of a late notification to adjust the preliminaries of his reception, waited upon him with an address. A great number of the citizens were presented to him, and very graciously received. Having arrived too late for a public dinner, he accepted an invitation to supper, from which he retired a little after 10 o'clock. The next morning he was in his carriage at half-past 5 o'clock, when he left town under a discharge of cannon, and attended, as on his entrance, by a body of the citizens on horseback. These gentlemen accompanied him seven miles, when, alighting from his carriage, he would not permit them to proceed any further; but took leave of them after thanking them in an affectionate, obliging manner for their politeness. We shall only add, on this occasion that those who had often seen him before, and those who never had, were equally anxious to see him. Such is the rare impression excited by his uncommon character."

At Philadelphia.

Next in order is the letter from Philadelphia, April 24, 1789. A letter from a gentleman in that city to his friend in the country, dated the 22d inst., says: "I know you are anxious to hear the particulars of our late procession on the arrival of the president general. Being myself one of the dramatis personæ, I shall give you a short detail of it as well as my memory will serve.

"On the 19th instant his excellency, Thomas Mifflin, Esq., President of the State, the honorable Richard Peters, esq., speaker of our Legislature, and the old city troop of horse, commanded by Colonel Miles, proceeded as far as the line between this State and that of Delaware under the pleasing expectation of meeting our beloved Washington, President General of the United States; we were, however, disappointed, as he did not arrive at the line till early next morning, when we were joined by another troop from the city, commanded by Captain Bingham. After paying him the tribute of military honor due to his rank and exalted character by proper salutes and otherwise, we escorted him into Chester, where we breakfasted and rested a couple of hours.

"This great and worthy man, finding he could not possibly elude the parade which necessarily must attend manifestations of joy and affection, when displayed by a grateful people to their patriot benefactor, ordered his carriages into the rear of the whole line, and mounted an elegant horse, accompanied by the venerable patriot, Charles Thompson, esq., and his former aide-de-camp, the celebrated Colonel Humphries, both of whom were also on horseback. On our way to the city we were joined by detachments from the Chester and Philadelphia troops of horse, commanded by Captains McDowel and Thompson, and also by a number of respectable citizens, at whose head was the worthy citizen and soldier, his excellency Arthur St. Clair, esq., Governor of the western territory. Thus we proceeded to mess, Gray's bridge, on Schuylkill, observing the strictest order and regularity during the march. But here such a scene presented itself that even the pencil of a Raphael could not delineate.

"The bridge was highly decorated with laurel and other evergreens, by Messrs. Gray, the ingenious Mr. Peale, and others, and in such a style as to display uncommon taste in these gentlemen. At each end there were erected magnificent arches composed of laurel, emblematical of the ancient triumphal arches used by the Romans, and on each side of the bridge a laurel shrubbery, which seemed to challenge even nature herself for simplicity, ease, and elegance. And as our beloved WASHINGTON passed the bridge a lad beautifully ornamented with sprigs of laurel, assisted by certain machinery, let drop above the hero's head, unperceived by him, a civic crown of laurel. There was also a very elegant display of variegated flags on each side of the bridge, as well as other places, which alternately caught the eye and filled the spectator's soul with admiration and delight.

"But who can describe the heartfelt congratulations of more than 20,000 free citizens, who lined every fence, field, and avenue, between the bridge and the city? The aged sire, the venerable matron, the blooming virgin, and the ruddy youth, were all emulous in their plaudits—nay, the lisping infant did not withhold its innocent smile of praise and approbation. In short, all classes and descriptions of citizens discovered—and they felt what they discovered—the most undisguised attachment and unbounded zeal for their dear chief, and, I may add, under God, the saviour of their country. Not all the pomp of majesty, nor even imperial dignity itself, surrounded with its usual splendor and magnificence, could equal this interesting scene."

In New York.

As before stated, President Washington left Philadelphia the next day, which was Tuesday, and arrived in New York, where Congress was already in session in the building now occupied by the United States Custom House, in Wall street, on Thursday, April 23, as appears from the following report:

"New York, April 25, 1789.—On Thursday, about 2 o'clock, arrived in town the most illustrious George Washington, President of the United States. His excellency slept at Woodbridge on Wednesday night, and on Thursday morning arrived at Mr. Boudinot's, where he breakfasted, along with the gentlemen composing the committee appointed by congress, etc. etc. About 12 o'clock he was conducted on board of the barge prepared for his reception, the beauty of which met with his highest approbation; he was rowed across the bay by thirteen skilful pilots, Thomas Randall, esq., acting as cockswain. His excellency's barge was accompanied by a barge containing the heads of the great departments of the United States, viz, the honorable board of treasury, the minister of foreign affairs, and the secretary at war.

"On approaching near the city our illustrious chief was highly gratified with a further military display of infantry, commanded by Captain James Rees, and artillery commanded by Captain Jeremiah Fisher, two active and able officers; and here I must not omit to give due praise to that worthy veteran, Major Fullerton, for his zeal, activity, and good conduct on this occasion. These corps joined in the procession, and thousands of freemen, whose hearts burned with patriotic fire, also fell into the ranks almost every square we marched, until the column swelled beyond credibility itself; and, having conducted to the city tavern, he was introduced to a very grand and plentiful banquet, which was prepared for him by the citizens. At dinner thirteen patriotic toasts were drank. The pleasures and festivity of the day being over, they were succeeded by a handsome display of fireworks in the evening. Thus I have given you a faint idea of this glorious procession, and of the universal joy which inspired every heart upon this interesting, this important occasion."

The Man of our Hearts

The joy and enthusiasm manifested by the people must have been very welcome to Washington, who, as is well known, was more reluctant than any of his successors have been to accept the high office. To his friend Henry Knox he wrote before setting out for his inauguration: "My movements to the chair of government will be accompanied by feelings not unlike those of a culprit who is going to the place of his execution. . . . Integrity and firmness are all I can promise. These, be the voyage long or short, shall never forsake me, although I may be deserted by all men; for of the consolations which are to be derived from these, under any circumstances, the world cannot deprive me." To Benjamin Lincoln he wrote: "I most heartily wish the choice may not fall upon me. If I should conceive myself in a manner constrained to accept, I call heaven to witness that this very act would be the greatest sacrifice of my personal feelings and wishes that er I have been called upon to make." To Lafayette he said: "I shall assume the task with most unfeigned reluctance and with a real confidence, for which I shall probably receive no edit from the world."

His motive in accepting, however, was worthy such a man. Writing to Benjamin Harrison, he said: "Heaven knows that no event can be so desired by me, and that no earthly consideration short of so general a call, together with desire to reconcile contending parties as far as in me lies, could again bring me into public life." The call was not one that so great a man could refuse, for it was a call to duty as well as honor. Having, therefore, paid a visit of farewell as "the last act of personal duty" to his aged mother at Fredericksburg, and having borrowed five hundred pounds of a gentleman in Alexandria to discharge all his personal debts, and another hundred pounds to help defray the expenses of his journey to New York, Washington was ready to leave his home on the Potomac, and commence his administration. About 10 o'clock," he wrote in his diary under date of April 16, 1789, "I bade adieu to Mount Vernon, to private life, and to domestic felicity, and with a mind oppressed by more anxious and painful sensations than I have words to express, set out for New York in company with Mr. Thompson and Colonel Humphreys, with the best disposition to render service to my country in obedience to its call, but with less hope of answering its expectations."

The Gift of a Barge

As a substantial tribute of esteem tendered to Washington in connection with his passage across the Kill von Kull depicted on the first page. The barge had been prepared for the occasion by the Marine Society of New York (incorporated 1770). It was manned by the president of the Society as coxswain, and twelve ship-masters of the Society, and cost between two and three hundred pounds. After the president-elect had been thus rowed across to the city, the barge was tendered to him as a gift by the Society, and accepted in a letter dated May 3, 1789, which is one of the Marine Society's most treasured documents. In the celebration of this week the same Society was again assigned the duty of rowing the President across the same stream. The coxswain was again the President of the Society. That office is now filled by Ambrose Snow, and the twelve ship-masters who handled the oars were men some of whom are seventy-five years old. They are: G. D. S. Trask, Samuel J. Trinkeld, James Parker, Richard Luce, John Dewar, George L. Norton, Albert Spencer, William Squibart, George Deerborn, William A. Ellis, T. Marsh, and Stephen Whitman, all American ship-masters.

An Eye-Witness of the Inauguration—

Miss Eliza Quincy—wrote: "I was on the roof of the first house in Broad street, which belonged to Captain Prince, the father of one of my school companions, and so near Washington that I could almost hear him speak. The windows and roofs of the houses were crowded, and in the streets the throng was so dense that it seemed as if one might literally walk on the heads of the people. The balcony of the hall was in full view of this assembled multitude. In the centre of it was placed a table with a rich covering of red velvet, and upon this, on a crimson velvet cushion, lay a large and elegant Bible. This was all the paraphernalia of the august scene. All eyes were fixed on the balcony, where, at the appointed hour, Washington entered, accompanied by the Chancellor of the State of New York, who was to administer the oath, by John Adams, Vice-President, Governor Clinton, and many other distinguished men. . . . After a few moments Washington arose and came forward. Chancellor Livingston read the oath, according to the form prescribed by the Constitution, and Washington repeated it, resting his hand upon the table. Otis, the Secretary of the Senate, then took the Bible and raised it to the lips of Washington, who stooped and kissed the book. At this moment a signal was given by raising a flag upon the cupola of the hall for a general discharge of the artillery of the Battery. All the bells in the city rang out a peal of joy, and the assembled multitude sent forth a universal shout. The President again bowed to the people, and then retired from a scene such as the proudest monarch never enjoyed."

After taking the oath the President with the company in the balcony returned to the Senate Chamber, where he delivered his inaugural address. He, then, accompanied by the Vice-President, the Speaker, and the two Houses of Congress, proceeded on foot to St. Paul's Church, where service was conducted by the Chaplain of the Senate, the Right Rev. Samuel Provoost, D. D., Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church of New York. At its conclusion Washington entered the State coach and was escorted home.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

A Donor of $20,000 to the Work of Foreign Missions was being spoken of as a most munificent giver. "Not quite so," was the answer. "I know of at least one more generous giver." "Really?" "Well, that gift is known to very few except the Lord. The other day I was calling on a friend of mine, a very aged man, who told me, with tears running down his cheeks, that his only son was about to leave home for missionary work in a far-away land. The father had discovered that the young man felt called of God to such service, but was tarrying at home for his sake. 'How could I keep him back?' said the old man. 'I had prayed nearly all my life, "Thy kingdom come," "Send forth laborers into Thy harvest," and with all the pain of parting with my boy, in the certainty I shall never see him again on earth, there is a deep joy in giving him up for Christ's sake.'"

Riding Out the Gale.—Dr. Pentecost said: "I was once out in a small sailing vessel on the American coast, when suddenly the wind rose, blowing a furious tempest right on shore. Our bluff, old New England captain did all he could to keep away from that rock-bound coast, but all was of no avail. The ship was too small in the teeth of that gale to labor against a head wind, and we were rapidly approaching the shore. Now we could see the breakers and hear them crash over the rocks with a roar like thunder. We passengers gave ourselves up for lost. I at least felt very much alarmed when the captain gave the order to cast the anchor. Soon we saw we had ceased to drift; and were riding out the storm; yet some of us, as we looked at the thin cable chains, and then at the great fury of the storm, were inclined to doubt if indeed we were safe. But the captain went up to the chain, and pressing it down with his foot, remarked, 'Ah, it has good holding-ground, and it is a good anchor. I have proved it often. It will hold us till the morning.' And, thank God, it did. The Christian's hope that holds him steady through this world's storms is Christ: He is our only true and firm ground of hope, and we are bound to Him by His Word, His promise, and His oath."

Safer To-Day than To-Morrow.—Dr. Pentecost related the following incident at a Glasgow meeting: "At the close of one of the services of a well-known clergyman, a young man came up to him and said, 'Doctor, I am very anxious about my soul.' The minister kindly spoke to him, showed him the way of salvation, and finally, marking some passages in the young man's Bible, advised him to go home, prayerfully read them, and come to him to-morrow. The inquirer was about to go, when suddenly turning round and again confronting the doctor, he said, 'But, sir, if I should die to-night?' The clergyman was quite taken aback, but recovering himself he said, 'Young man, that is serious. Come and kneel in this room, and here and now you can give yourself to Christ.' In that room accordingly they both knelt, and our Heavenly Father again heard and answered the publican's prayer, 'God be merciful to me a sinner.' The prayer was not long, but it was from the heart, and God heard it as it left the young man's lips, and swiftly on the wings of love and grace came the answer, 'I will, be thou clean.' Then the supplicant rose a justified man. Friends, do not put off the matter of your soul's salvation. What if you should die to-night? You may. Realize the terrible consequences attendant upon that possibility, and just now, while Jesus whispers to you, come."

A Heroic Blue-Ribbon Sailor.—The Rev. Mr. Gordon observes: "A wild and drunken sailor, notorious even among his rough shipmates for his drunken habits and his fluency in foul language, was passing along a street near the Docks, when he was attracted by singing. Having nothing special to do he walked towards the direction from which the sound had come, and there saw a company of God's people gathered together holding a Gospel meeting. He stood and listened, and God's Spirit laid hold upon him, and showed him his sinful and lost condition, and also the way to escape condemnation. The sailor resolved to change captains, no longer to serve under the pirate skipper, Satan, but under Captain Jesus, and at once he showed his colors and donned the blue ribbon. The ship in which he was went to Rangoon, and while he was there he was attacked by fever, and removed to the hospital. At first his life was despaired of, but one day the doctor said, 'Well, Jack, there is a faint chance of recovery, and we must feed you up on brandy; you'll not think that bad medicine, eh? it is the only thing that may save you.' Jack looked at the doctor and said, 'Doctor I have been a drunkard, and Jesus has saved me from sin, and from the power of strong drink. Brandy might save my body, though I doubt it, but it might kill my soul. Whether I die or not I will not touch it!' I do not know whether he lived or died, but in either case he was a noble man, a true hero, and a consistent and firm Christian."

A Brave Roman Legion Destroyed.—A Minister relates: "There was a Christian legion in the Roman army. In the north of Italy dwelt a great number of Christians, whom the Roman Emperor had determined to extirpate, and this legion was ordered to carry out his ferocious resolution. In vain they implored that they should not be forced to butcher their brethren in the faith. It was part of the policy of the cruel despot, that by doing this duty they should sever themselves from their fellow-Christians, and then he thought they would readily fall back to the worship of their old idols. When the time for action came, and the Christian legion was ordered to do its sanguinary work, they firmly refused to obey. In vain they were alternately threatened and importuned; they were determined to obey God rather than man. Word was sent to headquarters. A large number of soldiers were sent down; the legion was surrounded and given the option of obeying or being decimated; yet not a man wavered in his resolution. Every tenth man was killed, and the exasperated officer in command gave them only a short time to consider whether they who were left would obey or be slaughtered where they stood. Even in the face of certain death not one faltered, but falling on their knees they prayed God to have mercy upon their fierce destroyers. The general, now frantic with rage, could not bear the sight of the kneeling saints; he ordered his men to rush upon them and put every man to the sword. Not one tried to escape. How do many Christians of the present day compare with these splendid and heroic Christians of the early ages? I fear many of us have not such magnificent courage. The reason is because we do not keep close to our Master and follow in His footsteps."

Volume XL., of the Christian Herald, Containing the numbers for 1888, with complete index, bound in cloth, may be had from this office; price, $2.50, including postage. A few volumes of 1884, 1885, and 1887 are also for sale. We can also furnish complete volumes for 1884, 1885, and 1888, unbound, price $1.50, including postage.

THE NATION'S PROTECTOR.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday,
April 28, 1889.

"And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man, and he saw; and behold, the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha." II Kings 6: 17.

The Prophet's Supernatural Guards—Our National Perils—Fiery Deliverances from Enthrallment—Elevation through Tribulation—The Upper Forces on the Side of the Nation—The Perils of the Thirteen Colonies—The Ordeal of Civil War—The Deliverance in 1876—God the Friend of the Nation—How Deliverance has Come—Registering the Vagabond Voters—Further Steps Needed—The Liquor Menace—Deliverance Sure—Faith in the Upper Forces—A Political Party with a Christian Platform—Purification of Presidential Campaigns—A National Religion Needed—The Name Cut in the Rock.

As it cost England many regiments and two million dollars a year to keep safely a troublesome captive at St. Helena, so the king of Syria sends out a whole army to capture one minister of religion—perhaps 50,000 men—to take Elisha. During the night the army of Assyrians came around the village of Dothan, where the prophet was staying. At early daybreak the man-servant of Elisha rushed in and said: "What shall we do? there is a whole army come to destroy you! We must die! we must die!" But Elisha was not scared a bit, for he looked up and saw the mountains all around full of and he knew that if there were 50,000 Assyrians against him there were 100,000 angels for him; and in answer to the prophet's prayer in behalf of his affrighted man-servant, the young man saw it too. Horses of fire harnessed to chariots of fire, and drivers of fire pulling reins of fire on bits of fire, and warriors of fire with brandished swords of fire, and the brilliance of that morning sunrise was eclipsed by the galloping splendors of the celestial cavalcade. "And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man; and he saw: and behold the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha." I have often spoken to you of the Assyrian perils which threaten our American institutions, but now, as we are assembling to keep centennial celebration of the inauguration of Washington, I speak of the upper forces of the text that are to fight on our side. If all the low levels are filled with armed threats, I have to tell you that the mountains of our hope and courage and faith are full of the horses and chariots of Divine rescue.

Supernatural Forces,

You will notice that the Divine equipage is always represented as a chariot of fire. Ezekiel and Isaiah and John, when they come to describe the Divine equipage, always represent it as a wheeled, a harnessed, an upholstered conflagration. It is not a chariot like kings and conquerors of earth mount, but an organized and compressed fire. That means purity, justice, chastisement, deliverance through burning escapes. Chariot of rescue? yes, but chariot of fire. All have been through scorching agonies and red disasters. Through tribulation the individual rises. Through tribulation nations rise. Chariots of rescue, but chariots of fire. But how do I know that this Divine equipage is on the side of our institutions? I know it by the history of the last one hundred and eight years. The American Revolution started from the pen of John Hancock in Independence Hall in 1776. The colonies, without ships, without ammunition, without guns, without trained warriors, without money, without prestige. On the other side, the mightiest nation of the earth, the largest armies, and the grandest navies, and the most distinguished commanders, and resources inexhaustible, and nearly all nations ready to back them up in the fight. Nothing, as against immensity.

Our National Disenthrallments

The cause of the American colonies, which started at zero, dropped still lower through the quarreling of the generals, and through the jealousies at small successes, and through the winters which surpassed all predecessors in depth of snow and horrors of congelment. Elisha surrounded by the whole Assyrian army did not seem to be worse off than did encompassed and overshadowed by foreign assault. What decided the contest in our favor? The upper forces, the upper armies. The Green and White mountains of New England, the Highlands along the Hudson, the mountains of Virginia, all the Appalachian ranges were full of reinforcements which the young man Washington saw by faith; and his men endured the frozen feet, and the gangrened wounds, and the exhausting hunger, and the long march, because "the Lord opened the eyes of the young man; and he saw: and behold, the mountains were full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha." Washington himself was a miracle. What Joshua was in sacred history, the first American president was in secular history. A thousand other men excelled him in different things, but he excelled them all in roundness and completeness of character. The world never saw his like, and probably never will see his like again, because there probably never will be another such exigency. He was let down a Divine interposition. He was from God direct.

The Thirteen Colonies

I do not know how any man can read the history of those times without admitting the contest was decided by the upper forces. Then, when our civil war opened, many at the North and at the South pronounced it national suicide. It was not courage against cowardice, it was not wealth against poverty, it was not large States against small States. It was heroism against heroism, it was the resources of many generations against the resources of generations, it was the prayer of the North against the prayer of the South, it was one-half of the nation in armed wrath, meeting the other half of the nation in armed indignation. What could come but extermination?

In 1861,

At the opening of the war the commander-in-chief of the United States forces was a man who had been great in battle, but old age had come, with many infirmities, and he had a right to quietude. He could not mount a horse, and he rode on the battle-field in a carriage, asking the driver not to jolt it too much. During the most of the four years of the contest, on the Southern side was a man in mid-life, who had in his veins the blood of many generations of warriors, himself one of the heroes of Cherubusco and Cerro Gordo, Contreras and Chapultepec. As the years passed on and unrolled, there came out from both sides a heroism, and a strength, and a determination that the world had never seen marshaled. And what but extermination could come when Philip Sheridan and Stonewall Jackson met, and Nathaniel Lyon and Sidney Johnston rode in from North and South, and Grant and Lee, the two thunderbolts of battle, clashed? Yet, we are a nation, and yet we are at peace. Earthly courage did not decide the conflict. The upper forces of the text. They tell us there was a battle fought above the clouds on Lookout Mountain; but there was something higher than that.

The Scroll of Carnage

Again, the horses and chariots of God came to the rescue of this nation in 1876, at the close of a Presidential election famous for ferocity.

A Darker Cloud Yet

settled down upon this nation. The result of the election was in dispute, and revolution, not between two or three sections, but revolution in every town and village and city of the United States seemed imminent. The prospect was that New York would throttle New York, and New Orleans would grip New Orleans, and Boston, Boston, and Savannah, Savannah, and Washington, Washington. Some said Mr. Tilden was elected; others said Mr. Hayes was elected; and how near we came to universal massacre some of us guessed, but God only knew. I ascribe our escape not to the honesty and righteousness of infuriated politicians, but ascribe it to the upper forces of the text. Chariots of mercy rolled in, and though the wheels were not heard, and the flash was not seen, yet all through the mountains of the North and South and the East and the West, though the hoofs did not clatter, the cavalry of God galloped by. I tell you God is the friend of this nation. In the awful excitement at the massacre at Lincoln, when there was a prospect that great slaughter would open upon this nation, God hushed the tempest. In the awful excitement at the time of Garfield's assassination, God put His foot on the neck of the cyclone. To pre-

God is on the Side of This Nation,

I argue from the last eight or nine great national harvests, and from the national health of the last quarter of a century, epidemics very exceptional, and from the great revivals of religion and from the spreading of the Church of God and from the continent blossoming with asylums and reformatory institutions, and from an Education which promises that this whole land to be a paradise, where God shall walk.

If in other sermons I showed you what the evil that threatened to upset and demolish American institutions, I am encouraged more than I can tell you as I see the regiments wheeling down the sky, and my jeremiads turn into doologies, and that which was the Good Friday the nation's crucifixion becomes the Easter morn of its resurrection. Of course, God works through human instrumentalities, and this is to come among other things through a scrutinized ballot-box. By the law of registration is almost impossible now to have illegal voting. There was a time—you and I remember it well—when droves of vagabonds wandered and down on election day, and from poll to poll, and voted here, and voted there, and voted everywhere, and there was no challenge; or there were, it amounted to nothing, because nothing could so suddenly be proved upon the vagabonds. Now, in every well-organized neighborhood, every voter is watched with severe scrutiny. I must tell the registrar my name and how old I am, and how long I have resided in the State, and how long I have resided in the ward or the township, and if I misrepresent fifty witnesses will rise and shut me out from the ballot-box. Is not that a great advance? And then notice the law that prohibits a man voting if he has bet on the election. A step further needs to be taken, and that man forbidden a vote who has offered or taken a bribe, whether it be in the shape of a free drink, cash paid down, the suspicious cases obliged to put their hand on the Bible and swear they will vote in if they vote at all. So, through the sacred chest of our nation's suffrage, redemption will come.

National Betterment

God Will Save This Nation

through an aroused moral sentiment. There has never been so much discussion of morals as in our immorals. Men, whether or not they acknowledge what is right, have to think what is right. We have men who have had their hands in the public treasury the most of their lifetime, stealing all they could lay their hands on, discussing eloquently about dishonesty in public servants; and men with two or three families of their own, preaching eloquently about the beatitudes of the seventh commandment. The question of sobriety and drunkenness is thrust in the face of this nation as never before, and takes a part in our political contests. The question of national sobriety is going to be respectfully and deferentially heard at the bar of every Legislature, and every House of Representatives, and every United States Senate; and an omnipotent voice will ring down the sky and across this land and back again, saying to these rising tides of drunkenness which threaten to overwhelm home and church and nation: "Thus far shalt thou come, but no further, and here shall proud waves be stayed."

I have not in my mind a shadow of dishonourment as large as the shadow of a houseful

ing. My faith is in the upper forces, the upper armies of the text. God is not dead! The chariots are not unwheeled. If you would only pray more, and wash your eyes in the cool, bright water fresh from the well of Christian reform, it would be said of you, as of this one of the text: "The Lord opened the eyes of the young man, and he saw; and behold the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha."

When the army of Antigonous went into battle his soldiers were very much discouraged, and they rushed up to the General and said to him: "Don't you see we have a few forces, and they have so many more?" and the soldiers were affrighted at the smallness of their number and the greatness of the enemy. Antigonous, their commander, straightened himself up and said, with indignation and vehemence: "How many do you reckon me to be?" And when we see the vast armies arrayed against

The Cause of Sobriety

It may sometimes be very discouraging, but I ask you in making up your estimate of the forces of righteousness—I ask you how many do you reckon the Lord God Almighty to be? He is our commander. The Lord of Hosts is His name. I have the best authority for saying that the chariots of God are twenty thousand, and the mountains are full of them.

You will take without my saying it that my only faith is in Christianity and in the upper forces suggested in the text. Political parties come and go, and they may be right, and they may be wrong; but God lives, and I think He has ordained this nation for a career of prosperity that no demagogism will be able to halt. I expect to live to see a political party which will have a platform of two planks—the Ten Commandments and the Sermon on the Mount. When that party is formed it will sweep across this land like a tornado, I was going to say, but when I think it is not to be devastation but re-education, I change the figure and say, such a party as that will sweep across this land like a gentle breeze from heaven.

Have you any doubt about the need of the Christian religion to purify and make Decent American Politics?

At every yearly or quadrennial election we have in this country great manufactories—manufactories of lies; and they are run day and night, and they turn out half a dozen a day all equipped and ready for full sailing. Large lies and small lies. Lies private and lies public and lies prurient. Lies cut bias, and lies cut diagonal. Long-limbed lies, and lies with double back action. Lies complimentary, and lies defamatory. Lies that some people believe, and lies that all the people believe, and lies that nobody believes. Lies with humps like camels, and scales like crocodiles, and necks as long as storks, and feet as swift as an antelope's, and stings like adders. Lies raw and scalloped and panned and stewed. Crawling lies and jumping lies and soaring lies. Lies with attachment screws and rufflers and braiders and ready-wound bobbins. Lies by Christian people who never lie except during elections, and lies by people who always lie, but beat themselves in a Presidential campaign.

I confess, I am ashamed to have a foreigner visit this country in such times. I should think he would stand dazed, his hand on his pocket-book, and dare not go out nights. What will the hundreds of thousands of foreigners who come here to live think of us? What a disgust they must have for the land of their adoption! The only good thing about it is, many of them cannot understand the English language. But I suppose the German and Italian and Swedish and French papers translate it all, and peddle out the infernal stuff to their subscribers.

Nothing but Christianity will ever stop such a flood of indecency. The Christian religion will speak after a while. The billingsgate and low scandal through which we wade every year or every four years, must be rebuked by that religion which speaks from its two great mountains, from the one mountain intoning the command, "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor," and from the other mountain making plea for kindness and blessing rather than cursing. Yes, we are going to have

A National Religion.

There are two kinds of national religion. The one is supported by the State, and is a matter of human politics, and it has great patronage, and under it men will struggle for prominence without reference to qualifications, and its archbishop is supported by a salary of $75,000 a year, and there are great cathedrals, with all the machinery of music and canonicals, and room for a thousand people, yet an audience of fifty people, or twenty people, or ten, or two.

We want no such religion as that, no such national religion; but we want this kind of national religion—the vast majority of the people converted and evangelized, and then they will manage the secular as well as the religious.

Do you say that this is impracticable? No. The time is coming just as certainly as there is a God, and that this is His book, and that He has the strength and the honesty to fulfil His promises. One of the ancient emperors used to pride himself on performing that which his counsellors said was impossible, and I have to tell you to-day that man's impossibles are God's easies. "Hath He said, and shall He not do it? Hath He commanded, and will He not bring it to pass?" The Christian religion is coming to take possession of every ballot-box, of every school-house, of every home, of every valley, of every mountain, of every acre of our national domain. This nation, notwithstanding all the evil influences that are trying to destroy it, is going to live.

Never since, according to John Milton, when "Satan was hurled headlong flaming from the ethereal skies in hideous ruin and combustion down," have the powers of darkness been so determined to win this continent as now.

What a Jewel it is —a jewel carved in relief, the cameo of this planet! On one side of us the Atlantic Ocean, dividing us from the worn-out governments of Europe. On the other side the Pacific Ocean, dividing us from the superstitions of Asia. On the north of us the Arctic Sea, which is the gymnasium in which the explorers and navigators develop their courage. A continent 10,500 miles long, 17,000,000 square miles, and all of it but about one-seventh capable of rich cultivation! One hundred millions of population on this continent of North and South America—one hundred millions, and room for many hundred millions more. All flora and all fauna, all metals and all precious woods, and all grains and all fruits. The Appalachian range the backbone, and the rivers the ganglia carrying life all through and out to the extremities. Isthmus of Darien, the narrow waist of a giant continent, all to be under one government, and

All Free, and All Christian.

and the scene of Christ's personal reign on earth if, according to the expectation of many good people, He shall at last set up His throne in this world. Who shall have this hemisphere, Christ or Satan? Who shall have the shore of her inland seas, the silver of her Nevadas, the gold of her Colorados, the telescopes of her observatories, the brain of her universities, the wheat of her prairies, the rice of her savannas, the two great ocean beaches—the one reaching from Baffin's Bay to Terra del Fuego, and the other from Behring Straits to Cape Horn—and all the moral and temporal and spiritual and everlasting interests of a population vast beyond all human computation? Who shall have the hemisphere? You and I will decide that, or help to decide it, by conscientious vote, by earnest prayer, by maintenance of Christian institutions, by support of great philanthropies, by putting body, mind, and soul on the right side of all moral, religious, and national movements.

Ah! it will not be long before it will not make any difference to you or to me what becomes of this continent, so far as earthly comfort is concerned. All we will want of it will be seven feet by three, and that will take in the largest, and there will be room and to spare. That is all of this country we will need very soon—the youngest of us. But we have an anxiety about the welfare and the happiness of the generations that are coming on, and it will be a grand thing if, when the archangel's trumpet sounds, we find that our sepulchre, like the one Joseph of Arimathea provided for Christ, is in the midst of a garden.

The Name in the Rock.

One of the seven wonders of the world was the white marble watch-tower of Pharos of Egypt. Sostratus, the architect and sculptor, after building that watch-tower, cut his name on it. Then he covered it with plastering, and to please the King, he put the monarch's name on the outside of the plastering; and the storms beat and the seas dashed in their fury, and they washed off the plastering, and they washed it out, and they washed it down, but the name of Sostratus was deep cut in the imperishable rock. So across the face of this nation there have been a great many names written, across our finances, across our religions, names worthy of remembrance, names written on the architecture of our churches and our schools and our asylums and our homes of mercy; but God is the architect of this continent, and He was the sculptor of all its grandeurs; and long after—through the wash of the ages and the tempests of centuries—all other names shall be obliterated, the divine signature and divine name will be brighter and brighter as the millenniums go by, and the world shall see that the God who made this continent has redeemed it by His grace from all its sorrows and from all its crimes.

Have You Faith?

in such a thing as that? After all the chariots have been unwheeled, and after all the war chargers have been crippled, the chariots which Elisha saw on the morning of his peril will roll on in triumph, followed by all the armies of heaven on white horses. God could do it without us, but He will not. The weakest of us, the faintest of us, the smallest brained of us, shall have a part in the triumph. We may not have our name, like the name of Sostratus, cut in imperishable rock and conspicuous for centuries, but we shall be remembered in a better place than that, even in the heart of Him who came to redeem us and redeem the world, and our names will be seen close to the signature of His wound, for, as to-day He throws out His arms to us, He says: "Behold, I have graven thee on the palms of My hand." By the mightiest of all agencies, the potency of prayer, I beg you seek our national welfare.

A Marine Post-Office.

Some time ago there were 4,600,000 letters in the dead letter post-office at Washington—letters that lost their way—but not one prayer ever directed to the heart of God miscarried. The way is all clear for the ascent of your supplications heavenward in behalf of this nation. Before the postal communication was so easy, and long ago, on a rock one hundred feet high, on the coast of England, there was a barrel fastened to a post, and in great letters on the side of the rock, so it could be seen far out at sea, were the words "Post Office;" and when ships came by a boat put out to take and fetch letters. And so sacred were those deposits of affection in that barrel that no lock was ever put upon that barrel, although it contained messages for America, and Europe, and Asia, and Africa, and all the islands of the sea. Many a storm-tossed sailor, homesick, got messages of kindness by that rock, and many a home-ward heard good news from a boy long gone. Would that all the heights of our national prosperity were in interchange of sympathies—prayers going up meeting blessings coming down; postal celestial, not by a storm-struck rock on a wintry coast, but by the Rock of Ages.

Prophetic Studies. A Report of the Address delivered at the Prophetic Conference at Chicago, with portraits of some of the speakers. It contains 216 pages. Fifty cents in paper covers, including postage. Address Manager, 63 Bible House, New York.

A PRAYER ABOUT A NOTE.

AN incident mentioned at the Fulton Street prayer-meeting illustrates the methods God uses in answering prayer. Among the requests which Mr. Lanphier read was one from a man in pressing need of money, and a gentleman present referring to this request, described how such a prayer had been answered in his experience. He had been induced to indorse a note for a heavy amount. He fully expected that his friend who had drawn the note would meet it at maturity, or would, at the most, require but little assistance in doing so. But when the note matured, he had to pay the whole amount. It came at a time when he had no money at command. His legitimate business had absorbed all available funds, and this unexpected demand meant bankruptcy and ruin. In his extremity he went into his closet "and shut to the door." He prayed earnestly for a long time without light coming. Presently, with no association to suggest the process of thought, the image of a friend floated before his mind. Why he should have seen that friend's face during his prayer he could not conceive, but thinking it might be a suggestion in answer to his prayer, he rose and went directly to his house, and told him the circumstances. "I can help you," said his friend; "it happens that I have just now a considerable sum lying unused at the bank, and you can have it as long as you need it." A cheque was written, and the thankful man left with a heart relieved. The note was taken up on the very last day of grace, only five minutes before the bank closed; but that was sufficient, his credit was saved. Business prospered, and he was soon able to refund the money advanced to him in his emergency. It is his solemn conviction that he was saved from ruin by being directed of God to apply to that friend, who was not a man to whom otherwise he would have thought of going for assistance.

MEDICAL WORK ON THE CONGO.

A LETTER which Dr. Dowkontt publishes in his Medical Missionary Record gives an idea of the character of the work medical missionaries are doing in the Congo state. It is from Dr. Charles B. Banks, and is dated from Equator Station. "Dr. Banks says: When we first came here a great many of the people were dying, and when we went into the town to speak to the people, many objected to our speaking; others allowed us to speak, and then, when we were done, changed the subject, and said, 'Your words are good, but you kill our people.' 'How?' I asked: and they answered, 'Since you came many people have died, and we believe you have killed them.'"

"No," I said, "I have not done this, but if your sick people will come to me, I will do what I can for you." This went on for several Sundays (I had not then sufficient knowledge of the language to speak to them more than once a week without repeating myself too much), and then one day a woman who had been given up as incurable by the native doctors was brought to me. She complained of intense pain in the chest. After a careful examination I was unable to discover anything organically wrong. There was palpitation only. I could not speak enough of the language then to ask and understand the answers to the questions I would like to have put for the purpose of diagnosis. But I came to the conclusion that it was an aggravated case of atonic dyspepsia, and as I found that the local bleeding to which she had been subjected had not relieved the pain, I determined to treat her for that complaint. In six weeks the woman was well again.

As she got better, so my patients began to increase and multiply. The next time I went to the town to speak to them about the love of God, one cried out that we were the cause of the people dying in the town. This time I had no need to defend myself; I had plenty of defenders among the people themselves.

Dr. Dowkontt is doing a most excellent work in preparing men for medical mission work in foreign lands. Incidentally he is also doing a grand work among the poor of New York. The young men, who are being trained for missionary work abroad, gain experience, both medical and spiritual, in the homes of the sick poor. He needs funds to support his dispensaries, etc. His address is George D. Dowkontt, M. D., 118 East 45th Street, New York.

A LADY IN THE SLUMS.

IN a recent letter to a missionary in New York, a Christian man writes: "In 1880 I visited London, called upon my uncle and his family, and asked for Cousin Carrie. In a sneering manner they told me she had made a fool of herself, and was now trying to convert the heathen in London. I was surprised, for I had only known her as a wealthy heiress, fond of the opera and gay society dances. I visited her three days before Christmas. How changed! She had forsaken the luxurious home of an English squire and was working for Jesus in the district of squalor and wretchedness, 'Seven Dials.' I remember the tears came to my eyes as she told me how she became a changed woman."

"One day she accompanied a friend on a visit to Rev. Charles Spurgeon's—his wife had been a schoolmate—and before they left, Mr. Spurgeon quietly asked her if she 'loved the Saviour,' and invited her to the Tabernacle prayer-meeting. She went; that night she turned her back to the world. Her father, brother, and sister, being Ritualists, spurned her, as she insisted upon spending her life and annuity for Christ."

"Having expressed a desire to see the nature of her work, I accompanied her on her rounds, and as we wandered up dangerous old stairs, wended down alleys into filthy cellars, everywhere met with sickening odors, I wondered how one nurtured in the cradle of luxury could endure it. It made my head ache, and brought on nausea. What scenes of woe and misery I witnessed! How the sick seemed to adore her very shadow! I said, 'Carrie, how on earth can you stand it?' She quietly replied, 'My grace is sufficient for thee.'"

"Last week I had a letter from her, saying her work had grown, and that she has now three lady and two male missionaries with her."

A FRENCH OCTOGENARIAN'S DEATH.

A VENERABLE friend of the McAll Mission in Paris is dead. Our readers who have taken an interest in Mr. McAll's work have noticed frequent references in the reports to M. Saint-Hilaire. It is he who is dead in his eighty-seventh year. Mr. McAll, writing to his friends here, gives some interesting details about his lamented friend and helper. He says:

M. Rosseeuw Saint-Hilaire's was one of the most honored names among French Protestants, and yet he was by birth and education a Roman Catholic. Indifferent to religion, he had never lapsed into atheism, but it was not until after the sudden death of his young wife and infant child that he felt the need of something more satisfactory than the philosophic deism which he then held. A professor of history in a provincial college, and already beginning to collect materials for that History of Spain which was his lifework, he had acquired a hatred of religious oppression, and when he married for his second wife the daughter of a Protestant, and became connected through her with a Protestant Church, he was prepared to find in the Gospel that which met all his need. Up to that time he had been an enthusiastic political writer, being devoted heart and soul to the liberal cause, and to M. Thiers, its advocate. He afterwards said, "Politics were my religion until religion became my politics." It was about the year 1848, when he had been for six years associate professor of history in the Sorbonne, that this change took place. From that time religion was the absorbing interest of his life.

His lectures were kindled with this new flame, and with a fresh enthusiasm he sought to convey his own convictions to his pupils. One of the most celebrated historians of Hungary had lately said that it was while a student under M. Rosseeuw Saint-Hilaire that he turned from scepticism to the Christian faith. His writing breathed the same spirit.

M. Rosseeuw Saint-Hilaire became devoted to "his friends of the McAll meetings." He once said to M. Bersier that certain evenings in a salle in one of the faubourgs of Paris had given him more of true joy than all his former brilliant successes.

A DAUGHTER'S EXCUSE REMOVED.

A SINGULAR instance of conversion in old age is reported from Kalgan, in North China, by Mr. Sprague in a letter to the Missionary Herald, referring to the recent death of a Christian in that town. His widow was anxious to have the usual heathen ceremonies, but her son, a Christian boy of great promise, earnestly protested. He had often joined his deceased father in urging the mother to become a Christian, but she had one unfailing excuse. She said that she must wait till her father died and had been properly worshipped before becoming a Christian. This father, now seventy-five years of age, was present at the funeral of his son-in-law, and manifested great interest in listening to the Christian doctrine there preached. Mr. Sprague says:

"We conducted the first Christian funeral ever witnessed in that village, and committed the dust to dust in hope of a joyful resurrection with us at the great day. Many were interested; especially the old man was led by the Spirit to decide to give up all those vanities that had given him no comfort or hope, and commence the worship of his Creator. He was quite ready to go home and destroy his idols. We visited him some days afterwards at his home (in another village, two miles away), and saw him tear down, and destroy and burn his idols. Then at the earnest request of the Christians present, I baptized him after explaining the creed, and hearing his assent to it. This is the first convert in that village. Several of his family looked on, and listened with interest. We hope and pray for more to follow."

The woman who with strange significance uttered the plea of the man in the gospel (Matt. 8:21), "Suffer me first to bury my father" will, it may be hoped, find no further excuse for delay in coming to Christ.

MARKETING IN AFRICA.

IN a letter to the African News, William Rasmussen, one of Bishop Taylor's missionaries, gives some curious details about the purchasing of food and other necessities from the natives on the Congo. He says: "Brother White and I have lived mostly on native food here at Isangala. It is good, substantial, and cheap. It may interest you to know what we pay for provisions, so I will give you the price list: For a bunch of plantains, containing from 30 to 60, according to size, we pay 2 yards of cloth, equal to about eight cents; for a bunch of bananas, 2 yards; for a tin bucketful of sweet potatoes, 2 yards; for 6 kwanga, about 3 and 6 inches long, 2 yards; for 8 lbs. of ham, 2 yards; for 6 tin cupfuls of beans, 2 yards; for 6 eggs, 2 yards; and for a good-sized chicken, 4 yards. So you can see that native food is cheap, and we have had plenty, ever during the dry season. At Vivi, the price is a little higher, as there are so many white men to buy, and at Manyanga, they say, it is more than twice as high."

When Mr. Rasmussen wrote he had just returned from a journey to Vivi to transmit a conference report. On his way back to his station at Isangala he stayed at Matamba for lunch and then went on again. "In about two hours," he says, "I heard a noise in the brush, and, looking up, I saw an elephant coming right toward me. Well, I felt considerably surprised, and, having no weapons besides my knife, umbrella, and walking-stick, I thought the best plan was to get up in a tree as soon as possible, and when I got up in a good strong one, and saw the elephant pass by in a hurry, I felt much more comfortable.

"At night I camped at Pampa Ngulu, on the bank of the Congo, a place generally used by the carriers for camping. I put my bed under a large rock that would protect me if it should rain, and, having a fire built to keep hippopotami and buffaloes away, I slept as well and felt as safe as if I had been in the city of New York. The next day, I arrived at Isangala, and was truly glad that I was home again."

THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

By Canon Faussett.*

This Period a Perplexing Problem—The Key in the Christian's Hands—I. The Closing of the Gentile Times—Israel's Approaching Restoration—II. The Revivals in Various Lands—III. The Gospel Preached as a Witness—IV. The Appearance of the Three Frog-like Spirits—V. The World and the Apostate Church Preparing for Antichrist—VI. Appearance of Predicted Types of Heresy—VII. The Prophecies Being Unsealed—VIII. Signs in the Natural World—IX. Men Becoming Cosmopolitan.

THE prevalent feeling as to unfulfilled prophecy has undergone a great change. Formerly the mind of most men, even in the Christian world, was expressed in the witticism, "Its study either finds men mad, or makes them so." Now, all thinking men recognize that in the social, political, and moral world our times are pregnant with issues of the most momentous kind. The Christian has what the mere worldly politician has not, a key to the solution of the perplexing problems of our age. We have "the word of prophecy made more sure" by past and present fulfillments, and "shining as a lamp in a dark place until the day-dawn." Hence, to neglect this divinely given lamp would involve us in our Lord's rebuke to the Pharisees, "Ye can discern the face of the sky, but can ye not discern the signs of the times?"

1. The present age is defined by our Lord as "the times (the opportunities) of the Gentiles." (Luke 21 : 24.) In the Gentile season of grace, "the fulness (the full number) of the Gentiles" (the Judæo-Gentile elect Church) is coming in. The times of Israel's depression are closing by in almost all countries in this century; and, simultaneously, the near-ending of the times of the Gentiles is marked by the revolutionary disintegration of the monarchies and republics (succeeding the Roman Empire) where the Jews have been scattered. The preliminary stages of Israel's restoration, as foretold by Ezek. 37, are already being realized. The Turkish Government, which for centuries has held the Holy Land, is slowly but surely falling to pieces. The restrictions which had forbidden the Jews settling in their own country are removed; and not only in the country of Judea, but in Jerusalem itself, there is a considerable Jewish population, which is ever on the increase through accession of fresh immigrants.

The Emancipation of the Jews

Then the outbreak of persecution against the Jews in continental lands, Russia and Germany, is something surprising in an age of light and toleration. The Jews had been acquiring wealth and standing in Gentile lands, and were beginning to give up the hope of Israel. But prophecy solves the enigma. We see fulfilled before our eyes the words (Ezek. 20 : 32-34), "That which cometh into your mind shall not be at all, that ye say, We will be as the nations. . . . I will bring you out from the countries wherein ye are scattered." But, politically, statesmen are now entertaining seriously the question, hitherto outside the range of practical politics, whether the best solution of the Eastern difficulty would not be the restoration of the Jews as a nation to their own land? The Turk must soon give up his hold on it, and the mutual jealousy of European nations will not allow Russia or any other great power to seize it.

2. The droppings of the spiritual showers, foretold as precursory to the Lord's coming to reign, are already falling. The prophet Joel (2 : 23, 28, 29) foretells an towards the close of our age, even as it began with the Pentecostal outpouring. The spiritual movement among the Jews of Bessarabia towards Jesus Christ, whom they and Rabinowitz, the leader, claim as their "brother," illustrates this. The special revivals of religion in various lands of Gentile Christendom by evangelistic missions also attest it. Before the Lord comes to take His saints, and to inflict vengeance on apostate Christendom, as we might expect from His loving character, He gives one last message of mercy. Before the tempest the Good Shepherd gathers all His sheep into the fold.

Outpouring of the Holy Spirit

3. Connected with this is the sign of His coming which the Lord Himself gives (Matt. 24 : 14): "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for and then shall the end come." The end meant is plainly not the end of the world, kosmos, but of the age, aiōnos. Nor does the Lord say that all nations are in this age to be converted. If He had said so, there would have been ground for the charge laid against Christian Missions, that after the preaching of eighteen centuries they are a failure. The Lord's command is, that His disciples shall preach the gospel as a witness to the world; and His revealed purpose is, when that witness shall have been completed, that He will come Himself to convert first Israel, and then the nations. Thus missions are doing successfully the very work which God appointed; they are being used by God, in "the times of the Gentiles," "to take out of them a people for His name." (Acts 15 : 14.) The sign of His near approach is the fact that there is now scarcely a nation where the gospel has not been preached for a witness.

A Witness Unto All Nations;

4. About the time of the end, the apocalyptic seer "saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and of the beast, and of the false prophet." (Rev. 16 : 13.) As before the First Advent, Satan, by his demons, took possession of men's bodies, so before the Second Advent seeks to counterwork the good Spirit of God. "The unclean spirit out of the dragon's mouth," now especially repeats the old serpent's lie, "yea, hath God said?" denying the inspiration of Scripture: "ye shall not die," denying the eternal punishment of the lost; "ye shall be as gods," proclaiming man's apotheosis. "The unclean spirit out of the beast's mouth" is in these "last days," especially seducing men to intense worldliness, selfishness, and lawlessness. Worldliness is what our Lord fixes on as the feature of likeness between the people just before the flood, and men at the time of His manifestation for judgment. St. Paul (II Tim. 3) gives us marks of the last days: "Men shall be lovers of their own selves, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, having the form of godliness, but denying the power." Could there be a better photograph of Christendom?

The Anti-Trinity of the Evil Spirit

5. But the full manifestation of the false prophet is yet future. The last Antichrist to whom he shall minister is only manifested fully when he shall have stripped of all her possessions or Babylon (i. e., all outward Christendom, of which Romanism is the prominent representative, Rev. 13, 16, 17, 18, 19). The beginning of the process is one of the most significant signs of our times, that we are on the eve of the consummation. When the professing Church forsakes the Lord her husband for the world, she becomes spiritually "the harlot." Jerusalem the holy becomes Babylon, mother of abominations of the earth." The world-power on whom she rested, and whose scarlet livery she wore, being conformed to the world instead of being transformed to Christ's image, at last wearies of and casts her off. France, which first by the usurper Pepin gave the usurping see of Rome temporal dominion, was the first under the usurper Napoleon to strip her of it. The beast has similarly stripped the harlot in Italy, Spain, Portugal, Austria, Belgium. But the process is not yet complete.

The Apostate Church.

6. The waning faith of our day, with its impatience of dogma, its unblushingly avowed Positivism, Secularism, and Agnosticism, is fulfilling the predicted sign of His approach, "When the Son of Man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?" The growing realization of the communion of saints at this very time, when "they that fear Jehovah speak often one to another, and Jehovah hearkens, and a book of remembrance is written before Him for them that fear Jehovah and think upon His name; and they shall be His in the day that He does make a peculiar treasure." (Mal. 3 : 13-16, 4 : 1.) How sweetly suggestive it is that the same Greek word which expresses the assembling or gathering of the saints for communion on earth, expresses also their gathering together to Jesus at His appearing. The frequent conferences of Christians for prayer and study of the Word, are fulfillments of this appointed sign of the end.

The Prophecies Unsealed.

7. Growth in knowledge of the prophecies but little understood in past times, is another of the foretold signs of the time before the end. This sign is certainly being now fulfilled. In Daniel 12 : 4, 8, 9; 8 : 26, the Divine direction is, "Seal the book to the time of the end." But at the time of the Gospel revelation of what had been previously veiled, it is "Seal not the sayings of the prophecy, for the time is at hand." (Rev. 22 : 10.) "It was sealed to Daniel, for then the time was distant; it is unsealed to us, for the end is near." The fuller understanding of it at the close of our age is further foretold: "Many shall run to and fro (i. e., scrutinize every word; as the phrase means in Amos 8 : 12, run to and fro in diligent search), and so the knowledge (of it) shall be increased."

8. Earthquakes, famine, pestilences, in divers places; "wars and rumors of wars," are another sign. The peculiarity of our day is, those foretold as signs by our Lord, seem to be intensifying and converging now towards a focus. Scientific men have noticed the increase of earthquakes in this century above any preceding one. Mr. Mallet, C. E., states that the number recorded from 1800 to 1882 is 6,637; whereas from 1500 to 1800 it is 2,804. All the great powers are armed, expecting at any day a universal and deadly conflict.

Physical Phenomena

9. One last sign remains to be noticed: the remarkable analogy between our times and those preceding the First Advent, as respects

The Unification of the World.

The providence of God then remarkably prepared the nations for the manifestation of Messiah. Had He come earlier, the progress of the Gospel must have been slow, owing to the isolation of nation from nation, and the barbarism in which so many countries lay; and also the barrier which the want of any generally understood language and literature interposed. But precisely at the time when Rome combined the nations in one almost universal polity, and with one state language—significantly marked by the emperor's decree that all the world should be registered for taxation (Luke 2 : 1), "the days were accomplished" for Jesus' birth; so now the hedges are being broken down between the peoples, not merely of Europe, Western Asia, and North Africa, as at the First Advent, but on a grander scale between all nations near and far. "The languages of all nations are becoming known and being put within the reach of all. Thought is communicated with the rapidity and by the power of lightning." By the railway, the telegraph, the telephone, and kindred appliances uniting the peoples in solidarity, the grand field is all but ready for the manifestation of the Lord Jesus to sweep out the unbelieving, and then to "take His great power" and reign as "King over all the earth" with His transfigured saints.

*Part of a valuable article in the Prophetic News for April. For sale, price six cents, at this office, 63 Bible House, N. Y.

OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 3 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Prohibition Defeat in Massachusetts last week has been a severe disappointment to many who hoped against hope to the last. The Prohibitionists had many reasons for hoping for success. They had on their side an overwhelming majority of the clergy, and among the prominent advocates of the amendment were Senator Hoar, ex-Governor Claflin, and many other men of ability and influence. The public was well informed by the press and public meetings of the merits of the question, and the Women's Christian Temperance Union worked and prayed with more even than their usual zeal for a victory. But the defeat was decisive. It is claimed that the amendment was rejected by a majority of more than 44,000, which was about one-fifth of the total vote, Boston contributed 20,015 to the total majority, and Lawrence 2,490. Salem and Waltham were the only two cities that voted Prohibition. A remarkable fact is, that Cambridge, which recently voted Prohibition for itself, under the law of Local Option, by a vote of 4,483 to 3,819, voted last week against Prohibition for the State by 4,621 to 1,983. There was a similar reversal of the local vote in Quincy, Brockton, and Malden. The total vote was much smaller than was anticipated, indicating that many friends of Prohibition must have abstained from voting. The number of votes against the amendment proved that there was no apathy among the anti-Prohibitionists.

Ominous News of a Case of Yellow Fever at Sanford, Fla., was received by Surgeon-General Hamilton on April 23. Sanford is only six miles from the scene of last year's epidemic, and was not thoroughly disinfected when it ceased. After the Government ceased to pay for articles destroyed, the people declined to give up property which was not clearly proved to be infected. It is feared that in this way some of the germs may have escaped destruction. As there was an epidemic in Sanford in 1887, and there were 150 deaths from the plague, the people are fully cognizant of the danger with which they are threatened now, and are prepared to take heroic measures at the outset. This fact minimizes the danger, and Dr. Hamilton believes an epidemic may be averted, as it would not be if unwise concealment were practiced. He says a well-organized and efficient system of inspection exists, and the utmost vigilance will be exercised, and he has gone to Jacksonville to confer with the State authorities as to the best measures to prevent the infection spreading.

The Safety of the "Danmark's" Passengers and crew, as was announced in part of our edition of last week, was reported on April 22. It appears that on April 4 the Danmark, which had left Christiansand on March 26 for New York, broke the tail-end of her propeller. The exact cause of the fracture will never be known, as her engineer was found dead with his skull crushed in. All that was known at the time was that there was a terrific explosion, and the end of the screw revolved furiously, splintering the timbers of the keel, and causing a tremendous leak. The holes were filled temporarily, but the steamer was at the mercy of the waves. On April 5 the Missouri, of the Atlantic Transport line, sighted the Danmark, and went to her assistance. An attempt was made to tow her to the nearest port, but the Danmark was filling rapidly, and it became necessary to take off the passengers and crew. The captain of the Missouri threw overboard a part of his cargo to make room for the 787 imperiled persons. As there were not sufficient provisions for so large a number the Missouri steered for the Azores, which were 720 miles away. There 370 of the passengers and crew were landed, fresh provisions were taken on board, and the Missouri resumed her voyage to America. She arrived at Philadelphia on April 22, and received a joyful welcome. Her captain, Hamilton Murrell, who made such energetic efforts to rescue the people, and who so skillfully provided for their transfer to his ship, is only twenty-nine years old. His conduct deserves, and has received the highest praise. An interesting incident of the rescue was the birth, on the day after the transfer, of a little girl, whose mother, one of the Danmark's passengers, was a bright little Danish woman only eighteen years old. The baby received the name of "Atlanta Missouri," in allusion to the strange circumstances of her birth.

The Death of Postmaster Pearson, of New York, which occurred on April 20, has a sad pathos in the circumstances of his removal from office. It appears that he has been suffering for many months from an abdominal tumor, and knew that it must overcome him in the end. His conscientious devotion to the duties of his office, however, kept him until this year from taking the rest and change of scene which alone could have prolonged his life. His wonderful power of will enabled him to be at his post as lately as April 16, and then it was with difficulty that he was almost forced to leave it and submit to proper care and medical attention. He was a target for the attacks of the Democratic press all through President Cleveland's administration. As the President could not be forced to remove him from office on the ground of his politics, efforts were made to prove him inefficient, but they always failed. They were, however, a constant reminder to the sick man that a jealous watch was kept upon him and rendered him almost morbidly anxious that no duty should be neglected. It must have embittered his last days to know that his own party had yielded to the pressure that had been withstood by his political opponents. His last words were: "I have spent my life fighting the spoils system, and it grieves me to know that those for whom I have fought have misunderstood me." It is the curse of our political system that those who shout, and work, and pay out their money to elect a President, expect to be rewarded by the gift of an office for which they may not be fitted by capacity or experience, and that too often their expectation is fulfilled.

Sir Julian Pauncefote, the New British Minister to Washington, arrived in New York on April 21. The long-delayed appointment of a successor to Lord Sackville had excited some curiosity about the attitude of the British Government on the question of his dismissal, which was said to be regarded as an affront. The new Minister is sixty-one years of age. Though new to his duties, he is familiar with diplomatic affairs. He has never represented England at a foreign court, but has held a prominent position in the Foreign Office in London as Assistant Secretary. For some time prior to his holding that office he was Attorney-General at Hong Kong, and afterward Chief-Justice of the Leeward Islands. The reporters, who eagerly endeavored to interview him, found that he was not so communicative as his predecessor, and may therefore be expected not to err in the same manner.

A Railroad Change in the Right Direction goes into effect from this date. It is well known that for some time past Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt has been strenuously urging the decrease of Sunday work on the railroads controlled by his house. It is now announced that after May 1 all the Vanderbilt roads east of Chicago will abandon the largest portion of their Sunday freight trains. Mr. Vanderbilt would doubtless be glad to stop all freight traffic on the Lord's Day, but his roads are under contract to connecting roads, and also some of the freight is live-stock and perishable articles. More than half of the freight traffic may, however, be stopped without loss to the consignees, and without breaking contracts, and this is to be done. Sunday passenger traffic is also curtailed by an absolute refusal to run excursion trains, and in other ways. Mr. Vanderbilt is in Europe, but when Mr. Depew was questioned about the change, he said it was mainly due to Mr. Vanderbilt's persistence, and his reasons for making it were not economical but religious. The change will not bring about an ideal state of things, but it approaches it by one step.

Serious Labor Troubles Have Developed in Vienna. On three days last week a large number of street-car drivers and conductors, with their sympathizers, attacked the cars, which were run by their substitutes, and much damage was done. The police failed in their attempts to suppress the riot, and the military were called out. The soldiers and police then charged the crowd with swords. Many of the rioters received bloody wounds, and about one hundred were arrested. The mob replied by throwing stones. The rioters tried to set fire to a gun factory at Hernals. The troops fired a volley into the mob, and wounded many persons. Several shops were looted. A commissioner of police was nearly stoned to death by the mob, and was rescued with much difficulty by a party of dragoons. Spectators who are well acquainted with the workingmen of the city state that they retired early in the fight, but the conflict was continued by Socialists and loafers for purposes of plunder.

General Boulanger has Found a Refuge in England, as so many eminent Frenchmen of all classes and parties have done before him. The Belgian Government, on April 23, politely intimated to him that he was not a welcome guest in Brussels, and the General would confer a favor in curtailing a visit that promised to be a source of complication with the French Government. He accordingly sailed the next day for Dover. On the arrival of the steamer at that port, the General, who had been dreadfully searsick during the passage, entered the railroad car and travelled to London. There was a crowd of fully two thousand persons at the London station to meet him, but they appeared to be chiefly newspaper men and curious citizens. No prominent men, English or French, could be recognized among the sea of faces. As he emerged from the station there were cheers and hisses from the people, and a few Frenchmen shouted "Vive Boulanger!" Two ladies presented him with bouquets. As the General drove to his hotel there was more cheering and hissing, the former predominating. He bowed formally in response, but appeared dejected. Soon afterward, though it was only 4 o'clock, a strange darkening of the atmosphere occurred, following a heavy fog, and the General is said to have regarded it as a bad omen.

A Statement of the Samoan Question, which is intended to form the basis of discussion in the approaching conference in Berlin, has been prepared by the German Government. The Berlin correspondent of the New York Herald says that it has been submitted to and approved by Sir Edward Malet, the British Ambassador, who was in all probability consulted while it was being drafted. If the American Commissioners accept the statement the conference ought not to last more than a week. Germany concedes the principle of absolute non-interference in Samoa, and the natives are to be left free to choose as their ruler either Malietoa, Tamasese, or Mataafa. No claims for compensation for German subjects are mentioned in the statement, and practically the work of the conference is limited to defining explicitly the power of consuls in regulating trade and shipping, the boundaries of and rights over Pago-Pago, and other virtual stations, and the formation of a tribunal for the protection and trial of foreigners.

Miss Alice Fletcher's Extensive Experience among the Indians has satisfied her of the enormous temporal benefits of mission work among them. Speaking recently at the Central Presbyterian Church in New York to the Ladies' Home and Foreign Missionary Society, she said: "The Indian mission question, especially among the five civilized tribes, is beginning to lose its distinctive features. The mission work is beginning to take on more of the character of that which you carry on here at home. A large number of Indians are now turning to farming. They live in houses, cultivate the ground, attend worship, and are comfortable to a degree. The great bulk of this is the direct outcome of your mission work."

A Temperance Lesson Having the Merit of being true was published in the New York Sun last Wednesday. A reporter on that journal met a man who for years kept a well-known up-town grog shop. "I've given up the business; sold out and quit for good," said the ex-saloon keeper. "I couldn't stand drunken men. Oh, I could handle them all right—I wasn't afraid of them; but the idea of taking so much money that deprives women and children of necessities and comforts was too much for me. I used to see poor fellows who got ten or twelve dollars a week come in of a Saturday and blow in half their earnings, and I knew that it meant distress for hard-working women and innocent children. I couldn't keep on taking their money. It broke me up."

A Puzzled Surveyor was Enlightened by a scientific friend recently at Kingston, N. Y. The surveyor was engaged in running a line, but at the outset of his work his compass failed him. To use his own expression, his "line ran in the air." The compass had never played him such a trick before, and he examined it carefully, but found no cause for the aberration. "I looked up to the sky," he said, laughingly, "to see if the North Star could be out of gear." He moved his position, and tried again, but no sooner had he levelled his compass and bent over it than he was foiled again. He called the attention of a friend to the circumstance, and his friend watched the strange performance attentively. "Ah!" he said, "you have a new hat on; let me look at it." The surveyor removed his hat, and handed it to his friend, whereupon the friend showed the puzzled man that in the stiff brim of the hat a steel wire had been placed to keep the form perfect, and the wire had affected the needle; as the surveyor bent over the instrument working without his hat, the compass did its duty faithfully, but by hanging his hat upon it the needle went up instantly. A similar phenomenon takes place frequently in spiritual matters. The conscience, which should direct its owner faithfully, becomes useless when strong inclination to evil or the sophistry of the tempter perverts it. (Titus 1: 15.)

A Palace on Wheels was Completed Last week, and was inspected by a large number of visitors. It is the new Wagner stateroom car Lorraine, and will be put on the Chicago Limited Express of the New York Central Railroad. The car contains ten staterooms, six in front, with windows on the left, and four in the rear with windows on the right. Each room in its day dress presents a picture of handsome plush velours upholstery, highly finished wood trimmings, tapestry wall decorations, stained-glass interior windows, nickel basins, with hot and cold water attachments, velvet carpeting, silk shades, and such other improvements as skill has devised and experience suggested in this line. A burnished reflector in the top of each compartment throws the light of four burners into the room. The disposition of the staterooms on each side of the car ensures balance and evenness in running, and the arrangement of some of the rooms is such that families or parties may throw two or more compartments into one, and seclude themselves from the rest of the car. A library and buffet are connected with the car, although for dining purposes a separate car will be used; and there is provision for heat either by steam or hot water pipes. Special arrangements have been made to minimize vibration so that passengers will scarcely be conscious, except by looking out of window, that they are travelling, and not comfortably at home in their own houses. That will be a great advantage in a railroad journey but people are too apt to lose that consciousness also in the journey of life, and to forget that they are travelling rapidly toward one of two worlds, and that this world is not their rest. (Heb. 13, 14.)

The Re-union of Two Sisters After Twenty-five years separation took place in Ansonia, Conn., a few days ago. In 1864 a man and his wife living at Bethel, Conn., were attacked by small-pox, and died within two days of each other. They left two baby girls, whom at first it was intended to send to the poorhouse. A kindly lady living at Redding, however, heard of the orphans, and offered to take one of them, and bring her up as her own daughter. Soon afterward the other baby was adopted by a family at Ansonia. Both have grown up beautiful, well-educated ladies. Recently the Bethel girl was married, and among the friends who came to call upon her was a lady who had known the bride's parents. "How is your sister getting on?" the lady asked; "is she still at Ansonia?" "My sister!" said the bride; "I have no sister." This led to the visitor telling her the story of her parents' death, and the adoption of the two babies. The bride was much excited by the story, and at once instituted inquiries about her sister, which were successful. She, too, was in ignorance of her sister's existence. When they were brought together no introduction was needed. They rushed into each other's arms with cries of joy, and exchanged tokens of endearment. Something like this takes place in every genuine conversion. The heart that is brought to Christ overflows with love to others, and recognizes brethren in persons to whom it was previously indifferent. (1. John 4: 21.)

A Curious Question of Personal Identity came before the Courts of Kansas City, Mo., last week. A wealthy gentleman of that city recently died intestate, and a youth who had been supposed to be his son claimed the bulk of the estate. Other relatives, however, interposed and disputed the claim on a singular plea. They said that the wife of the deceased millionaire died in giving birth to a son. The child was thereupon placed in charge of his mother's sister, who also had given birth to a boy on the same day. The two children were brought up together, but one of them died, and the nurse could not, or would not, say which of the two it was. The millionaire, however, was told that the living boy was his son, but the relatives contend that his son was the child who died. Much evidence of a circumstantial character was introduced on both sides, and the result was so extremely uncertain that a compromise was advised. The boy's friends eventually agreed, on his behalf, that he should share the estate with the contestants and abandon his larger claim. This arrangement was probably the wisest thing to do, as it was difficult, if not impossible, to prove that the boy was really the heir, though, if he is the son of the deceased, he is being unjustly defrauded of part of his inheritance. It is cheering to know that no question of identity can ever arise to invalidate the Christian's claim to his heavenly inheritance. We have apostolic assurance that "the Lord knoweth them that are His." (11 Tim. 2: 19.)

A Story of a Disappointed Wedding Party is told in a sketch of the life of the late Isaiah V. Williamson, the philanthropist, in the Philadelphia Record. It states that Mr. Williamson, who lived and died a bachelor, was once engaged to be married. The lady was in every respect suitable: wealthy, beautiful, accomplished, and of distinguished family. The wedding-day was fixed, and the guests invited. The wedding was to take place at the bride's home, and on the day appointed a large and brilliant company assembled. The bride was looking her loveliest, and the clergyman was there, ready to read the service; but the bridegroom was missing. Two of Mr. Williamson's friends went in search of him. They drove to his house, but he was not there. Then they went to his favorite haunts, but nowhere could they find him. At last they drove to his office, in Bank Street, and there he was. He was dressed in his wedding-suit, but his brows were overcast, his knees trembling, and every feature expressing intense nervous distress. "Don't talk to me," he said; "I can never face all those people." They argued and encouraged him; but, after an hour of talk, they could get no other answer from him. Finally, they gave up in despair, and returned to the bride's house and dismissed the guests. The bride was nearly distracted with mortification for a day or two, but soon recovered, and is still living, and much respected by a large circle of friends. Of course the engagement was broken off and never renewed. Probably a man of so nervous a temperament was happier as a bachelor than he would have been as a married man, so the rupture of the engagement was no misfortune to him. But it will not be so with those who shrink from public union with Christ. He plainly said that they who do not confess Him before men He would not acknowledge at His coming. (Matt. 10: 32, 33.)

BRIEF NOTES.

A railroad within the Arctic circle is proposed. The route is through western Siberia and the extreme north of Russia.

There are three Protestant churches in Lisbon, Portugal, and the pastors of all three were formerly Roman Catholic priests.

The Alabama Legislature, through the influence of the State W. C. T. U., has passed a bill for the establishment of night-schools in convict stations.

Forty students of Yale Divinity School have volunteered to take each a section of work in house-to-house visitation in the ten wards of New Haven, Conn.

A native newspaper of India makes this pertinent remark: "Our liquor traffic begins by hanging a sign over the door, and ends by hanging a man on a gibbet."

The population of Japan at the end of last year, according to the Official Gazette, was 39,069,007, of whom 19,731,354 were males and 19,339,653 were females.

Noon-day services "for busy men" are held daily in one of the bank buildings in the heart of Omaha, conducted by Dean Gardner, with an attendance of forty.

United States Senator Platt, of Connecticut, says: "The most difficult phase of the drink problem is, that those who drink least most effectually hinder temperance progress."

Miss Fabian, a devoted English woman, passed through New York recently on her way to the Sandwich Islands, where she is going as a volunteer nurse to the leper colony at Molokai.

A Newsboys' and Bootblacks' Home is about to be established by the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Toledo, O. Gospel total abstinence will here find receptive seed-ground.

A new monthly paper, The Banner of Asia, is to be published at Bombay. Its primary object will be to urge the immediate stoppage of the Government traffic in vice, liquor, and opium in the British territory.

Subscribers who may have back numbers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, or religious literature of any kind, to give away, are informed that Mr. William Marcham Bowry Louis, Province of Quebec, Canada, would be glad to receive, and distribute them where such reading is much needed.

During the year 1888 the following cities have dedicated new Y. M. C. A. buildings at the following costs: Toronto, $80,000; Detroit, $125,000; Albany, $100,000; Indianapolis, $100,000; Worcester, $140,000; St. Joseph, $125,000; New York (railroad), $100,000; Yorkville Branch, $30,000.

The medical mission of Philadelphia has followed the example of the Florence Mission in New York in providing a free meal for women after the service every Thursday night. This mission, which is located at 519 South Sixth Street, is doing excellent work among the vicious class. It is supported by voluntary contributions.

Lord Randolph Churchill is a new addition to the ranks of Prohibitionists. He said recently, in reference to an opponent of Prohibition, "I would like to take him into some parts of London after dark, when he would soon declare that a strong despotic administration with regard to the liquor traffic would be attended with the most unmixed and unadulterated good."

PERSONAL RESPONSIBILITY.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"Then Mordecai commanded to answer Esther, Think not with thyself that thou shalt escape in the king's house, more than all the Jews. For if thou altogether holdest thy peace at this time, then shall there enlargement and deliverance arise to the Jews from another place; but thou and thy father's house shall be destroyed: and who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?" Esther 4: 13, 14.

The Pre-eminence of the Anglo-Saxon Race—Elevated for a Purpose—The Responsibilities of Churches—Individual Responsibility Not Merged—Four Pointed Words—I. Harken—A Warning Against Isolation—Separation Impossible—The Danger of Living in Polluted Air—No Man Essential to God's Purposes—Possibility of Losing Opportunity—II. Consider—What God has Given—Spiritual and Temporal Wealth—The Character of the Crisis—Preparation for Specific Work—III. Aspire—Louis Napoleon's Ambition—No Insurmountable Obstacles—God's Lamps Being Made—IV. Confide—Safety Assured—A Statesman's Successful Fanaticism.

THE appeal of Mordecai in his pressing time of distress was to one single person, namely to Esther. I believe that I shall do better this morning by making my sermon an address to individuals than by speaking of nations or churches. I assuredly believe that England has been raised up as a nation and brought to her present unique position that she may be the means of spreading the Gospel throughout all the nations. I judge that God has blessed of the Anglo-Saxon race—England and the United States—and given them pre-eminence in commerce and in liberty on purpose that in such a time as this they may spread abroad the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. Woe to these nations if they fail to fulfil their solemn obligations! If, being raised up for a purpose, they refuse to perform it, they shall melt away. We are intrusted with great opportunities: if we do not rightly use them the New Zealander of Macaulay may yet survey the ruins of this empire-city. "Thou and thy father's house shall be destroyed," said Mordecai to Esther, and he says the same to us.

The Two Great Nations,

We might properly say of any Christian church that it has its own appointed place in the purposes of divine mercy. If the candle is lighted, even though it be set upon a golden candlestick, it is not lighted for itself, but that it may give light to all that are in the house. If any church fail to bless others, and so proves unfaithful to the Lord will take away the candlestick out of its place, and leave the unfaithful to mourn in darkness. The Church in Rome was once a church of high commanding influence for good; you know what it has become. Some other churches are on the way, I fear, to the same dreadful end. God grant that none of the churches with which we are connected as Christian people may ever either apostatize from the faith, or grow lax and worldly, or become indifferent to the glory of God and the salvation of men. I might thus speak to each church and say, "Who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?"

Her Solemn Trust,

My brethren, it is a wonderfully easy thing to denounce the faults of a government or of a nation, to complain of this being done, and of that being left undone; and this amusement may only serve to divert our conscience from its more profitable duties at home. The same is true with regard to a church. Men are too apt to condemn in the mass what they tolerate in themselves as individuals. But why are we so ready to accuse the churches? Why are we so censorious as to what the churches do, and what the churches are? Who make up the churches? Why, we each one by our influence help to make the churches good, or bad, or indifferent, as the case may be. Therefore, I will not waste time in generalities, but I will come to personalities. I will follow Mordecai's tack, and speak alone to Esther, that is to say, to each one who may happen to be here to whom God has intrusted opportunity, talent, and position; I would urge them to remember that there is a something for each believer to do, a work which he cannot delegate to another, a task which it is his privilege to be permitted to undertake, which it will be to his solemn disgrace and detriment if he do not execute, but which will be to his eternal glory under God if he be found faithful in it. I shall lay out my sermon in four parcels, arranging it under four words.

I. The first word is "harken!" Harken to my word, as Mordecai desired Esther to harken to him. Harken while God the Lord speaks to your heart, and calls you to your high vocation. Harken, first, to a question. Brother,

Will You Separate Your Interests

from those of your people and your God? I do not think that Mordecai was afraid that Esther would do so; but still it is sometimes as well to prevent an evil before we perceive it; and he did so by saying, "Think not with thyself that thou shalt escape in the king's house." It was possible that, being a queen, it might enter into her mind that she would be safe even if all the rest of the Jews were put to death. It would be a painful thing that her countrymen should be destroyed, but still the stroke might not touch her in the seclusion of the palace, where she had "not yet showed her kindred nor her people." She would still remain the favored wife of the great king; and she might, therefore, selfishly look to herself, and leave those who were in peril to look to themselves or to their God, while she coldly hoped that the Lord would somehow or other give them deliverance. Does that temptation come across the path of any one of us? It may. You may say, "I shall be saved though the city should perish in its iniquity. Though the people are steeped in poverty and ignorance, I shall enjoy plenty and live in light. I know the Lord, and that is if the heathen perish, I am not one of them, and I am thankful that it will not interfere with my destiny." Will you argue in this selfish manner? Do you wish to be joined with Jesus so as to be rescued from hell? I tell you, sirs, there is no receiving Christ unless you receive His doctrine and rule. You must receive this grace also, namely, that you give yourself to Him to make His interests your interests, His life your life, His kingdom your kingdom, His glory your glory.

My Main Concern;

Harken to a second question. If you could separate your interests from those of the cause of God, would you thereby secure them? Is it so, that because you are yourself a member of a flourishing church, and because you enjoy all sorts of Christian privileges, you therefore harden your heart concerning dying churches and desponding saints? Do you imagine that the body can be sick, and yet you as a member of it will not suffer? I tell you, if the Church of God goes aside it will be to your injury; if the truth of God be not preached

You Will Be a Loser;

if Christian life be not vigorous you will be weakened. When a baneful atmosphere is over other Christians you will breathe it. Sinners cannot be left in their spiritual death without creating a foulness in the air which is to the peril of us all. If this great city is left to seethe and rot in its infidelity and misery and filthiness, fancy not that you Christian people will escape. You dwell with these outcasts, and you are already feeling their influence, and will feel it still more if they do not feel yours. How far and how deep that participation will go I will not venture to prophecy, for I am no prophet, neither the son of a prophet; but there are elements now fermenting which threaten, first, the existence of the commonwealth, and next, the liberties of Christian worship. Take you good heed, my brethren; things cannot long remain as they are. This great flood of wretchedness must be assuaged, or it will sweep us all away. This may be a selfish argument; but as we are battling with selfishness, we may fitly take Goliath's sword with which to cut off his head. You Christian people suffer if the Church suffers; you suffer even if the world suffers.

Next, remember, for your humiliation, that God Can Do Without You.

Enlargement and deliverance will arise to His people from another place if it come not by us. If the Lord were tied up to any one man, or any one church, or any one nation, it were treasonable for that person, church, or nation to be negligent; but as the Lord waiteth not for man, neither tarrieth for the sons of men, it becomes them to mind what they are at. He can do without us. When He looked and there was no man, His own arm brought salvation; and as it was of old, so will it be again. Mark you that. He will effect His purpose; He will fetch home His banished; He will gather together His scattered sheep; He will cause the earth to be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea; and if we do not gather in the wanderers, or spread the knowledge of His grace, it will be done by more faithful men.

Here follows a still more sobering reflection. Recollect, that as God can do without us, it may be He will do without us. It might come to pass that God would say, "I will no more bless the world by this England; she has become

Selfishly Mercantile;

she cares more for commerce than for righteousness; she is drunken and infidel; I will give her up. Her merchants care nothing for the poor, whose labor is ill-requited; let her pass away, as all oppressors must, and let the nations say, 'Alas! alas! that great city, that mighty city!' For in one hour so great riches is come to nought." He may say to any church: "Repent; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will fight against thee with the sword of my mouth." "Ichabod" has been written aforetime, and may be again, on places where once there shone upon the forefront the inscription—"Holiness unto the Lord." So also any man may be set aside, even as the Lord put away Saul, and said to him, "Thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, and the Lord hath rejected thee from being king over Israel." Harken, I pray you, to this warning from the Lord. Hear, O heaven, and give ear, O earth, for the Lord will judge His people, and to whom much is given, of him shall much be required.

Harken to one thing more. How will you bear

The Disgrace,

if ever it come upon you, of having suffered your golden opportunities to be wasted? What if Israel had been destroyed for lack of Esther's intercession? Her name would have been a byword among other nations as a base and traitorous woman. If the people had been spared by some other means, and she had refused her mission, as long as there lived a Jew they would have kept no feast of Purim, but have cursed her memory. When I think of the neglects of our own ancestors, I am anxious that we take warning by them. There are at this moment straths in the Highlands which are thoroughly Romish. Why? They were not carefully evangelized at the time of the Reformation. If the workers of that period had done their work thoroughly there would have been no Romish valleys in Presbyterian Scotland. Ireland still cowers under the shadow of the Pope; there was a hopeful time when better things were promised, but this was allowed to pass by; and what can be done to rescue Ireland now? Times do not tarry, and tides do not wait; and if we do not avail ourselves of them while they are with us, our sons may lament our neglects.

I fear that the best among us can recollect with regret times which we have suffered to pass over us unimproved. We can never call them back again. You did not train your children; they are men and women now, and will not listen to you. O parents, why did you not speak to them when they would have listened? But what if a whole life should glide away in living for yourselves, in living for your own comfort and enriching? Let every Esther resolve that she will never bring this ban upon her name; let every man, woman, and even child, among us, knowing the Lord, feel that the vows of the Lord are upon us, and that by imperative necessity we must serve according to our capacity the cause of God and truth.

II. I change a little, and the call is now

"Consider."

Consider to what some of you have been advanced. You have been raised to salvation. What manner of persons ought we to be? You have been raised to that honor, walk worthy of it. If I had said that you had been elevated to be queens, like Esther, it would have been a poor elevation compared with that which you have actually received. Some of you who are the favorites of heaven have leaned your head on Christ's bosom, and have been permitted to sit where angels would wish to be; you are near and dear to Jesus, and espoused to Him in love.

In addition to all this, the Lord has raised some of you out of poverty and brought you to comparative wealth, perhaps to positive wealth; and He has given you positions which once you never dreamed of. To this He adds domestic comfort, and health, and prosperity in all its forms. The Lord has also given you talent. I fear we have all of us more ability than we use—but some have more talent than they themselves are aware of, and this perhaps they display in business, but never in the cause of God.

Thus you are brought to the kingdom; but why is it so? I want you to consider why the Lord has brought you where you are. Do you think that He has done it for your own sake? Does He intend all this merely that you may practice self-indulgence? Can this be the design of God? Do not think so. Whatever you have is yours, or to spend upon yourself, but that you may use it as a good steward of God. Who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom which God has given thee for such a time as this, when there is need of thee and all that thou hast?

Not to Hoard for Yourself,

Consider, next, at what a time it is that you have been thus advanced. You have been instructed in the faith in a time when unbelief is rampant. What for? You have wealth when many are starving. Why is this? Do you think you are the proprietor of what you have amassed; or do you admit that you are a steward? If you are a steward, use not the goods intrusted to you for your own ends, but for your Master; for if you do not, you are a thief. Whenever a steward considers that the estate is his own property, and not his Master's, he is a thief, and before long his Master will deal with him, and say, "Give an account of thy stewardship; for thou mayest be no longer steward."

Consider, also, I pray you, under what very special circumstances you have come where you are. Many a man of business here to-day obtaining a satisfactory livelihood has a dozen times been within an inch of bankruptcy, and yet he has obtained help, and passed the rock in safety. Some of you have been wellnigh ruined several times; and yet you still have bread to eat and raiment to put on. It is a miracle in your eyes that you have not come to beggary. Let your special deliverances and memorable mercies be as the tongue of persuasion, constraining you to grateful service.

Then I beg you to consider once more, with what singular personal adaptations you are endowed for the work to which God has called you. I believe you are endowed with special capacity for a certain work, so that no one is so fitted for it as yourself; you are a key to a lock which no other key will fit so well. God has prepared you for the work for which you are appointed. You are equipped for such work as

The Lord has Appointed You; will you not at once get to your post? You say, "If I could preach, I would do it gladly." You would not preach worthily unless you are even now prepared to do other service for which you are fitted. You would be a disgrace to the pulpit if you are useless in the home circle. If God entrusts you with a single talent, and you do not use it, neither would you use ten talents; for he that is unfaithful in that which is least, would be unfaithful in that which is greatest.

III. Thirdly,

Aspire.

"Who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?" Rise to the utmost possible height. Fulfill your calling to its loftiest degree. Not only do all that you are sure you can do, but aim at something which as yet is high up among the questions. Say to yourself, "Who knoweth?" That is what the ambitious man says when he aspires to be great. When Louis Napoleon was shut up in the fortress of Ham, and everybody ridiculed his foolish attempts upon France, yet he said to himself, "Who knows? I am the nephew of my uncle, and may yet sit upon the imperial throne;" and he did so before many years had passed. I have no desire to make any man ambitious after the poor thrones and honors and riches of this world; but I would fain make you all ardently ambitious to honor God and bless men. Who knows? Does anybody know what God may do by you?

Young man, I trust you have given your heart to the Lord; what are you going to do? You have come into some property unexpectedly; or you are promoted in a house of business—what is the meaning of it? "Who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?" I believe that in dark times with which to remove the gloom. Martin Luther is sitting by his father's hearth in the forest when the Pope is selling his wicked indulgences; he will come out soon, and stop the crowing of the cock of the Romish Christ-denying Peter. John Calvin is quietly studying when false doctrine is most rife, and he will be heard of at Geneva. A young man is here this morning—I do not know whereabouts he is, but I pray the Lord to make this to be an ordination sermon to him, starting him on his life-work.

God is Making Lamps

Further, "Who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?" You do not yourself know. I speak experimentally, using my own self as an instance in the work which God has enabled me to do. If it had been revealed to me that I should have enjoyed the opportunities which have fallen to my lot, I could never have believed it. If the Lord could use me, He can also use you. Only stand in a waiting posture, saying, "Here am I, send me!" and you shall see things which you dare not expect. Who knoweth, brother or sister, whether thou art put in thy family to save thy family? Who knoweth whether thou art made to live in a back street to bless that street? Who knoweth whether thou art set down in a forlorn district to upraise that district? Who knoweth whether thou art put into that nation to save that nation? Ay, put into the world in Christ's name to save the world? Aspire to great things for God.

IV. Our fourth word is Confide.

"Who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?" If thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this, be confident that thou art safe. If God has brought Esther to the throne that she may go in unto the king and save her people—go in, good Esther! Fear not the risk. Fast and pray your three days before you go, but be not dismayed. If the womanhood in you trembles in the prospect of a possible death, let confidence in God override your fears. Cromwell's Ironsides to a man believed in the everlasting purpose, therefore they were invincible, for no fear ever breathed upon them. Though the hosts of the tyrant may be innumerable, yet with

The War Cry,

"The Lord of hosts is with us," we will ride forth conquering and to conquer. Settle it in your mind that the Lord has called you to the work, and then advance without question or fear. Put your hand to the plough, and pause not. Do the work with your might. Do not stand asking how; do it as you can. Do not stand asking when; do it directly. Do not say, "But I am weak"—the Lord is strong.

There was a man who strove in the House of Commons for what he thought would be a great boon to seamen, but he could not prevail. At last he broke through all the rules of the House, and acted like a fanatic, and when everybody saw that the man was so in earnest that he was ready to faint and die, they said, "We must do something;" and it was done. An enthusiasm which overpowers yourself is likely to overpower others. Do not fail from want of fervor. Never mind if men think you crazy. When you are overwhelmed yourself, the flood of zeal will bear all opposition before it. When you become so fanatically insane as to be absorbed by a passion for the glory of God, the salvation of men, the spread of truth, and the reclaiming of the fallen masses, there shall be about you the truest sanity and the mightiest force. May you feel such a passion to-day.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

ZACHARY TAYLOR'S HEROISM.*

THE younger Taylor, Zachary, is said to have had a boyhood filled with adventure, and touched with the bold characteristics and heroic traits which afterward distinguished his life. Raised on the frontier, exposed daily and nightly to sudden attacks from the surrounding Indian tribes, in danger of being scalped on his way to school, buffeted by the rough wind of adverse circumstances, he attained a character of a strength which no gentler rearing could have given. His opportunities for the discipline of the schools were meagre enough, but his great will-power and untiring perseverance enabled him to master an education where others would have failed.

In 1808 Taylor made application to Jefferson for a commission in the army, and on the third of May in that year, was made first lieutenant in the Seventh Regiment United States Infantry. In 1812 he was promoted to a captaincy, and having been placed in command of Fort Harrison, on the Wabash, about fifty miles above Vincennes, Ind., he successfully repelled an attack of savages greatly outnumbering his own little band, and, by his skilful strategy and heroism, covered his youthful name with glory. It was within an hour of midnight when the fort was fired and the attack commenced. Surrounded by a yelling horde of four hundred and fifty Indians, this boy captain calmly gave his orders amid the rushing of the flames, and the cries of the women and children inside, who had sought the protection of the fort. By heroic efforts the flames were extinguished, temporary breastworks were erected, and such a storm of shot poured into the enemy's ranks that by morning they were overpowered, and Captain Taylor and his men were left victors of the field. The country resounded with the praises of this officer, of only twenty-one years, and the brave defence won for him the brevet rank of major.

An Indian Legend.

The following tragic story is current among the Indians and white settlers in the neighborhood of Saint Anthony's Falls, Minnesota: Ampato Sapa, an Indian girl, whose name signifies "dark day," was united in marriage to an Indian of the Dakota tribe. For several years they lived happily, and two children were born to them. Both parents doted on these children with a depth of feeling seldom equalled by civilized whites. The man became great as a hunter, and many of the surrounding families sought his guardianship and friendship, and shared the products of his chase. Some of them, anxious to strengthen their interest with the successful hunter, urged him to form a connection with their tribe, telling him that a second wife was indispensable to a man of his talent and importance, who would probably soon be acknowledged as a chief. The daughter of an influential man was presented to him, and, animated by the ambition of attaining to high honor in his nation by union with the daughter of a man of great influence, he took her as his second wife without telling the young mother of his children.

* From "Down the Great River: Embracing an Account of the Discovery of the True Source of the Mississippi, together with Views, Descriptive and Pictorial, of the Cities, Towns, Villages, and Scenery on the Banks of the River," By Captain Willard Glazier. Pp. 496. Published by Hubbard Brothers, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Late Duchess of Cambridge.

Desirous of conciliating the first wife, he introduced the subject to her in these words: "You know, Ampato, that I can love no woman as fondly as I do you. With deep regret I have seen you, of late, subject to toils which must be oppressive, and from which I would gladly relieve you, yet I know of no other way of doing so than by associating with you, in the duties of our household, one who will relieve you from the trouble of entertaining the numerous guests whom my growing importance in the nation collects around me. I have, therefore, resolved upon taking another wife, but she shall always be subject to your control." With the deepest concern his wife listened to this unexpected announcement. She remonstrated with him in the kindest terms, and tearfully entreated him not to let another take her place in his affections. . . . He at length told her that he had selected another partner, and was resolved that she should reside with him.

Ampato, deeply distressed, stole away from the cabin with her children, and launching a light canoe entered it with the babes. She paddled down the stream chanting a death song. Her friends saw her only too late, and their attempts to rescue her were of no avail. Her voice was soon drowned in the roar of the cataract; the rapids carried down her little bark; it was seen for a moment among the spray; then it went over, and never again was it or its hapless freight seen by mortal eye.

THE LATE DUCHESS OF CAMBRIDGE.

ONE of the most interesting members of the English aristocracy died on April 6. In the Duchess of Cambridge, those who were privileged to enjoy her society found a most intelligent and entertaining companion. She had enjoyed exceptional opportunities of knowing the great warriors and statesmen whose exploits marked the closing years of the eighteenth and the opening years of the nineteenth centuries, and as her memory was prodigious, she could relate most interesting personal details about them. A bright, observant, witty woman, she had been, and in her old age her friends hung entranced on the reminiscences she delighted to unfold.

A Missionary's Visit to a Dying Pupil in India.

The Duchess was the youngest daughter of Frederick, Landgrave of Hesse Cassel. She was born July 25, 1797, and was, therefore, ninety-two years old when she died. On May 7, 1818, she married Adolphus Frederick, Duke of Cambridge, seventh son of King George III. of England, and uncle of Queen Victoria. He died in 1850, but his widow has lived on for thirty-nine years, cheered by the devotion of her three children and her royal niece. The present Duke of Cambridge, who is commander-in-chief of the British army, is her only son. One of her daughters is Mary, Duchess of Teck, and the other, Augusta, married the Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz.

During the past fifteen years the Duchess has been absent from court society. She had a stroke of paralysis about that time, from which she never fully recovered. She spent her time in the magnificent suite of apartments assigned to her use in St. James's Palace, and was remarkably happy and cheerful. The Queen was a frequent visitor, and her son, the Duke of Cambridge, never allowed a day to pass, when he was not on duty out of London, without visiting his mother. She entertained many other guests, who delighted to hear her talk of Wellington, whom she knew intimately; of the first Napoleon, whom she had seen; and of other illustrious persons. Though so long a confirmed invalid, the old lady will be much missed by English society.

A VISIT TO A SICK PUPIL.

(See Illustration.)

AN interesting story is told by a missionary in India. He set up a school in a native village, but for some time could get none of the parents to send their children. They said they had heard that the missionaries had built a big town a long way off, called Jesus-town, but they could not get anybody to go and live there, and had therefore sent this teacher to open a school, and when he had got a big lot of boys together, some night he would carry them all away to Jesus-town. After a time this suspicion was set at rest, and the children gradually began to come. Among the first was a little boy, nine years old, of high caste, named Badlu, who was very bright and intelligent. The missionary felt a deep interest in him, and at last grew to love him dearly.

Badlu was taught to read the Bible, and studied it more earnestly than the missionary knew. The school was eventually placed under the charge of a native teacher while the missionary broke up new ground. Shortly afterward a messenger summoned him to Badlu's home. He went, and the illustration is from a sketch he made of the place. Badlu was sick. His father and the family had brought their idols to his side, but the boy refused to worship them. As he grew worse, and the father became alarmed, he yielded to the boy's importunate request to see the missionary, and had sent for him. The meeting was most affecting. The boy declared his faith in Jesus, and that he might conclusively cast in his lot with the Christians, he desired the missionary to make some tea for him, and give it to him in the missionary's own cup. He drank it eagerly, and called his father's attention to the significance of the act. In drinking from the Christian's cup he had abandoned his caste and the heathen faith. Not long afterward he died. His last words were, "I am trusting in Jesus."

A MERCHANT'S MISTAKEN KINDNESS.

(See Illustration on page 285.)

"WHY, Crawford, is that you? I am glad to see you," said a prim, neatly dressed merchant as he met a younger man on whose face sat a look of recognition. "I have worried about you a good deal. I am glad to see you looking well and prosperous. Thought you must have started on the down track, and I was sorry. I have to keep an appointment now, but I wish you would come and dine with me this evening. I want to talk to you."

"Thank you, Mr. Brown, I shall be glad to come. I meant to have looked in upon you before I went home. I'll come to-night. What time?"

"Six sharp. I'll expect you."

The pair separated, but that night Charles Crawford made his way to the cozy quarters in which Mr. Brown spent his bachelor evenings. A bearskin rug lay in front of an open fire grate, and the comfortable armchairs and every arrangement about the room betokened that its occupant understood and practiced the art of making himself comfortable. The cloth was spread for dinner, and as Crawford entered, his host came from an inner room, and extending both hands gave him a cordial welcome and then rang the bell for the meal to be served. During the dinner the conversation was on the topics of the day, but afterward, when the wine was placed on the table and the two gentlemen were alone, Mr. Brown wheeled his chair around to the fire and said, "Now, Crawford, I want to hear what you have been doing. You are a puzzle to me. I have wondered about you ever since you left us, and have been worried many a time by thinking you had fallen into trouble. Now, fill your glass and tell me your story."

"I will tell you my story without filling my glass, Mr. Brown," said Crawford, rising and taking a standing posture opposite his host. "In fact, the question of the glass is the point of my story. It might have been a sadder one than it is, and I am not proud of it by a long way, though I am humbly thankful. It is ten years now since I left you. I never expected to have done that, for I could see that I not only enjoyed your favor, but that of your partners, and that I might count on a very bright future. Then when you sent me to establish the branch house in the West I had a practical proof of your confidence, and I looked upon it as the stepping-stone to fortune."

"So it might have been, my boy," interjected Mr. Brown; "so it might have been, and I have never been able to understand why you did not put your foot upon it and mount. Why, you might have been a partner in the house, sir, before you were forty."

"I know, I know," continued Crawford, "but I will tell you how I slipped from it. You remember that the night before I started for Chicago you invited me to dine with you, and I was proud to accept your invitation. I looked upon you as my best friend, as you had been ever since I entered the employ of the house, and I knew it was mainly owing to your influence that I was appointed. Well, sir, you gave me some very good advice that evening, and I meant to follow it. When I was leaving, something occurred which you have probably forgotten, but which had consequences that make it very memorable to me. You invited me to share a bottle of some wonderful wine with you, and drink success to the new enterprise."

"Yes, I remember it very well," said Mr. Brown; "it was some I had kept for twenty years; I have some of it now."

"Well, sir, I was a different man after I had tasted that wine. My father died when I was a boy, and I have heard that the real cause of his death was delirium tremens, though that was kept secret. I suppose my blood must have had a taint. The wine I drank that night was like blood to a tiger. I was mad. I went to my boarding-house that night with a strange sense of exhilaration within me, and the next day started for Chicago. For several days I tried to attend to business; but the craving for wine like that you gave me was intolerable. I could do nothing that I meant to do. My whole being was monopolized by the one craving, like thirst embodied. I went to the bar of the hotel at which I was staying, and before night I was intoxicated for the first time in my life. The next morning I was thoroughly ashamed of myself, but the craving was intensified. I was scared. I felt utterly helpless, as if I were in the grasp of some giant force. I believed myself to be utterly and irretrievably ruined. But I did not want to be dishonest to you. You had trusted me, and had been so kind to me for so many years that I resolved that you should not suffer by my misfortune. I knew whatever was done must be done quickly, for after a few days the temptation to use your money might be too strong to be resisted—or, rather, I might grow too weak to resist it. I therefore telegraphed my resignation, and placed your money beyond my reach."

The Merchant Hears a Solemn Warning.

"You acted nobly, Crawford," said Mr. Brown. "I always had confidence in you. Many a man in that position would have used the money."

"Yes, I know, and I was afraid, so I took measures to protect myself and you. Well, sir, after that my downward course was rapid. I had saved nearly a thousand dollars, and I spent it all. I was not riotous nor vicious when I was drunk; I was simply heavily, dreamily happy. The next morning after a debauch I was intensely miserable, and then I rose and drank myself into comfort again. This continued as long as my money lasted, and then I procured work enough to keep me from starvation and to pay for liquor. I sank into a position more degraded than a beast. I was following rapidly in the footsteps of my father, and should before this have come to the same end had not God in His mercy interposed. He sent one of His servants to me, and though I had no hope then of rescue, he never lost hope. One memorable day I put away the liquor from me, and from that day to this, more than eight years now, I have never tasted it. I soon began the ascent of worldly progress, and have succeeded well through God's help. This is my first visit to New York since I left it ten years ago, and I promised myself that I would come and tell you my story so that you might never again, through motives of kindness and hospitality, unintentionally kindle such a flame in another breast."

ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS.

A Life Story: By Mrs. Stenhouse.

For More than Twenty-five Years the Wife of a Mormon Missionary and Elder.

(Continued from page 271.)

Mormon Prophecies Falsified.

MARY BURTON'S narrative of the terrible journey across the plains thus proceeded:

"Then—the middle of August being passed—we left Florence behind us, and began our weary journey across the Plains in much the same fashion as we had already travelled through Iowa. We had, however, taken fresh provisions to last us until we reached Utah, and as the oxen could not draw so much extra weight, one sack, weighing about a hundred pounds, was placed on each of the hand-carts, in addition to the other baggage. This was a severe tax upon the endurance of the people, but most of them bore it without a murmur. On the other hand, we fared a little better in the matter of provisions, for we were allowed a pound of flour a day each, and also, occasionally, a little fresh beef, and besides that each hundred had three or four milch cows, which were a blessing to the children.

"As we continued our journey, and the provisions were consumed, the burdens on the carts grew lighter. But this was only the beginning of our pilgrimage; the end we could not foresee. Every evening when we pitched our tents, we endeavored by a variety of means to beguile the tediousness of the way. The days were not quite so warm now, and the nights were more chilly: but altogether, it was much more pleasant travelling than it was in the earlier part of the journey, and no one seemed to remember the almost prophetic remonstrance of Brother Savage.

"Still we travelled very slowly, for the carts were always breaking down; the wheels came off, and we had nothing to grease them with. The boxes of the wheels were made of unseasoned wood, and the heavy pressure upon them, and the dust that got into them, soon wore them out. Some of the people cut off the tops of their boots and wrapped them around the axles, and others cut up their tin plates and kettles for the same purpose; and for grease they used soap, and even their pitiful allowance of bacon. But as the days passed, and the flour began to be used up, these accidents became less frequent. Upon an average, they said, we travelled about fifteen miles a day, which I think was very good. Some few days we even made a little over twenty miles, but they were balanced by the shortcomings.

"We tried to feel happy and hopeful, and even the aged and infirm tried to make light of their toil and privations, for we did not see that heavy cloud which was looming across our way. I frequently talked with the old and weakly among the people, to whom both my husband and I were able to offer little kindnesses, and they all spoke cheerfully of our prospects. Such faith had they in the promises of the elders.

"Just before we reached Wood River, vast herds of buffaloes appeared in our vicinity, and one evening all our cattle stampeded, and the men had to go in search of them. About thirty were lost, and after hunting after them for three days, we gave them up. We had only one yoke of oxen now for each wagon, and as the wagons were loaded each with three thousand pounds of flour, the teams could not move them. So they yoked up the beef-cattle and cows and heifers, but they were unmanageable; and at last we were obliged again to place a sack of flour upon each hand-cart. This sorely tried us all. Some of the people even complained, but the greater part of us bore up bravely, believing that it was the will of the Lord. We still had faith that all would yet be well. This was, however, a hard blow. Our milch cows were useless to us, our beef-rations were stopped, and the burdens which we drew were doubled. Every one did his or her best, but many of us began to be disheartened, and could hardly get along.

"One evening there was quite a commotion in the camp. We had pitched our tents for the night, on the banks of the Platte River, I think, when suddenly quite a grand turnout of carriages and light wagons came up from the east and joined us. Each carriage was drawn by four horses, and the outfits were in first-class style. I was anxious to know who they were, but was not long in finding out. There was the Apostle Franklin Richards, and Elders Webb and Felt, and Joseph A. Young, the son of the Prophet, and Elders Dunbar and Kimball and Grant—all returning missionaries. They stayed with us all night, and in the morning called a great meeting and the Apostle Richards delivered a speech, which since has troubled me not a little, and made me very sorrowful.

"He had heard of what Brother Savage had said, and then and there, before us all, he rebuked him. He then exhorted us to remember the hope set before us, and told us to pray and work on, and especially to be obedient to counsel; and he finished by solemnly prophesying in the name of the God of Israel that the Almighty would make a way for us to Salt Lake, and that though the snow might fall and the storm rage on the right hand and on the left, not a hair of our heads should be hurt. Some of the people wept with joy as they heard these words. My own heart was full. To me this was as the voice of inspiration, the voice of God; how could I doubt again?

"Sister Stenhouse, before a month was over I saw with my own eyes that prophecy, those promises, falsified to the very letter; and yet, at the time, they came to me, and to all else, as the word of the Lord from heaven. Tell me, if men can thus deceive themselves—for I cannot doubt for a moment that the Apostle believed his own prophecy—and if we could be so sadly deluded as to believe that what was said was divine, what surety have we for our religion at all? I strive against these sinful doubts, but they will creep into my heart unbidden.

"The apostle and the elders with him told Captain Willie that they wanted some fresh meat, and the elders killed and gave them of our very best. What could be denied to the servants of the Lord? We were then more than four hundred in number—aged men and feeble women, with babes and poor little children too young to walk; many of them infirm and sick, all of them footsore and weary. We were far away from home, traveling slowly hundreds and hundreds of miles, worn out, and without sufficient provisions for the way, or the remotest chance of obtaining any. And yet, oh Heaven! I shame to tell it; these servants of Heaven—our leaders, our guides, our examples—these chosen vessels who came to us, riding comfortably, and at ease in their well-appointed carriages, took of our poverty—took the very best we had!

"As they left the camp, I looked up into my husband's face, and our eyes met. We said not a word, but in our hearts there was the same thought. Sister Stenhouse, there must have been that selfsame thought in the mind of many another poor soul who watched those elders depart after they had lectured us on faith and patience and obedience.

"They crossed the river pleasantly enough, and pointed out the best fording-place, and then they watched us wade through—the water there being nearly a mile in width, and in some places two, and even three feet in depth; and though many of the heavy-laden carts were drawn by delicate women and girls, they never so much as offered to lend us the aid of their handsome teams. One sister told me that they watched the poor people, crossing through glasses, as if it were an entertainment; but I did not see that, and can hardly believe it was true. All that they did, however, was to promise that when we reached Laramie we should find provisions and bedding, and other necessities ready for us, and that they would send help from Salt Lake Valley to meet us.

"It was early in September when we reached Laramie, but we found nothing awaiting us there. We were all very much discouraged at this, and Captain Willie called another meeting for consultation. We knew, of course, beforehand, that our position was very bad; but figures, when stated plainly, become startling facts. We now learned that if we continued at the same rate as that at which we had previously been travelling, and received each the same allowance daily, we should be left utterly destitute of provisions when we were yet 350 miles from the end of our journey. Nothing remained, therefore, but to reduce our allowance; so, instead of one pound, we were rationed at three-quarters of a pound a day, and at the same time were forced to make incredible exertions to travel faster.

"Not long after this, Captain Willie received a message from the Apostle Richards. It is the custom, you know, for people who want to send messages to emigrants who come after them to write a note on a scrap of paper, and tie it to a stone or a piece of wood, and leave it on the way. No one disturbs it, as no one but the emigrants travel along that road, and they are sure to find it. It was from a rough post-office like this that Captain Willie got his letter. In it the apostle told him that we should receive supplies from Salt Lake when we reached the South Pass; but that we knew would be too late. So our allowance was again reduced, and after that we were rationed at an average of ten ounces for every person over ten years of age. The men who drew the carts received twelve ounces, the women and aged men nine ounces, and the children from four to eight ounces, according to age. Before this, the men with families had done better than the single men, as they had been able to save a little from the children's rations, and, of course, they did not like this new arrangement so well.

"Picture to yourself these men—in the cool air of September, drawing after them each one a loaded cart, with one or more children most frequently superadded to its weight, trudging wearily every day, ten, fifteen, or twenty miles over the rough desert, wading across streams with the women and children, setting up tents at night, working as they never worked before in all their lives, and withal keeping soul and body together upon twelve ounces of flour a day. This is but one side of the picture—the physical toil and endurance of the workingmen. Think what the feeble and aged, the sick, the women and children, must have endured!

"By this time many of those who had hitherto held out bravely began to fail, and the people in general were greatly discouraged. Captain Willie and the elders who assisted him did their best to keep up the spirits of the people, and to get them over as much ground as they could each day. The captains over the hundreds had, also, no little work to perform in distributing provisions, helping the sick and infirm, and, in fact, superintending everything.

"For some time the nights had been getting colder and colder, and by the time we arrived at the Sweetwater River we suffered considerably from that cause; winter was fast approaching. In fact, it came earlier and more severely last year than at any time before since the Saints settled in Utah. Does it not seem strange that at the very time when they were offering up special prayers for us in Salt Lake City, that we might be defended from cold and storm, the terrors of a more than ordinary winter overtook us, and proved fatal to so many of our company? The mountains were covered with snow; and it was soon quite evident, even to those who had prophesied most loudly that the Lord would work a special miracle in our behalf, that the storm-clouds of winter would soon burst upon us.

"You have never seen the Sweetwater River, so I may as well tell you that it is a very irregular stream, and we had to cross it again and again upon our way. As usual, we had to wade through the water each time; and though the men helped over the women and children as well as they could, many of us got very wet indeed, and quite chilled, and we were all cold and miserable. Still, our faith never gave way; some, I know, began to doubt a little, but they had not yet lost all faith, and discouraged and exceedingly wretched, as indeed we were, the greater number bore up with heroic resolution. I noticed, however, on the faces of some poor souls—men and women—a peculiar expression which it is quite impossible for me to describe. Later on I was led to believe that at that time they, perhaps unconsciously, felt the presentiment of that fearful death which so soon overtook them.

"We suffered much at night. You may remember that I told you we were only allowed seventeen pounds of clothing and bedding, and that, of course, was of little use. Sleeping in a tent, under any circumstances, is not pleasant to those who are accustomed to the shelter of a house; but sleeping in a tent exposed to the keen night air of a wilderness, and with scarcely a rag of covering, was almost sufficient to prove fatal to the stoutest and strongest. During the summer-time, although our fare was scanty and our labor incessant, we rose each morning refreshed and strengthened, and ready for the toils of the day. But now we crept out of our tents cramped and miserable, half-frozen, and with our eyes red and tearful with the cold. We seemed to have no life left in us.

"These things soon began to tell upon the health of every one of us, especially upon the aged and those who were sickly. Hope at last died out in their poor weary hearts. One by one they fell off—utterly worn out. Poor things! how they had longed to see the promised Zion, and now all expectation of peaceful rest on earth was over—the bitter end had come.

"We dug graves for them by the wayside in the desert, and there we laid them with many tears, scarcely daring to look one another in the face, for we felt that our own time might perhaps be nearer than we thought. One by one at first they fell off, but before long the deaths became so very frequent that it was seldom that we left a camp-ground without burying one or more. This was, however, only the beginning of evil. Soon it was no longer the aged and sickly who were taken off, but the young and strong, who under other circumstances would have set disease and death at defiance. Cold, hunger, and excessive toil brought on dysentery; and when once attacked by that there was little hope for the sufferer, for we had no medicine, and it was quite out of our power to give them relief in any other way.

"I now began to fear for my husband, for I had noticed for some time an expression of extreme weariness in his face. Our trials had not hardened our hearts; on the contrary, I think, as death seemed to be drawing near, our affection for each other grew more pure and devoted, and in my heart I often prayed that if it were His will, God would let us die together, and rest in the same grave. We never spoke a word to each other on this subject, but we felt the more. I exerted all my remaining strength, and day after day toiled along at his side, helping him all I could; but although he never complained, I saw in his eyes a dull and heavy look, which, more than any words, told unmistakably of failing strength and the approach of disease, and my heart sank within me.

"But my own troubles did not alone engross my attention; there was too much wretchedness around us to allow anyone to be absorbed entirely in his own griefs. Acts of devotion on the part of both parents and children came before me daily, such as would have put to shame the stories of filial and parental piety which we used to be taught at school.

"Most of those who died, as far as I could tell, seemed to pass away quietly and with little pain, as if every feeling of the heart were numbed and dead. But my own sufferings and fears at that time were so great that I could not be a very close observer. Strange as it may seem, the fear of death did not so much appear to terrify these poor victims as the thought that their bodies would be buried by the wayside in the desert, instead of in the sacred ground, as they considered it, of Salt Lake City. Poor souls! the passion was strong in death.

(To be Continued.)

THE ANOINTING IN BETHANY.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for May 12, Mark 14: 1-9. Golden Text, Mark 14: 8.

A Previous Anointing—The Perverse Expectation of the Disciples—The Woman's Better Enlightenment—Her Act Recorded by All the Evangelists—The Most Momentous of All the Passovers—The Broken Box a Type—The Protest Against Waste—Christ's Appreciation—More Than Sufficient Compensation—The Contrasted Occupation of Judas—How Jesus is Betrayed.

"SHE hath done what she could; she is come aforehand to anoint My body to the burying." Such is our Lord's short commendation of Mary! Jesus had been anointed long before. "The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me," He said, quoting from Isa. 61: 1, 2, "because He hath anointed Me to preach the gospel to the poor; He hath sent Me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord." This was the anointing of Jesus for His ministry. He had yet to be anointed and this must be by the hand of a sinner; a woman, for "woman being deceived, was in the transgression." (1 Tim. 2: 14). Anointed of God the Father, by the Holy Ghost, Jesus was the Father's representative in His works of power and love and mercy, but anointed by a sinner, Jesus was the sinner's representative, to bear sin and shame, reproach and death. Of old, kings were anointed to power and dominion, priests to offer gifts and sacrifices for sin, prophets for the special service to which God called them; but here was one anointed to die, anointed to be made a curse, anointed to be made sin, and that by one who had merited death, had committed sin, had come under the curse.

For His Sacrifice,

In vain had Jesus, on five different occasions, taught His disciples that He must die; their expectations were still of earthly pomp and glory; and even when He was risen they asked the question, "Wilt thou not at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" (Acts 1: 6.) He had taught them "the kingdom of God cometh not with observation" (or with outward show), "neither shalt they say, Lo, here, or lo, there, for lo, the kingdom of God is within you." (Luke 17: 20, 21.) And yet they held to their own ideas, and never saw, until after His resurrection, when He breathed the Holy Ghost upon them (John 20: 22), and opened their understanding that they might understand the Scriptures" (Luke 24: 45), that His kingdom was "not of this world." (John 18: 36.) One only, of all His disciples, understood, and she it was, unknown in public but for this, who anointed His body for the burying. But her divinely recorded biography is so widely published that Jesus' word regarding it is fulfilled. "Whosoever this gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her." Thus it happened. Two days after His last public teaching, and His last instructions to His disciples about His second coming, "was the feast of the Passover." Never since its first institution was there never to the end of time can there be such another. The destinies of all men hung upon that extreme movement. Heaven and hell were breathless; it was the redemption of a world which hung in the scale; but of all the millions then living, whose eternal life or eternal death were bound up with that moment, only one human being understood the transaction, and she anointed Him for His burial. The chief priests and scribes, full of their contemptible jealousy of Him who was about to bear their sin, were racking their brains for an excuse to apprehend Him and put Him to death. Oh how truly they knew not what they did! No fear of God hindered them, but they feared the people, and said, "Not on the feast day, lest there be an uproar of the people." Such was the aspect of things outside in the world; such is the aspect of things in the world still. We will not have Jesus, "we will not have this Man to reign over us." (Luke 19: 14.)

Such a Passover,

But within, where Jesus was in the midst of His disciples, it was far otherwise. "Being in Bethany, in the house of Simon the leper, as He sat at meat there came a woman having an alabaster box of ointment of spikenard, very precious; and she brake the box, and poured it on His head." The Apostle John says she anointed His feet; probably it was both head and feet, and he adds: "The house was filled with (John 12: 3.) The box was broken, but it had served its purpose; such an anointing could not be repeated. It was a type of the broken heart of the sinner, who alone could anoint Jesus; it was a type, too, of His body, so soon to be broken, but to spread abroad a savor of Christ upon the world.

The Odor of the Ointment."

Mary was more quick to hear than to do (James 1: 19), she "sat at Jesus' feet, and heard His word." (Luke 10: 39.) She was not full of human energy, like Martha, but when she acted it was in the mind of the Lord, and the whole house was filled with the influence. There are some people who are always full of bustle and energy; they wear themselves out, and are on from morning till night, and the amount they do is marvellous, but the result is by no means proportionate to the labor they expend. There are others who do very little, but are so full of God that every word tells, their presence in a home is felt, and what they do leaves lasting results. A Christian worker was staying lately in the house of one who lives before God. She said, on leaving: "I thank God I ever went into that house; it is not so much what Miss B. says, but her life speaks. I always feel God is with her."

"There were some that had indignation within themselves, and said, Why was this waste of the ointment made? For it might have been sold for more than three hundred pence, and have been given to the poor, and

They Murmured Against Her."

One who walks with God is sure to be misunderstood, not only by the world, but by the Church too. There are many children of God who cannot accept that they should be misunderstood by Christians; they expect something different from them. But it is through Christians, more than any others, we are called to suffer. The contradiction of sinners (Heb. 12: 3) is nothing to the contradiction of Christians. But if Christ has satisfied our hearts, we can be content if no one understands us, even if we are called to tread a path as lonely and as little to be comprehended by others as was the path of Mary when she anointed Jesus for His burial. They thought Mary extravagant, and heartless about the poor, and if God had not revealed to her her wondrous task, they would have been right. Let us be tender to those who oppose us; they often do so from the best and purest motives. Let us be able to commit our cause to the Lord, and rejoice to walk alone with Him. Jesus took up her defence, and said, "Let her alone; why trouble ye her? she hath wrought a good work upon Me." Was it not worth all the reproach she had had to hear these words of Jesus? "For," He continued, "ye have the poor with you always, and whosoever ye will, ye may do them good; but Me ye have not always. She hath done what she could; she is come aforehand to anoint My body to the burying." Dear reader, have you done what you could? Have you anointed Him to take your place as the Bearer of your sin? Do you understand His sacrifice for you? Have you appropriated Him as the Propitiation for your sins? Can you see Him anointed, and therefore set apart to obtain salvation for you, and now at God's right hand interceding for you? Is this all a blessed reality to you? Mary's anointing was costly; probably a large share of her earthly goods went in that box of ointment. But she counted Jesus worthy of all. How much is Jesus worth to you? The answer is in the time, strength, love, money, and honor you give Him.

It was probably about the same time that this one disciple of Jesus anointed Him in Bethany, and drew down upon herself the criticisms of all, that another disciple was engaged in a vastly different undertaking. "Judas Iscariot, one of the twelve, went unto the chief priests unto them." What a strange proceeding! And yet disciples are doing the same thing by thousands to-day—Judas was one of the twelve whom He had chosen (Mark 3: 19). He had gone out with the others, and preached that men should repent, and cast out many devils, and anointed with oil many that were sick, and healed them (Mark 6: 7-13), and yet he would now betray that Lord who had given him such power and authority! How we are reminded of the words, "Not every one that saith unto Me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of My Father which is in heaven. Many will say to Me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in Thy name, and in Thy name have cast out devils, and in Thy name have done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you, depart from Me ye that work iniquity"! (Matt. 7: 23.) Judas had prophesied in the name of Christ, and had cast out devils, but he was not doing the will of our Father which is in heaven. He was like the stony-ground conversions, which last until there is something which crosses their will. Oh how solemn it is that no unrenounced will can live in the atmosphere of heaven! Our wills must be laid down here, or nowhere.

To Betray Him

When the chief priests knew that there was one who could be bought with money, one who cared more for himself and his gains than for his Lord, they were glad. Nothing rejoices the ungodly so much as an inconsistent Christian, for they make his example an excuse for their own continuance in sin. But oh how common are such! It is the few, the very few, who do not betray their Lord! It is the few, the very few, who do not prize money, reputation, comfort, position, more than Jesus Christ. Many are called, but few are chosen. They "promised to give him money, and he sought how he might conveniently betray Him." Judas did the deed which could never be undone again. Mary's anointing, and Judas's betrayal are irrevocable facts in history. Shall we follow Mary, and esteem it, above all else, or shall we follow Judas, and betray Him?

A Traitor in the Camp,

Prophetic Studies. A Report of the Address delivered at the Prophetic Conference at Chicago, with portraits of some of the speakers. It contains 216 pages. Fifty cents in paper covers, including postage. Address Manager, 63 Bible House, New York.

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman (London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 63 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles, among others, are contained in the number for April:

End of the Times in the Year 1900.
The Signs of the Times. By the Rev. Canon Fausset, of Durham.
The Millennium. Predicted by J. G. O.
The Pretensions of the Future Man of Sin of Thess. 2.
The Four Holy Cities of Judea.
Historical Fulfilment of the Third Trumpet. (Continued.)
Enoch and Elijah's Translation. By the late Mrs. Baylee. (Concluded.)
The Great Famine in China.
Antichrist's Future Acting; Described in Dan. 11: 21-45 (Continued.)
Coming Great Prophetic Event This Year.
The Coming Judgment.
Passing Events Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

JESUS CALLS YOU.

LILLA M. ALEXANDER.

Oh! soul bending low 'neath thy burden,
Oh! heart by thy sorrow oppress,
Heavy laden, and hopeless, and weary,
In Jesus alone there is rest.

"Come unto me," He is calling,
The dear loving Lord, and He stands
And shows you the scars on His forehead,
And the cruel nail-prints in His hands.

Your sins made those scars, yet He loves you,
And, longing your burden to bear,
He asks that you come in your weakness,
And bring Him your sorrow and care.

And for all of the gifts that He offers,
And the blessing He waits to impart,
He asks only this, that you give Him
Your sin-stained and world-weary heart.

Oh! how can you turn from His pleading,
And so cruelly wound him anew?
Oh! think of the thorns, and the scourging,
And remember he bore them for you.

Then go to the cross where they nailed Him,
And measure His love if you can,
Or tell what it cost for your ransom,
Ere Christ could redeem fallen man.

And yet you are slighting his mercy,
You are turning in coldness away,
From the warm tender love that is yearning,
To bless you and save you to-day.

Oh! will you not come while He calls you,
And lean, as did John, on His breast,
There trusting, believing, and loving,
Thy poor weary heart shall find rest.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher: 77 Bible House, New York,
will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets
assorted (no two alike) will be sent, post-paid, for 10
cts., or 100 for 20 cts. Postage stamps taken.

Morsford's Acid Phosphate Makes an Invigorating Drink with water and sugar only. Delicious.

NELSON'S HOME —AND— SUNDAY-SCHOOL BOOKS.

BY EVELYN EVERETT-GREEN.
Dulcie's Little Brother; or, Doings at Little Monksholm. 12mo.
Cloth extra. $1.00.
"A sweet and charming story of child life."
—New York Observer.

Dulcie and Tottie; or, The Story
of an Old-Fashioned Pair. 12mo.
Cloth extra. $1.00.

A sequel to "Dulcie's Little Brother." An interesting tale, written in the simple, natural style, and permeated by the high Christian spirit, common to the author's works.

Heiress of Wylmington (The).
12mo. Cloth extra. $1.25.
"There are some remarks in its pages with which sensible people of every creed and every shade of opinion can scarcely fail to sympathize. . . . It is pleasantly and prettily told."—Saturday Review.
"It is a story girls will read with pleasure and with profit."—Schoolman.

True to the Last; or, My Boy-
hood's Hero. Cloth. $1.25.
A story for boys. The scene in England. A fine,
manly, Christian character is developed and perfected
by trials in early life.

Temple's Trial; or, For Life
and Death. 12mo. Cloth extra. $1.25.
An interesting study of character, going mainly to show the beauty of a quiet, manly Christian life; on the other hand the terrible moral degradation to which selfishness unchecked may lead, and the final triumph of integrity against cruel calumny and misunderstanding.

Winning the Victory; or, Di-Pennington's Reward. A Tale.
12mo. Cloth extra. $1.25.

"One of the best books for girls in their teens which have recently been written; and it is a pleasant story
for reading aloud in the family."—Sunday-School Times.
"A good and helpful book for girls."—The Independent.

Vera's Trust. A Tale. 12mo. Cloth
extra. $1.25.
An intensely interesting book from beginning to
end. It will captivate all readers.

For sale at all bookstores throughout the country, or will be sent postpaid on receipt of price by the publishers.

THOS. NELSON & SONS,
33 East 17th Street, New York.

MINISTER'S POCKET RITUAL

A Hand-Book of Scripture Lessons and Forms of Service
for Marriage, Confirmation, The Lord's Supper, Visitation
of Sick, Burial of Dead, Dedication, Ordinations, Installations. Suggestions on various services. For all denominations. By Rev. Henry M. Maltby, D. D. 13 mo. Limp Morocco, $1; Limp M. sin 50c. Mailed on receipt of price.
PERKINS & HIGGINS, 914 Arch St., Philada.

PLANTS Transplanted MAIL or EXPRESS
Large, Smooth FREE
Red Tomato 25c. p. doz. $1 p. 100.
Egg Plants, 50c. per doz. Cabbage & Lettuce, 30c. per 100. Cauliflower, Early Snowball, 25c. per doz.; $1 per
100. JOHN BOLGIANO, Waverly, Md.

A VEGETABLE WONDER!

Copyright, 1888, by Peter Henderson & Co.

HENDERSON'S NEW BUSH LIMA BEAN.

Can and Should be Grown in every Garden on the Continent.

Of all the Novelties in Garden Products ever sent out, there is nothing so entirely distinct and valuable as this New Vegetable. The old Lima Bean can only be grown on poles, while the NEW BUSH LIMA grows and is cultivated exactly like the common bush or snap bean (growing only 18 inches high), and from the time of its bearing in July, produces in abundance delicious Lima Beans throughout the entire season until frost. It has, besides, an additional value, in that it is two weeks earlier than any other Lima Bean, being fit for the table in from forty to fifty days from time of planting.

Price (by mail) 25 cents per packet, 5 packets for $1.00, 12 packets for $2.00 (12 packets sufficient for an ordinary-sized family for the season).
Directions for growing on each packet.
Remittances can be sent either by Post Office Order, Postal Note or Stamps.

$100.00 in Cash Prizes for single plants bearing greatest number of pods. For conditions see Manual offered below.

Every purchaser of Henderson's Bush Lima Bean will be sent, without charge, our MANUAL OF EVERYTHING FOR THE GARDEN, a book of 140 pages, size, 9 x 11, containing 3 colored plates (the price of which is 25 cents), on the distinct understanding, however, that those ordering will say in what paper they saw this advertisement.

PETER HENDERSON & CO.
35 & 37 Cortlandt Street, New York.

THE NEW MODEL, OUR LATEST and BEST MOWER.

For Simplicity and durability,
and quality of
work, it is un-
equalled, while for Lightness of draft
it excels by a large percentage any other Lawn Mower
made. Send for circular and price-list.

CHADBORN
& COLDWELL MANUFACT'G CO.,
NEWBURGH, N. Y.

GOOD NEWS TO LADIES.

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees, and Baking Powder, and secure a beautiful
Gold Band or Moss Rose China Tea
Set, Dinner Set, Gold Band Moss Rose Toilet Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Caster, or Webster's Dictionary.
Get Premium No. 27. For particulars address
65 AND 63 CHURCH STREET, N. Y. P. O. Box 257.

Aimed at Wrongs 2 B Righted, Follies 2 B Shunned, Dangers 2 B Avoided, Sorrows 2 B Mitigated, Victories 2 B Won.
A treasury of his best thoughts. Beautifully illustrated,
702 pages, $2.75. E. B. TREAT, NEW YORK.

SEATTLE No blizzards, heavy snows or cyclones.
Average winter temperature 43° above zero. Seattle, largest city in Washington Territory. Population 25,000. Commercial, educational and financial center of Puget Sound Country. Full information of
CHAS. H. KITTINGEN,
CITY SE-AT-TLE, Seattle, Wash. Territory.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico
are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to
the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

TO OUR CHRISTIAN FRIENDS:

As there is a regular monthly expense in connection with the work a regular monthly income is needed to meet that expense. We,
therefore, specially ask for regular monthly contributions in its behalf. If many will each send a little every month, or quarter, or whenever they can, it will do great good. Remember, every little helps.

H. CHAUNCEY RILEY.

PAINLESS BEECHAM'S PILLS EFFECT WORTH A GUINEA A BOX

For Weak Stomach—Impaired Digestion—Disordered L
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

PRICE 25 CENTS PER BOX
Prepared only by THOS. BEECHAM, St. Helens, Lancashire, Engl
B. F. ALLEN & CO., Sole Agents

FOR UNITED STATES, 365 & 367 CANAL ST., NEW YO
Who (if your druggist does not keep them) will mail Beech Pills on receipt of price—but inquire first. (Please mention this pa

DR. WARNER'S

Over 14 Millions sold in this Country Alone.

The Best Fitting and Best
Wearing Corset Ever Made.
SOLD EVERYWHERE.

VICTORY AT LAST SELF-THREADING SEWING NEEDLES

The Blind can use them. Invaluable for falling sight. Finest needle made. Millward's Gold Eyes; do not cut the thread.
Sample paper mailed 10c.; 3 for 25c.; 12
for 80c. NEW ENGLAND NOVELTY MFG CO., 21 Portland Street, Boston, Mass.

FOR PLAYING ACCOMPANIMENTS

Just out. 165 Chords arranged so any one can play at once every accompaniment on Piano or Organ. Mailed for 25c. silver. C. C. St. John & Co., 325 Wash. St., Boston.

BEECHAM'S PILLS act like magic on a weak stomach.
FOR A DISORDERED LIVER try BEECHAM'S PILLS.

UNDERWEAR AND HOSI-FURLEY & BUTTR
Celebrated English M
Underwear, in fine G
Gossamer and Si weights, for men, w
and children; also N
Natural Wool Shirts Drawers, with Half-to match.

Ladies' Black and C
ed, plain and ribbed Lisle Thread Hose, 40 per pair; worth fro to 85 cts. per pair.

JAMES MCCREERY &
Broadway and 11th
New York.

WHEN a pant-hunter pant is panting for pa
HE pants for the best pan
HE the pant-market gra
HE panteth unpanted until he impl
HIMSELF in a pair of our
HE Plymouth Rock Pa

TO OBTAIN the Famous Custom-mad mouth Rock $3, $4 a Pants, first send 6 cent which we will mail you 20 samples, self-measur blanks, and linen tape measure, provide MENTION THIS PAPER, or if you cannot samples, tell us about the color preferred, with inside leg, and hip measures, remit $3, t with 35 cents to cover cost of expressage or p and we will forward the goods pre-paid to any in the U. S., guaranteeing safe delivery and satisfaction or money refunded. Remittan that we make to your order. Full Suits, $13.25 $2.50; Overcoats, $12.00; and that for any c refund money at buyer's request, upon ret goods, or make alterations or new garments, extra charge.

PLYMOUTH ROCK PANTS

Address all mail to 11 to 17 Elliot St., or 18 Summer St., Boston.
BRANCH OFFICES:—285 Broadway
York; Burnside Building, Worcester; Gilmore House, Springfield, Mass.; 60
ket St., Lynn, Mass.; Butler's Exch
Providence, R. I.; Old Register Buil
New Haven, Conn. 943 Penn. Ave., Washi
Any one wishing to learn of our responsibility write the American Express Company, at Bosto ital $20,000,000, or consult the commercial agen

PIANOS UNIVERSITY ORG

$150 to $1900 UNIVERSITY ORG $5 to $50
Guaranteed 6 years.
PRICE They Lead the World
We sell direct to families, and send for trial in your own
home before you buy.
Catalogue Free.
Established 1858. Incor. 1890.
MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO.
235 East 21st Street,

SAMPLE PAGES FROM THE LATEST
SUNDAY SCHOOL SONG BOOKS FI
THE ECHO MUSIC CO., La Fayette, Indian

BONANZA to AGENTS. Both sexes. Write
GEO. A. SCOTT, New York

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1882, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

Price, 3 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

THE END OF THE TIMES. By a French Catholic.

PICTURE OF THE INDIAN SUN DANCE.

graphical Story by Mrs. Stenhouse. (Continued.)

MR. H. M. STANLEY'S WONDERFUL ADVENTURES.

As was briefly mentioned in this journal on April 10, the long and anxiously expected news of Stanley has at last come to hand. Since he left Yambuga on June 28, 1887, and plunged into the unknown country between that place and Wadelai where Emin was, no reliable news of him was received. Reports came that he was killed, that he had died of fever, that he and Emin were both prisoners, and though they were distrusted they were sufficient to cause apprehension. It was known that he expected to reach Wadelai by November, 1887, at latest, and the fact that in February, 1888, Emin had heard nothing of him could not but excite fears for his safety. Now, however, letters in Stanley's own hand have come, and the whole civilized world is thankful that the heroic explorer is still living. Realizing how keen is the public interest taken in the wonderful man and his gallant effort to succor the brave Emin, we this week give portraits of the two men and extracts from Stanley's narrative, with pictures of phases of their surroundings. Of these pictures on the first page, No. 1 shows three types of the Babulu Wasongolo tribe and the Relief Expedition House at Stanley Falls. No. 2 gives types of the singular people who live near the River Aruwimi. No. 3 depicts a scene on the shore of the river Congo at Yahsuta, with some canoes used for fishing. No. 4 illustrates the hostility of the natives of Bangala, on the N'Imbo River, and No. 5 is a portrait of Majuta, the boy-attendant of Mr. Jamieson, one of Mr. Stanley's lieutenants.

Mr. Stanley's Life

having been more than once sketched in these pages, it is only necessary here to give but a brief summary of its chief events. He was born in 1840, near Denbigh, in Wales, in poor circumstances. He emigrated to America while a mere boy and was adopted as a son by a distinguished American citizen, served in the Confederate service; subsequently, after being a prisoner of war, entered the Union army, took part in the battles of Fort Donelson, Fort Henry, and Pittsburg Landing, became a war correspondent of the New York Herald, and after the war continued his services on that journal. In October, 1869, the proprietor, Mr. James Gordon Bennett, offered to send him to the interior of Africa to find Dr. Livingstone, the Christian missionary-explorer, who had been so long lost to the ken of the civilized world that he was believed to be dead. Stanley tramped across Africa searching for him, and eventually found him, relieved his pressing needs, gave him news of the civilized world, and carried dispatches home from him. Stanley afterwards took up the work of exploration which Livingstone left unfinished, and, aided by the King of the Belgians, has established the Free State of the Congo. When the news came that Emin was surrounded by cruel and treacherous enemies, and was in need of help, Stanley was in New York enjoying a brief holiday, but he promptly responded to the call when the Emin Relief Association invited him to lead the expedition, and on January 21, 1887, he set out for Africa on his mission.

EMIN PASHA.

THE name by which the able administrator and intrepid general whose portrait appears with that of Mr. Stanley on the first page is known is an assumed name, taken or conferred upon him in his connection with his work in Africa. Emin signifies the faithful one, and thousands of helpless women and children in his province know by experience how worthy he is to bear it. His reply to Stanley, when the latter urged him to leave his dangerous post, was that he could not desert the people who were trusting in his protection. His real name is Edward Schnitzer. He is a German physician of delicate physique, with shy, sensitive manners and gentle bearing. He was born in Oppeln, in Silesia, on March 28, 1840, and is therefore now in his fiftieth year. His family were all Protestants, and occupied a respected position amongst the trading classes of the district. In 1842 the Schnitzers removed from Oppeln to Neisse, where Emin's friends still reside. After a course of study at Neisse, young Schnitzer was sent to attend the lectures of the medical professors at the famous University of Breslau. He completed his medical education in the hospitals and surgical classes at Berlin, and graduated in 1864. As a boy he had a strong taste for the study of natural history and books of travel; and his friends were not at all surprised to find that he had made up his mind, on taking his degree, to become

A Surgeon in Turkey

if he could obtain employment under the Sultan. He was appointed, on his arrival in Syria, to the post of surgeon on the staff of Ismail Hakki Pasha, and served for some time in Antivari, and at Scutari; but on the death of the Pasha, in 1873, Schnitzer went to Constantinople and resigned his commission, and returned home to Neisse, where he occupied his leisure for some months in the further pursuit of his favorite study of natural history. In 1876, wearied by the inactivity of his life at Neisse, he made his way to Cairo, where he was made of Egypt, and was sent in 1875 to join the staff of Gordon, the Governor-General of the Soudan, who had his headquarters at Khartoum. From Khartoum, Emin was sent to act as Surgeon-General of the Equatorial Province, the southernmost limit of Egyptian territory on the Nile, of which region General Gordon was then Governor. Gordon at once saw the value of the young German doctor, and found him invaluable as a diplomatist, and sent him on tours of inspection through the more remote and unsettled districts of the province, and selected him as his second in command when he himself visited Uganda, the White Nile, and the populous shores of the Albert Nyanza.

An Officer of the Khedive

When Gordon went to Khartoum he made Emin Governor of the Province, with the rank of Bey, which the Khedive subsequently raised to Pasha. General Stone, the American officer who, while serving under the Khedive, was brought into communication with Emin, said that he had never met a man so earnestly and conscientiously zealous for the good of those around him. Impartial justice, and an enlightened solicitude for the welfare of the people, won for him their confidence and affection, and kept them faithful to the Khedive when the other provinces of the Soudan rebelled. The danger to which Emin has become exposed is therefore not from his own people, but from the Arabs, who want his province to be in line with the rest of the Soudan, independent of Egypt.

MR. STANLEY'S EVENTFUL JOURNEY.

A GRAPHIC and thrilling story of the events which followed Mr. Stanley's departure from Yambuga for Wadelai on June 28, 1887, is told in his letters received April 1, 1889. He had carried his whole force so far, but at that point he was entering a country utterly unknown. He therefore resolved to leave there the bulk of the ammunition and other stores which he had brought for Emin, under the care of Barttelot and Jamieson, and with only a part of his force, strike due east through the country to Wadelai. He expected that it would not take him more than two weeks to accomplish the journey, and he would then return and fetch the stores for the relief of Emin. As it turned out, however, it took him and his party over five months to cut his way through the forest lands between the two places, as he encountered unexpected obstacles in the opposition of the natives and the physical character of the country.

The First Skirmish.

Mr. Stanley says: My advance column, consisting of 389 officers and men, set out from Yambuga, June 28, 1887. The first day we followed the river-bank, marched twelve miles, and arrived in the large district of Yankondé. At our approach the natives set fire to their villages, and under cover of the smoke attacked the pioneers, who were clearing the numerous obstructions the natives had planted before the first village. The skirmish lasted fifteen minutes. The second day we followed a path leading inland, but trending east. We followed this path for five days through a dense population. Every art known to native minds for molesting, impeding, and wounding an enemy was resorted to; but we passed through, without the loss of a man. Perceiving that the path was taking us too far from our course, we cut a northeasterly track, and

Reached the River

Aruwimi again on the 5th of July. From this date until the 18th of October we followed the left bank of the Aruwimi. After seventeen days' continuous marching, we halted one day for rest. On the twenty-fourth day from Yambuga we lost two men by desertion. In the month of July we made four halts only. On the 1st of August the first death occurred, which was from dysentery; so that for thirty-four days our course had been singularly successful. But as we now entered a wilderness which occupied us nine days in marching through it, our sufferings began to multiply, and several deaths occurred. The river was of great use to us; our boat and several canoes relieved the wearied and sick of their loads, so that progress, though not brilliant, was still steady.

On the 13th of August, 1887, we arrived at Air-Sibba. The natives made a bold front. We lost five men through poisoned arrows, and to our great grief Lieutenant Stairs was wounded just below the heart; but though he suffered greatly for nearly a month, he finally recovered.

An Unfortunate Meeting.

On the 31st of August we met for the first time a party of Manyema belonging to the caravan of Ugarowwa, who turned out to be a former tent-boy of Speke's. They tampered with my men and tempted them to desert by their presents. Twenty-six men deserted within three days of this unfortunate meeting. On the 16th of September we arrived at the camp of the native chief, Ugarowwa. As food was very scarce, owing to his having devastated an immense region, we halted but one day near him. Such friendly terms as I could make with such a man I made, and left fifty-six men with him. All the Somalis preferred to rest at Ugarowwa's to the continuous marching. Five Soudanese were also left. It would have been certain death for all of them to have accompanied us. At Ugarowwa's they might possibly recover. Five dollars a month per head I agreed to pay to this man for their food.

An Awful Month.

On September 18 we left Ugarowwa's, and on the 18th of October entered the settlement occupied by Kilinga-Longa, a Zanzibari slave belonging to Abed bin Salim, an old Arab, whose bloody deeds are recorded in "The Congo, and the Founding of its Free State." This proved an awful month to us; not one member of the expedition, white or black, will ever forget it. Our party numbered 273 souls on leaving Ugarowwa's, because out of 389 we had lost sixty-six men by desertion and death between Yambuga and Ugarowwa's, and had left fifty-six men sick in the Arab station. On reaching Kilinga-Longa's we discovered we had lost fifty-five men more by starvation or desertion. We had lived principally on wild fruit, fungi, and a large, flat, bean-shaped nut. The slaves of Abed bin Salim did their utmost to ruin the expedition, short of open hostilities. They forced us to sell to them our rifles, ammunition, clothing, so that when we left their station

We were Beggared,

and our men were absolutely naked. We were so weak physically that we were unable to carry the boat and about seventy loads of goods; we therefore left these goods and boat at Kilinga-Longa's, under Surgeon Parke and Captain Nelson, the latter of whom was unable to march, and after twelve days' march we arrived at a native settlement called Ibwire. Between Kilinga-Longa's and Ibwire our condition had not improved. The Arab devastation had reached within a few miles of Ibwiri—a devastation so complete that there was not one native left standing between Ugarrowwa's and Ibwiri, and what had not been destroyed by the slaves of Ugarrowwa and Abed bin Salim, the elephants destroyed, and turned the whole region into a horrible wilderness. But at Ibwiri we were beyond the utmost reach of the destroyers; we were on virgin soil, in a populous region bounding with food. Our suffering from hunger, which began on the 31st of August, terminated on the 12th of November. Ourselves and men were skeletons. Out of 389 we now only numbered 174, several of whom seemed to have no hope of life left. A halt was therefore ordered for the people to recuperate.

We halted thirteen days in Ibwiri and revelled in fowls, goats, bananas, corn, sweet potatoes, beans, &c. The supplies were inexhaustible, and the people glutted themselves; the effect was such that I had 173—one was killed by an arrow—mostly sleek and robust men when we set out for the Albert Nyanza on the 24th of November, 1887. We were still 126 miles from the lake Nyanza, but, given food, such a distance seemed nothing. On the 5th of December we emerged out of the forest, in which we had had 160 Days' Continuous Gloom;

but now we saw the light of broad day shining all around us and making all things beautiful. We thought we had never seen grass so green or country so lovely. The men literally yelled and leaped with joy, and raced over the ground with their burdens. Ah! this was the old spirit of former expeditions all of a sudden revived. Now woe betide the native aggressor we may meet, however powerful he may be; with such a spirit the men will fling themselves like wolves on sheep. Numbers will not be considered. It had been the dreadful forest that had made them abject, slavish creatures, plundered by Arab slaves at Kilinga-Longa's.

A Powerful Chief's Hostility.

On December 9, 1887, we came to the country of the powerful Chief Mazamboni. The villages were scattered over a great extent of country so thickly that there was no other road except through their villages or fields. From a long distance the natives had sighted us, and were prepared. We seized a hill as soon as we arrived in the centre of a mass of villages, about 4 P. M. on the 9th of December, and occupied it, building a zariba as fast as billhooks could cut brushwood. The war-cries were terrible from hill to hill; they were sent pealing across the intervening valleys, the people gathered by hundreds from every point, war-horns and drums announced that a struggle was about to take place. Such natives as were too bold we checked with but little effort, and a slight skirmish ended in our capturing a cow, the first beef tasted since we left the ocean. The night passed peacefully, both sides preparing for the morrow. On the morning of December 10 we attempted to open negotiations. The natives were anxious to know who we were. Hours were passed talking, both parties keeping a respectful distance apart.

A Battle.

The morning of December 11 dawned, and at 8 A. M. we were startled at hearing a man proclaiming that it was Mazamboni's wish that we should be driven back from the land. A choice body of our sharpshooters then crossed a deep and narrow river in the face of hundreds of natives, and assaulted the first village and took it. The sharpshooters did their work effectively, and drove the descending natives rapidly up the slope until they fled. By 3 P. M. there was not a native visible anywhere, except on one small hill about a mile and a half west of us. On the morning of December 12 we continued our march; during the day we had four little fights. On the 13th we marched straight east; attacked by new forces every hour until noon, when we halted for refreshments. We successfully overcame these natives. At 1 P. M. we resumed our march.

Fifteen minutes later I cried out, "Prepare yourselves for a sight of the lake Nyanza." The men murmured and doubted, and said, "Why does the Master continually talk to us in this way? Nyanza, indeed! Is not this a plain, and can we not see mountains at least four days' march ahead of us." At 1:30 P. M. the Albert Nyanza was below them. Now it was my turn to laugh at the doubters, and many came to kiss my hands and beg my pardon, but I could not say a word. This was my reward. Kavalli, on the lake Albert Nyanza, the objective point of the expedition, was six miles from us as the crow flies.

The Meeting With Emin,

however, was not yet achieved. Mr. Stanley's letter, which must, from this point, be briefly summarized, relates how he was attacked again in his descent toward the lake. He repelled the onslaught, but was again attacked in the night. That attack, too, was repulsed. He had expected that Emin would be at the south of the lake to meet him, but he was not there, and now he was in imperative need of the boat, which, owing to the weakness of his men, he had been compelled to leave behind. There was no other way but for Stanley to turn back with part of his force and get that boat. A fort was built near the lake for the protection of the men he must leave there, and then, on December 15, 1887, Stanley retraced his steps over the 190 miles to Kilinga-Longa's, where the boat was. On the way he was prostrated by sickness, and only recovered by careful nursing. It was not until April 26, 1888, that they reached the lake with the boat. They had been met on the way by a messenger bearing a letter from Emin, who, hearing of their coming, sent to greet his rescuer, who, by this time, was himself almost in need of rescue. On reaching the lake, Emin's steamer was seen seven miles away, and that night Emin and Stanley were together in camp.

Emin supplied Stanley with an escort, and the explorer, after remaining with Emin until May 25, once more retraced his steps to Yambuga, to bring up the stores left there under Barttelot and Jamieson. They arrived on August 17, only to find that their own misfortunes had been paralleled by those that had undergone. Barttelot had been murdered, Jamieson was dead of fever, two other white men had succumbed to hardships and gone home, and Bonney alone, of all the white men, was left. Of the two hundred and fifty-seven natives, only seventy-one remained, and of these only ten were fit for work. Mr. Stanley had also the mortification of discovering that, owing to a report of his death, his personal kit, medicines, provisions, etc., had been sent down the Congo as superfluities, and he found himself naked and deprived of even the necessities of life in Africa. His own followers, and the escort lent to him by Emin, were, however, set to work to carry back to the lake what remained of the stores, and Stanley's letter was written just as they were setting out. He says that Emin Pasha had soldiers under him, sailors, artisans, clerks, servants, men, women, and children, and if he moved out with his people 8,000 would follow in his train. But Emin seemed disposed to remain; Stanley, however, resolving to return with the expedition to the Nyanza. The latest rumors brought by Arabs to Stanley Falls, and forwarded thence on February 28, 1889, down the Congo, say that he was on his way to Zanzibar, in company with Emin Pasha, several thousand men, women, and children, and 6,000 ivory tusks, having left Bungangeta, on the Aruwimi River, on or about September 4.

The Rear Column

The Seeking Saviour and Other Themes, by the late Dr. Mackay, of Hull. This work has been published since Dr. Mackay's death, but the greater part was ready for publication when he died, and to that has been added the striking discourse which he delivered the last time he entered the pulpit, and a few manuscripts found among his papers. 247 pages, cloth cover; price 75 cents, including postage. For sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

A Wretched Millionaire.—The Rev. Mr. McGregor observes: "Just before I left Chicago, recently, I called on a very wealthy man, whose name is known all over the world, to request a subscription for the poor of Scotland. That man in his youth had set out to save his own life, but he had lost it. He had determined to make his aim the gathering together of wealth. He had succeeded. Yet though he could write a cheque for a million dollars, and feel it even less than I would the loss of one dollar, he was not happy; though surrounded by every luxury and comfort he was profoundly miserable, and acknowledged it. He found that neither wealth, luxury, nor reputation can satisfy the cravings of an immortal soul. The poor rich man wants Christ, and none but Christ can satisfy. Before I left him, I urged him to drink of that living water, which Christ offers to all such as he, which after drinking he should never thirst."

A Sight which Drove a Man Mad.—Mr. J. Thomson observes: "There was a dear friend of mine who lost his reason some time ago, but after three years in an asylum he recovered and again entered his old position. I one day asked him, 'Do you know the cause of the loss of your reason?' He replied, 'I thought I was standing on a green spot surrounded by thousands of merry-makers who were singing and dancing. In the distance I saw a great wheel revolving, and toward it all the dancers were slowly making their way. I could not see the other side of the wheel where I was standing, and I thought I shifted my position until I could get a better view of that stupendous wheel. I saw the merry-makers step from the greensward, and being caught by this wheel were thrown into a great chasm on the other side. As I saw the people fall into that fearful abyss, I turned with a cry, and my reason was gone.' I myself was present when that dear friend of mine turned with that cry, and I was the first to take the strong man in my arms and hold him. If the thought of so many people falling into an abyss was enough to turn a man's reason, what must be the thought of men and women going in thousands toward the brink of the bottomless abyss? Lost, and with Christ at hand. Horrible, truly horrible!"

Mission Hall, Hospital, and Heaven.—Mr. Stoney says: "Some years ago in a London mission conducted by one of my friends, a young woman entered the hall, and took her seat on one of the front benches. As the sermon went on a lady who sat near noticed the tears running down the young woman's cheeks. At the close of the service the girl rose quickly, and left the hall, but the lady followed her, and overtaking her in the street, kindly asked her what her sorrow was, and showed her Christ the balm for every sorrow. The girl did not accept Christ that night, but promised to come to the hall on the following night. For several nights she came, and at last she humbly cast herself upon Christ, and besought His forgiveness. As she was leaving on the night she found Christ, the lady said to her, 'I'll give you a text to take away with you—'The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin.' The girl said she had not a Bible, and the lady, marking the place in her own, put it into the girl's hand saying, 'Be sure and read it every day.' The girl promised, and went away saying she would be at the meeting the next evening. But the next night she was not there, and when several nights passed and she did not come, the lady began to fear she had gone back into the world. One day as the lady was visiting one of the hospitals, one of the nurses said, 'I wish you had been here a little while ago. We had a young woman who had been run over by a wagon. Poor thing, she was fearfully crushed, and died almost at once. She had a Bible in her hand, with your name inscribed in it, and she said when she was brought in, 'Thank God, I found Christ as my Saviour last night. "The blood of Jesus Christ, God's Son, cleanseth us from all sin."'"

AROMATICS FOR EASTER.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday Morning, April 21, 1889.

"Bringing the spices which they had prepared." Luke 24: 1.

"The trumpet shall sound." 1 Cor. 15: 25.

Why the Women Took Spices to Christ's Tomb—Emblematic of the Gospel—Its Sweetening and Deodorizing Influence Needed—God's Delight in Fragrance—The Tomb Opened by Concussion—What the World Owes to Concussion—A Messianic Force—The Angel Seated on the Stone—Every Obstacle to Become a Throne—Horace Greeley's Triumph—Edward T. Taylor's Work—The Glory of Resurrection Day—The Dead Awakened by Music—What Music has Done for Dead Souls—The Sleeping Army at Sharpsburg—The Inscriptions in the Catacombs.

ENCHANTING work have I before me this Easter morning, for, imitating these women of the text, who brought aromatics to the mausoleum of Christ, I am going to unroll frankincense and balm and otto of roses and cardamon from the East Indies, and odors from Arabia, and, when we can inhale no more of the perfume, then we will take to sweet sounds and hear from the music that shall wake the dead. Having on other Easters described the whole scene, I need only in four or five sentences say: Christ was lying flat on his back, lifeless, amidst sculptured rocks—rocks over him, rocks under him, and a door of rocks all bounded by the flowers and fountains of Joseph's country-seat. Then a bright immortal, having descended from heaven, quick and flashing as a falling meteor, picks up the door of rock and puts it aside as though it were a chair and sits on it. Then Christ unwraps Himself of his mortuary apparel, and takes the turban from His head and folds it up deliberately and lays it down in one place, and then puts the shroud in another place, and comes out and finds that the soldiers who had been on guard are lying in a dead swoon.

The Illustrious Prisoner of the tomb is discharged, and five hundred people see Him at once. An especial congress of ecclesiastics called, pay a bribe to the resuscitated soldiers to say that there was no resurrection, and that while they were overcome of slumber the Christians had played resurrectionists and stolen the corpse. The Marys are at the tomb with aromatics. Why did not these women of the text bring thorns and nettles? for these would more thoroughly have expressed the piercing sorrows of themselves and their Lord. Why did they not bring some national ensign, such as that of the Roman eagle, typical of conquest? No, they bring aromatics, suggestive to me of the fact that

The Gospel is to Sweeten

and deodorize the world. The world has so much of putrefaction and malodor that Christ is going to roll over it waves of frankincense, and sprinkle it all over with sweet-smelling myrrh. Thousands of years before this Solomon had said that Christ was a lily, and Isaiah had declared that under the gospel the desert would bloom like the rose; but the world was slow to take the floral hint. And so now the women of the text bring hands full and arms full of redolence, and perhaps unwittingly confirm and emphasize the lesson of deodorization. When Christ's gospel has conquered the earth the last offence to the olfactories will have left the world: sweet, pure air will have blown through every home, and churches will be freed from the curse of ill ventilation, and the world will become two great gardens, the empurpled and emblazoned and emparadised hemispheres. Sin is a buzzard, holiness is a dove.

Sin is Nightshade,

holiness is a flower. If you are trying to reform the world, open the windows of that tenement house and pour through it a draught of God's pure atmosphere, and set a geranium or heliotrope on the window-sill; cleanse the air, and you will help cleanse the soul. How dare this world so often insult that feature of the human face which God has made the most prominent feature in human physiognomy? To prove how

He Himself loves aromatics, I bring the fact that there are millions of flowers on prairies and in mountain fastnesses the fragrance of which no human being ever breathes, and He must have grown them there for His own regalement. And for the compliment the world paid Christ by giving Him a sepulchre in Joseph's garden, He will yet make the whole earth a garden. Yes, He expressed in the first book of the Bible, when He said: "The Lord smelled a sweet savor;" and He filled the air of the ancient tabernacle and temple with sweet incense; and there are small bottles of perfume in heaven, described in Revelation as golden vials full of odors. I preach an ambrosial gospel which will yet extirpate from the world all foulness and rancidity, and the last noisomeness and the last mephitic gas. Glad am I that, though the world had chiefly spikes for the Saviour's feet and thorns for the Saviour's brow, the Magi put frankincense upon His cradle and the Marys brought frankincense for His grave.

His Delight with Fragrance

Notice, also, that Christ's mausoleum was opened by concussion. It was a great earthquake that put its twisted key into the involved and labyrinthine lock of that tomb. Concussion! That is the power that opens all the tombs that are opened at all. Tomb of soul, and tomb of nations. Concussion between England and the thirteen colonies, and forth comes free government in America. Concussion between France and Germany, and forth comes republicanism for France.

Concussion Among the Rocks

on Mount Sinai, and on two of them was left a perfect law for all ages. Concussion among the rocks around Calvary, and the Crucifixion was made the more overwhelming. Concussion between the United States and Mexico, and a vast area of country becomes ours. Concussion between England and France, and most of this continent west of the Mississippi becomes the property of the American Union. Concussion between iceberg and iceberg, between boulder and boulder, and a thousand concussions put this world into shape for man's residence. Concussion between David and his enemies, and out came the Psalms, which otherwise would never have been written. Concussion between God's will and man's will, and, ours overthrown, we are new creatures in Christ Jesus. Concussion of misfortune and trial for many of the good, and out comes their consecration.

Do not therefore be frightened when you see the great upheavals, the great agitations, the great earthquakes, whether among the rocks, or among the nations, or in individual experience. Out of them God will bring best results, and most magnificent consequences. Hear the crash all round the Lord's sarcophagus, and see the glorious reanimation of its dead inhabitant. Concussion! If ever a general European war, which the world has been expecting for the last twenty years, should come, a concussion so wide and a concussion so tremendous would not leave a throne in Europe standing as it now is. The nations of the earth are tired of having their kings born to them, and they would after a while elect their kings, and there would be an Italian republic, and a German republic, and a Russian republic, and an Austrian republic, and out of the cracks and chasms of that concussion would come resurrection for all Europe. Stagnation is deathful; concussion is Messianic.

Notice also

What the Angel Did With the Stone

after he had rolled it away from the mouth of the Saviour's mausoleum. The Book says he rolled away the stone from the door, and sat upon it. All of us ministers have preached a sermon about the angel's rolling away the stone, but we did not remark upon the sublime fact that he sat upon it. Why? Certainly not because he was tired. The angels are a fatigueless race, and that one could have shouldered every rock around that tomb, and carried it away, and not been besweated. He sat upon it,

I think, to show you, and to show me that I may make every earthly obstacle a throne of triumph. The young men who get their education easy seldom amount to much. Those who had to struggle for it come out atop. There is no end of the story of studying by pine-kn lights, and reading while the mules of the top path were resting, and of going hungry and patched and barefoot, and submitting to all kinds of privation to get scholastic advantage. But the day of graduation came, and they took the diplomas with a hand nervous from night study, and pale from lack of food, and put their academic degrees in the pocket of their threadbare coat. Then starting for another career of hardship, they entered a profession or a business where they found and no help. Yet saying, "I will succeed God help me, for no one else will," they went on and up until the world was compelled to acknowledge and admire them. The fact was that the obstacle between their discouraging start and their complete success was a rock fifty tons, but by resolution, nerved and muscularized and reinforced by Almighty God they threw their arms around the obstacle and with the strength of a supernatural wrestler rolled back the stone, and, having become more than conquerors, they sat upon it. Men and women are good and great and useful just in proportion as they had to overcome obstacles. You can count upon the fingers of your one hand all the great singers, great orators, great poets, great patriots, and great Christians who never had a struggle. That angel that made a throne of the boulder at Christ's tomb went back to heaven, and I warrant that, having been born in heaven and always had an easy time, he now speaks of that wrestle with the rock as the most interesting chapter in all his angelic lifetime. Oh men and women with obstacles in the way, I tell you that those that you may after a while sit on. Is the obstacle in your way sickness? Conquer it by accomplishing more for God during your invalidism than many accomplish who have never known an ailment. Are you persecuted? By your uprightness and courage compel the world to acknowledge your moral heroism. Is it poverty? Conquer it by being happy in the companionship of your Lord and Master, who in all His life owned but sixty-two cents, and that He got from a fish's mouth and immediately paid it all out in taxes to the Roman assessor, and who would have been buried in a potter's field had not Joseph of Arimathea contributed a place; for He who had not where to lay His head during His life had a borrowed pillow for the last slumber. There is no throne that you are sure to keep except that which you make out of vanquished obstacles.

Plenty of Disheartenment

Obstacles Are Only Thrones

An ungrateful republic at the ballot-box denied Horace Greeley the highest place at the national capital, but could not keep him from rising from the steps of a New York printing-office on which he sat one chilly morning waiting for the boss printer to come that he might get a job, until he mounted the highest throne of American journalism. He rolled back the stone and sat upon it.

A Poor Orphan Boy.

picking up chips at Richmond, Va., accosted by a passing sea-captain, and invited to come on board his vessel, drops the chips and starts right away, and is tossed from port to port, and, homeless and friendless, wanders one day along Tremont Street, Boston, and sees Park Street Church open, and, speaking of it afterward on a great occasion and using sailors' vernacular, as was usual with him, he says: "I put in, I up helm, unfurled sail, and made for the gallery, and scud under bare poles to the corner pew. Then I hove to and came to anchor. The old man, Dr. Griffin, was just naming his text. Pretty soon, he unfurled the mainsail, raised the topsail, ran up the pennants to free breeze, and I tell you the old gospel ship never ed more prosperously. The salt spray flew every direction, but more especially did it down my cheeks. Satan had to strike sail, guns were dismantled or spiked, his various ts by which he led sinners captive were all dead, and the captain of the Lord's hosts e forth, conquering and to conquer." Before t sailor-boy was poverty, but

He Conquered.
and orphanage, but he conquered it; and orance, but he conquered it; and the scoff the world, but he conquered it; and he rose every sailors' Bethel in the world blessed , and great anniversary platforms invited t, and Daniel Webster and Charles Dickens, Frederika Bremer, and poets and orators senators sat electrified at his feet, and his pelizing influence will go on until the last e tar is converted and the sea shall give up dead. All the obstacles of his life seemed hered into one great bowlder, but Edward T. rlor, the world-renowned sailors' preacher, ed back the stone and sat upon it.

et do not make the mistake that many do sitting on it before it is rolled away. It is and to go if you only tug away at it. If not ore, then I think about 12 o'clock noon of

Resurrection Day

I will see something worth seeing. The ernal impression is that the resurrection will e place in the morning. The ascent to the es will hardly occur immediately. It will e some hours to form the procession sky- d, and we will all want to take a look at this ld before we leave it forever, and see the oundings of the couch where our bodies e long been sleeping. On that Easter morn- e the marble, whether it lay flat upon your ve or stood up in monument, will have to be eled and shaken and rolled aside by the gel of Resurrection, and while waiting for ur kindred to gather and the procession to m, your resurrected body may sit in holy mph upon that chiseled stone which marked place of your protracted slumber. On that what a fragile thing will be Aberdeen granite column of basalt, and the mortar which will e out of the wall of vaults that have been led a thousand years, and the Taj, built for a en in India, a sepulchre two hundred and enty-five feet high, and made of jasper and elian, and turquoise and lapis-lazuli, and ethyst and onyx, and sapphire and diamond, l which shall that day rain into glittering t on groves of banyan and palm. And all

Under What Power?

nderous crowbars wielded by giants? No. nderbolt cleaving asunder the granite? No. ndering-ram swung against the walls of ceme- es? No. Dynamite drilled under the founda- ns of cenotaph and abbey? No. It will be e by music. Nothing but music, sweet but penetrating music. The trumpet shall sound! u say that is figurative; how do you know? t, whether literal or figurative, it means music how. The trumpet, that stirring, incisive, ghty instrument, with a natural compass from below the staff to E above, blown above Sinai en the law was given, blown around Jericho en the walls tumbled, blown when Gideon comfited the Midianites, blown when the ient Israelites were gathered for worship, to blown for the raising of the dead in the last at Easter. The mother, who, when the child st be awakened, kisses its eyes awake, does l. But the trumpet, which when the dead are e aroused kisses the ear awake, does better. not surprised if the dead are to be Awakened by Music.

y, that is the way now we raise the dead. e the statistics, if you can, of the millions of ls that have been raised from the death of y by hymns, by psalms, by solos, by anthems, flutes, by violins, by organs, by trumpets. der God what hosts have been resurrected ra D. Sankey, by Thomas Hastings, by Wil- n B. Bradbury, by Lowell Mason, by motherly abies, by church doxologies, by oratorios. If raise the dead now by music, be not surprised that on the last day the dead are to be raised by music.

The trumpet shall sound! And that instru- ment shall have plenty of work to do on the day mentioned. It will have to sound through all the pyramids, which are only names for sepul- chres, and liberate the buried kings. And through hypergean graves which were built in mounds and the hypogean graves which were dug in rocks, and through the nine hundred winding miles of catacombs under and around the Roman Campagna, where over seven million human beings sleep. And through all the crystal sarcophagi of Atlantic and Pacific and Medi- terranean and Caspian and Black sea deeps. And over all the battle-fields of continents, un- til all the fallen troops of English and French and Italian and German and Russian and Per- sian and American and the world's battle-fields answer the call. Marathon, come up! Agincourt, come up! Blenheim, come up! Acre, come up! Hohenlinden, come up! Sedan, come up! Gettysburg, come up! Near Sharpsburg during our civil war, when I was, with some others under the auspices of the Christian commission, looking after the wounded, Federal and Con- federate, one moonlight night I was where I could look down upon the tents of the sleeping army. Oh what

An Imposing Spectacle!

But my subject calls us to look down upon a mightier host of soldiers slumbering their last sleep in the bivouac of the dust: the seven hundred and fifty thousand slain in the Crimean War, the eight hundred thousand slain in our American war, the fifteen million slain in the wars of Sesostris, the twenty-five million slain in Jewish wars, the thirty-two million slain in the wars of Ghengis Khan, the eighty million slain in the wars of the Crusaders, the one hundred and eighty million slain in the Roman wars. Ay, according to Dr. Dick, the dead in war, if each one occupied four feet of ground would make enough graves to reach four hun- dred and forty-two times around the earth.

The most of people are dead. The world is a house of two rooms, a basement, and a room above-ground. The basement has two to one, three to one, four to one, more occupants than the superstructure. Sickness and war and death have been stacking their harvests for near six thousand years. Where are those who saw the Pilgrim Fathers embark, or the Declaration of Independence signed, or Franklin lasso the lightning, or Warren Hastings tried, or Queen Elizabeth in her triumphal march to Kenilworth, or William, Prince of Orange, land, or Gustavus Adolphus crowned, or Jerome of Prague burned at the stake, or Tamerlane found his empire? Gone! Gone!

But the trumpet shall sound. Music to raise the dead. Oh, how much the world needs it. You take a torch, and I will take a torch, and we will go through some of the aisles of

The Roman Catacombs

and see the expectant epitaphs on the walls and right over where the departed sleep. You know that these catacombs are fifty or sixty feet un- derground, and if one loses the guide or his torch is extinguished, he never finds the way out. So let us stay close together, and with our torches, as we wander along a small part of these nine hundred miles of underground pas- sages, see the inscriptions as they were really chiseled there on both sides the way. On your side you read by the light of your torch: "Here rests a handmaid of God, who out of all her riches now possesses but this one house. Thou wilt remain in eternal repose of happiness. A. D. 380." On my side I read by the light of the torch: "Aurelia, our sweetest daughter; she lived fifteen years and four months. A. D. 325." On your side you read: "Here hath been laid a sweet spirit, guileless, wise, and beautiful. Buried in peace. A. D. 388." On my side I read, "You well-deserving one, lie in peace. You will rise. A temporary rest is granted you. Plaucus, her husband, made this." On your side you read: "Nicephorus, a sweet soul, in the place of refreshment." On my side I read: "In Christ, Alexander is not dead, but lives be- yond the stars, and his dead body rests in this tomb." On your side you read: "Here, happy, you find rest bowed down with years." "Irene sleeps in God." "Valeria sleeps in peace." "Arethusa sleeps in God." "Navira in peace, a sweet soul who lived sixteen years, a soul sweet as honey; this epitaph was made by her parents."

But let us come out from these catacombs and extinguish our torches, for upon all these long- ings and expectations of all nations the morn- ing of Resurrection dawns. The trumpet shall sound! And the sooner it sounds, the better. Oh how we would like to get

Our Loved Ones Back Again!

If we are ready to meet our Lord, our sins all pardoned, what a good thing if this moment we could hear the resounding and reverberating blast! Would you not like to see your father again, your mother again, your daughter again, your boy again, and all your departed kindred again? Roll on, sweet day of resurrection and reunion! Under the hoofs of the white steeds that draw thy chariot we strew Easter flowers. Would it not be grand if all rise together?

You know that the Bible says we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed. What if we should be among the favored ones who never have to see death, and that while in the full life of our body we should hear that trumpet sound and these mortal bodies take on immortality! Oh, how I would hasten to two places before the close of such a day—peaceful Greenwood, and the village cemetery back of Somerville. And I would cry aloud: "The hour has come, the trumpet has sounded, the resurrection is here. Father and mother, you were the best of all the group, now lead the way!" The earth sinks out of sight. Clouds under foot. Other worlds only milestones on the King's highway. We rise! We rise! We rise! to be forever with the Lord, and forever with each other. May we all have part in that first resurrection!

In this dark world of sin and pain,
We only meet to part again;
But when we reach the heavenly shore,
We there shall meet to part no more.
The hope that we shall see that day
Should chase our present griefs away.

MRS. RUSSELL B. HARRISON.

(See Portrait on page 268.)

THE wife of the President's son is a daughter of ex-Senator Saunders, who in 1883 was one of the representatives of Nebraska in the United States Senate. At that time Benjamin Harrison was Senator from Indiana, and the two families became intimate. One result of their intercourse was that Senator Harrison's son, Russell, and Senator Saunders's daughter, Minnie, conceived a regard for each other which ripened into love. They were married, and went to live at Helena, Montana, where Mr. Harrison was interested in a stock farm. He has now become chief man there, is wealthy, and exercises considerable influence for so young a man. It is expected that young Mrs. Harrison will be frequently at the White House during the term, and assist her mother-in-law at the receptions. Her beauty and graceful manners impress all who come in contact with her, and she, with Mrs. McKee, the President's daughter, who is also exceedingly attractive in person and conversation, will doubtless become well known and popular in Washington society.

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION—1888.

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God.

END OF THE TIMES IN THE YEAR 1900, SHOWN BY SIX SCRIPTURE DATES,

by a French Roman Catholic writer, fifty years ago, as set forth in a French book entitled "Le Fin des Temps, par Pierre L., a Roman Catholic, of Paris," published in the year 1840, by Debre-court, of Paris.

The Unsealed Book—In Accord with Daniel and Habakkuk—I. The Forty-two Months—Beginning in 636—Ending 1896, Three and a Half Years Before the Consummation in 1900—II. The Time, Times, and Half a Time Covering the Same Period—III. The Forty-two Months of Mohammedan Supremacy—IV. The 1,290 Literal Days From 1896 to 1900—V. The 2,300 Years Dating From 400 B. C.—VI. The Midst of the Years—1,253 Years Before, and 1,253 Years After the Central Date of 647 A. D.

THE Apocalypse of St. John, that Book which is not sealed (Rev. 22: 10), and which is, consequently, left to the interpretation of the servants of God—Palam facere servis suis (Rev. 1: 1)—invariably fixes the End of this Age at the year 1900; this is also the term of Daniel and Habakkuk. This is shown by six prophecies: 1. The 11th chapter of Revelation; 2. The 12th chapter of Revelation; 3. Its 13th chapter; 4. The 7th chapter of Daniel; 5. The 8th chapter of Daniel; 6. The 2d chapter of Habakkuk.

The Forty-two Months.

I. It was said to John in Rev. 11: 1, 2: "Arise, and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and the adorers, but the court which is outside the temple cast out, and measure it not, because it is given unto the Gentiles, and the holy city they shall tread under foot two-and-forty months." "This temple, this altar," these adorers, are in the Holy City, in Jerusalem.

Now, at what epoch were Christians no longer permitted to adore Jesus Christ in the places hallowed by His passion and death? When were the faithful deprived of the liberty of adoring God in His temple? When was the court outside the temple cut off, and given to the Gentiles? When was exterior

Worship Prohibited in Jerusalem?

Mahomet appeared, and subsequently, in the year 636, Omar, his successor, having taken the city, signed these articles of capitulation: "In the name of God, clement and merciful, from Omar, son of Itab, safety is granted to the people of the city of Ælia (Jerusalem), for themselves, as well as for their children, their wives, their goods, and for all their churches, they shall neither be destroyed nor closed."

Thus the temple, the altar, the adorers, were preserved by the words of the Caliph Omar, which were respected even at the time of the Crusades. But upon what hard conditions! In all times heavy imposts were exacted for praying to God in His temple, because such was the law of the Koran in its 8th and 9th chapters. It was then only by measure and by the weight of gold that Christians were permitted to remain in Jerusalem. Thus were those words accomplished: "Measure the temple of God, and the altar, and the adorers."

But the court outside the temple, the exterior worship, was abolished: "It happened," says the historian Fleury, "that when Omar desired to build a mosque in Jerusalem, the edifice could not be made to stand, . . . but on removing the cross which was erected on the Mount of Olives, the building remained firm, and this was a reason for removing many other crosses. . . . It is still more remarkable that the Mohammedans took half of the porch belonging to the Church of Constantine, where the steps were upon which Omar had prayed, to build a mosque over them." Thus those words were accomplished: "But the court outside the temple cast out and measure it not, because it is given to the Gentiles." It is then when Jerusalem was taken by Omar, that we must count the forty-two Greek months (the prophet wrote in that language) of thirty days, or, altogether, 1,260 days; that is to say—taking the days for years, as is usual with the prophets

From the Year 636,

—the Gentiles should occupy the Holy City for twelve hundred and sixty years, until 1896, and four months, the time when the Jews, led back into their country by Enoch and Elias, will drive out the Mohammedans. Afterwards those two prophets will be slain by the beast—the Antichrist, who will come out of the bottomless pit. Then follows the reign of Antichrist during three days and a half, or three years and a half at the close of which the End will come in 1900. (Rev. 11: 7-11).

The 1,260 Desert Years.

II. The Church is represented to the prophet in the next (twelfth) chapter of Revelation, under the figure of a woman in the pains of labor—denoting, according to the opinion of St. Bernard,

The Church Persecuted,

—tortured in her martyrs, which brought forth a son, who was taken up to God, and to His throne. Then she takes flight into the desert unto her place, where she is nourished during twelve hundred and sixty years, or for a time, and times, and half a time. The desert, to which the Church is obliged to fly with the two wings of a great eagle (Rev. 12: 6-14) as she had only two patriarchal sees, Antioch and Alexandria, left to her after the taking of Jerusalem by Omar, is Rome, where Jesus Christ has fixed the seat of His Empire. Rome is a desert, a place of exile, far from Jerusalem, her country and her birthplace.* And whilst the earth protects her against Abderam, who spreads out and rushes on like a river, the demon, who persecutes her, places himself upon the shore of the Mediterranean Sea: Stetit super arenam maris (Rev. 12: 15-18). We must then again count from Omar's taking of Jerusalem, in 636, the twelve hundred and sixty days, or the twelve hundred and sixty years, during which the kings will nourish the Church of Jesus Christ in the wilderness until 1896. Afterwards the empire of Antichrist will appear for three years and a half. Thus we arrive at the same conclusion for the End of the Times in the year 1900.

The 1,260 Years of Mohammedan Supremacy.

III. The Prophet John in the next (thirteenth) chapter of Revelation, sees a beast coming up out of the Mediterranean Sea, who had succeeded to the power of Satan, who had been vanquished by St. Michael and his angels in heaven, and who was to be bound and cast into the bottomless pit and sealed up for a thousand years. The demon who has replaced the idolatry which Satan protected is the evil genius of Mahomet, whose conquests have invaded a part of the Greek Empire, figured in Daniel 7 by the leopard, Syria, Palestine, and Egypt. In the same prophecy, Tartary, where the ancient empire of the Medes and Persians was situated, was figured by the bear, and the old empire of Assyria was represented by the lion. And this is why the beast which figures Mahomet in the Apocalypse was like a leopard, and his feet were the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion. And when

The False Prophet

by his mouth speaking great things and blasphemies, begins to subject the greater parts of this vast empire to his laws, power is given to him for two-and-forty Greek months, or twelve hundred and sixty days, i. e., twelve hundred and sixty years.

Here we must then again count from 636, the taking of Jerusalem by Omar, the most important epoch for sacred history, these twelve hundred and sixty years, and this brings us again to the year 1896. And then, when those shall have led into captivity those who had led them into captivity, the reign of Antichrist will follow for three years and a half—from 1896 to 1900. So that we arrive at the same conclusion for 1900, as in the former chapters.

The 1,290 Literal Days.

IV. Daniel, in his seventh chapter, saw the Assyrian empire under the form of a lion, the empire of the Medes and Persians under the form of a bear, the Greek empire under form of a leopard, and the fourth beast, fourth empire more terrible than the others was the Roman Empire, which had ten horns or ten kingdoms: viz., France or ancient Gaul, Spain, Italy, part of Germany, Illyrium, Pannonia, Greece, Asia Minor, Syria, Egypt, and its other possessions in Africa. And from these ten horns among these ten kingdoms another horn sprung up which was to destroy three powers, Syria, Egypt, and the possessions in Africa. This new empire is that of Mahomet who had power to change times by his Hic, Calendar and laws by the Koran. And from the time when this little horn shall thus have overthrown the East and Jerusalem in 636, there will be a time, and times, and half a time, as stated in Daniel 7: 25, or, according to interpretation given to the time, times, a half time, in the 6th and 14th verses of the 12th chapter of the Apocalypse, there will be twelve hundred and sixty days, i. e., twelve hundred and sixty years, and thus we again arrive at the year 1896. After which judgment will sit, that Mahomet's power may be taken away, be broken in pieces, and perish even to the end. And from the abomination of desolation Dan counts in another passage 1,290 literal days that is to say, three years and seven months from 1896 to 1900. (Daniel 12: 11). Thus we arrive at the same conclusion for the year 1900 to the end.

The 2,300 Years.

V. There is another vision of the prophet Daniel in his eighth chapter relating to the End of Times: a period of 2,300 days or years is revealed; and Daniel 11: 2 contains the entire explanation of it from Artaxerxes Mnemon, the first of the four kings there mentioned to the End of Times. Thus the vision of these two thousand three hundred days or years of Daniel, begin in the year 400 before Christ, at the moment when Artaxerxes-Mnemon is firmly seated on the throne of Persia: Stabant in Perside, by his victory over his brother Cyrus, and continue unto the End in the year 1900.*

VI. In the prayer of Habakkuk (3: 2), who prophesied touching the siege of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar in the year 606 before Christ, that prophet prays the Lord to bring His work to life

"In the Midst of Years," and there he represents God crushing to pieces the ancient mountains—the empires of the earth—and bowing down the hills under the steps of His eternity (Habakkuk 3: 2, 6). Now the empires of the earth were crushed in pieces, and the nations of the world were bowed down before God, when the Western Roman Empire was dispersed by the Barbarians, and at the same time the Eastern Roman Empire was changed by the Mahometan nations, and all was overthrown in the world by the greatest revolution which ever occurred. This was the epoch when the Mahomedans after the reign of Omar achieved their

Most Important Conquests in 647,

and this is in the midst of years. For it is from the moment when the prophet Habakkuk wrote, namely, in the year 606 before the Christian era that we must count the years up to the end. Now by adding 606 B. C. to 647 A. D. we obtain the number 1,253, and by subtracting 647 from the year of our Lord 1900 we again have the number 1,253; thus the year A. D. 647 is the midst of years, i. e., the midst of twice 1,253.

* We reprint this interpretation of the 2,300 years ending in 1900, as it was published fifty years ago. It may be regarded as an additional fulfilment of the 2,300 years, but its principal fulfilment is from Passover Week, 445 B. C., when Nehemiah was commanded to rebuild Jerusalem, until Passover Week, 1856, when the Crimean War closed with a treaty of peace under which the initial "cleansing of the Sanctuary" commenced. The period from 1856 to 1901 is that forty-five years spoken of in Daniel 12: 11, 12. The prophet had asked what would be the end of those things, and he was answered explicitly, but, lest he should suppose that the date given him would be the final end of the troubles of his people, he was pointed to a date forty-five years later—that is 1901—as being better worth his attention. He was told that he who would see that date would be blessed. That is the date which will witness the inauguration of Christ's millennial reign.

* It is a singular fact that this Roman Catholic writer should identify Rome as the wilderness.—Ed.

years—the whole period of 2,506 years from B. C. 606 to A. D. 1900. Hence by Habakkuk's prophecy we arrive at the same conclusion for the year 1900 to be Le Fin des Temps.

A HUSBAND REPROVED.

THE disappearance of a lady in a Boston street a few days ago astonished a gentleman who was walking a hundred yards behind her. He saw her one moment and the next she had suddenly vanished. He heard a cry, but could not account for it until he came to the place where she disappeared. There he saw an open coal-hole, and surmised that she must have fallen in. He heard a scream from below which confirmed his idea, but as several persons came running to the spot and proceeded to extricate her, he left them to attend to her, and went on his way. He thought no more of the matter until night, when, on arriving at home, his wife made some remark about the carelessness of persons who left their coal-shutes open, and then he related what he had seen. He had better have remained quiet until she had finished her story, for she speedily informed him that she was the lady whom he had seen fall through the opening, and had left for other people to assist. She entertained very decided opinions as to his lack of humanity, which she expressed clearly and forcibly, contrasting his indifference with the kindness of strangers. His plea that he had not recognized her was not admitted, if it was believed, though he insisted that if he had known that the lady in trouble was his wife he would have exerted himself on her behalf. That was doubtless true, and he only acted as so many who call themselves Christians do when they see persons outside their own circle in spiritual peril, and make no effort to save them. (Luke 10: 29, 37.)

A BRAZILIAN'S TWO VOWS.

AN ingenious way of keeping a vow is described by Dr. Chamberlain in Brazilian Missions. He says that a Roman Catholic in Brazil, during a fit of sickness, made a vow that if he should get well he would carry a certain stone to one of the crosses which in Roman Catholic countries are set up in public places. The cross indicated by the sick man was one of peculiar sanctity, and was twenty miles from the place where the stone lay. Recovering from his sickness, he attempted to fulfil his vow, but found the stone so heavy that he could not lift it to his knees, much less to his head. He consulted his priest, to see if he could not commute the vow and pay in some other form, but was informed that he must fulfil it literally. He called to his help some slaves, and taking an ox-cart, brought the stone to the yard of the house and built a fire over it. It burst into many pieces, which he gathered in baskets. He divided the whole into four lots, and thus carried the stone over twenty miles on his head, walking with bare feet. Some years after this, a copy of the Bible was put into his hands, and the reading of it led him to make another vow, that if God would send some one to preach the doctrines of that book in Botucatu, he would build a house for the book.

Two years after this, Dr. Chamberlain was at that place, and was invited to spend the night at the house of the man who had made that vow. Dr. Chamberlain says: "After dinner he asked me to walk with him, and confided to me his vow, but added, 'I have made known my thought to some friends, but they make light of it. Now, what am I to do? Here you have come preaching the doctrines of the book, and I am under promise to God to build a house for preaching. But no one here takes any interest in the matter. Shall I keep my vow?'"

"I replied, 'Your vow was made to God. God has sent me to preach. You have no occasion to consult with flesh and blood about it, either with your friends, or with me. It lies betwixt you and God.'

"Two weeks later, on my return from Lençoes, I was again welcomed as a guest by the old man, who took me to see a lot of ground for which he was negotiating for the projected building, only waiting for my approval of the site. A few months later he notified me that the house was ready. As soon as my duties in Sao Paulo would allow, I devoted a week to the inaugural services, preaching every night for eight or ten days. Divine service has never been intermitted since in that house. In fair weather it will hardly hold the believers who meet there on communion Sabbaths to celebrate the Lamb of God slain for our sins. The old man still lives to see the fruit of his labor."

A TRAMP'S RENOVATION.

AT a meeting in a sailors' mission in New York a few evenings ago, a well-dressed, intelligent man rose and told the history of his life. Its concluding passages stirred every hearer. He said: "I sank lower and lower until I was a poor gutter tramp. I never cared about the dear ones at home, or their sufferings: my wife without a gown, and the children without shoes.

"Three years ago, walking through Water Street, I saw the words in letters of light, 'McAuley Mission.' I went in, sat by the door, no shirt on, an old linen duster pinned up around my neck, old shoes, with my toes out; had had no bed for many nights. There I sat, a sad-looking specimen of wrecked humanity! I heard the wonderful story of Jesus, from men who had been lifted out of the mire and clay; how they had been saved and made happy. 'That's what I want! I need the lifting power of God's grace in my heart,' I said to myself.

"Talk about shame! what was I that I should be ashamed to go to the mercy seat? I knelt at the foot of the cross. Jesus heard my prayer, and with one stroke of the hammer of His love shattered forever the chains which bound me! And though I walked the streets that night and the next too, they were the happiest nights I ever spent. Songs of praise were bubbling up, and have been ever since!

"In addition to spiritual gifts, God has blessed me in temporal things. God did not allow me to walk the streets long. Inside of three weeks, the dear ones were back again, and we began to build up the home, and ever since have been making it brighter and happier. Most precious of all is the Christian Altar, where we kneel night and morning to thank God for our blessings.

"Come, sailors, penitently, come believing, and you can go out of this house to night saying, 'Deliverance has come!'"

ONE OF DR. SUMMERS'S LAST LETTERS.

THE sympathy aroused by the death of Dr. William R. Summers, whose portrait and life were published in this journal on November 29, 1888, is deepened as the sad facts come to light of his last days. His friend and teacher, Dr. Dowkontt, publishes this month in his Medical Missionary Record a letter which Dr. Summers wrote shortly before his death to his missionary brother, Dr. A. Sims, whose portrait and life we published on July 14, 1887. From this it appears that his sufferings were very severe, and were not alleviated by ordinary food and medicine. Yet he was still hopeful, and anxious to resume work. He said:

"Of the journey I will say nothing but that it was full of interest, and that the road is perfectly open; but being a white man, I had to pay 'right of way' to the principal chiefs, who, by the way, are anxious for white men to live with them. We arrived here in 100 marches, the marches averaging six hours. Here my heart was overwhelmed at the reception I everywhere got from the Bashilange. Every hill dotted with large and beautiful villages, the country teeming with people, who have abandoned fetishism, and are waiting for what the white man can bring them; all anxious to learn, intelligent, have now some idea of God, want to know about everything, faces always smiling, and everyone polite. Go anywhere over the country, and great villages encounter the eye. The population is enormous, and is marvellously thick. Truly "the harvest is great, but the laborers are few." Few! one only, and that one worth almost nothing.

"In the beginning of December I had a sudden attack of pleurisy and pericarditis. Next day Lieutenant Le Marinel went down with hæmaturic fever, and I had to leave my bed to treat him. The third day I had the fever under control, and on the fourth day convalescence set in. It was sharp work, it was a bad case. My leaving my bed these days left its mark upon me; the pleurisy extended; there were adhesions in several directions; the pain was fearful, and there was much angina pectoris. These continued with steady high fever for two weeks, then septic fever to wind up. By the end of December convalescence had set in, but temperature never went lower than before the pericarditis. I was a perfect skeleton, but gradually gained in flesh, but not strength. To-day I cannot walk a mile."

In the third week of February he had a relapse. He says: "A few days of terrible sickness; three days in bed, unable to eat; no one visited me, no cooling drink for raging fever; in great despondency, as I thought no one but my boy Chico cared a cent for me, when all at once I had a remarkable manifestation of Jesus, as He said, 'I will never leave thee nor forsake thee. Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.'"

A CONVERSION IN A PRISON.

A REMARKABLE conversion, showing how the Holy Spirit may work without human means, occurred recently in a prison in New York. An Irish sailor was arrested for being drunk and disorderly, and was sent to the Island for ten days. He had a shrewd suspicion of the man who must have caused his arrest, and he vowed vengeance on him. He solemnly resolved that the first thing he would do when he regained his liberty should be to go and take that man's life.

The man himself is not clear about the process of thought which followed. It is evident, however, that he grew thoughtful, realized that he had played the fool in his intoxication, and that he was on the road to a felon's death. He went further, and perceived that he was a sinner against God. He was a Roman Catholic, but he went to God for pardon without the intervention of a priest. He says that at night in the solitude of his cell he cried with all his might to God, begging for mercy and forgiveness. To his own surprise, his distress and anxiety suddenly ceased, and he had somehow the feeling that what he had craved was given to him.

When he was released his first impulse was to seek instruction, but he shrank from going to a priest, and he dared not go to a Protestant. He did not know what to do. Providentially he was taken sick, and was sent to a hospital, where a city missionary visited him, heard his story, and taught him the way of salvation more perfectly. The man listened eagerly and read the Bible with avidity, his peace and joy increasing from day to day. His change of heart and character is unmistakable, and he gives all the evidences we look for of a renewed heart. But the singular fact is that he has never gone over the ground again. The missionary found him a converted man, and his progress has been growth in grace and knowledge. Regeneration evidently took place in the jail, and was so decisive and complete that the man himself recognized it, though he knew nothing at the time in theory of the Spirit's work.

NOTICE TO READERS OF THY HEALER.

On January 1 the size of Thy Healer was reduced to 20 pp, and the price changed from 75 cents to 50 cents. Those whose subscriptions run into 1889 will have their time extended, to credit for the difference in size and price. It is hoped that by reducing the price the circulation will be extended, otherwise it will be a considerable loss. Will not those who have found blessing through its pages recommend it to others?

OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 3 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

CURRENT EVENTS.

An Important and Responsible Office was filled by the President on April 17. In appointing Mr. E. S. Lacey, of Charlotte, Mich., to be Comptroller of the Currency, he has the general approval of the country, and especially of the banking class, which is the class most directly interested. Mr. Lacey has had twenty-five years' experience of banking business, and may therefore be supposed to know its needs, and in what way it can best serve the public, both as to security and efficiency. The fact that any laxity on his part may involve heavy losses to private parties renders the character of the Comptroller a matter of serious public concern. It is therefore gratifying that Mr. Harrison has resisted the pressure brought to bear upon him to appoint a man in whom the public has not confidence, and has selected Mr. Lacey, whose skill and integrity are well known.

Fuller Details of the Terrible Marine Disaster at Samoa were brought to San Francisco by the Alameda on April 14, which also brought thirty-six of the American wounded sailors. The report states that no such storm as that of March 16, in which the six war-ships were wrecked, had ever been known on that coast. At the time of the disaster there were three American men-of-war, three German, one English, and ten schooners in the little bay of Apia. Only the English war-ship and two of the little schooners escaped the fury of the storm. The vessels were necessarily close together, and when the German corvette Olga began to drift she came in collision with almost every vessel in the harbor. The wind shifted considerably, and though all the vessels had their anchors out and their steam up, they drifted all across the bay, jostled together, and were forced, one after the other, upon the reef. There were only two exceptions, that of the English steamer Calliope, which, having very powerful machinery, slipped her anchors and steamed out to sea in safety, and that of the American steamer Nipsic, which the captain succeeded in running on a mud-bank, and which, ten days later, was towed off. She remains still on guard, though in an injured condition. The two navies lost 142 of their officers and men.

The Wreck of the Steamer "Danmark," of the Thingvalla line, was reported by the City of Chester last week. On her passage from New York to Liverpool the City of Chester on April 8 passed the Danmark in an apparently sinking condition. Her stern was level with the sea, while her bow was high out of water. No boats could be seen on the vessel, and the natural inference was that the crew and passengers must have used them to escape from the sinking ship, but there were no boats visible on the sea to the City of Chester, nor did she see any during her voyage. The cable reports that there were 650 passengers on board the Danmark, most of whom were immigrants in the steerage. She sailed from Christiansand, having previously called at Stettin, Copenhagen, and Christiania on March 26, and should have reached New York on April 10. News of the passengers and crew was anxiously expected from day to day. It was hoped that some passing steamer might have seen the shipwrecked people in their boats, and have taken them aboard, bringing them to America, or taking them to Europe.

As the days passed, however, bringing no tidings, these hopes grew fainter. Several vessels arrived on both shores which had passed the spot where the Danmark was seen, but had not seen her or her boats. It is now, therefore, feared that all must have been lost.

The Experiment Adopted by the New York Legislature, of keeping convicts in enforced idleness, is involving serious suffering and danger to the convicts themselves. At a public meeting held in New York on April 15, a letter was read from the Warden of Sing Sing declaring that sickness and insanity would inevitably befall many of the men in his charge if they were not allowed to work. The chairman of the Executive Committee added to this testimony his belief that it would be less cruel to hang a man, twice convicted of felony, than to weaken his intellect by keeping him in idleness in solitary confinement. An effort is now being made to pass a bill permitting the prisoners to work, and it has the further advantage of giving them knowledge of a trade, so that when their terms of imprisonment expire they may be able to earn a livelihood without resorting to dishonest ways. The bill prohibiting the prisoners working was passed to win the labor vote, and other States that may be tempted to follow the example of New York in that matter, will do well to take note of New York's experience.

The Mormon Conference at Salt Lake City has elected Willford Woodruff as President of the Church, George Q. Cannon and Joseph T. Smith as Councillors, and Lorenzo Snow President of the Twelve Apostles. The new President has been President of the Twelve Apostles since the election of John Taylor to the Presidency of the Church. On his election he preached an inaugural sermon, exhorting the saints to piety, faith, and obedience. The statistics of the Mormon Church, as reported by George Q. Cannon, are: Twelve apostles, seventy patriarchs, 3,719 high priests, 11,805 elders, 2,069 priests, 2,292 teachers, 11,610 deacons, 81,899 families, 115,915 officers and members, and 49,302 children under eight years of age, a total Mormon population of 153,911. [The total population of Utah in 1880 was only 143,963.] The number of marriages for six months ending April 6, 1889, was 530, births 3,754, new members 488, and excommunications 113. Cannon said that many young men were leaving the Territory to take up land elsewhere. The saints, he said, had been called together to build up Zion, and this scattering must be stopped.

Serious Riots Resulting from a Labor Dispute are reported from Minneapolis, Minn. The horse-car companies all through the city are paralyzed by a strike of their drivers and conductors. For several days last week not a car left the yards. Lavish offers of high wages for "determined men" were advertised in the Missouri and Kansas newspapers. Fifty men from Kansas responded, and on April 17 were placed on the cars. When they went out on their routes the strikers boarded the cars, crowding the policemen off, filling them inside and out, while several strikers climbed upon the roof of each car. They played havoc with windows and seats, and finally the "determined" Kansas drivers, fearing that the cars would become a complete wreck, turned them back to the yards. Several times the cars were thrown from the tracks, and at some points were halted for the police to make an attack with their clubs on the men in possession. There was savage fighting, and it is feared there will be more of it before the strike ends.

The German Government is Preparing for the Samoan conference by the issue of a "white book," which will disarm the conference of the censure it might pass on German interference in Samoan affairs. It contains a dispatch to the new German consul, in which Prince Bismarck severely condemns the former consul for officious meddling. He dwells upon the deplorable fact that with an inadequate force, and without authority, urgency, or a likelihood of success, Consul Knappe took measures on December 17 which resulted in the death of a large number of persons, and an undesirable change in the position of planters, besides jeopardizing peace with America, while quiescence would have preserved a tolerable state of affairs. The sanction of the other treaty Powers being lacking, he says, Consul Knappe's demand for the control of the foreign relations of Samoa was of no force, and compelled him (Bismarck) to notify Great Britain and America of its withdrawal. The Chancellor concludes by declaring that Germany has nothing to do with the internal affairs of Samoa; that her mission is restricted to protecting Germans and enabling them to develop commercial interests.

The Trial of General Boulanger by the French Senate is expected to be a very lengthy affair. An effort is being made by the prosecution to enlarge the scope of the inquiry so as to cover his record as an army officer and his private financial transactions, as well as his connection with the Patriotic League. Two journalists were witnesses on April 18, and testified as to the dealings of the General with certain English capitalists. The Paris correspondent of the New York Herald says that evidence will be laid before the Senate which will place General Boulanger in a position which he will find it very difficult to satisfactorily explain. On the other hand, the prosecution is embarrassed by the fact that in some of his most questionable transactions the General had for his colleagues some of the men now most relentless in prosecuting him. His friends are urging that the inquiry ought to be limited to his political conduct, and contend that if he has committed a military offence he should be tried by court-martial, and if he has been guilty of a civil offence he should be tried in a civil court. The main issue before the Senate is whether General Boulanger has been plotting for the overthrow of the Republic.

The English Annual Balance-Sheet was Submitted to the House of Commons on April 15. The usual success which attends liberal financiers has not deserted Mr. Goschen while working in a Tory Cabinet. He had the pleasure of announcing that the income of last year had exceeded his estimate, and the expenditures were less than his estimate, thus producing a surplus of nearly thirteen million dollars. The largely increased expenses of naval construction during the coming year are to be paid in part out of this surplus, and Mr. Goschen proposes to make up the amount by increasing the duties paid by the heirs of property on entering upon possession of estates, and by putting a tax on beer. The latter is only a small tax—about a seventh of a cent on every gallon, but it is likely to cause unpopularity. The beer-sellers have hitherto regarded the Conservatives as their best friends, and they have done much to ensure the success of the party. They had not calculated on the Tories putting a Liberal into the Treasury who would tax their beer. It is not improbable that this small tax will have important political results.

Mr. John Albert Bright, the Son of the Late John Bright, was elected to Parliament by his father's district on April 15. His opponent was a Gladstone man, who made a hard fight for the seat, but was defeated by the combination of Conservatives and Unionists. The Conservatives are not rejoicing in their victory. They wanted to have a candidate of their own, and claim that a bargain was made with them by the Unionists, guaranteeing them the seat in the event of a vacancy occurring. They wanted Lord Randolph Churchill as their member, and if he could have been persuaded to run, he would have been elected. His motive for declining is said to have been a fear of causing a rupture between the Conservatives and Unionists. If such a rupture was made, and extended to the House, the Conservatives would be driven from office, as without Unionist aid they are in a minority in Parliament. Mr. Bright received 5,610 votes against 2,560 for the Gladstone candidate.

Contributions to the Fund for Supplying colored ministers in the South with this journal have been received since our last acknowledgment to the amount of $2.50. They are from: North Greenfield, N. Y., $1; a Friend, $1; Orange City, Iowa, 50c. Last year about this time some seventy dollars were received for this fund, and the same number of ministers have since that time been receiving the paper each week, and, as we learn, have derived from it much needed help in their work. Letters come asking if they may not have the paper for another year, and pathetically pleading that, as the writers have no libraries, and its help was so timely and so beneficial to them and their congregations, it would be true Christian charity to continue it. All we can do is to lay the case before our readers and pray that God will incline them to meet the appeal.

A Jewish Rabbi is Reported to have Announced his conversion at Montgomery, Ala. A press dispatch to the New York Times from that city states that the Rev. F. S. Cramer, D. D., who came to Montgomery from Louisiana, has, after conversation with Dr. M. B. Wharton, pastor of the First Baptist Church, sought baptism at his hands. Dr. Cramer is about thirty years of age. He has diplomas showing that he received a finished education in the first colleges of Germany, and was educated for the ministry. He came to this country several years ago, and has resided most of the time in Louisiana, where he was at different times rabbi of several Jewish congregations. He says he has given the prophecies and the gospels deep study, and has been thoroughly convinced that Christ was the true Messiah of whom Moses and the prophets did write.

An Affecting Scene in a Cemetery was Witnessed on April 13 in Staten Island, N. Y. The remains of a girl twenty years of age, who had been employed as milkmaid on a farm near Stapleton, were being interred in the Cooper's Cemetery, when an unseemly struggle took place among the mourners, and the solemn ceremony was interrupted. The cause of the disturbance was an effort on the part of the dead girl's lover to jump into the grave. He was caught in the act by two other mourners, and after a violent struggle was held back. He wept copiously, wrung his hands, and cried piteously to be let go. "Lena! Lena!" he shouted, "I must go with you." He was restrained with difficulty until the ceremony was concluded, and was then persuaded to enter a carriage and return home. His friends fear that his grief will dethrone his reason. Sorrow so bitter cannot but awaken sympathy, though such sorrow argues an unenlightened mind. The desire for reunion which found its expression in trying to join the loved one in her grave implies that the love was merely animal and physical. Love springing from communion of soul would have found no satisfaction in the presence of the body from which the soul had departed. They alone are safe from crushing sorrow who set their affections on the unseen and eternal. (11 Cor. 4: 18.)

The Responsibility of Wives Formed the subject of a remarkable ruling by the presiding Justice of the Supreme Court of New York on April 2. The case came before him on an appeal from the court below, by a husband whose wife had obtained there a decree of divorce on the ground of ill-treatment. The court had refused to allow the husband to show that the wife by misconduct had provoked violence, and he asked the Supreme Court to order a new trial at which he might introduce that evidence. His request was granted, and the Justice said it was contrary to justice that a wife might, by her own misconduct, provoke ill-treatment upon the part of the husband, and then claim rights because of such ill-treatment, which had been caused entirely by her own provocation. He added: "It has always been deemed important for the court to know what has been the conduct of the wife toward the husband as well as what his conduct has been toward her, in defending the question whether it is a proper case for a decree of separation. If it should appear that had the wife performed her duties toward her husband she would have suffered no ill-treatment at his hands, it is difficult to understand upon what principle a court of equity could grant her relief." Whether any misconduct on the part of the wife can be legal justification for violence may now be decided, but in other matters the principle laid down by the Justice is sound. It would be well if this were more generally remembered than it is. Those who, by their inconsistencies and provocations, are the cause of others falling into sin will not escape the judgment of God. (Luke 17: 1, 2.)

A Prisoner Has Rejected a Pardon by the Governor of West Virginia, and insists that he will remain in prison. About a year ago a man in that State was convicted of grand larceny, and was sentenced to four years in the penitentiary. Some of his friends have been making efforts to obtain his release, and have collected a quantity of testimony which they laid before Governor Wilson. Having carefully examined it, the Governor decided to issue a pardon, and in doing so, said that he had reason to believe that the prisoner was not sufficiently intelligent to distinguish between right and wrong. When the prisoner heard that a pardon had been issued he was delighted, but when he found on what grounds he had been pardoned his indignation knew no bounds. He declared that it was an insult, and he would not accept a pardon on any such terms. He would rather serve out his term with the cloud on his character, than be released with a cloud on his reputation for sanity. There are cases in which pride similarly prevents sinners accepting the pardon of God. They would be willing to earn their salvation by penances or good works, but to accept it freely through Christ, on the ground that they are themselves weak and helpless, is too great a humiliation to be borne. (John 9: 41.)

A Heroic Farmer in Minnesota had a Terrible experience in the recent prairie fires. While engaged in his work he saw the fire coming; the wind was blowing at the rate of nearly sixty miles an hour, and the flames rolling up to a height of nearly twenty feet. He realized that the farm-house must be burned, and his wife and child were there. He ran home as fast as he could, and took them to some ploughed land, where he believed they would be safe. Then he returned to try to save some of his stock. A short time afterward, his wife, seeing the flames approach, grew terrified, and left the ploughed land where she was safe, to go to her husband, and her boy eight years old followed her. Seeing them coming, the man left his stock and ran to save his wife and child a second time. Before he could reach them, the fire was upon them and their clothes were quickly in flames. Both mother and child died of their burns, and the brave farmer will have a hard struggle to get well. The death of the woman, child, and in great part her husband's suffering, are due to the perversity of the woman in not remaining in a place of safety when she was put there. Had she obeyed her husband and trusted to his superior intelligence, instead of yielding to her fears, neither she nor her child would have been hurt. Many of the trials of Christians arise from the same disposition. They do not trust in God's guidance, but in times of trouble prefer to exercise worldly wisdom, which leads them astray and causes them suffering from which they might have escaped. (Prov. 3: 5-7.)

The Recovery of a Runaway Wife is Reported from Wilkesbarre, Penn. During the past few weeks a tall man with iron gray hair, looking fully fifty years old, but really only thirty-seven, has been searching through the town for a woman whose portrait he carried with him, and showed to persons likely to know of strangers in the town. Eventually he discovered that she was living there, but on going to the house, he learned that she had heard of his coming and had taken flight. He followed her to Pennhaven, where he found her. They had a long interview, and then the woman, her eyes swollen with tears, but looking happy in spite of them, went with him to the depot, where they took the train for St. Louis. Inquiries about them elicited a strangely romantic story. Five years ago the man was on a boat on the Mississippi when a lady fell overboard. He plunged in after her and held her up until a boat was lowered and both were saved. She was deeply grateful to him for saving her life, and he fell in love with her, and without making any inquiries as to her antecedents married her. They were very happy for about two years, but at the end of that time the wife showed signs of restlessness, and one day she disappeared. The husband was overwhelmed with grief, and set out on a long search for her. He sought her anxiously in most of the large cities of the Union, sometimes getting trace of her, and again losing it. She knew of his search, but eluded it, believing that he was only seeking her to punish her. When he found her at Pennhaven and assured her of his love and forgiveness, she was completely melted, and joyfully returned with him to the home she had deserted. The sinner's reconciliation with God is accompanied by a similar experience. He dreads to meet God, knowing himself to merit only anger and condemnation, but when he hears of forgiveness through Christ, fear is changed to love. (1 John 4: 18, 19.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Sixty-five of the Indian students at Carlisle, Pa., have been placed with farmers for the summer.

Mr. E. P. Telford is holding farewell services in England preparatory to a preaching tour around the world.

The delegates to the approaching World's Sunday-school Convention in London will be too numerous to be accommodated on the Cunard Steamer Bothnia. An additional steamer is to be engaged.

Dr. Pentecost continues his work with much success in Glasgow. The Bible-readings are given in Camphill U. P. Church every afternoon, and the evening evangelistic meetings are held in Pollokshields' Free Church.

Major Whittle's Bible-readings at Dundee, Scotland, are doing much good. The interesting and forcible manner in which he expounds the Scriptures wins large audiences. Several afternoons have been set aside for children's service.

Rev. George C. Needham returned last week from his evangelistic tour in Europe. His labors in Ireland were especially blessed. He spent some time in Paris, France, and encouraged the McAll Mission workers by speaking at several meetings.

A telegram has been received by the Universities Mission to Central Africa, dated Zanzibar, March 30, informing them that Bishop Smythies, the Rev. J. Key, and Dr. Ley had arrived at Zanzibar via Wanga. They reported all well at Magila.

Rev. J. H. Wallfisch, Secretary of the Jewish Missionary Society, of Sherrill, Dubuque Co., Ill., is prepared to supply tracts written especially for Jews to any person having facilities for distributing them. They are in English, German, Hebrew, or German in Hebrew characters.

The Washington anniversary of the American Tract Society was celebrated in the Church of the Covenant, Washington, D. C., on the evening of the 7th inst. The attendance was large, including Secretary Windom, and other prominent officials. Justice Strong presided.

Seventy plans of cathedrals for the proposed cathedral of New York have been submitted to the Board of Trustees. The Board have selected four as the best. It is now decided to submit all the plans to a committee of architects and engineers. The estimated cost of building in some cases is three million dollars.

The question of Prohibition submitted to the clergymen of Massachusetts has elicited replies showing a large preponderance in favor of the amendment. Of 1,036 replies, 934 responded positively in the affirmative, 91 in the negative, and 11 were undecided. Every denomination was represented.

Garenganze, the deeply interesting work by Mr. F. S. Arnot, whose portrait and life appeared in this journal on April 10, is being reprinted in this country by Fleming H. Revell, 12 Bible House, New York. It is to be ready by May 1, and will be sold at $1.25. It is a record of Mr. Arnot's seven years' missionary work in Africa.

Dr. L. W. Munhall's meetings at Macon, Ga., are stirring that city as it was never stirred before. The Macon Evening News says that "the great tabernacle is literally jammed at the meetings for men only." Hundreds rise at each meeting to ask for prayer, and at the meeting on April 14 one hundred men made profession of faith.

LIVING TRUMPETS.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"For from you sounded out the word of the Lord, not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but also in every place your faith to God-ward is spread abroad; so that we need not to speak anything." 1 Thess. 1:8.

Paul's Converts at Thessalonica—An Earnest, Enthusiastic People—The Sound they Gave Out—I. The Trumpeters—Had the Three Cardinal Graces—Received the Word with Power—Their Constancy Proved—Their Loving Service—Looking for the Second Coming—A Stirring Truth—The Time Now Near at Hand—II. Their Trumpets—The Uses of a Trumpet—How they were Sounded—By Wonderful Conversions—By Unmistakable Character—By Efforts to Spread the Truth—III. Present Need of a Trumpet Blast—A Silver Cornet at the Orphanage—The Gospel Against the Down Grade.

PAUL went to Thessalonica from Philippi with a sore back, but with a sound heart. He went resolved to spend and to be spent for his Lord in that city. On the first three Sabbaths he spake to the Jews in the synagogue, but he soon found that they were obstinately resolved to reject Jesus of Nazareth as the Messiah; and therefore he directed his attention to the heathen of Thessalonica, and among them he had wonderful success. Large numbers of persons, some of honorable rank, turned from their idols to worship the living God, and he soon gathered about him

An Enthusiastic People.

The Thessalonians not only received the Word with joy of the Holy Ghost, but became zealous in making it known. Their intensity of faith helped to spread the gospel, for their lives were notably affected by it; and for their earnestness and godliness they were everywhere talked of. In their case learners speedily become teachers. The Lord Jesus had thus not only given them to drink, but He had made them into a well overflowing to refresh the thirst of thousands. They had heard the gospel trumpet, and now they had become trumpeters themselves. In their lives the echoes of Paul's preaching were preserved. This was a very happy circumstance for the apostle, and greatly cheered his spirit.

These Thessalonians must have been specially gracious people for Paul to praise them so heartily. That praise was all the more precious because it was not indiscriminate—"not laid on with a trowel," as the proverb puts it. The Thessalonians had faulty ones among them. But, then, there are spots on the sun, and yet we do not speak of it as a dark body, since its light so much preponderates. Grave faults in the Thessalonian Church did not prevent our honest apostle from awarding praise where praise was due. When a man is sound at heart, praise does not become an intoxicating wine, but an invigorating tonic. Feeling a modest fear that he does not deserve the warm commendation, the good man is anxious to live up to the character imputed to him. This will be the case, however, only with those whose spiritual life is vigorous.

I entreat you, dear friends, practically to learn from these Thessalonians by being led to imitate them. May it be truly said of us also: "From you sounded out the word of the Lord"! It is true even now in a measure: may it be far more so! The expression to which I would call your attention is this—"From you sounded out the word of the Lord." It reminds us of a trumpet and its far-sounding notes.

I. We begin by looking at

The Trumpeters.

Who are these by whom the word of the Lord is sounded out? I shall hastily give you a picture of these Thessalonians drawn from Paul's letters to them. Observe, at the outset, that they were a people in whom the three cardinal graces were conspicuous. Kindly look at the third verse: "Remembering without ceasing your work of faith, and labor of love, and patience of hope. The three divine sisters—Faith, Hope, Love—linked hands in their lives. Paul saw the Thessalonian believers to be fulfilling the life-work of a true faith. Nor was faith left to work alone; but at her right hand was love, sweetening and brightening all. Their love did not consist in words, or in mere amiability of temper; but it wrought with a will. They exhibited a labor of love; it was not work only, but in intensity it deserved to be called "labor." As for hope—that bright-eyed grace, which looks within the veil, and realizes things not seen as yet—it was peculiarly their endowment—this enabled them to bear with patience their suffering for Christ, whether it lay in false accusation, or in the spoiling of their goods. Thus of them it could be said, "Now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three." Brethren, it is of no use for us to attempt to sound out the word of the Lord, if we have not the spiritual voice-power, which lies in which are of first importance. Those precious truths, which faith believes, which love delights in, which hope relies upon—these are the truths we shall diligently make known. We believe, and therefore speak; we love, and therefore testify; we hope, and therefore make known.

Those Three Graces

These trumpeters had received the Word of God themselves in much assurance, and with much power. Note the fifth verse: "For our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance." The apostle also says, in the thirteenth verse of the second chapter: "For this cause, also, thank we God without ceasing, because, when ye received the Word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but as it is in truth, the Word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe." Beloved, it is a poor thing to receive the gospel in word only. Then you say, "Yes, it is true, I believe it;" and there the matter ends. It is a far different matter to feel the power of the word as it comes from the omnipotent Lord, so as to have your heart broken by it, and then healed by it. To receive the gospel as indisputable, infallible, and divine, is to receive it indeed. He who believes and is sure, is the man who will propagate the faith, and desire that others should accept it.

A Tried People.

The Thessalonians were a people whose constancy was proved. They received the word "with much affliction." The apostle says: "For ye, brethren, became followers of the churches of God which in Judæa are in Christ Jesus: for ye also have suffered like things of your own countrymen, even as they have of the Jews." The assault by the mob, recorded in Acts 17, was, doubtless, only one of their many trials. They remained steadfast, enthusiastic under all their tribulations; and hence the gospel was sounded out by them. Brethren, unless you can hold on in rough weather, and bear up under opposition, you will do little in sounding out the word of God. Trumpets must be made of hard metal, and trumpeters must have something of the soldier about them, or little will come of it.

Practical Religion.

Hence, again, these people really and lovingly served God. Look at the ninth verse: "For they themselves shew of us what manner of entering in we had unto you, and how ye turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God." I doubt not that these Thessalonians became as earnest worshippers of the living Jehovah as they had once been earnest votaries of their idols. They turned from idols, but they turned to serve God. They were not turned in opinion only, but in a practical manner. What a pity it is, that to many Christian professors religion is opinion, and conversion a feeling! Do not many live as if God were a myth, and the service of God a sham? If God be God, serve Him: service is the due of Godhead. Does not the Lord Himself say, "If, then, I be a father, where is Mine honor? and if I be master, where is My fear?" Oh that to us the service of the Lord may be a delight, and then it will be as natural to us to sound out the word of the Lord as it is to birds to sing!

For one thing the Thessalonians were peculiarly notable: they were enthusiastic

Expectants of the Second Coming of the Lord Jesus Christ. Paul says of them in the tenth verse, that they waited for the Son of God from heaven. They really expected Christ to come, and to come speedily. They even carried this expectation beyond its proper bounds, for they grew impatient of the Lord's apparent delay; and it was needful for Paul, to prevent their becoming fanatical, to say, "Now we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto Him, that ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand." Paul delighted to see them waiting for the coming of Christ; but he also prayed, "The Lord direct your hearts into the patient waiting for Christ." He wishes rest to the troubled. But this unrest was a virtue carried to excess. We are not, many of us, in danger of exaggeration in that direction. I fear that we are more likely to forget the Lord's coming, or to treat it as an unpractical speculation. If any truth should arouse us, this should do it: yet even the wise virgins, as well as the foolish, are all too apt to slumber and sleep because the Bridegroom delayeth His coming. Hear ye not

The Midnight Cry?

Does not this startle you? "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh! go ye out to meet Him." If you hearken to that call, you will be the men to sound out the word of the Lord in every place. If we, as a church and people, are more and more influenced by the expectation of our Lord's appearing, we shall be more eager to spread His gospel. Remember that now He may come at once. Those things of which Paul spoke as hindering His coming, have now come and gone. Eighteen centuries and more have passed away since Paul wrote, and the Lord cometh quickly! Rouse, then, yourselves to use all diligence. Proclaim His word, and according to your ability, go forth into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. O ye that look for your Lord, ye are the men who should herald His coming by a clear testimony to His name in every place.

Thus I have given you hints as to what kind of men are likely to sound forth the word of God. Judge ye, my brethren, whether you yourselves have these qualifications. It is my impression that they are to be found in you.

II. Secondly, let us notice

Their Trumpets.

"From you sounded out the word of the Lord." Their testimony was distinct, clear, resonant, and far-sounding. We may find an illustration in the silver trumpets of the sanctuary which were sounded to gather the people together. Let your trumpets ring out the call to assemble to our Lord Jesus, the true Shiloh, unto whom shall the gathering of the people be. We may further think of the Jubilee trumpet, which early in the morning proclaimed clearance of debts, release from bondage, and restoration to lost heritages. Such are the glad announcements of the gospel; let us hasten to make them.

Trumpets are also blown in time of war: many are the allusions to this in Scripture. Oh that the Church of God may boldly sound the war-trumpet at this time against impurity, intemperance, false doctrine, and loose living! Our Lord has come to send a sword upon earth in these matters. Oh that from each one of us the war-blast may be sounded without fear or hesitation! Fain would we also earn the name given to the apostles, "They that turn the world up-side down;" for at this present it is wrong-side up. A trumpet is also used simply for musical purposes, and the testimony of the Church to her Lord Jesus should be the most melodious sound the ears of man have ever heard. Oh to sound forth the glorious name, "with trumpet and sound of cornet," that multitudes might be compelled to hear it! Each church should find in its living members its best peal of bells. Every individual, great and little, should give forth his sound: not one should be dumb. Oh that it were always so!

What was the means by which these excellent people made the gospel to sound out? It was made known by the which happened among them. These men had been idolaters, and had fallen into divers lusts common in those times. Paul's preaching had made a change which none could have looked for. They had been brought to worship the true God, and to look for His Son from heaven, and to walk worthy of their high calling. Everybody asked, "Why, what has happened to these Thessalonians? These people have broken their idols; they worship the one God; they trust in Jesus? They are no longer drunken, dishonest, impure, contentious." Everybody talked of what had taken place among these converted people. Oh for conversions, plentiful, clear, singular, and manifest; that so the word of God may sound out! Our converts are our best advertisements and arguments. Have you not known a whole town startled by the conversion of one great sinner?

Remarkable Conversions

The attention commanded by their conversion was further secured by their unmistakable, unquestionable character. They became such godly, honest, upright, sober, saintly people, that all who observed them took note of their excellence. Holy living is a grand pulpit. A godly character has a louder voice in it than the most eloquent tongue.

Character is Our Chrysostom:

holiness has a golden mouth. The apostle says that their lives were so complete a publication of the gospel, that he did not need to call attention thereto. He writes, "We need not to speak anything:" as much as to say, "We have only to point to you." Shall I ever feel that I have little need to preach in words, since my people preach far better by their lives? Yes, there are many cases among you concerning which I might say, There, watch that friend's life, and see what the gospel is: there is no need for me to tell you. Oh that all of us were of such a character that none should mistake us! Till we have more grace in the heart, and more holiness in the life, we shall lack the greatest means of making the gospel known. We must shine by our works if men are to see our light.

I have no doubt that the Thessalonians added to their character many earnest efforts for the spread of the truth. They went about telling what they had heard, believed, and enjoyed. Some of them became preachers of the Word at home, and others went abroad to publish the glad tidings. Jesus would be made known to the poor in the back slums of Thessalonica, and talked of to the sailors on board the vessels, and to the merchants on the quays. Are you, beloved, all of you, making Jesus known? Are there none of you silent? Have we not among us some who should now be working in foreign lands? Have we not in these pews many whose voices should be heard in our streets? We shall never be as we ought to be till every talent is utilized. We must be all at it, always at it, and at it with all our might. We have not come to this yet. May the love of Christ constrain us!

III. Oh that the Holy Ghost would put fire into my sermon, that its live coals may touch your hearts, while I say that there is now of this kind! Brethren, the Word of the Lord ought to be sounded out, because it is the Word of God. If it is the word of man, let him spread it as he can; we are not concerned to help him. The word of man comes from a dying source, and it will return to it; but the Word of the Lord endureth forever. The Word of the Lord is so all-important that it should have free course, run, and be glorified. When He gives the word, great should be the company of them that publish it. If you believe the gospel to be the divine word, you dare not withhold it. The stones would cry out if you were silent.

Need for a Trumpet Blast

With many of us, this is a matter of solemn obligation. The Word of God has been to us life from the dead, deliverance out of bondage, food for our hunger, strength for our weakness, comfort for our sorrow, satisfaction for our hearts. Spread it, then. Seeing that God's Word has come to you with power, and has saved you, you must sound it abroad.

Remember, too, that this is salvation to the perishing. Did not one dear brother and deacon, on Monday night, pray to the Lord with great fervor, reiterating these words, "They are perishing, they are perishing, they are perishing; Lord, save them!"? You believe that men are diseased with sin, and that Christ is the only remedy; will you not tell them the remedy? You see men will you not tell them where there is hope as to the hereafter? You tremblingly feel that for souls to die without accepting the Saviour is eternal woe; will you not pray them, in Christ's stead, to be reconciled to God? O sirs, by everything that is terrible in the doom of those who die in unbelief, I charge you, sound out the Word of the Lord! As you will shortly appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, be clear of the blood of all men. The gospel has power to save to-day, and to save forever: sound it out.

Dying Without Hope;

At this time many other voices are clamoring to be heard. The air is full of din. Men have devised new methods by which to elevate the race, and loud are the voices that proclaim the man-invented nostrums. "Shall we be heard," cries one, "if we lift up our voices?" Yes, if you take the gospel trumpet, you will enforce a hearing. It chanced, one evening, when there was a large gathering of that our boys were sweetly discoursing a hymn-tune upon their bells, the American organ was being played as an accompaniment, and all the gathered company were singing at their best, making a rushing flood of music. Just then I quietly hinted to our friend Mr. Manton Smith to put in a few notes from his silver cornet; and when he placed it to his lips, and threw his soul into it, the lone man was heard above us all. Bells, organ, voices, everything, seemed to yield before that one clear blast of trumpet music. So will it be with the gospel. Only sound it out as God's own word, and let the power of the Holy Ghost go with it, and it will drown all music but its own. At any rate, you will have done your part, and will be no longer responsible, even if men do not hear it, if from your very soul you sound out the word of the Lord.

Friends at the Orphanage,

You have stood with me in protest against

The Declensions of the Age.

He who knoweth all things knows what this has cost me; but your love has been a great relief to me in the bitter sorrow. We will have no complicity with error: we will not aid the Philistines in shearing away the locks of the gospel's strength. Having protested, we must justify our position by our lives. We shall be dishonored unless we have the power of God specially resting upon us; that may be a small thing; but the truth itself will be dishonored; and this we cannot bear. If the gospel be indeed true—and we have no doubt about it—we beseech the God of truth to grant us the sign and seal from heaven by baring His holy arm in our midst. To-day, again, I lay the sacrifice upon the altar, by reasserting the old gospel against the down-grade of the times. The God that answereth by fire, let Him be God! On you may the tongues of fire descend and rest. May you, who are with me, whether in London or in the utmost parts of the earth, be inflamed with zeal and fired with love. May the water in the trenches be licked up by the flame, and the whole sacrifice be consumed with heaven's own fire, till the people, once deluded by Baal, shall be forced to cry, "Jehovah, He is the God! Jehovah, He is the God!" May the substitutionary sacrifice of Christ triumph in the midst of the earth, and become, as it always has been, the truth by which the glory of the Lord shall be revealed. The Lord grant it. Labor, all of you, to secure it.

I have not preached to sinners; I leave that, for once, to you. I lay on you this burden, that you each one make the word of the Lord to sound out, "so that we need not to speak anything." God grant it, for Jesus' sake! Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

PAUL'S BELOVED DISCIPLE.*

TIMOTHY was a native, possibly, of Derbe, but more probably of the neighboring town of Lystra, where he was piously brought up in a knowledge of the Jewish Scriptures by his grandmother Lois and his mother Eunice. It was probably during Paul's first visit to Lystra, on his first missionary journey, that he became the boy's spiritual father, by converting him to the Christian faith. It was at Lystra that the Apostle was stoned by the mob and dragged outside the city as dead; and there is no improbability in the suggestion that when he recovered consciousness and re-entered the town, it was in the home of Timothy that he found shelter. In any case, Lystra was to the Apostle a place of strangely mixed associations; the brutality of the pagan multitude side by side with the tender friendship of the young Timothy. When St. Paul, on his next missionary journey, again visited Lystra, he found Timothy already enjoying a good report among the Christians of that place and of Iconium, for his zeal and devotion during the six or seven years which had elapsed since his first visit. Perhaps he had been engaged in missionary work in both places. The voices of the prophets had singled him out as one worthy of bearing office in the Church; and the Apostle, still grieving over the departure of Barnabas with John Mark, recognized in him one who with Silas could fill the double vacancy.

His Life and Work.

In the Troad they met Luke, the beloved physician, and took him on with them to Philippi. Here, probably, as certainly afterward at Berea, Timothy was left behind by Paul and Silas to consolidate their work. He rejoined the apostle at Athens, but was thence sent back on a mission to Thessalonica, and on his return found St. Paul at Corinth. The two epistles written from Corinth to the Thessalonians are in the joint names of Paul and Timothy. At Corinth, as at Lystra, Iconium, and Philippi, Timothy became prominent for his zeal as an evangelist; and then, for about five years, we lose sight of him. We may think of him as generally at the side of Paul, and as always working with him, but of the details of the work we are ignorant. About A. D. 57 he was sent by Paul on a delicate mission to Corinth. This was before the first epistle to that church was written, for in that letter Paul states that he has sent Timothy to Corinth, but writes as if he expected that the letter would reach Corinth before him. When Paul wrote the second epistle from Macedonia, later in the year, Timothy was again with him, for his name is joined with Paul's; and he is still with him when the apostle wrote to the Romans from Corinth, for he joins in sending salutations to the Roman Christians. We find him still at Paul's side on his way back to Jerusalem through Philippi, the Troad, Tyre, and Cæsarea. And here we once more lose trace of him for some years. We do not know what he was doing during Paul's two years' imprisonment at Cæsarea; but he joined him during his first imprisonment at Rome, for the epistles to the Philippians, the Colossians, and Philemon are written in the names of Paul and Timothy. We may conjecture that Timothy went to Philippi, and returned before the apostle was released. At the close of the epistle to the

* From "The Pastoral Epistles." By the Rev. Alfred Plummer, M. A., D. D. One of the volumes of the Expositor's Bible, a series which has been of incalculable value in opening up the treasures of the Word, and enabling ministers and students to understand the circumstances in which each book was written, and its chief purpose. This volume is one of the most useful of the series. Pp. 435; price $1.50. Published by A. C. Armstrong & Son, 714 Broadway, N. Y.

Mrs. Russell B. Harrison. (See page 261.)

The Sun Dance of the Cree Indians of Athabasca.

Hebrews we read, "Know ye that our brother Timothy hath been set at liberty." It is possible that the imprisonment to which this notice refers was contemporaneous with the first imprisonment of Paul.

The few additional facts respecting Timothy are given to us in the two letters to him. Some time after Paul's release, the two were together in Ephesus, and when the apostle went on into Macedonia, he left his companion behind him, to warn and exhort certain holders of erroneous doctrine to desist from teaching it. There were tears, on the younger friend's side at any rate, to which Paul alludes at the opening of the second epistle. The task imposed on Timothy was no easy one; and after the dangers and sufferings to which the apostle had been exposed, and which his increasing infirmities continually augmented, it was only too possible that the friends would never meet again. So far as we know, these gloomy apprehensions may have been realized. In his first letter written from Macedonia, Paul expresses a hope of returning very soon to Timothy; but, like some other hopes expressed in Paul's epistles, it was perhaps never fulfilled. The second letter, written from Rome, contains no allusion to any intermediate meeting. In this second letter he twice implores Timothy to do all he can to come to him without delay, for he is left almost alone in his imprisonment. But whether Timothy was able to comply with this wish we have no means of knowing.

Tradition and ingenious guesswork add a little more, which can be neither proved nor disproved. Eusebius tells us, more than two hundred years after his death, that he is related to have held the office of overseer of the diocese of Ephesus, and five centuries later Nicephorus tells us that he was beaten to death by the Ephesian mob for protesting against the licentiousness of their worship.

THE SUN DANCE OF THE CREE INDIANS.

(See Illustration.)

No better proof can be given of the terrible need of the civilizing influences of the Gospel among the Cree Indians of Athabasca, in Northwest Canada, than the celebration of the Sun Dance as it was witnessed in 1886 by Captain R. W. Rutherford. He says that as the time for holding the dance approached, the Crees formed "a Thirst Lodge," which is constructed of a circular framework of tree stems, with a large pole or trunk in the middle, the whole being covered in with tree branches, generally birch. Inside there is a sort of fence, or dress circle, as it were, of tree boughs with their foliage on, intertwined, behind which is a row of the principal braves. At the top of the centre post is a large bunch of foliage, decorated with strips of cloth of all colors, which also hang down the post itself. The young brave holds in his hands a couple of flags on crossed sticks, and in his mouth a bit of wood.

The object of the dance is to give the young braves an opportunity to prove their powers of endurance by self-inflicted torture. The man who passes through the ordeal without a groan or a cry is henceforth entitled to a place in council. The young men who wish thus to qualify, work holes in their breasts, first cutting two slits in either side, and pulling away the flesh until two loops are made, through which they pass a couple of lariats, the other ends being fastened to the top of the centre pole of the lodge. They then jerk themselves against the strain until the flesh is torn away, and the amount of torture they can bear in this way gauges the valor of which they are supposed to be possessed. A brave has only to prove himself such in this way once in his life. The other Indians sit round singing, beating their tom-toms, and shaking their rattles, the squaws meanwhile blowing away on whistles, and making a deafening chorus.

The beginning of mission work among this and other benighted tribes of the far Northwest is singularly interesting. In 1821 John West, a devoted chaplain of the Hudson's Bay Company, succeeded in getting possession of two Indian boys, whom he educated and brought up. The first English words he taught them were: "Great Father give me thy Spirit, for Jesus' sake." Both these boys became evangelists among their people. One of them, known as Henry Budd, died in 1875, after twenty-two years' faithful work, in the course of which he translated the Bible into the Cree language. The other, James Settee, is still living and working for the Master at Red River. He has been preaching and teaching for thirty-three years. The Church Missionary Society has now a devoted band of laborers in the field, with Dr. Robert Young as Bishop of Athabasca.

THE IMMIGRANT'S INDICTMENT.

(See Illustration on page 269.)

"You do not feel so much like putting an end to yourself now," said Mr. Booth, a prosperous Christian merchant, addressing a miserable looking young man to whom he had just given a substantial meal in an east-side restaurant in New York.

"Not just now, thanks to you, sir," was the reply, "but I was very near it when you took compassion upon me. Oh, sir, hunger is an awful thing to bear; it maddens one."

"What brought you into such a condition?" Mr. Booth asked. "You seem to have had some education, and are able to work."

"Oh yes, sir; I am able and willing. I emigrated to this country a few months ago because I heard that here any man who was willing to work could get on. I was making only a bare living on the other side, and was saving nothing toward my support in old age. But here I cannot get employment of any kind. There are thousands like me for whom the world has no use, and the number is increasing."

"I suppose so," said the merchant. "It is a very difficult problem. No man ought to starve in a Christian country."

"Do you claim that this is a Christian country?" the young man asked, with a wan smile.

"Certainly; why not?"

"They make the claim, too, on the other side the Atlantic, but I should dispute it. I fancy if Christ were on earth now He would think His teachings had little influence in either country."

"I do not agree with you," said Mr. Booth. "Our Christian charities are magnificent, and our wealthy men give very largely. There are many noble Christian philanthropists, too, on the other side."

"Still," said the young man, sadly, "the problem is not solved. Here are Christian men, Christian ministers, too, who have more money than they or their families can spend, while men in the same city with them are starving, and they know it. Why, the other day I saw one of your prominent ministers drive down Broadway in a carriage and pair, and some one told me he was almost a millionaire. He wore a diamond ring worth two or three thousand dollars. When such a man stands before God, will not the Maker of the rich and poor ask him why he spent his money on luxuries instead of supplying the necessities of his poor brother?"

"That is an exceptional case, probably," said Mr. Booth, "but I dare say he gives largely in charity."

"Perhaps so; but it does not solve the problem. Has a man the right to keep more than he can use when his brother is dying for want of it? If a man had a store of barrels of water in the desert, and saw men dying of thirst, and yet did not give them to drink, what would you call him? See here sir, here am I, and thousands like me, in absolute want. We are willing to work, but cannot get work. Suppose we starve to death, or commit suicide to escape the lingering suffering, will wealthy Christians be held guiltless? There are sick men—I have seen several—who might be brought back to life if some one would pay for a doctor. Others see their wives and children drifting to the grave while they could save them if they had the means of giving them proper food and pure air. What will He who told the Parable of the Good Samaritan say when some wealthy man calling himself a Christian appears before Him, and admits that he died rich, and took no thought of the sufferers at his door? No, sir, it is hard for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God, and I fancy that some who think they are sure of admittance will find more obstacles than they expect."

"Perhaps so," said the merchant, "but the minister you mention could not give you work, and you would not expect him to provide free meals for any one who chose to come. In many cases it would be only a premium on idleness. It would not be so in your case, but it would in many."

"Oh, I admit there are difficulties, but the problem is not mine. It belongs to those who have the means of solving it. You admit that it exists, and that it ought not to exist. Have wealthy Christians grappled with it? Here is the anomaly: one man with a superfluity, another man perishing for lack of what the other man has and cannot use. Apart from humanity Christ explicitly said that such a state of things must not be. Now, when His followers sit quietly by and allow the state to continue, how will they meet Him? Of course the work is difficult, but the command is imperative, and every man who possesses more money than he needs is disobeying it. He ought to have studied how to employ his money so that it should have relieved distress without encouraging idleness. Do you not think that if the wealthy Christians realized their responsibility, and were in earnest to obey Christ, they would meet together and find out a way? I tell you, sir, that poor as I am, I would not have their wealth if with it I had to stand before God and tell Him that I had kept it for myself while my brother was dying of want."

The vehemence of the young man, the contrast between his words and the squalor of his appearance, attracted the attention of others in the restaurant. Presently one of the gentlemen came to the table, and said to Mr. Booth, "What is the difficulty with your young philosopher?"

"He is indicting the whole Christian community," said the merchant. "I have been providing comfort for his physical man, and he has retaliated on me by providing discomfort for my conscience. Ungrateful, is he not? and the worst of it is that there is some reason in what he says."

"Yes, it would not make you uncomfortable if there were no truth in it. Well, sir," turning to the young man, "here is my card. Come to my office to-morrow and I'll provide honest work for you, at any rate. I don't like your wholesale accusations, but I should like to see more of you. Perhaps you will not be so dreadfully minatory when you are better clothed and fed."

The Immigrant States His Case.

"Thank you, sir," was the reply; "perhaps I might not have felt the facts so keenly if I had not known hunger; but I hope I shall never shut my eyes to them now."

ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS.

A Life Story: By Mrs. Stenhouse.

For More than Twenty-five Years the Wife of a Mormon Missionary and Elder.

(Continued from page 254.)

The Hand-cart Experiment.

FROM the first moment when the heresy of the plurality of wives was announced, the leaders had strictly forbidden the missionaries to enter into any alliances with the sisters abroad, or to make any proposals of marriage to them, or to enter into any matrimonial covenants. In the language of Kimball—Brigham's first counsellor—they were "not to pick out from the flock the young, fair, and tender lambs," but were to bring them all safely to Salt Lake.

This counsel was very well, for it tended to keep the elders out of mischief, and afforded an opportunity to the brethren at home to select more and more youthful wives from the fair converts who were gathered in to Utah. But the missionaries found it very irksome to obey this counsel, and, in point of fact, those who did so formed a very small minority. One of the missionaries, who had just returned from Europe, came one day to our house in New York, and brought a youthful sister with him. He was by no means a handsome man, or prepossessing in his appearance, but I saw at once that he had succeeded in obtaining considerable influence over the young sister's mind. He said she was not very happy, and he wanted her to stay with some respectable family for a week or two until they set out for Utah, and I agreed that she should stay with us.

She began to play with the children, and took one of them in her arms in a way which attracted my attention, for I noticed that tears were in her eyes, and she excited my sympathy. I asked her as gently and as delicately as I could what was the matter with her, and what her sorrow was, and she told me as soon as she was able to do so that she herself had two little ones at home and was wretched at being parted from them. She had obeyed counsel, and had left her husband and a happy home to go to Salt Lake City. She loved them all dearly; but, deluded by false teachings, and promises that she should soon have her children again, she had clandestinely stolen away and left all.

I reasoned with her, tried to make her see how very wrongly she had acted, and persuaded her to return to her husband and seek his forgiveness. But it was all in vain. The salvation of her soul she thought was beyond all earthly considerations; she must stifle the suggestions of her heart within her; she must hasten to the City of Saints. Thus she left me, and, like many another victim, I never expected to see her again.

One morning, a few months later, I was astonished to receive a visit from her. After expressing my pleasure at seeing her once more, she told me that what I said had so impressed her that when the emigrants had arrived at St. Louis she had refused to proceed any further on the journey, had written to her husband, had made everything right with him, and was now on her way back to her home in England.

My story is so full of painful reminiscences, that it is with pleasure that I record this incident—one of the rare cases in which folly was not succeeded by utter ruin and misery. Alas, how many instances I might mention, which fell beneath my own personal observation, of wives and mothers led away by the delusive doctrines which they mistook for inspiration, and who sought vainly, through years of misery, for peace and rest, until at length they found it the darkness of the tomb.

In sad contrast with the foregoing incident was the experience of my friend Mary Burton, who, as the reader will remember, was journeying with her husband to Utah in the Hand-cart company. The following letter, which I received from her, gives a vivid account of her dreadful journey:

"I promised to write and tell you all about our journey across the Plains, but I little expected to have such a terrible tale to tell. You have heard so much of the journey to Salt Lake Valley that you know pretty well how we must have traveled to Iowa City, where it was necessary that we should wait until the whole company was quite ready for the long journey which lay before us.

"Our life up to a certain point was much the same, and we met with the same difficulties as all other emigrants who had gone before us. But there the comparison ends. Privation and toil and weariness, and not unfrequently sickness and death, wore out many of the companies that went before us, but they never suffered as we did. It is utterly impossible for me to tell you all that we went through. It is indescribable. And when I finish this letter, and lay down my pen, and even when you read the fearful story of my experience during that journey, you will still have but the faintest idea of the horrors and sufferings which we endured.

"At Iowa City we found nothing prepared for us. When we left Liverpool we were told that hand-carts, provisions, and all that we needed, should be provided before we arrived. If this had been done we should have had just barely time enough to travel over the Plains and reach Salt Lake before the terrible cold of winter set in. As it was, everything went wrong. The elders who had been sent out before us to buy tents and carts, and all that we wanted, had either been unfortunate or very careless, for, as I said, when we arrived in Iowa City, not the slightest preparation of any kind had been made.

"You know how strong my faith was when we left New York, and how Brother Shrewsbury and myself were ready to sacrifice everything. I can assure you that we were fully tested, and I do think that but for our strong faith not a single soul of all that company would have survived that journey. Three companies had, after a long delay, been sent out before we reached Iowa City. As it was then early in the season, they completed their journey before the cold of winter set in. I afterwards heard that Brigham Young and the elders, when they saw the companies arrive safely in Salt Lake City, spoke of the scheme as a successful experiment. We had been positively taught that the scheme came directly from heaven, and was neither speculation nor experiment, and when I heard that, after all, the Prophet himself spoke of it as a matter of doubtful issue, I asked myself—whom, then, can we believe?

"We waited three weeks in Iowa Camp while they were making the hand-carts. They were very lightly made, and I think not at all suitable for such a long and wearisome journey; and being so hastily put together, and most of the wood unseasoned, they were utterly unfit for the rough work for which they were constructed. Twenty of these carts—one to every five—were allowed to every hundred persons, who were also allowed five good-sized tents and one Chicago wagon, with three yoke of oxen, to transport the baggage and provisions. We were only allowed seventeen pounds of bedding and clothing each, which, with cooking utensils, etc., made up about one hundred pounds to each cart, and that was quite as much as the cart (itself only sixty pounds in weight) could carry.

"You can see, Sister Stenhouse, how difficult it must have been out of every hundred persons—men, women, and children—to find twenty who were strong enough to pull even such frail things as those hand-carts were. The married men and the young men and boys did the best they possibly could, but they could do no more, and some of the carts were drawn by young girls alone. The girls and women who had no husbands used to occupy a tent by themselves at night; but in the other tents whole families, without respect to age or sex, together with the young men who assisted them during the day, used to find shelter. This you will see at once was exceedingly inconvenient; but we had no choice, and we had been so long associated, and had suffered so much together, that we did not feel it as much as we otherwise might have done.

"What weary days we spent! Hour after hour went by, mile after mile we walked, and never, never seemed to be a step the further on our way. Sometimes I recalled to mind a hymn which we used to sing at Sunday-school when I was a child—an evening hymn in which we returned thanks that we were "A day's march nearer home."

"But day after day went by—wearily, hopelessly—and when the darkness of each night came on, and, tired and footsore, we lay down to rest, we seemed no nearer to our home in Salt Lake.

"Do not think, Sister Stenhouse, that we gave way to despondency. What we felt, God alone knows; but our poor, weary hearts were full of confiding faith in Him, and we placed undoubting confidence in the promises and prophecies which we had received through His chosen servants, as we believed them to be. The young folks were light-hearted and gay, and with all the enthusiasm of youth they pressed on, thinking not of the way, but only of the end; and their example was most encouraging. My husband was one of the bravest and truest of all that band. He drew the cart which we shared with another elder and his wife and their grown-up daughter. They were old people—I mean the elder and his wife—and the daughter was an unpleasant person, and too feeble to do anything. There were reasons why I was excused from taking any share in hard work; but I felt as zealous as the rest, and day after day walked beside my husband, thinking that, if nothing more, my companionship might cheer him. The old folks walked behind, and so did the children; but sometimes when the little ones were very weary indeed, the parents would place them on the top of the bedding in the hand-cart, and give them a lift. But some of the elderly people who were unused to walking far, and whom it was impossible to carry, suffered a great deal; and sometimes mothers with children at their breasts would trudge on mile after mile in all the heat and dust without a murmur or complaint, until they almost dropped down with fatigue.

"What some of those poor creatures suffered, no words could tell. The sun shone down upon us with intense heat as we travelled through Iowa, and the people from the farm-houses and villages came out to see us, and wondered at our rashness in undertaking such a journey. They were very kind to us, and came and visited us in our camps, and offered some of the men work and good wages if they would stay there instead of going on to Salt Lake. A few of the people accepted these offers; but the elders, as you may suppose, watched carefully every company and every man; and in the evening, when meetings for prayer and preaching were held, we were earnestly exhorted to obedience, and the sin of acting upon our own judgment was set forth in the very plainest terms. The kindness of the Iowa people, however, encouraged us, and they freely gave to those who most needed whatever they could to help us. And we needed help and sympathy.

"Of course, with only one wagon to carry all the provisions for a hundred persons, besides five tents, our supply of food was very limited. At that period of the journey the grown-up people were allowed ten ounces of flour a day and a little—and but a very little—coffee, sugar, rice, and bacon. This was a very scanty allowance for people who all day long had to draw the hand-carts or to trudge mile after mile in all that burning heat and dust—but we never complained. Some of the men ate all their rations at breakfast, and went without anything more until the next morning, unless they were able to beg a little of some friendly farmer by the way. The little children received just half as much as the others.

"With a very small amount of management this inconvenience might certainly have been avoided, for provisions of all sorts were very cheap in the districts through which we passed. Some of the more thoughtful saints, I know, felt very bitterly the injustice of this; for, as you are aware, we had paid all our expenses in full—even to the uttermost farthing; and we had been promised in return a safe and sufficient outfit, with plenty of provisions, and in fact all that was necessary. Had we been left to ourselves, we should of course have provided for every contingency; but we came in obedience to counsel under the direction of the Church, and after we had paid for everything; the Church even 'took care' of our money, so that we therefore could not procure necessities by the way, as otherwise we might have done. Thus wearily, and suffering not a little privation, we travelled all through Iowa, until we came to the Missouri River, and encamped at Florence, a place about six miles north of Omaha, and there we remained about a week, preparing for our journey across the Plains."

"It was the middle of August, 1856, when we arrived at Florence, Neb.; and we had been delayed so much on the way that it appeared to many of the more experienced that it would now be the height of imprudence for us to cross the Plains at that season. With old people, delicate women, and little children, and without carriages of any sort—except the frail hand-carts that carried our bedding—it would be a weary, long time before we could reach Salt Lake. Every step must be trudged on foot, and it was quite impossible that we could walk many miles a day, while there was before us a journey of over a thousand. Some of the elders proposed that we should settle where we were, or somewhere near by, until the following spring, and then go on to Salt Lake; but others, who were more confident, urged that we should proceed at once. The elders called a great meeting to settle the matter, at which we were all present. I should tell you that when we first started our whole company was placed under the guidance of Elder James G. Willie as captain; and we were again subdivided into five parties of about one hundred each, and over every hundred was placed an elder or sub-captain. The first hundred was headed by Elder Atwood, the second by Levi Savage, the third by William Woodward, the fourth by John Chislett, and the fifth by Elder Ahmensen. About two hundred of the people were Scotch and Scandinavians; nearly all the rest were English. All were assembled at the meeting.

"You know, Sister Stenhouse, how meetings were held at home. Well, it was just the same there. We, of course, had nothing really to say—we had only to obey counsel and sanction the decision of the leading elders. I used to feel annoyed rather at that sort of thing in London, as you may remember; but now, when life and death depended upon the wisdom of our decision, with all my faith I felt worse than annoyed, wicked as I have no doubt it was for me to feel so. My husband never uttered a word, but I know he felt as much as I did, and in that he was not alone among the elders. We had neither vote nor influence—the elders held our destiny in their hands.

"In all our company there were only three or four men who had been out to Salt Lake before, and of course they could not be overlooked, so they gave their opinion at the meeting. They must have fully known the dangers and difficulties of the way, and what hardships must overtake a company so scantily provided for as was ours, if we continued our journey. But, for all that, they not only spoke slightly of the danger which threatened us, but prophesied, in the name of the Lord, that we should pass through, and suffer neither loss nor harm.

"One man alone—Levi Savage—dared to tell the truth. People well mounted, or even with good ox-teams, could safely and easily make the journey, he said; but for a band of people like ourselves, with aged folks, and women, and a number of little children, to attempt it so late was little short of madness. He strongly urged that we should take up our quarters there for the winter, when, he said, as soon as spring came on, we could safely and successfully perform the remainder of our journey.

"The other elders thought that he was weak in the faith, and plainly told him so; and one of them even said 'he'd eat all the snow that fell between Florence and Salt Lake City.' The people, of course, believed without question what they were told to believe, for they had long ago made up their minds that the leaders were inspired, and therefore they dared not doubt them, and the prudent counsel of Brother Savage was rejected accordingly. I was not near enough to hear his words, but I was afterwards told that he said: 'What I have said, I know is the truth; but as you are counselled to go forward, I will go with you; I will work and rest and suffer with you; and, if God wills it so, I will also die with you.' Never was man more faithful to his word than was Brother Savage; and often, after that, when sickness and weariness ness and cold and hunger and death overtook us—as he had foreseen—he never for one moment forgot the promise which he had so solemnly made.

(To be Continued).

THE COMMAND TO WATCH.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for May 5, Mark 13 : 24-37. Golden Text Mark 13 : 33.

The Watchman's Duty—Recognizes Signs Unnoticed by Others—The Day and the Night Isaiah Saw—The Watchers for the First Advent—The End of the Sixty-Nine Weeks of Years—The Watch for the Seventieth Week—A Sign to be Visible in Jerusalem—Two Momentous Dates—Signs in the Sun and Stars—The Two Stages of Christ's Second Coming—Watching Against and Watching for—Hindrances to Watchfulness—A Work for Every One.

"TAKE ye heed, watch and pray, for ye know not when the time is." "Watch." The watchman must be awake when other men sleep. "Let us not sleep as do others, but let us watch and be sober," says the Apostle Paul (1 Thess. 5 : 6.) Let us observe what others take no notice of, and see signs of which the world cannot detect the meaning. God said to Ezekiel, "I have made thee a watchman to the house of Israel; therefore hear the word at My mouth, and give them warning from Me." (Ezek. 3 : 17.) He calls to Isaiah out of Seir, "Watchman, what of the night? Watchman, what of the night?" (Isa. 20 : 11.) Isaiah saw what other men of his time did not see: "The morning cometh," he said, for he saw that in the last days the mountain of the Lord's house should be established in the top of the mountains, and should be "exalted above the hills," and all nations should "flow unto it." (Isa. 2 : 2.) But he said, "and also the night," for he saw the coming Saviour, "despised and rejected of men, a Man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief," he saw Him "wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities" (Isa. 53 : 3, 5); and he saw the day of the Lord when He should arise "to shake terribly the earth." (Isa. 2 : 19-21.)

What are We to Watch For?

What does God want us to perceive to which the world in general is asleep? "Watch, therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come." "Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh." (Matt. 24 : 42; 25 : 13.) It is our blessed Lord's coming for which we have to watch. There were a few who watched for His first coming—a Simeon, to whom it was revealed "by the Holy Ghost that he should not see death until he had seen the Lord's Christ" (Luke 2 : 26); a Zacharias and Elizabeth, who were called to be the parents of him who should go before his Lord "in the spirit and power of Elias; to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just, to make ready a people prepared for the Lord" (Luke 1 : 17); an Anna, who "served God with fastings and prayers night and day," and when she saw the infant Jesus, she "spake of Him to all them that looked for redemption in Israel." With the exception of the wise men from the East, and the shepherds of Bethlehem, these were all who were awake to the first coming of the Lord, and yet it was clearly predicted, and these few saw the signs of it.

Daniel had foretold in his days that seventy weeks were determined upon his people, the Jews, "to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the Most Holy." (Dan. 9 : 25.) Thus he went on to give the starting-point of this date: "Know, therefore, and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto Messiah the Prince, shall be seven week and three score and two weeks." The book of Nehemiah shows us that the command to restore and to build Jerusalem was in the twentieth year of Artaxerxes (Neh. 1 : 1; 2 : 1); and counting from this time—445 before Christ—to the time of our blessed Lord's crucifixion, about the year A. D. 38—i. e., 69 weeks of years, as foretold—we get 483 years. Consequently, it is generally understood that the seventy weeks are weeks of years; as in Num. 14 : 34 God says: "After the number of the days in which ye searched the land, even forty days, each day for a year, shall ye bear your iniquities, even forty years." And again (Ezek. 4 : 6), "I have appointed thee each day for a year."

It seems to have been at the same date that the 2,300 days of Dan. 8 : 14 began; and if these are taken as years, it is noteworthy that when they expired, in 1856, religious liberty was granted to Jews and Christians; the treaty of Paris, which assured this liberty, was signed in Passover week—the same week of the year, A. D. 38, on which Christ was crucified, and the same week of 445 before Christ, on which Artaxerxes gave the command to restore and build Jerusalem. From that time have become more and more prominent in the political, the literary, and, above all, in the financial world; and as the last week of these seventy weeks of years has yet to be fulfilled, and the Jews must come to the front as soon as the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled, part of our watch for the coming of Christ and the end of the age must be upon the Jewish people. Jerusalem must be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled. (Luke 21 : 24.) These Gentile powers are all showing signs of decay; there is trouble in political and commercial life, and it seems as though all the foundations of the earth were out of course. Men's hearts are "failing them for fear;" every one expects war, prepares for war, and the nations are holding in their breath. All men feel we are on the verge of a tremendous crisis, the ruling powers are in perplexity, and no one knows what is coming.

The Jews

There are two dates in the end of the book of Daniel, which, if explained aright, lead us to think that the end of the age may be near. Many believe that the 1,290 days spoken of in Dan. 12 : 11, and the 1,335 in Dan. 12 : 12, are also to be taken as years, and refer to the duration of the Papal and Mahomedan antichrists ("the abomination that maketh desolate"). If they began about the middle of the sixth century, the first, at least, must have terminated already, and the other cannot extend many years longer. But the consideration of dates, although it may help us in some measure, may lead to speculation rather than to close dealing with God, and constant faithfulness to man, in view of the shortness of the time which remains to us.

Jesus, speaking to His disciples, says, "In those days shall be affliction such as was not from the beginning of the creation which God created unto this time, neither shall be. . . . But in those days, after that tribulation,

The Sun Shall be Darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars of heaven shall fall. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds with great power and glory." This is a distinct sign of the Lord's coming, foretold in Isa. 13 : 10; Ezek. 32 : 7; Joel 2 : 31; 3 : 15; Matt. 24 : 29; Acts 2 : 20; Rev. 6 : 12; and here His coming is distinctly said to be after the tribulation. But there are passages which distinctly refer to a coming of Christ before the tribulation: "Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man" (Luke 21 : 8, 6); and again: "Because thou hast kept the word of My patience, I will also keep thee from the hour of temptation which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth." And it is for this coming before the tribulation which we have to watch. Undoubtedly that time of tribulation will last three years and a half (Dan. 12 : 7; Rev. 12 : 6, 14;

12 : 5), the latter half of the one week of years to be yet fulfilled in the history of the Jewish nation, when the time of the Gentiles shall have come to an end, and when the Jews shall confirm a covenant with some prince that shall come, the great future Antichrist (Dan. 9 : 27), or "man of sin" (II Thess. 2 : 3).

But we have to

Watch Against

as well as to watch for. Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares." (Luke 21 : 34.) Just those very things which make a bad conversion—"the cares of this world and the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts of other things entering in," which "choke the word, and it becometh unfruitful"—are the hindrances to watchfulness for the Lord's coming. "The lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life,"—anything and everything which proves that self, and not God, is the mainspring and centre of our life—hinders us from a watchful spirit for our Lord. And, on the other hand, if He is more to us than all the world; if, translated into their relation to Him, things have an interest in our eyes, but apart from Him they are dead and worthless, then the expectation of His coming and the making ready for Him makes the very thought of money-making as an object in life to be an impertinence, intolerable, and altogether beneath our dignity. His coming makes an earthly reputation such as is built up by a family name, by a fortune acquired, by literary or political fame, a thing so small that it makes one smile to think of it. The little rush-light loses itself in the refulgence of the coming Sun. All things earthly are but pro tem. in the light of His coming; but saved souls, the living stones which shall build His temple; His Word, which shall stand when heaven and earth shall pass away; His presence in the spirit, which shall so soon be sight and faith no longer—these are the tangible realities of such as watch for Him and love His appearing.

"Take ye heed, watch and pray, for ye know not when the time is. For the Son of man is as a man taking a far journey, who left his house, and gave authority to his servants, and and commanded the porter to watch." Praise God, He gives to every man, and every woman, and every child his work. Just that which our hand findeth to do, just that which is next to us, just where we are, until God calls us to something else. The home duties, the work of the business, but done as by men that wait for their Lord; the Christian work which is already open to us, until God calls us to something else, and in it to watch for His coming. "Watch ye, therefore, for ye know not when the master of the house cometh—at even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning, lest coming suddenly He find you sleeping. And what I say unto you I say unto all, Watch." Watching leads to prayer, to a habit of talking with God about the signs of His coming. God bring us into a constant habit of watching unto prayer! Amen.

To Every Man His Work.

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman

(London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 63 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles, among others, are contained in the number for April:

End of the Times in the Year 1900.

The Signs of the Times. By the Rev. Canon Fausset, of Durham.

The Millennium. Predicted by J. G. O.

The Pretensions of the Future Man of Sin of Thess. 2.

The Four Holy Cities of Judea.

Historical Fulfilment of the Third Trumpet. (Continued.)

Enoch and Elijah's Translation. By the late Mrs. Baylee.

(Concluded.)

The Great Famine in China.

Antichrist's Future Acting; Described in Dan. II. 21-45

(Continued.)

Coming Great Prophetic Event This Year.

The Coming Judgment.

Passing Events Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

OUR FATHER KNOWETH.

"Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of before ye ask Him." MATT. vi. 8.

Therefore, our Heavenly Father,
We will not fear, to pray
For the little needs and longings
That fill our every day;
And when we dare not whisper
A want that lieth dim,
We say "Our Father knoweth,"
And leave it all to Him.

For His great love has compassed
Our nature, and our need
We know not; but He knoweth,
And He will bless indeed.
Therefore, O Heavenly Father,
Give what is best to me;
And take the wants unanswered,
As offerings made to Thee.

For Nervous Debility Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. H. T. TURNER, Kasson, Minn., says: "I have found it very beneficial in nervous debility, from any cause, and for indigestion."

NELSON'S HOME

—AND—

SUNDAY-SCHOOL BOOKS.

BY EVELYN EVERETT-GREEN.

Dulcie's Little Brother; or, Doings at Little Monksholm. 12mo. Cloth extra. $1.00.

"A sweet and charming story of child life."

—New York Observer.

Dulcie and Tottie; or, The Story of an Old-Fashioned Pair. 12mo. Cloth extra. $1.00.

A sequel to "Dulcie's Little Brother." An interesting tale, written in the simple, natural style, and pervaded by the high Christian spirit, common to the author's works.

Heiress of Wymington (The). 12mo. Cloth extra. $1.25.

"There are some remarks in its pages with which sensible people of every creed and every shade of opinion can scarcely fail to sympathize. It is pleasantly and prettily told."—Saturday Review.

"It is a story girls will read with pleasure and with profit."—Scotsman.

True to the Last; or, My Boyhood's Hero. Cloth. $1.25.

A story for boys. The scene in England. A fine, manly, Christian character is developed and perfected by trials in early life.

Temple's Trial; or, For Life and Death. 12mo. Cloth extra. $1.25.

An interesting study of character, going mainly to show the beauty of a quiet, manly Christian life; on the other hand the terrible moral degradation to which selfishness unchecked may lead, and the final triumph of integrity against cruel calumny and misunderstanding.

Winning the Victory; or, Di Pennington's Reward. A Tale. 12mo. Cloth extra. $1.25.

"One of the best books for girls in their teens which have recently been written; and it is a pleasant story for reading aloud in the family."—Sunday-School Times.

"A good and helpful book for girls."—The Independent.

Vera's Trust. A Tale. 12mo. Cloth extra. $1.25.

An intensely interesting book from beginning to end. It will captivate all readers.

For sale at all bookstores throughout the country, or will be sent postpaid on receipt of price by the publishers.

THOS. NELSON & SONS,
33 East 17th Street, New York.

GOOD NEWS TO LADIES.

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees, and Baking Powder, and secure a beautiful Gold Band or Moss Rose China Tea.

Get Premium No. 27. For particulars address 66 AND 68 CHURCH STREET, N. Y. P. O. Box 287.

T. DeWitt Talmage's New Book, Pen, Pulpit and Platform.

Aimed at Wrongs 2 B. Lighted, Follies 2 B. Shunned, Dangers 2 B. Avoided, Sorrows 2 B. Mitigated, Victories 2 B. Won. A treasury of his best thoughts. Beautifully Illustrated, 702 pages, $2.75. E. B. TREAT, NEW YORK.

A $5 Book For $1.00. How To Build A House.

If you are thinking of building a house you ought to buy the new book, Palliser's American Architecture, or every man a complete builder, prepared by Palliser, Palliser & Co., the well known architects.

There is not a Builder or any one intending to Build or otherwise interested that can afford to be without it. It is a practical work and everybody buys it. The best, cheapest and most popular work ever issued on Building. Nearly four hundred drawings. A $5 book in size and style, but we have determined to make it meet the popular demand, to suit the times, so that it can be easily reached by all. This book contains 104 pages 11 x 14 inches in size, and consists of large 9 x 12 plate pages giving plans, elevations, perspective views, descriptions, owners' names, actual cost of construction, no guess work, and instructions How to Build 10 Cottages, Villas, Double Houses, Brick Block Houses, suitable for city suburbs, town and country, houses for the farm and workmen's homes for all sections of the country, and costing from $300 to $8,500; also Barns, Stables, School House, Town Hall, Churches, and other public buildings, together with specifications, form of contract, and a large amount of information on the erection of buildings, selection of site, employment of Architects. It is worth $5.00 to any one, but I will send it in your cover by mail postpaid on receipt of $1.00, bound in cloth, $2.00. Address all orders to J. S. OGILVIE, Publisher, P. O. Box 2767, 51 Rose St., New York.

DR. WARNER'S

Over 14 Millions sold in this Country Alone.

The Best Fitting and Best Wearing Corset Ever Made.
SOLD EVERYWHERE.

BAILEY'S COMPOUND
Silver-Plated
CORRUGATED GLASS
REFLECTORS

A wonderful invention for lighting Churches, Halls, etc. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue and price list free.

Bailey Reflector Co.
112 Wood St. Pittsburgh, Pa.

METAL CEILINGS

are the best, most durable and ornamental ceiling for Churches, of every form and construction. Easily put up in old buildings.

H. S. NORTHROP, Manufacturer, Corner Center & Franklin Sts.,
Send for Circular. New York.

By avoiding Agents you save their enormous expenses and profits which double the costs on every first class Piano they sell.
PIANOS, $150 to $1500.
ORGANS, $35 to $500.
Sent for trial in your own home before you buy. GUARANTEED SIX YEARS. Catalogues Free.
Torch & Smith Piano Co., 235 E. 21st St., N.Y.

TOMATO PLANTS by MAIL or EXPRESS.
TRANSPANTED, 25c. per doz. $1 per 100.
Queens.

Egg Plants, 50c. per doz. Cabbage & Lettuce, 80c. per 100. Delivered free. JOHN BOLDANO, Waverly, Md.

SEND 6 CENTS for samples of the famous custom-made Plymouth Rock $3 Pants. Rules for self-measurement and a cloth tape measure included. Every pair guaranteed or money refunded.
PLYMOUTH ROCK PANTS CO., 11 to 17 Elliot St., Boston, Mass.

BEECHAM'S PILLS cure bilious and nervous ill.

BEECHAM'S PILLS cure sick-headache.

Our New Autograph ALBUM

Is handsomely bound in German Leatherette. The covers are of a rich color, the front being almost entirely of gold leaf and embossed artistic designs of flowers and birds, with medallion of a lovely head in relief. The size of the book is five by eight; it contains eighty pages of handsome tint paper with silverized or gilt edges, and any one may be glad to be the possessor of it. It pleases all who get it, and is a treasure which lasts a life-time. No one is too old or too young, too rich or too poor, to be the recipient of this Ornamental and Useful AUTOGRAPH ALBUM.

WE GIVE (by the use of Dr. C. McLane's Celebrated LIVER PILLS, made by Fleming Brothers) of all diseases arising from a torpid or diseased liver, such as Sick Headache, Constipation, Indigestion, Flatulency, Dyspepsia, Rheumatism, Biliousness, Yellow Skin, Piles, Backache, an all-run-down feeling disposition to work or play, breaking out of sores, impure blood, wretched condition generally. Dr. C. McLane's Celebrated Liver are GUARANTEED to cure all of these troubles and make you perfect well, so that you can enjoy life and perform your business and social duties. These Pills are compounded of the most harmless and beneficial herbs, and are good for all stages of life—from childhood to old age.

HOW TO GET Cured FREE.
And Obtain the ALBUM

If taken in time, they may save your life. Cost only a quarter. Send wrapper, with two two-cent stamps, to us, and we will forward to you (all charges prepaid) the above-described beautiful AUTOGRAPH ALBUM. If your Druggist or store does not keep our Pills, ask him to get them for you; he can

FLEMING BROTHERS, PITTSBURGH, PA.

SPECIAL NOTICE. If you can not conveniently obtain a box of our Pills in your vicinity, we will, on receipt of thirty cents, your name and post-office address, plainly written, send you, free of all expense, a box of Dr. C. McLane's Pills and our elegant Album.
FLEMING BROTHERS, PITTSBURGH, PA.

HOW TO GET RICH
We send, without charge, a useful pamphlet to those who mention this paper and send address on a postal card to—FLEMING BROS., Pittsburgh.

The Dingee & Conard Co's ROSES and SEEDS

Largest Rose Growers in America.

Over Five Hundred finest varieties of ROSES. Choice New and Standard Sorts in mail. Press sizes to suit all wants. Our NEW GUIDE, pages, elegantly illustrated, is sent FREE TO who write for it. It describes and TELLS HOW to grow over two thousand finest varieties of ROSES, HARDY PLANTS, and CLIMBING VINES, New Summer Flowering Bushes, JAPAN LILIES, GLADIOLUS, TUBER CARNATIONS, New JAPAN CHRYSANTHEMUMS, The WONDERFUL NEW FLOWERS, and the choicest NEW and

FLOWER AND VEGETABLE SEEDS

Goods sent everywhere by mail or express. Satisfaction Guaranteed. If you plant ANYTHING, it will pay to have our New Guide before buying. Send for it—free.

THE DINGEE & CONARD CO., Rose Growers and Seedsmen, West Grove, Pa.

BEECHAM'S PILLS
ACT LIKE MAGIC
ON A WEAK STOMACH.
25cts. a Box
OF ALL DRUGGISTS.

TRY "SIZE B" WITH PATENT SLIDING HANDLE.
USE BIBBY'S "ROYAL POLISH" FOR LADIES SHOES.

$500 A YEAR
GUARANTEED SALARY, and commissions extra to our "Canvassers" in each County. Business permanent and worth $1000 to $2000 a year. No capital or experience necessary. Write for particulars. CINCINNATI PUBLISHING CO., 109 Elm St., Cincinnati, O.

THE NEW MODEL, OUR LATEST and BEST MOWER.

SAMPLE PAGES FROM THE LATEST
SUNDAY SCHOOL SONG BOOKS
THE ECHO MUSIC CO., La Fayette, Ind.

BONANZA to AGENTS
GEO. A. SCOTT, New York.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1880, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. XII., No. 16. Office, 63 Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 17, 1889.

Price, 3 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAITS AND LIVES OF MESSRS. LINCOLN, GRANT, REID, THOMAS, RICE, PORTER, AND ENANDER, United States Ministers to European Courts.

THE REMNANT OF THE CENTURY. Dr. Talmage's Sermon last Sunday Morning.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS: Obeying the Captain's Orders—Made Whiter than Snow—Drunken Hugh Made a New Man—Execution of a Greek Nobleman, etc.

THE RAPTURE OF THE FIRST FRUITS.

CURRENT EVENTS: The Struggle for the Offices—Arrangements for the Approaching Centennial Celebration—Samoa During the International Conference—The Defence in the Parnell Commission—Reported Attempt to Assassinate the Czar, etc.

ROBERT T. LINCOLN, Minister to England.

WITHIN THE VEIL. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

FEEDING THE SUFFERERS OF THE FAMINE IN CHINA.

AMONG THE KORKOOS IN INDIA.

A BLIND CHINAMAN'S WORK.

PUERILE WORSHIP IN CHINA.

Gems from New Books: Two Thanksgiving Dinners—

A Clergyman's Conversion—The Students' Charge.

PORTRAIT OF HADJI HUSSEIN GOULY KHAN, Minister from Persia to the United States.

A VISIT TO THE OLD FARM. (With Illustration. PICTURE OF "ONE ASH," the Rochdale Residence of the late Rt. Hon. John Bright.

ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS. An Autobiographical Story by Mrs. Stenhouse. (Continued.)

THE DESTRUCTION OF THE TEMPLE FORETOLD. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

FREDERICK D. GRANT, Minister to Austria.

WHITELAW REID, Minister to France.

WILLIAM W. THOMAS, Minister to Sweden.

ALLEN T. RICE, Minister to Russia.

ALBERT G. PORTER, Minister to Italy.

JOHN A. ENANDER, Minister to Denmark.

SEVEN UNITED STATES MINISTERS TO EUROPEAN COURTS.

ROBERT T. LINCOLN, Minister to England.

THE prize of the diplomatic service has fallen to a man of honored name, and one who is worthy of the name he bears. Mr. Lincoln has never thrust himself on the public notice, nor attempted to make his name a stepping-stone for ambitious projects. In this case, as in his former elevation, the office sought the man, not the man the office. He has modestly gone about his business, and it needed effort to convince him that it was his duty to serve his country in a public capacity. If all our public men were similarly minded, the disgraceful scramble which takes place after every presidential election would cease, and American politics would have more dignity, and public offices would be far better filled.

Robert Todd Lincoln, the eldest son and only surviving descendant of President Lincoln, was born at Springfield, Ill., on August 1, 1843, and is, consequently, in his forty-sixth year. His first names come from his mother's family, she having been the daughter of the Hon. Robert Todd, of Kentucky. When he was born, his parents owned no home, but were boarding at the Globe tavern, and it was in that hostelry that the child first saw the light. When Robert was about a year old, the family moved into the house which continued to be their home until the father became President of the United States. Robert went to school at Springfield, and after getting through his primary studies, was sent to the Illinois State University. He went East in 1859, and in 1860 entered the Phillips Academy of Exeter. While he was there his father paid him a visit, and it was while passing through New York on his way, that he delivered his famous speech at Cooper Union on February 27, 1860, which first made him personally known to the Metropolitan public.

After a brief attendance at this school, Robert was admitted to Harvard as a member of the class of '64. Graduating in due time, he entered the law school of the University, from which he retired after a brief stay to accept a commission as Captain in the regular army and Assistant Adjutant-General on the staff of Gen. Grant. This modest rank the son of the President himself suggested, as he did not desire to rank any of the officers then on Gen. Grant's staff. The President wished him to have neither rank nor allowance, but Gen. Grant objected to that arrangement, and urged that he should be treated neither worse nor better than his equals in rank. That he should never have had promotion is a very significant fact in view of his service and abilities. He witnessed the fall of Petersburg and the pursuit and capture of Lee's army. After Petersburg was evacuated he was sent back with an escort to bring his father up to the front.

He was at Appomattox and witnessed the surrender of Lee. The next day he started with Gen. Grant for City Point. The railroads were destroyed and the roads very bad, so that the party made slow progress. Arriving at the James River, they took a steamer for Washington and reached that city on April 14, the day of the assassination. Robert made haste to reach the White House, and was first to give the President personal news of the surrender of the Confederate army. The murder of his father threw on young Lincoln the responsibility of the management of the family. After the funeral he left Washington with his mother without waiting to witness the grand review, and hastened to Chicago.

After making arrangements for his mother's comfort he looked around for means of earning his own livelihood, and ultimately commenced the practice of law in Chicago. He was admitted to the bar in 1867. In the following year he married a daughter of ex-Senator Harlan, of Iowa, and shortly afterward made an extended visit to Europe. On his return he entered into partnership with Edward S. Isham, a business connection which is still maintained.

The political situation in 1880 interested him deeply. He was an earnest advocate of a third term for Gen. Grant, and worked for that project with might and main. When Gen. Garfield was nominated, however, with the manly self-forgetfulness that has always characterized him, he worked in the campaign for the nominee of his party. It was a genuine surprise to him when Garfield telegraphed the offer of a seat in his Cabinet as Secretary of War. His first impulse was to decline, as he was succeeding in his practice as a lawyer, and shrank from public life. His friends, however, induced him to postpone a refusal for twenty-four hours, and in the interval he was brought to a change of feeling, and the next day he telegraphed his acceptance of the office. After the death of President Garfield, Mr. Lincoln, with the other members of the Cabinet, placed his resignation in President Arthur's hands. But the new President was aware that Mr. Lincoln was the one member of the late Cabinet whom he could not afford to lose, and he succeeded in inducing him to retain his portfolio.

Since Mr. Lincoln left office at the end of the Arthur Administration, he has attended closely to his law practice in Chicago, and has become very prosperous. He has three children—two daughters of twenty and fourteen years old, respectively, and a son of sixteen.

FREDERICK D. GRANT, Minister to Austro-Hungary.

THE President pays a tribute of respect to the national hero in appointing his eldest son to this dignified position. The country recognizes this fact, and is as well aware as is the President that in providing a comfortable post and income for Colonel Grant it is the merits of General Grant, and not those of the Colonel, that are considered. But for that fact the appointment would have been received with ridicule. It is tolerated, however, because the country loved the old hero, and is willing that this indirect tribute to his memory should be rendered. The duties of the Minister to Austria are chiefly ornamental, and Colonel Grant will be able to perform those as well as another. His friends endeavored to secure for him the mission to China, but this was refused by the President, on the ground that the Minister to China should be a man of more experience. It may also be suspected that it was thought best, if the Colonel was to be a Minister, it would be better to place him where the Government could have him well in view.

Frederick Dent Grant is in his thirty-ninth year, having been born at St. Louis, Mo., May 30, 1850. His father had at that time resigned his commission in the army, and was engaged in business. Fred was sent to the public schools at St. Louis and Galena, and afterward was appointed a cadet in the Military Academy at West Point, where he acquitted himself with credit. He accompanied his father in the Vicksburg campaign, and subsequently in the Virginia campaigns, though he was too young for active service. He received the appointment of Second Lieutenant in the Fourth United States Cavalry in 1871, and was promoted to First Lieutenant 1873, and became an aide-de-camp on the staff of Lieutenant-General Sheridan, with the temporary rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, and in this capacity he served until June, 1881, when he resigned his position as aide-de-camp and his Lieutenant's commission in the Army. In 1879 he joined his father in his tour around the world. Soon after his resignation from the Army, Colonel Grant married the daughter of H. H. Honore, of Chicago, and he has a daughter about eleven years old, and a son a few years younger. When General Grant removed to New York in 1881, Colonel Grant made his home with his father. In 1885 he became a director in the New York Steam Company. He withdrew from the company early in 1887. In the fall of 1887 he was the Republican candidate for Secretary of State of New York, but was defeated by his Democratic opponent.

WHITELAW REID,
Minister to France.

If appointments in the public service ought ever to be a reward for party service, the appointment of the editor of the New York Tribune to a first-class position is one that was well deserved. Few men in the country have labored so hard and so heartily for the success of the Republican party as Mr. Reid. He stood manfully by President Garfield in his fight with the New York stalwarts; and when Mr. Blaine was nominated in 1884, and so many Republican editors turned in disgust from the nomination, Mr. Reid heroically stood in the gap and fought valiantly for the candidate. One Republican newspaper after another deserted the Republican standard, and threw mud at the nominee, but the Tribune held undaunted on its way, glorifying the party, and holding up Mr. Blaine not only as the ablest of American statesmen, but as a model of honor, integrity, and virtue.

Whitelaw Reid is in his fifty-second year. He was born at Xenia, O., October 27, 1837. At the age of fifteen he entered Miami University at Oxford, Butler County, O., and graduated therefrom in 1856. He was then made principal of the graded schools in South Charleston, Clark County. Out of his salary he paid his father the cost of his senior year at college.

Having saved a few hundred dollars, young Reid in 1857 purchased the Xenia News, which he published successfully for two years. His editorials on local and political topics attracted much attention, and he was engaged by the Times and Gazette, of Cincinnati, and the Herald, of Cleveland, as "special correspondent" at Columbus. Over the signature of "Agate" he was, in 1861-1862, war correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette, and in the latter year became a stockholder in that paper. He subsequently became associate editor, and also held the position of Librarian of the National House of Representatives, and had charge of the Washington bureau of the New York Tribune.

In 1865 he published "After the War—A Southern Tour." This volume was the result of an extended journey through Dixie with his friend Chief Justice Chase. In 1868 his records entitled "Ohio in the War" were issued.

In 1870 he permanently attached himself to the Tribune, and on Horace Greeley's nomination for the Presidency, Whitelaw Reid became the managing editor, and finally editor-in-chief. On the death of Mr. Greeley, in 1872, his friends enabled him to purchase a controlling interest in the paper, which has since then been a steadfast Republican organ.

For many years Mr. Reid has been president of the Lotos Club, and as such has heartily welcomed many foreign men of letters and other celebrities. Several years ago he married a daughter of D. O. Mills, and is the father of two children. In 1884 he went abroad for a few months—his first long vacation since he joined the Tribune—and received a flattering reception from foreign journalists, many of whom were anxious to repay the courtesies they had received at his hands on their visits here.

WILLIAM W. THOMAS,
Minister to Sweden and Norway.

THE most experienced diplomatist of the seven is the new Minister to Sweden, who has once before held this post. Mr. Thomas received from President Lincoln his first appointment as Vice-Consul-General at Constantinople, and he was subsequently made Consul at Galatz, and Consul at Gothenburg, Sweden. His administration of these consular offices was such that Secretary William H. Seward conveyed to him the "special thanks of the Department of State."

William Widgery Thomas comes of old New England stock, being a direct descendant in the ninth generation of George Cleeve, who founded the city of Portland in 1632. Mr. Thomas graduated at Bowdoin College in 1860 with the highest honors. He studied law and commenced practice, but was called from his pro-mission by the State of Maine, which desired to attract Swedish immigration within its borders, and in 1870 he sailed to Sweden and recruited a colony of fifty persons, with whom he founded the settlement of New Sweden. This colony is now grown to nearly 2,000, and is the only successful agricultural colony founded with foreigners in New England since the Revolution. Mr. Thomas has been a member of the Maine House of Representatives for three sessions, during two of which he was Speaker. He has also been a member of the Maine Senate.

In 1883 he was appointed by President Arthur Minister to Sweden and Norway. He was the first Minister of any Power to address the King of Sweden, in an official speech, in the Swedish language; the first Minister to hoist his country's flag at Stockholm; and the first to actively and successfully assist in establishing a line of direct steamers between Sweden and the United States. He is persona grata at the Swedish Court and among the Swedish people. It is of him that the King publicly said: "I esteem it an honor that the President of the United States has sent to my court an American who speaks the language of my country;" and on his recall the Swedish newspapers declared, "He will be missed by all, from the King to the peasant."

Mr. Thomas has another qualification which will make his residence in Sweden mutually agreeable; his wife is a beautiful Swedish lady very popular in her native country—the daughter of a Swedish Senator, and once the belle of the court at Stockholm.

ALLEN THORNDIKE RICE.

Minister to Russia.

ALLEN THORNDIKE RICE was born in Boston, Mass., June 18, 1853, and is therefore now nearly thirty-six years old. His parents, who were wealthy people, took measures to give him the very best opportunities of education and development. He studied the German language and literature in Germany, and was sent to Paris to acquire a similar knowledge of the French language and literature. He then entered the University of Oxford and graduated from Christ Church College with honors in 1873. He afterward studied at Columbia, New York.

Although he inherited a large fortune from his parents, Mr. Rice has always been a man of tireless industry and of marked literary tastes. He has been a contributor to many magazines and periodicals, his best-known works being his introduction to "Reminiscences of Abraham Lincoln" (1886), which he edited, and his contributions to "Ancient Cities of the New World" (1887). In 1876 he purchased The North American Review, of which he still remains the editor. Mr. Rice also holds a controlling interest of "Le Matin" of Paris.

In 1879 he organized and directed what was known as the Charnay Expedition, which was sent under the auspices of the United States and France to investigate the remains of the ancient civilizations of Central America and Mexico. Plaster casts of the most characteristic and interesting portions of the ancient architecture of those countries have been placed in the Trocadero at Paris, and duplicates of them will soon be suitably exhibited at Washington.

ALBERT G. PORTER,

Minister to Italy.

THE ex-Governor of Indiana, who has been appointed to represent our Government in Rome, is sixty-five years of age. He was born at Lawrenceburg, Ind., April 20, 1824. His early education was acquired in the schools of his native State, and he was graduated at Asbury University in 1843. He immediately took up the study of law, and was admitted to the bar in 1845. He removed to Indianapolis to pursue the practice of his profession, and there became a member of the City Council, and afterward Corporation Attorney for the city. He made rapid progress at the bar, and in 1853 received the appointment of Reporter of the Supreme Court of Indiana. In 1858 he was elected a member of Congress, taking his seat in the House of Representatives in December, 1859, where he served two terms. He was a member of the Judiciary Committee, and the Committee on Manufactures, and was better known for his faithful and efficient work on the committees than for any special brilliancy or power in debate. After his service in Congress Mr. Porter returned to his legal practice at Indianapolis, but continued to take a prominent part in politics. He was appointed First Comptroller of the Treasury in March, 1878, a position which he held until in the fall of 1880 he was elected Governor of Indiana by a majority of about 7,000. His term of office was four years from January, 1881. His administration was exceedingly popular, especially among the workmen, whose confidence he has won by his sterling integrity and independence of the control of the millionaire politicians.

JOHN A. ENANDER,

Minister to Denmark.

THE large Scandinavian population of the West and Northwest are gratified by the appointment of the Minister to Denmark. Mr. Enander is a hard-working journalist, who has done much for their gratification and enlightenment. He is the editor and one of the proprietors of The Hemlandet, a Swedish Republican paper at Chicago. He was born in Sweden in 1842, was graduated from Wenersberg College in 1869, and came to the United States in the same year. He is the author of the first "History of the United States" published in the Swedish language (1874-1881). He has contributed to the magazines and reviews on Northern Mythology, has been a lecturer on similar subjects, and for many years has been one of the leading Scandinavian Republican speakers in the West. In 1870 Mr. Enander was appointed by the Governor of Illinois a member of the State Board of Education, and was reappointed in 1881. This is the only office he has held.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Made Whiter than the Snow.—The Rev. Mr. Wilson remarks: "I knew an aged woman who was not very sure as to whether she was a Christian or not. One day she was on the heights of joy, and the next perhaps sunk in the depths of despair. One day she went to church, and there the preacher faithfully and plainly showed how Christ clothes us with His own righteousness; how it was not our own filthy rags of good works, words, or thoughts we had to trust to, but to His righteousness. The woman was delighted. Christ she saw had done it all, and done it well. When she was returning from church it began to snow, and as it fell thickly all around, covering the earth with a white mantle, she murmured as she looked at it, 'Once I was black, black like the ground, but now Christ's righteousness covers me, just as the snow covers the earth and makes it white and pure.' Yes, Jesus makes us pure; and if we but let Him He will keep us pure—purify our thoughts, our words, and our actions."

Drunken Hugh Made a New Man.—Mr. Dunn relates: "I knew a man in Maryhill, called Hughie, a great drunkard, and who, when in drink, often abused his wife most cruelly. One day he came home in his usual state of intoxication, and commanded her to go and get him more drink which she refused to do. Attacking her, he kicked her most unmercifully, until she lay on the floor quite unconscious. Seized with remorse for his brutality, and fear of the consequences, he rushed from the house toward the canal, and threw himself in. But two or three men had witnessed the suicidal act, and one of them, leaping into the water, succeeded, after a struggle, in bringing him to the bank. When asked the reason of the rash act he had committed, he confessed to them the true state of affairs, and was advised to go home and start life afresh. When he knocked at the door it was opened by his little daughter, who the night before had gone to a gospel meeting, and there had given her heart to Jesus; and she, seeing tears in her father's eyes, at once thought of that dear Saviour who had dried her eyes. 'Don't weep, father,' she said, soothingly; 'just go into that corner and tell it to Jesus.' The words seemed a message straight from heaven. The man did as he was bidden, and poured out his heart to God. Next evening he went to an evangelistic meeting. He attracted the attention of the speaker, to whom his character was well known, and who, at the end of the address turned to him and said, 'Hughie, will you cast your burden upon Christ, and let Him be to you the power of God unto salvation?' 'That I will,' came the hearty response, and from that time Hughie has been a consistent Christian."

Obedying the Captain's Orders.—Mr. Scott relates: "I once stood on the deck of a ship while it was toiling up-stream, both wind and water strong against her, and I have gone up to the man at the wheel and said, 'Jack, why don't you ease her off a point or two? you see how it would relieve her.' But the answer was, 'No, I can't luff; that is the point of the compass the captain gave me, and I must keep her to it.' 'But man,' I remonstrated, 'if you keep her as she is, soon the bulwarks will be stove in, and there is every chance that under this fearful strain she may spring a leak.' 'That is none of my business; it is the captain's look-out. All I have to do is to obey his orders,' was the man's answer. Christian friends, we have the orders of our Captain plainly given to us in the Bible, and may know exactly the course He would have us steer. Yet, sometimes, if we do exactly as Christ commands, it appears as if our business would be ruined, our reputation lost, as if indeed we should be totally wrecked. That, however, is the Captain's look-out. All we have to do is implicitly to obey. He will surely bring us safely into the harbor."

Execution of a Greek Nobleman.—Mr. McPherson observes: "In the legal code of one of the minor states of Greece there was a law which enacted that for what would appear a comparatively trivial crime the punishment should be death. It happened that a young nobleman, the king's chief favorite, committed this very crime, and accordingly was imprisoned, tried, and condemned to die. But it was the king's prerogative that he might save any one condemned for this offence if the transgressor would but supplicate the royal mercy, and say, 'O king, save me!' Immediately the death sentence was passed, all the young man's friends came and urged him to implore the royal clemency at once. Then the representative of the king called, and told him that if he would only kneel there in the cell and say, 'O king, save me!' his life would be spared. But the prisoner replied, 'No, I will not so humble myself; if the king loves me as he said he did, then let him save me without my beseeching it.' The day of execution dawned, and the king, anxious to save his friend, sent his messenger two hours before to see if the approach of death had not softened his heart; but still the young nobleman would not yield. Swiftly the time glided past, one hour, half an hour, fifteen minutes, and it will be too late, and still the king's messenger lingered. The hour has come; there is still a moment ere the knell tolls. The ambassador continued to plead. The young man wavered, but hardening himself for the last time he turned away. The guard entered, and ten minutes later the stubborn nobleman was dead. Like that prisoner, many people are too proud to humble themselves before God to obtain salvation. Now, ere the final hour of mortal life strikes, come to Christ and ask Him to forgive."

An Invaluable Work on Prophecy by G. H.

Pember, M. A., entitled "The Great Prophecies concerning the Jews the Gentiles, and the Church of God," is for sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York. It is written in a most popular and eloquent style, and describes the impending fulfilment of Revelation and Daniel, and is illustrated by a colored chart. 458 pages. Price, including postage, $1.

THE REMNANT OF THE CENTURY.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday
April 14, 1889.

"Amen! Alleluia!" Rev. 19:4.

The Approaching Final Decade—A Favorite Grouping—The Last Decades of Centuries Often Momentous—Preparation for the Divine Crusade—A Short-Cut to Victory Proposed—Reasons for Thinking the World May be Converted—I. God is Ready—II. Abundant Forces for the Work—A Mathematical Professor's Calculation—Mathematics in the Bible—III. Each Denomination Doing a Share—IV. The Machinery All Ready—V. All the Money Needed—VI. Theological Institutions Prepared—VII. The Spirits of the Departed to Help.

THE Nineteenth century is departing. After it has taken a few more steps, if each year be a step, it will be gone into the eternities. In a short time we shall be in the last decade of this century, which fact makes the solemnest book outside the Bible the almanac, and the most suggestive and the most tremendous piece of machinery in all the earth the clock.

The Last Decade

of this century, upon which we shall soon enter will be the grandest, mightiest, and most decisive decade in all the chronologies. I am glad it is not to come immediately, for we need by a new baptism of the Holy Ghost to prepare for it. That last ten years of the Nineteenth century—may we all live to see them! Does any one say that this division of time is arbitrary? Oh, no; in other ages the divisions of time may have been, but our years date from Christ.

Does any one say that the grouping of ten together is an arrangement arbitrary? Oh, no; next to the figure seven, ten is with God a favorite number. Abraham dwelt ten years in Canaan. Ten righteous men would have saved Sodom. In the ancient tabernacle were ten curtains, their pillars ten and their sockets ten. In the ancient temple were ten lavers, and ten candlesticks, and ten tables, and a molten sea of ten cubits. And the Commandments written on the granite of Mount Sinai were ten, and the kingdom of God was likened to ten virgins, and ten men should lay hold of him that was a Jew, and the reward of the greatly faithful is that they shall reign over ten cities, and in the effort to take the census of the New Jerusalem the number ten swings around the thousands, crying "ten thousand times ten thousand." So I come to look toward the closing ten years of the Nineteenth century with an intensity of interest I can hardly describe.

I have also noticed that the favorite
Time for Great Events

in many of the centuries was the closing fragment of the century. Is America to be discovered—it must be in the last decade of the Fifteenth century, namely, 1492. Was free constitutional government to be well established in America—the last years of the Eighteenth century must achieve it. Were three cities to be submerged by one pitch of scorice—Herculaneum and Strabie and Pompeii in the latter part of the First century must go under. The Fourth century closed with the most agitating ecclesiastical war of history—Urban the Sixth against Clement the Seventh. Alfred the Great closes the Ninth century, and Edmund Ironsides the Eleventh century, with their resounding deeds. The Sixteenth century closed with the establishment of religious independence in the United Netherlands. Ay, almost every century has had its peroration of overpowering achievements.

As the closing years of the centuries seem a favorite time for great scenes of emancipation or disaster, and as the number ten seems a favorite number in the Scriptures, written by divine direction, and as we are soon to enter upon the last ten years of the Nineteenth century, what does the world propose? What does the Church of Christ propose? What do reformers propose? I know not; but now in the presence of this consecrated assembly I propose that we make ready, get all our batteries planted, and all our plans well laid, in what remains of this decade, and then in the last decade of the Nineteenth century march up and take this round world for God.

When I say we, I mean the five hundred million Christians now alive. But, as many of them will not have enough heart for the work,

Let us Copy Gideon,

and as he had thirty-two thousand men in his army to fight the Midianites, but many of them were not made of the right stuff, and he promulgated a military order, saying: "Whosoever is fearful and afraid let him return and depart early from Gilead," and twenty-two thousand were afraid of getting hurt, and went home, and only ten thousand were left, and God told them that even this reduced number was too large a number, for they might think they had triumphed independent of divine help, and so the number must be still further reduced, and only those three hundred men with the battle shout, "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon," scattered the Midianites like leaves in an equinox; so out of the five hundred million nominal Christians of to-day let all unbelievers and cowards go home and get out of the way. And suppose we have only four hundred million left, suppose only two hundred million left, suppose only one hundred million left, yea, suppose we only have fifty million left, we will undertake

The Divine Crusade,

and each one just scooping up a palm full of the river of God's mercy in one hand, and a palm full of the river of God's strength in the other, let us with the cry, "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon," the sword of the Lord and of John Knox, the sword of the Lord and of Matthew Simpson, the sword of the Lord and of Bishop McIlvaine, the sword of the Lord and of Adoniram Judson, the sword of the Lord and of Martin Luther, go into the last decade of the Nineteenth century.

Is it audacious for me to propose it? Oh, no; a captive servant in the kitchen of Naaman told the commander-in-chief where he could get rid of the blotches of his awful leprosy, and his complexion became as fair as a babe's. And didn't Christ, in order to take the ophthalmia out of the eyes of the blind man, use a mixture of spittle and dust? And who showed Blucher a short-cut for his army, so that instead of taking the regular road, by which he would have come up too late, he came up in time to save Waterloo and Europe? Was it not an unknown lad, who perhaps could not write his own name? And so I, "who am less than the least of all saints," propose and am willing to be the expectoration on some blind eye, and tell some of the brigadier-generals of the Lord of hosts how this leprosed world may in the final decade of the Nineteenth century have its flesh come again as the flesh of a little child.

A Short-Cut to Victory,

The whole trouble is that we put off the completion of the world's redemption to such long and indefinite distances. The old proverb, that "what is everybody's business is nobody's business," might be changed a little, and be made truthfully to say what is the gospel business of all the ages is the gospel business of no age. We are fighting at too long a range. That gun called the "Swamp Angel" was a nuisance. It shot six miles, but it hardly ever hit anything. It did its chief destructive work when it burst and killed those who were setting it off. Short range is the effective kind of work, whether it be for worldly or religious purpose. Some man with his eyes half shut drones out to me the Bible quotation, "A thousand years are as one day;" that is, ten centuries are not long for the Lord. But why do you not quote the previous sentence, which says that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years? That is, He could do the work of ten centuries in twenty-four hours. The mightiest obstacle to Christian work is the impression that the world's evangelization is away off. Many of us act as though we thought that when Macaulay's famous New Zealander in the far distance is seated on a broken arch of London bridge sketching the ruins of St. Paul's, his grandchild might break in and jolt his pencil by asking him if he thought the millennium ever would appear. Men and women of the eternal God! sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty! we may have it start in the decade that is soon to commence, and it will be done if we can persuade the people to get ready for the work.

What makes me think it can be done? First, because God is Ready.

He needs no long persuasion to do His work for if He is not willing that any should perish, He is not willing that any of the people of the next decade shall perish; and the whole Bible is a chime of bells ringing out "Come! come! come!" But He is waiting, as He said He would, for the co-operation of the Church. When we are ready, God is ready. And He certainly has all the weaponry ready to capture this world for the truth, all the weapons of kindness or devastation. On the one hand the Gospel and sunshine, and power to orchardize and gardenize the earth, and fountains swinging in rainbow and Chatsworthian verdure, and aromas poured out of the vials of heaven, while on the other hand He has the weaponry of devastation, thunderbolt and conflagration, and forces planetary, solar, lunar, stellar, or meteoric, that with loose rein thrown on the neck for a second would leave constellations and galaxies so many split and shivered wheels on the boulevards of heaven. And that God is on our side, all on our side. Blessed be His glorious name!

II. If you continue to ask me why I think that the world can be saved in the final decade of the Nineteenth century, I reply, Because it is not a great undertaking, considering that will go at it, if once persuaded it can be done. We have sifted the five hundred million of workers down to four hundred million, and three hundred million, and two hundred million, and one hundred million, and to fifty million. I went to work to cipher out how many souls that number could bring to God in ten years, if each one brought a soul every year, and if each soul so brought should bring another each succeeding year. I found out, aided by a professor in mathematics, that we did not need anything like such a number of workers enlisted. You see it is simply a question of mathematics and in geometrical progression. Then I gave to the learned professor this problem: How many persons would it require to start with if each one brought a soul into the kingdom each year for ten years, and each one brought another each succeeding year, in order to have fourteen hundred million people saved, or the population of the earth at present? His answer was, Two million seven hundred and fifty-four thousand three hundred and seventy-five workers. So you see that when I sifted the five hundred million nominal Christians of the earth down to fifty million and stopped there, I retained for this work forty-seven million people too many. There it is in glorious mathematics, quod erat demonstrandum.

The Number of Workers

Divine Mathematics.

Do you tell me that God does not care for mathematics? Then you have never seen the Giant's Causeway, where God shows His regard for the hexagonal in whole ranges of rocky columns with six sides and six angles. Then you have not studied the geometry of a bee's honeycomb with six sides and six angles. Then you have not noticed what regard God has for the square, the altar of the ancient tabernacle four square, the breastplate four square, the court of the temple in Ezekiel's vision four square, the New Jerusalem laid out four square. Or you have not noticed His regard for the circle by making it His throne, "sitting on the circle of the earth," and fashioning sun and moon and stars in a circle, and sending our planetary system around other systems in a circle, and the universe sweeping around the throne of God in a circle. So I enlist mathematics for the demonstration of the easy possibility of bringing the whole world to God in the coming decade by simple process of solicitation, each one only having to bring one a year; although I want to take in forty thousand, and I know men now alive who I think, by pen or voice, or both, directly or indirectly, will take hundreds of thousands each. So you see that that will discharge some of the 2,754,375 from the necessity of taking any.

III. Another reason why I know it can be done is that we may divide the work up among the denominations. God does not ask any one denomination to do the work or any dozen denominations.

The Work Can be Divided, and is being divided up, not geographically, but according to the temperaments of the human family. We cannot say to one denomination, You take Persia, and another, You take China, and another, You take India, because there are all styles of temperaments in all nations. And some denominations are especially adapted to work with people of sanguine temperament, or phlegmatic temperament, or choleric temperament, or bilious temperament, or nervous temperament, or lymphatic temperament. The Episcopal Church will do its most effective work with those who by taste prefer the stately and ritualistic. The Methodist Church will do its best work among the emotional and demonstrative. The Presbyterian Church will do its best work among those who like strong doctrine, and the stately service softened by the emotional. So each denomination will have certain kinds of people whom it will especially affect. So let the work be divided up.

There are the seven hundred and fifty thousand Christians of the Presbyterian Church North, and other hundreds of thousands in the Presbyterian Church South, and all foreign Presbyterians, more especially Scotch, English, and Irish, making, I guess, about two million Presbyterians; the Methodist Church is still larger; the Church of England on both sides of the sea still larger; and many other denominations as much, if not more, consecrated than any I have mentioned. Divide up the world's evangelization among these denominations after they are persuaded it can be done before the Nineteenth century is dead, and the last Hottentot, the last Turk, the last Japanese, the last American, the last European, the last Asiatic, the last African, will see the salvation of God before he sees the opening gate of the Twentieth century.

The Machinery Ready.

IV. Again, I feel the whole world can be saved in the time specified, because we have all manner of machinery requisite. It is not as though we had to build the printing-presses; they are all built, and running day and night, those printing religious papers (925 of those religious papers in this country), those printing religious tracts, and those printing religious books. And thousands of printing-presses now in the service of the devil could be brought and set to work in the service of God. Why was the printing-press invented? To turn out bill-heads, and circulars of patent medicines, and tell the news which in three weeks will be of no importance? From the old-time Franklin printing-press, on up to the Lord Stanhope press, and the Washington press, and the Victory press, to Hoe's perfecting printing-press, that machine has been improving for its best work, and its final work, namely, the publication of the glad tidings of great joy which shall be to all people. We have the presses, or can have them before the first of January, when the new decade is to begin, to put a Bible in the hand of every son and daughter of Adam and Eve.

V. But this brings me to the adjoining thought; namely, we have

The Money to Do the Work. I mean the fifty million of Christians have it. Ay, the two million seven hundred and fifty-four thousand Christians have it; and the dam which is beginning to leak will soon break, and there will be rushing floods of hundreds and millions and billions of dollars in holy contribution when you persuade the wealthy men of the kingdom of God that the speedy conversion of the world is a possibility. I have no sympathy with this bombardment of rich men. Almost every paper I take up tells of some wealthy man who has endowed a college, or built a church or a hospital or a free library, and that thing is going to multiply until the treasury of all our denominations and reformatory organizations will be overwhelmed with munificence if we can persuade our men of wealth that the world's evangelization is possible, and that they may live to see it with their own eyes.

I have always cherished the idea that when the world is converted, we would be allowed to come out on the battlements of heaven and see the bannered procession and the bonfires of victory. But I would like to see the procession closer by, and just be permitted myself to throw on a fagot for a bigger bonfire. And if you persuade our men of wealth that there is a possibility for them to join on earth in the glee of

A Redeemed Planet.

instead of laborious beseeching for funds, and arguing and flattering, in order to get a contribution for Christian objects, our men of wealth will stand in line as at a post-office window or a railroad ticket-office, but in this case waiting for their turn to make charitable deposit. The Gentiles are not long going to allow themselves to be eclipsed by Mr. Hirsch, the Jew, who has just given forty million dollars for schools in France, Germany, and Russia. I rejoice that so much of the wealth of the world is coming into the possession of Christian men and women. And although the original Church was very poor, and its members were fish dealers on the banks of Galilee, and had only such stock on hand as they could take in their own net, to-day in the hands of Christian men and women there is enough money to print Bibles and build churches and support missionaries under God in ten years to save the world.

VI. Again, I think that the world's evangelization can be achieved in the time specified, because we have already the theological institutions necessary for this work. We do not have to build them; they are built, and they are filled with tens of thousands of young men, and there will be three sets of students who will graduate into the ministry before the close of this century; and once have them understand that instead of preaching thirty or forty years, and taking into the kingdom of God a few hundred souls, right before them is the Sedan, is the Armageddon, and these young men, instead of entering the ministry timid, and with apologetic air, will feel like David, who came up just as the armies were set in array, and he left his carriage and shouted for the battle, and cried: "Who is this uncircumcised Philistine, that he should defy the armies of the living God?" and with five gravel stones skillfully flung, sent sprawling the bragging ten-footer, his mouth into the dust, and his heels into the air.

What but such a consummation could be

A Fit Climax

to this century? You notice a tendency in history and all about us to a climax. The creation week rising from herbs to fish, and from fish to bird, and from bird to quadruped, and from quadruped to immortal man. The New Testament rising from quiet genealogical table in Matthew to apocalyptic doxology in Revelation. Now, what can be an appropriate climax to this century, which has heard the puff of the first steamer, and the throb of the first stethoscope, and the click of the first telegraph, and the clatter of the first sewing machine, and saw the flash of the first electric light, and the revolution of the first steam plough, and the law of storms was written, and the American Bible society and American Tract society were born; and instead of an audience laughing down Dr. Carey for advocating foreign missions, as was done at Northampton in England in the last century, now all denominations vying with each other as to who shall go the furthest and the soonest into the darkest of the New Hebrides; and three hundred thousand souls have been born to God in the South Sea islands; and Micronesia and Melanesia and Malayan Polynesia have been set in the crown of Christ, and David Livingstone has unveiled Africa, and the last bolted gate of barbaric nations has swung wide open to let the gospel in. What, I ask, with a thousand interrogation points uplifted, can be a fit, an appropriate and sufficient, climax except it be a world redeemed?

Invisible Coadjutors.

VII. Yea, I believe it can be done if we get prepared for it, because the whole air and the whole heaven is full of willing help. "Are they not all ministering spirits sent forth?" We make an awful mistake if we calculate only on the forces we can see. The mightiest army is in the air. My brethren, so much of selfishness and pride and rivalry and bad motives of all kinds get into our work here that we are hindered. But the mighty souls that have gone up to the flying armies of the sky have left all imperfection behind; and these souls are with us, and, without a fault and with perfect natures, are on our side. You cannot make me believe that, after toiling here for long years for the redemption of the world, until from exhaustion some of them fell into their graves, they have ceased their interest in the stupendous conflict now raging, or that they will decline their help.

Irenæus Prime! Honored on earth but now glorified in heaven, have you forgotten the work toward which you gave for more than half a century your gracious life, your loving voice, and your matchless pen? No! Then come down and help. David Brainerd! Have you forgotten the aborigines to whom you preached and for whom you prayed until you could preach and pray no more, lying down delirious amid the miasmas of the swamp? No! Then come down and help. Moncrieff and Freeman and Campbell! Have you forgotten Lucknow and Cawnpore? No! Then come down and help. I rub out of my eyes the stupidity and unbelief, and I, the servant of these great Elishas in the Gospel, see the mountains all round about are full of horses of fire and chariots of fire; and they head this way. Hovered over are we by Clouds of Witnesses and Helpers!

Clouds of apostles in the air led on by Paul! Clouds of martyrs in the air led on by Stephen! Clouds of prophets in the air led on by Isaiah! Clouds of patriarchs in the air led on by Abraham! Clouds of ancient warriors in the air led on by Joshua; and that Bible warrior at whose prayer astronomy once halted over Ajalon and Gibeon seems now to lift one hand toward the descending sun of this century, and the other hand toward the moon of the last decade, saying: "Stand thou still till the Church of God gets the final victory!"

Then let us take what remains of this decade to get ready for the final decade of the Nineteenth century. You and I may not live to see that decade or may not live to see its close, but that shall not hinder me from declaring the magnificent possibility. I confess that the mistake of my life has been, not that I did not work hard—for I could not have worked harder and lived, as God knows and my family know—but that I have not worked under the realization that the salvation of this world was a near-by possibility. But whether we see the beginning or the closing of that decade is of no importance, if only that decade can get the coronation; and then all decades shall kneel before this enthroned decade, and even the gray-grown centuries will cast their crowns before it, and it will be the most honored decade between the time when the morning stars sang together as the libretto of worlds was opened, and the time when the mighty angel, robed in cloud and garlanded in rainbow, shall, with one foot on the sea and the other foot on the land, swear by Him that liveth forever and ever that time shall be no longer. Alleluia! Amen!

A BLIND CHINAMAN'S WORK.

THE Record of the United Presbyterian Church contains a striking account of "Blind Chang," who came to Moukden in 1886 seeking baptism. Unknown to the missionary, and untested, he returned to the village greatly disappointed that he was not permitted to be baptized, but he took back some books which were read to him, and he instantly began to tell the story of the gospel. Four months later Rev. Mr. Webster went from Moukden to the village where Blind Chang lived, and found, not this man alone, but the whole village ready to welcome him, where four months previous he would have found it difficult to find a place to lay his head. It seems that Blind Chang went from house to house, and then from village to village, telling the story of the gospel. At first everybody laughed at him and thought him crazy, but those who laughed soon began to listen, and Mr. Webster found the whole neighborhood "ringing with the name of Jesus," and over a score of men and women desiring baptism, giving good evidence of a change of heart. Besides these there are others who are listening earnestly to the truth. In 1887 Blind Chang went to Peking, and came under the care of Mr. Murray, whose labors for the blind in China have been frequently alluded to. It seems that in China blindness gives especial privileges; the blind are treated with greatest consideration, and although a blind man may be a beggar, he is addressed as a scholar and a gentleman would be, and doors ordinarily closed are open to him. And now Blind Chang, having a Bible in the raised characters, so that he can readily read it, is going from house to house as a privileged man, reading the Word of Life, and commending the gospel with great ardor. The work he has done is described as wonderful.

FEEDING THE STARVING IN CHINA.

In attempting to relieve the sufferers by the famine in China, the China Inland Mission has undertaken a work of enormous proportions, involving great labor as well as expenditure of money. Mr. Dennis Mills, who has been engaged in the work, sends the following report, which will show some of the difficulties encountered:

"Chau-kia-k'eo, January 7.—We left here December 18, taking with us a thousand taels (about $1,375) in silver. Mr. Johnston and I, having engaged a small boat, suitable for reaching the district we intended to visit, and having all our arrangements completed, left Fu-keo on Saturday afternoon, December 22, and began work on Monday morning about twenty li south-east of Fu-keo, in which part, on our previous journey, we had seen the greatest distress of any in all the flooded district we then passed through, viz., the whole of that part lying north of this place, and extending to the Yellow River itself.

"Our plan, on reaching each village, was to visit every house, and if, after thorough examination, we were convinced the inmates were really, wholly destitute of every means of support, we then gave a ticket, which was proportioned according to the greater or lesser need of the household. Having completed the circuit of the place, we would then call for the ticket-holders, and give in exchange the silver.

"The weather did not interfere with our work till the Monday following, when much snow fell, and we found ourselves frozen in, though anchored in a place where the current was very considerable. By this time, however, all our funds were gone, and sufficient time had not elapsed for our messenger, whom we had dispatched to Chau-kia-k'eo for more, to return. During the seven days, we had visited twenty-five villages, and given relief to nine hundred and fifty-one families. The length of time taken in visiting so few places may be explained by the difficulty of getting from place to place; no place was inaccessible—men often wading to the waist in thick mud, and carrying us on their shoulders rather than we should pass them by. From the surrounding villages invitations for us to go and help them also came crowding in every day. Their need was equally great, but our fund was all gone, and had not the weather set in as severely as it did, we must have perforce left them for the time.

"Hundreds upon hundreds of villages all in dire need! The havoc wrought by the inundations is greater at Fu-keo than anything we have seen elsewhere, in some cases half or more of the houses being levelled to the ground, while those remaining present such a picture of desolation and ruin as it would be difficult to conceive of had we not seen them; and this, too, when the water has sunk several feet, as is the case now; many a cottage floor is nothing else than a quagmire, only passable by means of old doors and pieces of plank thrown down to make a road from the door to the bed and cooking-stove. Many of those whose houses are totally destroyed have built themselves straw huts, in which they and their families reside, even this poor shelter being better than being herded together with the thousands already residing at the centres of relief to the loss of all privacy and decency, and exposed to no small risk of pestilence and death.

"Many old people we found thus eking out an existence, their sons having left them and gone to where work could be obtained: for, let it be remembered that the land, on which alone they have depended hitherto for a living, is all under water, or, if at the present the water has receded—even supposing the breach is closed at once—it is so saturated with water as to be utterly useless for a long time to come, and, should the breach remain still unclosed, must inevitably, when the spring freshets come, be again covered with water. Savings which have hitherto helped them to exist are now all gone. The long continuance of this calamity must be one of its most terrible features.

"We do not, cannot hope, or ask to be enabled to support these people; an enormous sum would be required for this; but we do earnestly ask that we may be enabled to help them in their dire distress. Private individuals are doing this among their own countrymen. Pah-takia (the eight great families) from Shanghai itself are doing this. This fact alone seems to me indubitable evidence of the reality and intensity of the need. The Chinese are not accustomed, I think, to lavish money where it is not needed."

PUERILE WORSHIP IN CHINA.

AMONG the strangest forms of idolatry prevalent in China is that of the worship of ancestors. Miss Bastone, of the China Inland Mission, recently witnessed one of those celebrations. She writes: "To-day is the feast of the moon; people here make it a holiday and go visiting their friends, something like Bank holiday in England. Early in the morning the people go to the temples and burn incense and candles before the idols, and worship. In the evening they worship the moon, bringing out into the open air cakes and incense to offer up to it. We were so saddened this evening with a sight we saw from our door. The people in the house opposite had been unfortunate in business, trade had been bad, so they were having outside of their house a grand worship of their ancestors. They had the outside of the house lit up with candles; just in the doorway was a table raised on a platform, on which were candles and incense burning, and before these was placed a large paper house. Then on another table immediately opposite this were more incense and candles burning. On the right-hand side of the house, a little lower down, was another table with a small paper house, with candles and incense burning in front. At the side of this small house was an effigy of one of the ancestors, and above on either side were cardboard tablets hanging, on which were written the ancestors' names. To the right of this table there was a bonfire of perforated paper, called paper money, which they burn, and suppose it goes to their dead ones. Paper clothes were also burnt. Before the bonfire were two money hills, sugar loaf in shape, not solid, but just a framework covered with paper, and a candle burning in the inside. These hills indicate that they will give the ancestors hills of money. Several priests were officiating in the worship, some chanting and wailing, others playing instruments, drum pipes, cymbals, triangles, horns, etc. This ceremony lasted for more than three hours, and to be repeated for several nights. The whole performance is in recognition of the sins of the present generation, and to turn away the anger of their forefathers. These poor darkened souls think that in so doing they will turn the misfortunes, and trade will prosper again."

AMONG THE KORKOOS IN INDIA.

A LETTER has come to hand from Mr. William E. Cooper, an evangelist, who went to India in labor for Christ from Mrs. Baxter's Missionary Training Home at Drayton Park, London. He thus describes his reception by the tribes of Korkoos and Gondos:

"The Rev. G. L. Wharton and myself were upon a camping tour to the Gond and Korko Hill Tribes. One of our objects was to examine the work carried on there by our native preacher Anand Ras—a half Korkoo. We travelled there chiefly by moonlight. In our preaching of the gospel we could only teach the very elements of Christianity, on account of the ignorance of the people. We realized how near creation and salvation were brought together. When we once got our hearers to acknowledge that there is one Great Being over all—and that is no very difficult—we told them that this Person was the Creator, and that therefore they should not worship creatures, but Him. This reasoning they seemed readily to understand; and they would remark that they had not seen it in the light before. It was then shown that not only was idolatry wrong and sinful, but also untruthfulness, deceit, thieving, etc., was wickedness; and that its punishment would be death.

"That God was forgiving, and loved to save was our next proposition. We spoke of Jesus as the Son of God. We told them that Jesus was a Saviour from sin and from sinning, and the Giver of Eternal Life. We informed them that this was not our Word, but God's; and that they should obey Him; forsake their idols and repent of every sin; believe and confess Him and be baptized into His name. Sometimes we would sit among a small group and sing a hymn; this would invariably furnish a text for our conversation. The Broad and Narrow Way was a simple illustration which their minds could easily grasp. A reference to the fact that all earthly things are transitory opened up a way for introducing the gospel—good news to men of them.

"Our reception was various in different places. In some villages we were listened to with great attention, as at Daria, Borpani, and Unchabovari. In another place, Bonsa, the people were so frightened that they took refuge in their houses, and would not be induced to come out. At Maligoan we were so well received that we made arrangements to spend a whole day there. We took some lunch with us, and during the heat of the day refreshed and rested ourselves under a magnificent banyan-tree with not less than thirty living supporting stems that had thrown into the ground.

"The villagers heard the Word gladly. Here let me add that these hill people, as a whole, were far more polite than the educated Hindoos and Mohammedans of the plains. Sometimes we would be asked a few questions, and even met with opposition. I shall never forget one man acting going to sleep and waking to illustrate his question, 'Does God sleep and the wake up as we do?' At Keli, our mission was I think, well understood, for one person remarked in angry tones to the others that 'These men want you to give up worshipping stones for some other god.' At this they took to arguing, and gave as reasons for their idolatry of stones—Are not our houses built upon stones? if we forsake worshipping them, our houses will be razed to the ground, and we shall all die. At some of our meetings we showed magic-lantern slides of scenes in the life of Christ. These tribes are very ignorant, and primitive in their customs. They plough with wooden ploughs.

"We had the pleasure of witnessing the native Anand baptize a convert in the Ganjal River. It was a most impressive and soul-stirring sight. We have concluded from experience that if these people are to be reached it must be by one of themselves. All we can do at present is to superintend the work and exercise faith for blessing. If we are to be of any practical benefit to them we must live among them.

"For two months' work it is with humbleness of heart and gratitude to God that we report twenty-five baptized converts. Arrangements are being made for Anand to live among these people to teach them (for they need much instruction) and to care for their soul's welfare."

THE RAPTURE OF THE FIRST-FRUIITS.

A Momentous Question—Who Will be Taken up Before the Great Tribulation—How to get a Clear View of the Subject—The Scriptures the Only Source of Knowledge—Only Watchful Christians to be Taken—Why That Doctrine is Unpopular—It Involves Separation—The Preparatory Process—The Type of the Wave Offering—The First Fruits to be Only 144,000—The Queen and the Virgins.

WHEN the question, "Who will be taken up when the Lord comes?" is taken beyond the range of speculation and curiosity, and duly estimated in all its bearings, it will be found to be of great practical importance and intense interest to the true-hearted child of God.

In the endeavor to obtain a clear view of it, many circumstances require to be taken into account. As the times of the Gentiles are closing, the Holy Ghost is manifestly awakening the Church from the slumbering condition into which it has been brought through its unhallowed alliances and compromises with the world. He is likewise endeavoring to place the members of the Church in that for the return of the Lord with which so many privileged blessings are connected. We thus find that of late years the "sure word of prophecy," that "burning and shining light," shining in a "dark place," has become increasingly attractive to many of the Lord's people, and during the prayerful investigation of the wonderful parabolic mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, from the knowledge of which the world is shut out (Matt. 13 : 11), fresh light is being continually added. But in the study of this branch of the tree of knowledge, as in that of every other, Satan has been successful in mixing the tares of human wisdom with the wheat of Divine light.

Position of Watchfulness

All preconceived notions that are not in full accordance with Scripture, all natural tastes and inclinations how refined and importunate soever they may be, all æsthetic proclivities, all bowing down to the idol of human intellect, all cleaving to Church traditions, whether from choice or moral coercion, must be set aside without restriction, and a tabula rasa must be made and prepared by strict self-discipline, to receive upon it the impression of the only safe rule and infallible guide, "What saith the Scripture?" "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this Word, it is because there is no light in them." (Isa. 8 : 20.) Unless these rules be adhered to, we shall of necessity fall back upon "self" in some form or other, and, under the influence, it may be, of natural affection, resist any as somewhat too stringent and unnecessary, and then, perhaps, find ourselves in principle in the position of Peter when he said, "Be it far from Thee, Lord," and when he received the withering rebuke, "Get thee behind me, Satan," the quick eye of the Lord having at once detected the wiles of the wicked one acting on the natural affection of Peter.

Unwelcome Truth

Some say they do not like to believe that only watchful Christians will be taken up when the Lord comes; but it is not what we like that should influence us in gathering up the choice truths that are so profusely placed in our path; and in selecting them, and separating them from the equally profuse snares that the enemy has mixed up with them, we have Divine wisdom to assist us ready at hand, (James 1 : 5). In searching after truth we shall be much hampered unless we can get out of the deep ruts of opinions long since formed, and taken for granted, it may be from natural inclination, or from undue deference to human tradition and teaching.

If, as we hold, the interpretation of prophecy should prove to be correct, which entertains the idea that when the Lord comes "one shall be taken and another left" (Luke 17 : 34), and that the one that is left is an

Unwatchful, Lot-Like Christian,

then any undue anxiety about any one dear to us being left to pass through "the great tribulation," while we ourselves are "counted worthy to escape," because of our obedient, prayerful watchfulness (Luke 21 : 36), would open us to another rebuke of the Lord to Peter, "What is that to thee, follow thou Me," (John 21 : 22.)

Another reason why the idea of an eclectic rapture of the Church is distasteful is, that the opposite popular opinion requires less separation from the world. To suppose that the whole number of the Lord's children will be simultaneously gathered into the garner—especially in the present state of the Church—would greatly tend to keep the Lord's chosen people from the watch-tower, and retain their minds in a dim obscurity by the consequent neglect of the assistance offered in the "light shining in a dark place." (II Peter 1 : 19.) Such of unfulfilled prophecy, and consequent shutting out of the numerous details that are "written for our instruction" (II Tim. 3 : 16), obtains in some degree with those who exclusively adopt what is called the year-day theory, which complacently leaves out of consideration the various incidents which are prophesied to take place during the running out of the great tribulation, and confounds in one dogma the ecclesiastical and infidel Antichrist.

A Contracted View

Here, as in all other cases, it is useful, if not indispensable, to draw an outline, but in doing so we must not keep too close to the shores of truth, or we may rest satisfied with that simple, grand outline, "Christ the first-fruits, afterward they that are Christ's at His coming, then cometh the end," without heeding any of the details, which are equally "written for our instruction." It needs, indeed, a strong and fixed look to Jesus with the eye of faith, to be able to press forward from the shelving shores and tread the deep waters of Divine truth, but His hand is ever ready to hold us up.

It is this too great generalization of God's purposes as revealed in His Word, and neglect of that causes so much shutting up of the Word. Many valuable portions are regarded as inexplicable at the present time, and only to be revealed at some future period. It is an old and successful device of Satan. It was carried out in the days of Josiah, the youthful king of Judah, when Hilkiah the high-priest found the book of the law which had been practically lost (II Kings 22 : 8-13). It is a system that is a powerful help to priestcraft. It puts an extinguisher on the lights "shining in a dark place," and keeps the soul in obscurity and spiritual slothfulness, and causes it to rest satisfied with compromising with the world.

Practical Details,

Multitudes are under the impression that the world is to be converted by the preaching of the Gospel during the "times of the Gentiles," and are willingly ignorant (the worst kind of ignorance) that the designed end of the Gospel is to gather out from the world a people for the Lord. There is a vague idea prevailing that when what is popularly called "the end of the world" comes there will be one simultaneous resurrection of the dead, and one general day of judgment.

In order to obviate such misleading views the mystical union of Christ and the Church should be steadily kept in sight. Before this union is ultimately completed a long and is needed. As in the natural body, so in the mystical body, all the members are fashioned in continuance (Psalm 139 : 16). Even the Head, though faultless throughout, was not perfected till the appointed amount of suffering was passed through (Luke 13 : 32; Heb. 2 : 10 and 5 : 9). The body, still in formation, is awaiting its union in glory with its already glorified Head (John 12 : 28 and 17 : 5). Such is the present Scriptural position of the Church.

Painful Process of Preparation

But this great work is now, and will be, till completed, a gradual progress. The completion of it is necessarily in connection with its resurrection. As one star differs from another star in glory, so also will the glorified members of Christ's mystical body. Scripture is full of comparisons to teach us every particular.

The Wave-Offering

(Lev. 23 : 10, 11) is replete with typical instruction. Not only is Christ declared to be the antitype of the wave-sheaf, but they likewise are who are referred to in James 1 : 18, and Rev. 14 : 4. In the harvest of corn the first fruits were gathered in and waved before the rest of the grain. So we may learn that it will be when the Church is gathered into the garner. Mark, especially in Revelation 5 : 9, and 7 : 9, the difference between the two groups. They are both in resurrection, and are both culled from the same source—viz., "every kindred and tongue and people." The one group crowned and reigning (Rev. 4 : 10), and the other with palms of victory, having triumphed in great tribulation through the blood of the Lamb, but uncrowned and serving (Rev. 7 : 14, 15).

One of the reasons for believing that only watchful Christians will be caught up to meet Christ in the air at the first-fruits translation before the final three and a half years' tribulation is that in Rev. 14 : 1-5, those first-fruits are distinctly stated to be only 144,000, whereas the harvest, consisting of Christians caught up in the second translation, after the three and a half years, are stated to be "a great multitude which no man can number." (Rev. 14 : 15; 7 : 9-12.) This coincides with the man-child caught up before the three and a half years, and the woman left to go through those three and a half years, in Rev. 12.

Only watchful Christians are clearly implied to escape and be kept out of the final tribulation of three and a half years in Luke 21 : 36. "Watch and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape those things that shall come upon the earth, and to stand before the Son of Man," and in Rev. 3 : 10, "Because thou hast kept the word of My patience, I also will keep thee from the season of temptation, that shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth." In the parable of the Ten Virgins the wise virgins are watchful Christians; the foolish are unwatchful Christians.

Careful and prayerful attention should be given to the similitude of the Church in glory to the Bride of the Lamb, as depicted in Psalm 45. The comparison is full of variety. We have the queen in gold of Ophir, the king's daughter, all-glorious within, and the virgins, her companions and followers, all brought to the king. The same variety in unity is also shown in the figurative language of the Canticles 6 : 8. As "there are more things in heaven and earth than are dreamt of in our philosophy," so it may be said, with equal or greater truth, that there are more things hidden in the Bible, but open to our research, than are dreamed of in the philosophy of many Christians.

The Seeking Saviour and Other Themes. by the late Dr. acQkay, of Hull. This work has been published since Dr. Qackay's death, but the greater part was ready for publication when he died, and to that has been added the striking discourse which he delivered the last time he entered the pulpit, and a few manuscripts found among his papers, 247 pages, cloth cover; Price 75 cents, including postage. For sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 3 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Three Commissioners Appointed by the President to represent the United States at the approaching conference with England and Germany on Samoan affairs sailed from New York on Saturday. They are Messrs. John A. Kasson, William Walter Phelps, and George H. Bates. Lieut. Parker, of the navy, will accompany the commission in the capacity of secretary. He has been attached to the Adams for three years, and it is expected that his knowledge of Samoan affairs, acquired during the stay of the Adams at Apia, will be of assistance to the commission. Lieut. Buckingham, formerly an attaché of the Berlin mission, will join the commission at Berlin, and also act in the capacity of secretary. The three Powers have reached an understanding, by the terms of which they will each keep but one war vessel at Samoa pending the termination of the Berlin conference. The vessel to be sent there by the United States will be the Alert, a 1,000-ton ship, now at Honolulu. The German corvette Sophie, now on her way out from Zanzibar, will represent German interests, while England will doubtless order the Calliope to return to Samoa from Sydney, or will replace her if she was materially damaged by the hurricane.

An Angury of Success for the Coming American Conference was given last week. It is stated on good authority that the five Central American Republics, Costa Rica, Guatemala, Nicaragua, Salvador, and Honduras, have agreed upon a treaty, which provides that if any difficulties shall arise between any of them it shall be settled without war, by the arbitration of any one of the following nations: United States, Argentine Republic, Chile, Mexico, Switzerland, or of any of the great European Powers; that none of the five Republics shall form alliances with outside nations without the consent of all; and that delegates from the five Republics shall meet annually to consider matters of mutual interest. It is the hope of the ablest men in these Republics that this will help to bring about a federal union of these States.

The Announcement that the President is to take a few days' rest is accompanied by a statement that the persistent pressure of office-seekers is telling upon him. His private secretary says that besides personal applications, about a thousand letters a day reach him by mail urging removals and appointments, and complaints are made that he does not move fast enough, though the changes are much more numerous than those made by President Cleveland during the first two months of his term. It is matter for general regret in New York, outside the circle of practical politicians, that among these changes is that of the Postmaster. Mr. Pearson is a Republican, but he has kept the Post Office out of politics, and since he was appointed by President Garfield in 1881 the business of the office has been most efficiently managed. As President Cleveland did not remove him to make room for a Democrat, it was hoped that President Harrison would not remove him to make room for another Republican. Mr. Pearson's apathy in the campaign of 1884 is supposed to be the cause of his removal. It is gratifying to learn that the President does not intend to limit the appointments to Federal offices in the South to Republicans. He told a South Carolina deputation last week that he should pursue a line of policy that would prove a benefit to every citizen of the South, white and colored, and secure a fair vote and an honest count at the elections. None but the best men, the most influential, the most respected, he said, are to receive office in the Southern States, and if he can't find Republicans who answer this description he will take Democrats. It may be hoped that the day will come when the President, be he Republican or Democrat, will have but one policy for North and South in the matter of appointments—the policy of appointing to office the most efficient man, without regard to his political affiliations.

The Celebration of the Centennial of the Inauguration of George Washington has been extended by the Committee in charge, and, according to the official programme issued last week, will occupy three days. It is intended to make it in every respect worthy of the occasion, and it is expected that fully a million visitors will come to New York to witness it. The President of the United States is expected to arrive at Elizabethport on Monday, April 29. Accompanying him are to be the Vice-President, the members of the Cabinet, the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, and representatives of both Houses of Congress. A barge, manned by a crew of shipmasters from the Marine Society, is to meet the President's steamer and row him ashore, as the shipmasters of the same society rowed Washington ashore a century ago. The procession, consisting of the Governors of all the States and Territories, and other distinguished persons, is to be formed at the landing, and will proceed to the Equitable Building, where a reception will take place. In the evening the President will attend a grand ball in the Metropolitan Opera House. On Tuesday thanksgiving services are to be held in the churches at 9 o'clock, and a commemoration ceremony at the Sub-Treasury at 10 o'clock. In the afternoon the President will review the military parade, and in the evening the city will be illuminated. On Wednesday, May 1, there will be an enormous civic and industrial parade.

The Texas Spring Palace, Now in Course of erection, will deserve a visit from all persons in the North interested in the development of the State, and the promotion of closer union between North and South. The citizens who are managing the enterprise earnestly hope that it will have that result. The palace is to be opened on May 29. Its area will be 60,000 square feet, and in its construction there will not be a single article used that is not produced in Texas. The stone for its foundation will be taken from Texas quarries. The timber used in the superstructure will be culled from the pine forest, the cedar brakes, and oak groves of Texas. The product of the field, the forest, the garden, the orchard, the mine, the flock, the herd, the gulf, the rivers, the lakes, the Panhandle country, extending northward into the temperate zone, and the tropical productions from the extreme southern shores will all be called upon to furnish material with which to beautify and embellish this palatial structure. The exhibits will include every known variety of fruit and vegetable raised in the United States, and all produced on the soil of Texas. All kinds of minerals, stones, and lumber found in the State will be represented. The whole will be a wonderful object lesson of the extent and resources of the great State.

An Eloquent Speech in Defence of Mr. Parnell and his colleagues occupied the time of the Commission all of last week. Sir Charles Russell, who represents the Parnellites, is himself an Irishman, and his speech fully sustained the reputation of his countrymen for eloquence. At its conclusion on Friday, Sir James Hannen, the President of the commission, is reported to have sent a note to the brilliant lawyer, in which the judge said: "I congratulate you. Your speech was a great one, and worthy of a great occasion." The primary object of the speech was to show that the Parnellites had never approved of the projects of the violent wing of the party, and had endeavored to repress crime, but Sir Charles in his peroration had a less difficult and more congenial task in speaking of the larger question of Home Rule for Ireland. He said that the commission was really trying the history of the Irish revolution. He asked that fair and generous consideration be given it. If prosperity was returning to Ireland, thanks be to God, but affairs were unhealthy in that country, where the people considered the imprisoned members of the House of Commons heroes and martyrs. Sir Charles declared that he did not speak merely as the advocate of the accused members of the House of Commons, but for the land of his birth, and, he believed, in the best interests of England. The inquiry, which was intended to be a curse, had been a blessing. It had been designed for the purpose of ruining one man, but had proved the means of his vindication.

A Mysterious Rumor of an Attempt to assassinate the Czar of Russia was circulated on Thursday last. It was stated on the Paris Bourse that an attempt has been made upon the life of the Czar, but no confirmation of the rumor was received in any quarter in Paris, which would be likely to be promptly informed in case of an attempt to kill his Majesty. It is significant, however, that in Bucharest, and apparently from an independent source, the same news was made known. There the report was more circumstantial. It was that the attempt was made on Sunday April 7, and that his Majesty was wounded by an exploding shell.

Mr. Henry M. Stanley's Letter was Read before the Royal Geographical Society of London on April 8. It gave fuller details of his difficulties in reaching Emin than were contained in the summary cabled to the American press. He described at length the various devices by which the natives endeavored to prevent the advance of the expedition. One of these was to dig shallow pits across the path of the column and fill them with skewers, which were deftly covered with leaves. The skewers pierced the feet of Stanley's men, inflicting wounds that in many cases developed into gangrenous sores. The men who were lamed in this manner were seldom of further service. Mr. Stanley calls the natives "cunning rogues," and says that for purposes of extortion they always pretended that the country was suffering from a famine.

The Trial of General Boulanger by the French Senate, sitting as a judicial tribunal, commenced on April 12 in the absence of the defendant. A casual observer detected at a glance who were the General's friends and who were his enemies. The Senators had been requested by the Government to appear in their judicial capacity in evening dress. Naturally the General's friends disregarded the request, and all of them wore frock coats, while the friends of the prosecution wore dress coats and white ties. Separating the tribunal according to dress, there could be no doubt that the verdict of the court would be against Gen. Boulanger. That the trial will be impartial, the French people do not believe. They regard it as persecution rather than prosecution, and believe that he has been arraigned before the Senate instead of in an ordinary court of justice, in order that a severe sentence may be secured. This opinion is confirmed by the fact that Gen. Boulanger's colleagues of the so-called Patriotic League have escaped in an ordinary court with a fine of $20, when the prosecution asked for a sentence of two years' imprisonment. The temper of the people implies that the prosecution is a blunder, and that the Ministers, instead of getting rid of the man they dread, have only increased his already dangerous popularity.

Very Liberal Terms are Offered to any Person canvassing for subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Sample copies will be sent, postage paid, on application from any one desiring to undertake the work. Ministers and others will find it easy to obtain subscriptions. Send postal card for terms, and state number of sample copies required. Address The Manager, 63 Bible House, New York.

How a Christian Minister Endures Trial is told in a letter from Mrs. Edward Beecher to a friend. As mentioned in these columns last week, Dr. Edward Beecher, a brother of the late Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, was injured on April 3 by a railroad-car, and the surgeons had to amputate his leg at the knee to save his life. Writing to her sister-in-law about her visit to her husband in the hospital, Mrs. Beecher said: "Edward had had a good night, and was glad to see us, and seemed cheerful, but did not know of his loss. He spoke about his fractured limb, but thought it would soon be well. I felt it my duty to make known to him his sad loss. I said to him: 'My dear husband, you don't seem to be aware of all that has happened to you, and before I tell you I want you to be prepared for it, and ask God's help for this.' Then I told him his mangled limb had been taken off the night before, just after the accident. It was hard for him, and for me. It cut deep. I knew by trembling lip and moistened eye. But he soon said: 'I will trust in God; He doeth all things well.'"

A Curious Method of Treating Disease was discussed recently in the Twilight Club in New York. The Sun says that several doctors who have had some experience of the treatment related some singular cures, especially of imaginary ailments, which are ailments that often defeat the regular practitioner. The practitioners tell patients that their illness is imaginary, which is often true, and that it is a mental state, not a physical fact. "You must not think of it; you must drive away the sense of it; you must believe yourself to be well." This prescription is repeated again and again, with emphasis, and it is said to be sometimes effective in these imaginary cases, especially when accompanied with the advice to avoid excitement, late hours, heavy suppers, wine-bibbing, and other health-destroying practices, to which the regular physicians are apt to fail to give due heed in their medical practice. Unhappily, a similar mode of treating awakened souls is often adopted, with the most disastrous results. If the anxious sinner can be brought to believe his distress is unnecessary, and he is better than he feared, he does not go to Christ for salvation. (Jer. 6: 14.)

A Balloon Race for a Choice Claim in Oklahoma is to take place on April 22. An enormous number of persons are gathered on the borders of the new territory waiting for the long-looked-for morning when, under President Harrison's proclamation, they may enter and locate claims. The agents are receiving telegrams daily, asking them to hire horses, have them saddled and bridled, and in waiting on the arrival of trains at Oklahoma City at noon on April 22. The object of the applicants is to mount at once, distance the rival boomers on foot, and capture choice claims. A party of four men from Indiana with a balloon are camped near Antelope Hills. They will make an ascent in the morning, drift in mid-air until noon, and then descend, as they hope, hours in advance of the settlers in wagons and on horseback. If the wind, however, should be unfavorable, the balloonists will find themselves distanced by those who travel by land. It will not be so with the hundred and forty and four thousand, who at the Lord's coming will ascend to meet Him in the air. Their glorious inheritance, and their privileges, are secured to them, and they will far surpass those of their unwatchful brethren who remain on the earth during the Great Tribulation. (1 Thess. 4: 17.)

A Valentine that has Cost a Fortune was sent to a Pennsylvania farmer half a century ago. Two weeks since a wealthy gentleman died at Ballietville, and his will has been offered for probate. In the division of his property, after leaving large sums to his widow and other relatives, the testator mentioned his daughter's name, and directed that a sealed package, tied with green ribbon, and which would be found in his desk, was to be given to her as her share of his estate. When the package was opened it was found to contain a valentine which the farmer had received in 1839—fifty years ago—and which was addressed in his daughter's hand-writing. The valentine was a caricature of a miser gloating over his treasure. It appears that in 1839 the daughter, then fifteen years of age, asked her father for money to buy a new dress. He refused her, and the girl took the matter very much to heart. Shortly afterward he received the valentine, and charged his daughter with sending it. She denied the charge, but he did not believe her. From that day to the day of his death, fifty years afterward, he never spoke to her, and though she married and lived near him, and he saw her frequently, he treated her as a stranger, and now his will disinherits her. The man was probably one of that numerous class who pride themselves on the tenacity with which they adhere to a resolution when it is once taken. All such forget the awful warning Christ uttered when He was upon earth. (Matt. 6: 15.)

A Struggle for Water Caused the Death of a man near Sigourney, Iowa, on April 11. It appears that two farmers, who occupy adjoining farms, have heretofore used one well in common. A short time ago they had a dispute about the ownership of the land in which the well is dug. Finally one of the farmers went to the house of the other in his absence, and told the wife that she must draw no more water out of that well on peril of her life. When her husband returned in the evening there was no supper for him, and she told him what the neighbor had said, and that she had been afraid to go to the well for water. He took a pail in one hand and a loaded pistol in the other and went to the well. There he found his neighbor standing guard over it and daring him to touch the windlass. A struggle ensued, and the man being as fully determined to get the water as the neighbor was to prevent his getting it, he fired several shots at him and killed him. The selfishness that would deprive a neighbor of water met an awful punishment at the hands of the wicked and lawless man who disregarded Christ's injunction against resisting evil; but there is a worse form of selfishness yet, which consists in hindering others from obtaining the water of life, and the time is coming when that will be visited with a yet more terrible but righteous punishment. (Luke 11: 52.)

A Famous War Ship Sank at a Dry-Dock at Portsmouth, Va., on April 7. During the war there was no ship more dreaded by the enemy than the Pensacola, because none did more terrible execution. She carried a war complement of six hundred men and sixteen 9-inch Dahlgren guns, besides smaller rapid-fire guns. She took a prominent part in the opening of the Mississippi, and later was one of the vessels guarding New Orleans. Since then she has been the flagship of the Pacific squadron for eight years, and the flagship of Rear-Admiral Franklin on the European station. A few weeks ago she put in to Portsmouth for repairs, and was placed in the dry-dock. Her sea valves were opened for inspection, and one of them was being cut out. On April 7 there was a high tide which flooded the dry-dock, and the Pensacola easily floated off the keel. The valves being open, she filled rapidly and sank before she could be brought back again. It is a curious fact that she should have passed safely through the dangers of warfare and the dangers of ocean storms, and have sunk in the comparative safety of a dock at home. That is often the case with human life. The Christian, in the midst of enemies and exposed to trial, is upon his guard and constantly looking to his God for protection, but when in peace and prosperity watchfulness is remitted he is liable to fall. (1 Thess. 5: 3.)

An American Traveller's Amusing Blunder was related by himself last week on his return from a tour in Europe. He said that on arriving in London he went, by the advice of a friend, to the Westminster Palace Hotel. It was evening, but he was anxious to see the city, so, after registering, he went out for a stroll. He carefully located the hotel, so that he might find it easily on his return. He came back about midnight, but on reaching the entrance he found his way barred by an iron gate. He rapped upon it, but for some time could make no one hear. After considerable difficulty, he succeeded in arousing a sleepy porter, who drew the bolts and demanded his business. "I want to go to my room, of course," said the American. "Let me see your order," was the reply. The American had no order, but insisted that as he had engaged a room he should be allowed to go to it at once. The porter contradicted him, and said no room had been engaged there. "This is a hospital," he said; "I think you are looking for the Westminster Palace Hotel, and that is round the corner." As the traveller was not sick, and did not need surgical treatment, but rest and comfort, he speedily made his way, according to the porter's direction, round the corner to the hotel. An opposite mistake is sometimes made by awakened sinners needing spiritual healing; they go where temporary ease and rest are to be had, instead of the place where they would meet the Great Physician. (Matt. 9: 12.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Rev. Dixon C. Williams has been holding services at Danville, Ill. An extensive revival has followed them, and the meetings are being continued.

The Canadian Revenue Report for 1888 shows a decrease in the consumption of spirits compared with 1887 of twenty per cent. The operation of the Scott act is believed to be the cause.

The McAll Mission has now 124 mission halls in Paris and other parts of France, and applications from Christians in other districts for the work of the mission are constantly coming in.

Prof. D. B. Towner will conduct a training-school for gospel singers at the annual convocation of evangelistic workers at Northfield, Mass. It is expected to continue through July and August.

Major Blandy, who has been laboring at the Berea Mission, New York, for the past year and a half, asks us to say that he is now open for another engagement in evangelistic work.

The Rev. E. P. Hammond's services at Buchanan, Mich., have been much blessed, especially among young people. Six pastors, with their churches, united in the work. Thence he went to Rochelle, Ill.

Mr. C. S. Mason, the Young Men's Evangelist, has been engaged by the Y. M. C. A. of Santa Barbara, Cal., to follow Mr. D. L. Moody there and carry on his work. His Bible readings are attracting large numbers.

A telegram from Shanghai to the New York Committee for the relief of the famine sufferers in China received last week says: "We send grateful thanks for American subscriptions. Your generosity has saved many thousand lives."

The Liberian colony is asking the intervention of the United States Government in a controversy with England. Liberia is anxious to recover possession of Lagos, at the mouth of the Niger, which England seized during our civil war.

Among the students in Mr. D. L. Moody's school at Northfield, Mass., is a Norwegian girl, who made the journey thither alone from Norway, attracted by notices of the school in the Norwegian press. A Bulgarian girl is also among the students.

The Christian convention and school for Bible study at the Chicago Avenue Church, Chicago, has attracted a large gathering from many distant points. Mr. D. L. Moody presides at all meetings of the convention held in the forenoon of each day, except Saturday.

Bishop Riley delivered his popular stereopticon lecture on Mexico and Central and South America on April 11, in the East Side chapel, East Fifteenth Street, New York. On April 12 he lectured in the Mission Hall, Monmouth Avenue, Jersey City, N. J. These lectures are deeply interesting, and are making the needs and opportunities on our borders widely known.

Mr. Yaroo M. Neesan, the young Nestorian student who has been preparing in New York for missionary work in his native land, sailed in the Gellert, on April 12, for Hamburg. He expects to journey thence to Odessa, across the Black Sea to Poti, thence by rail to Tiflis, and thence by caravan 400 miles to Oroomiah in Persia, where he will commence his labors.

Dr. L. W. Munhall has commenced services at Macon, Ga. They opened on April 7, with promise of much blessing. Great crowds collected at the place of meeting, and showed a deep interest in the services. Meetings were held every afternoon and evening last week. At Dr. Munhall's closing services at Pottsville, Pa., on March 20, over 130 persons made a profession of faith.

WITHIN THE VEIL.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by His own blood, He entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us." Heb. 9:12.

The Veil in the Temple—Lifted Once a Year—Jesus Without the Veil—In the Place of Sinful Men—I. The Sacrifice of His Entering—Unique—Substitutionary—Personal—Of Transcendent Value—Its Reference to Human Guilt—To God—II. The Manner of His Entrance—The Veil Rent—III. The Objects of His Entrance—To Prepare the Heavenly Places—As Representative of His People—To Perfect Them—To Abide There—IV. The Glories of His Entrance—The Redemption Eternal.

UNDER the old covenant the Lord was set forth to the people as dwelling apart, within the veil. A thick tapestry hung before the most holy place, and thus concealed the light which symbolized the presence of God. Within the inner sanctuary Jehovah dwelt apart, and none entered the sacred precincts save one man, and he but once a year. The great teaching was—God is hidden from men; sin has made a division between man and God; is not yet made manifest. Yet even then there was a hint given that an entrance would be made manifest; for the division was not a piece of brickwork, nor even an arrangement of cedar overlaid with gold: it was a veil, which, once in the year, was solemnly lifted, that the high priest might pass beneath. This hinted that sinful men were yet to be permitted to draw nigh unto the Most Holy God, through the Christ of God.

The Way of Approach

Now, beloved friends, the priests of old, the holy and the most holy place, were only "patterns of things in the heavens;" they were not the things themselves. In them we see instructive types and symbols, but nothing more. How greatly we may rejoice as we read the eleventh verse of the chapter before us! It begins with "But"; and, oh, what a blessed "but" for you and for me! Up till then religion dealt with externals, such as meats and drinks and washings, and carnal ordinances, and priests who could only offer the blood of bulls and of goats; but the coming of the Messiah changed all this. We pass from shadow to substance.

Read on: "Christ being come." How the joybells ring out—"Christ being come"! It was

The Music of Bethlehem—

"Christ being come." It was the song of Anna and Simeon—"Christ being come." This will be the joy of the whole earth when once earth understands her truest privilege—"Christ being come." The good things were still to come for many a year; but now "Christ being come," we have them in possession.

The striking point to which I call your attention is this: while our Lord was here, He was comparable to the High Priest when He stood on the outside of the veil. I want you to recollect that fact. Outside is the place of sinful men. Did the holy Jesus ever stand there? He did. But after He had presented His sacrifice, after it had been consumed with fire, He passed within the veil, and rose to the throne of the eternal God. He entered heaven as a priest, in all the solemnity of accomplished sacrifice. "By His own blood He entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption." Upon that august entrance I shall try to speak this morning.

I. First, I shall call your attention to

The Sacrifice of His Entering.

We note concerning it, first, that the sacrifice presented by our Lord was unique. It was "His own blood" that He offered—blood from the veins of a man; but what a man! Remember how He Himself said it: "Sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not; but a body hast thou prepared Me." The body of Christ was specially prepared of God for this great sacrifice. He was pure and holy, and therefore able to bear the sin of others, since He had none of His own. God especially prepared His body for the indwelling of the Deity, and He stands before us as a personage the like of which neither heaven nor earth containeth. God is a pure spirit, but this sacred Person has a body; man hath no pretensions to divinity, but this glorious One counts it not robbery to be equal with God. He is God and man in one person, by a marvellous unity which we believe but can never comprehend; and as our Mediator, He offered Himself without spot unto God.

The sacrifice of our Lord was, in the highest sense, substitutionary. The penalty of sin is death; and Jesus died. All through the old law there is no atonement, except by the death of a victim. Just as the calves and the bullocks in the type were slain, and their blood poured out before God, so must Jesus be slain in the sinner's place. Oh beloved, let us cling to the great truth of which is the chief teaching of this sacred Book. Take this away, and I do not see anything left in the Bible at all which can be called good news. The very soul of the doctrine of Christ is atonement by His death.

The Vicarious Sacrifice,

The victim was killed, but it was also consumed by the holy fire, upon the altar of God. Our Lord offered up Himself unto God, not only by the death which came from the cross, but by the consuming of soul which came from the horror of bearing human sin. The tempest of sin's consequences burst upon the innocent head of the great Substitute; the thundercloud emptied its dire contents upon his soul. He, voluntarily putting Himself in our place, bore the result of that substitution. Out of infinite love, Jesus became an offering for sin. Not of compulsion, but of His own sacred choice, He became the sin-offering for the sinner, that the sinner might be made the righteousness of God in Him, "who His own self bare our sins in His own body on the tree." This we know, and in this great truth we steadfastly abide. What other hope have we?

The sacrifice which our Lord presented before He went within the veil was personal. Stress should be laid upon the word "own" here. "Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by His own blood." The Lord Jesus did not bring before God the sufferings of others or the merits of others, but His own life and death. "He poured out His soul unto death." Our Lord owed nothing to the justice of God on His own account; He was "holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners;" and when it was that He might voluntarily offer up His own sacrifice, of personal suffering, and personal death, yielding up His whole being as a sacrifice in our stead. When He hangs naked upon the tree, I dare not look; but, with tears in my eyes, I worship. I own with deepest love how absolutely He gave up everything on my behalf, reserving not even a rag for Himself, nor an atom of Himself. "He saved others; Himself He could not save." It was, in the most emphatic sense, a personal sacrifice.

He Took Our Place,

Even in sympathy we cannot enter the inner shrine of His sacrifice; in their innermost depth they are unapproachable. Jesus treads the wine-press alone. Gethsemane!—who can stand in the garden, and view the bloody sweat, and hear the deep groanings of that mighty heart? Even the favored three are overcome with sorrow, and fall asleep. But as for Calvary, where the darkness was denser still, till midday turned to midnight, as an emblem of what was going on; into that awful blackness we cannot peer. "Thine unknown sufferings" still remains one of the best descriptive expressions concerning that which can never be described. All this, I say, was his own sole, personal grief for sins in which he had no personal share; this was His sacrifice of entrance.

I cannot dwell long on any one point; but, I pray you, treasure these truths, which are more to be valued than the much fine gold. This sacrifice of His was of transcendent value. I cannot imagine a limit to the value of the sacrifice of Christ: I hope none of you will ever try to do so. When He gave Himself up as a sacrifice, there was a greater recompense made to the justice of God than if the whole human race had been consumed. When God Himself comes here to stand in the sinner's place, the law obtains a fuller vindication than if worlds of guilty ones had borne its penalty. When the Law-giver Himself bears the penalty of the law-breaking, the law is made honorable, and it is plainly demonstrated that the guilty, but that every transgression must receive its penalty. When even the innocent Substitute is made to die because sin is laid upon Him, we are sure that sin is exceedingly hateful to God. Hence, the sacrifice of our Lord was of transcendent value.

God Will Not Spare

